However, the Summer wanes now, and it will not be long before Society is back in its old pastures. Among others who are again in town is Miss Jennie McFarland, who has returned from a month's visit to Portland, Oregon.

Society and army circles were rather disappointed that the favorites Lieutenant Coffin and Mrs. Wood elected to be married so quietly. Only an extremely limited number of guests attended their wedding on Tuesday. Lieutenant and Mrs. Coffin are most fortunately mated. Their tastes are very congenial, for both are fond of out-door sports and society. It is most unfortunate that they go to Canby for as host and hostess they would have been delightful.

THE GOSSIP.

MISS ALICE YOUNGER
WHOSE ENGAGEMENT TO BARON LARAL NUGENT HAS JUST BEEN ANNOUNCED

OUT-OF-TOWN TALK

The tranquility which has been the social characteristic of Oakland these recent moons continues unrelieved. This is not a condition of affairs that makes for incident or amusement, but the end of vacation time is near at hand, and entertainment will then, I presume, again set in.

Over in Alameda there is some gossip about the marriage of Miss Ruth Benson and Holbrook Blinn, who, I am told, are soon to be joined in holy wedlock. Miss Benson went to Alaska as a member of the far-famed Auzerais troupe and met her fate en route. She is much given to amateur dramatics, was a member of the Alameda Theatrical Club, took part in innumerable farces and comedies, and reaches the summit of her desires in adopting the profession. With Mr. Blinn she is a member of the Effie Elisler troupe, which is playing somewhere in the East.

East Oakland has a lawn party to report. Mrs. J. B. Storch, who has one of the charming homes that line Fruitvale avenue, gave an entertainment in honor of Miss Rawlins, and the Fruitvale set, which is much given to garden parties, was duly in attendance.

The Oakland Fair, which has become an institution of some social moment, opens the 3rd of August, and there is some anticipation as to its pretensions. An art gallery is to be an adjunct this summer, but only the work of Alameda County artists is eligible. On this basis Keith is admissible inasmuch as he resides in Berkeley, but the canvasses of all the others who are unfortunate enough to reside on the far side of the bay are denied hanging room. There is nothing like protecting home industry. By the way the Suffragists are to exhibit their business ability by running a tea booth under the management of Mrs. Archie Boreland. Besides harmless decoctions of the fragrant leaf there will be dispensed pies, cakes, and other material comforts, together with the literature of the feminine vote. No opportunity, of course, should be lost of making converts, but this does seem like a glaring effort in the good cause.

The sad ending of Miss Lizzie Van Wyck has excited general sympathy. She was an interesting young woman whose personality possessed much fascination. To the charms of beauty and coloring she added a brightness of manner which made a sad contrast to the melancholy of her death. The Van Wycks have enjoyed in Oakland society a unique position. Their parents, Dr. and Mrs. Van Wyck, were originally from Baltimore and come of excellent family. The Doctor's practice was among the Southern set and his character and connections obtained him prominence, social as well as professional. His death following soon after that of his wife, left the family but ill provided for, but their little fortune, well invested, has sufficed for a livelihood. The eldest daughter, Miss Helen Van Wyck, a notably bright and charming woman, has been in loco parentis to her brother and her two sisters. Her wit, intelligence and undoubted conversational powers made her the center of an admiring circle. Miss Lizzie, the youngest of the sisters, had gone to the cotillions, where her blonde beauty made her conspicuous. The origin of the melancholy which settled upon her recently no one seems to know. Several times she had threatened to kill herself, and but a few hours before the fatal deed, had promised her sisters she would not attempt to take her life. The shock has been a terrible one, but sympathetic friends have done all in their power to alleviate the effect of the sad fatality.

The polo field at Burlingame is deserted and the sport is suffering a temporary lull. It is not that the game is any less fashionable, but that its most ardent votaries have left for unexplored fields and pastures new. Richard Tobin, one of the very best players, is off for a hunting expedition in Canada. Walter Hobart is wandering in the mountains, and Charley Baldwin just at present has no thought of polo, or any other sport, for that matter. The youngsters have taken possession of the field, and are truly developing some excellent polo players.

Mr. and Mrs. George Crocker have a large house party up at the cottage at the Crags. Miss Jennie Catherwood is the especial guest of Miss Rutherford. Allen Bowie and Edward Sheldon were to have joined the party the latter part of the week but the stress of business has made it impossible for them to go.

There is a superabundance of life and fun at the Hotel Vendome, and more guests are arriving every day. Numbers of riding and driving parties have stopped at the hotel for luncheon, and every week bicyclists from Oakland and San Francisco come down on their wheels. Among those who registered during the last week were Mr. and Mrs. J. V. Bigelow of San Francisco, Mrs. W. H. Keith and her daughter Miss Eliza D. Keith (Di Vernon), Mrs. H. F. Fortmann and Miss Fortmann, Professor Edward T. Holden, A. N. Drown and wife, Charles A. Belden and family, Mrs. M. V. Baldwin, and many others.

THE WANDERER.

The Second Summer,
many mothers believe, is the most precarious in a child's life; generally it may be true, but you will find that mother and physicians familiar with the value of the Gail Borden Eagle Brand Condensed Milk do not so regard it.

The most noted connoisseurs of wines pronounce Mira Valle Vintages the finest of home production. They have always stood well and were among those which received honorable mention at the Bordeaux Exposition. For sale by P. Klein, 604½ Geary st.

For health and strength: Damiana Bitters.

DR. H. G. YOUNG—Bridges and teeth without plates a specialty. 1841 Polk street.

CENTEMERI KID GLOVES.
Removed to 128 Post street.

Dr. C. W. Decker, Dentist, 806 Market Street

The Original Swain's Bakery, 213 Sutter St., stands without a rival and has stood the test for years. The most delicious meals are served by gentlemanly attendants, and the management takes pride in having everything orderly. It is just the place for business men and ladies out shopping to lunch.

For Restoring Lost Vitality, Curing Nervousness, and for Purifying and Enriching the Blood Vintine stands without a peer. Not a patent medicine. Sold by Brooks' Homeopathic Pharmacy, 119 Powell st. Order from your druggist

Dainty and Refreshing
PAR EXCELLENCE
"THE UNIVERSAL PERFUME"
For the Handkerchief, the Dressing-table and the Bath.
Murray & Lanman's
FLORIDA WATER
Its fragrant, lasting sweetness exerts a subtile charm and never tires or cloys.
Ask your Druggist for the genuine Murray & Lanman's.

A PROFESSIONAL MATINEE

The Amateur Actor Recites Impressions on Critics and Others

The amateur actor strolled into the editor's sanctum. Strolled in with the easy familiarity of a cherished contributor, and settled himself comfortably on the edge of a desk littered with proofs and manuscript, at which the editor sat.

"I've just come in from the Professional Matinee," he commenced, adjusting his buttonniere—composed of tiny roses—and smoothing out the lines of the frock coat which he had modeled after the garment that John Drew wears in "The Squire of Dames."

The editor laid down a worn blue pencil and threw himself back in his chair. The Amateur Actor drew out a silver cigarette case and passed it over.

"I know," wearily interrupted the editor, who was once himself a dramatic critic. "Unnatural hair and smooth-shaven masculine mouths—mouths the exposure of which nothing but the exigencies of the profession could justify."

"You should have gone," continued the Amateur Actor. "The celebrities were out in force—and their best clothes—Maxine and John Drew, and dear Ethel Barrymore, and——"

"Worthing—and Nat Goodwin and—Tom Sharkey and Jim Corbett?" the editor interrupted. "Of course they all appeared in boxes and front row seats. It has happened before, you know."

"It's my first matinee," apologized the Amateur Actor, "and rather an event for me, you know. But my dear fellow, how these great professionals do hate one another.

"You forget the critics," the editor suggested.

"Of course they are ready to tar and feather the critics," the Amateur Actor went on, cheerfully, looking at the editor as if he was computing the quantity of feathers required. "Though, come to think of it, I never read anything in print much worse than what I heard them say this blessed afternoon."

The editor settled himself back in his chair.

"Thought I'd make the rounds, you know," said the Amateur, adjusting himself amid the manuscripts. "So, after the first act I dropped in on Miss Shannon. She was in the right-hand box and was rather glad, I thought, to see me."

"Kelcey must have been there,' 'interrupted the editor.

"Looking stunning in a new frock," enthusiastically agreed the Amateur. "And you should have heard them slate the critics. Gave them Cain! I thought of you, old man,"—this affectionately—"and put an oar in. At least I improved on that thing in "The Spinster's Script" —Said that critics, like wives, 'are a provoking class of society, for though they be never right, they be never more than half wrong.' Of course it was'nt a very valiant defense but it might as well have been, for Kelcey blinked his eyes very fast, as he did in "A Bunch of Violets" when the secretary got the best of him, and said with icicles on every accent: 'I would be sorry, Mister Amateur, to think my critics were even half right.' 'Criticisms,' lisped Miss Shannon, 'are like husbands; its dreadful to get a disagreeable one, but its worse to get none at all. You know that, don't you, Winona dear?' she said turning to her sister.

"A bit hard on you," commented the editor.

"I'm not sensitive," answered the Amateur, "but I wasn't sorry when I caught the eye of Miss Elliot—Maxine, you know—so I picked up my hat and remarked that I'd promised to give Miss Elliot some pointers about the preparation of new roles."

"'I know what her method is at present,' said Kelcey. 'She tries to remember how Ada Rehan or somebody else did it and'——

"'Buys new corsets,' interjected Miss Shannon.

"That's spry," said the editor.

"After that," pursued the Amateur, "I toddled around to the fair Maxine. 'You are a very nice young man,' I heard her saying to some one as I neared the box, 'but I don't like husbands. I will never have another—unless he owns a theater.'"

"After she had listened to my praises of her Lady Gay Spanker (pray for my soul) she asked what 'that little doll you've just left' was saying about her.

"She did, eh?" interrupted the editor, growing interested.

"Nothing, I assured her—nothing whatever. We were talking about critics."

"'Critics," said Miss Elliot, 'are people who allow you nothing you want and everything you don't. Now I hate obesity and adore talent, so they tell me I'm a fat beauty and a poor actress.'

"'Women,' said (sotto voce) a queer looking duck in a dark corner. 'Women are never so ridiculous from what they haven't as from what they pretend to have.'

"'They let Drew off easy,' went on Maxine, 'very easy considering he always acts as if he were paying the most conventional of calls.'

"Perhaps,' Worthing observed, 'perhaps it's because he doesn't care what they say about him—critics aren't In Society, you know.'

"'What else did you and Miss Insipidity talk about?' asked the Elliot.

"Carmen," I told her—at least we ought to have been talking about her if we didn't, as we were looking at her," continued the Amateur, helping the editor to another cigarette. "Miss Shannon thinks she would like the role.

Miss Elliot unfurled her eyes to the ceiling.

"'Heaven protect us when she tries; it will be like dining off cold boiled, unsalted, unseasoned maccaroni. I intend to give Carmen myself—I hope it will be before I am as old as Miss Coghlan, though.'

"'You had better hurry up,' said "little sister."

"Alas!" said the queer duck in the dark corner.

Alas, that spring should vanish with the rose;
That youth's sweet-scented manuscript should close
Come fill the cup and in the fire of spring
Your winter garment of Repentence fling;
The Bird of Time has but a little way
To flutter—and the Bird is on the wing.

"'She's cayenne pepper," said Worthing as the curtain went down on Carmen.

MME. NINA BERTINI HUMPHREYS
OF THE TIVOLI GRAND OPERA CO.

"'She's indecent,' said Maxine.

"'She's laced,' said "Little Sister."

"'That doesn't matter in the least,' returned Maxine. In fact it's the one thing she does well.'

"'You are undoubtedly an authority on that point,' said "Little Sister.

"'Miss Coghlan,' remarked Worthing, after a painful pause, 'certainly uses a meat axe when she should take a rapier, and is inclined to drive tacks with a sledge-hammer, but she is an infinitely better actor than Warde. She uses her brains—he his body——"

"'There's dear Mr. Goodwin!' and Maxine rose with her sweetest smile.

"'She had better remain seated,' said 'Little Sister' to me," continued the Amateur. "'Then he could talk to her without yearning for a step-ladder. Won't they look funny on the stage together. Mr. Goodwin will always have to wear a silk hat and an overcoat when she's around. Just look at him trying to help Maxine put her jacket on.'"

"Good story," commented the editor. "But it must be hard living with a beauty."

"It really was grotesque, though," the the Amateur went on—funny enough to be a picture in 'The Lark.' When I left, the little beggar was standing on tip-toe making futile dabs at the Maximus' sleeves (which towered high above his head) and perspiring freely the while.

"Yes, they do hate one another, these professionals," concluded the editor, resuming his stub of blue pencil. "But I'm taking your time up, my boy."

"Well, I did promise to bring 'Little Sister' some roses," murmured the Amateur Actor, adjusting his cane and frock coat—and, old man, be kind to her, won't you?"

PEG WOFFINGTON.

Grand Opera at the Tivoli.

The performance of "Mignon" at the Tivoli Monday night afforded an opportunity to Miss Bertini Humphreys. Her rendering of the title role was excellent and many degrees better than the anticipation of her most ardent supporters. Her acting was most creditable. Though Mme. Natali has not yet regained control of her voice her work as Felina was capital and the role was rendered with expression. Miss Anna Russell loooked charming as the page, but her nervousness has yet to be dealth with. It interferes with her vocal production materially.

The men were excellent. Michelena and Abramhoff were generously applauded and bore off the laurels. The orchestra was in good form, especially on Thursday evening when I. Pagliacci was rendered for Mr. Hinrichs' benefit.

"Carmen" will be played at the Tivoli next week on Wednesday, Friday and Sunday evenings, with Mme. Natali as the Gypsy and Sig. De Vries as the Toreador. On Tuesday, Thursday and Saturday evenings Gounod's "Faust" will be presented. For the fifth of August and the weeks following, "The Hugenots" and "Cavalleria Rusticana," together with "Pagliacci," "Aida" and "The Mask Ball," are being rehearsed.

G.

DRAMATIC NOTES

"The Gay Parisians" follows the Empire Theater Company at the Baldwin Theater.

Joseph and E. M. Holland are at Buzzard's Bay with Joseph Jefferson. Their tour to the Coast begins in September.

Steve Brodie's new play will be ready for production during his coming engagement at the California Theater. He opens in "On The Bowery," the play in which he first made a success.

Next Monday evening the Frawley Company will present another of the New York Lyceum Theater's successes, "The Highest Bidder," a comedy by John Madison Morton. This will be followed by a "A Social Trust," a new play which is to make its debut at the Columbia Theater.

The Baldwin Theater reopens for the season next Monday night with Charles Frohman's Empire Theater Company in "Bohemia," a comedy by Clyde Fitch. It is a play of the Latin Quartier in Paris, and has been running over a hundred nights in New York. The company includes Viola Allen, William Faversham, and many other favorites, and will follow up "Bohemia" with "The Benefit of the Doubt" and "The Masqueraders."

A new novelty at the Orpheum for next week in the shape of a troupe of trained cats which jump through hops of fire, walk tight wires, act the clown and many other amusing and interesting things. They were pronounced the greatest animal show on the stage by the New York World. Lydia Yeamans Titus, assisted by Fred J. Titus, appear in new songs. Biondi has a new comic sketch to introduce in which he is said to do even more clever work than he has yet been seen in.

The farewell week of the stock season at the California Theater commences next Monday night when Frederick Warde and Rose Coghlan will appear in "The Merchant of Venice," supported by L. R. Stockwell's company. On Monday night, the third of August, the California's regular season will be opened by Chauncey Olcott in "Mavourneen," an Irish musical drama. Mr. Olcott will also play "The Irish Artist" and "The Minstrel of Clare" during his three [illegible] engagement.

Professor Dohrmann has been rehearsing Balfe's opera "Satanella," with the view of establishing a permanent operatic organization in Oakland. Arrangements have just been concluded for four performances, beginning next Thursday evening, in the Macdonough Theater. There will be fifty in the chorus, twelve principals and an orchestra of twenty picked musicians. Prominent among those who will assist in the roles are: Misses Kate Krieg, Lulu Ward, Anita Peters, Carrie Von Sieberlich, Arthur Mesmer, Frank Vallega, A. S. Rhorer, J. Witt, C. A. Dean and A. Leach. Popular prices of 25, 50 and 75 cents will prevail for reserved seats.

Night in the City.

Here in the city it is never dark,
Men call it night to mark the weeks away—
It is a dull reflection of the day,
For the white lights are flashing to and fro,
The gaslights gleam and shine far down the street,
The stores are filled with flaring lights that beat
Back from the pavement in long lines of light,
The wide, still square is quivering and white
And crossed with pale, thin shapes. From windows, too,
Through the closed curtains doth the lamplight shine
From all the houses. In this room of mine
The street lights flash and tremble, while the moon
Floods all the world with her majestic light—
It slants across my bed; the roors are white,
The window panes are shining like pale fires,
The moonlight flasheth back from countless wires—
The moonlight shineth in across my bed,
Or, if I close the blinds, when I half wake,
Through the closed shutters shall the light creep in,
Until I turn and sleep, and, dreaming, pass
To where, at last, the darkness doth begin.
—Eleanor Corquille Adams, in Chicago Times-Herald.

Schilling's Best tea has a flavor of its own—no! that is not right—it has the flavor that tea has in Japan, China and Ceylon.

All tea should have it; but no tea has it except fresh-roasted tea.

Ours are the only tea-roasting machines on the Pacific Coast.

A. Schilling & Company
San Francisco

CRESTA BLANCA WINES

AWARDED
THREE HIGHEST AWARDS
AT

THE ATLANTA EXPOSITION

OF SIX MEDALS
AWARDED TO CALIFORNIA

Cresta Blanca Wines

OBTAINED THREE

WETMORE-BOWEN CO.

140 Montgomery Street
Under Occidental Hotel

We Have Appointed

Coburn, Tevis & Co.

OUR AGENTS
FOR

CHOCOLATE
MENIER

MENIER & CO.

ABRAMSON-HEUNISCH CO. (Incorporated)

IMPORTERS AND JOBBERS OF
Brewers' and Bottlers' Supplies, Corks, Druggists' Glassware, Etc.

26-28 Main St. San Francisco

TERRA COTTA
PRESSED BRICK FIRE PROOFING

GLADDING, McBEAN & CO.
1358-1360 MARKET ST.
WORKS, LINCOLN CAL.

Adams' Tutti-Frutti Chewing Gum for Indigestion

The Maison Riche serves an elegant dinner at popular prices.

Use only Richardson & Robbins' Deviled Meats for picnics

FICTION IN REVIEW

"False Coin or True?" "The Under Side of Things," and Others.

It is a new departure for an author to tell you frankly that a certain man is a villain, and then persist in showing you the good side of him. In "False Coin or True?" (D. Appleton & Co.) F. F. Montresor admits that M. Morozo is anything but respectable, and all the other characters hint or loudly proclaim his depravity, yet at a pinch he generally does the high-minded and unselfish thing. Not that he really belies his own character; he is simply a human man, with his qualities put up assorted, instead of the typical stage blackguard. If there was vastly more bad than good in him, Linda saw only the latter, and it was the very innocence of her devotion that made him play the part of a respectful guardian to the little workhouse waif whom fate had thrown in his way. "Monsieur, it was well known was a man to whom no respectable father would trust his daughter for an hour; yet this fatherless waif had never heard a hurtful word from his lips." It was simply that M. Morize, with all his highly-colored experiences, had as yet left one kind of love unexplored, and of this Linda had brought the first knowledge to his astonished French nature. It was not to be compared with John's love which "should keep all evil from her, as the circle of fire that travelers light in a desert keeps wild beasts away;" it could not have cured him of his small selfishnesses, or suggested any reason why she should not go on with her career as a medium; but it made him great enough to give her up when she would have stayed with him, and that was a big step up for M. Morize. One gets to have a decided affection for the humorous, cynical little Frenchman, and does not feel quite as glad as one undoubtedly should when the big, virtuous, clumsy Scotchman carries off the humble little bone of contention. As for Linda, poor, plucky little coward, in her, too, we find contradictions more usual in a living being than in a heroine of fiction. She will let anybody decide everything for her, and suddenly, at some important point, make up her own mind with a quiet stubbornness that nothing can move. She trembles at every shadow till all at once, at a crisis, she plunges forward and takes a step that the bravest might well shrink from. Her domineering Scotchman will rule her all the year round, but about once every twenty-ninth of February she will quietly assert herself, and there will be no gainsaying her. Taken as a whole, it is a dear story, beautifully told, and full of wholesome little ideas like this:

"The small services for kinsfolk and neighbors that tax a woman's powers pretty constantly, perhaps comfort, as well as weary her, at times more than she knows. She grows sick over the puzzles of heart and brain that she must either shirk, or find a clue to; but these insistent clamorous claims of love, of other people's minor needs, pull the balance straight. Perhaps, after all, the world is the same, because dinners must be cooked and clothes stitched."

Lilian Bell was born to write charming light essays and love affairs of old maids and intimate little sketches of more detail than plot. When she embarks on a genuine novel, one is conscious of a slight disappointment. "The Under Side of Things," (Harper & Brothers) is full of clever touches, but the plot is weak and trivial and the construction undeniably amateurish. Mrs. Copeland and the narrow, provincial atmosphere of Stockbridge, Pennsylvania, are well characterized, but the prominent society belle of New York's four hundred, when there is a man around, is disappointingly suggestive of a village coquette. Most authors, young ones especially, are always in a hurry to assure you that their pet heroines move in the very highest circles, but it takes a very clever writer to really convince you of it. It is a sentimental story, in a gentle, spinsterly way, but is saved by a most delicious sense of humor. Speaking of Mrs. Copeland's rectitude, the author says:

"There is a virtue so blatant that it becomes a vice. Hers was of that order. You felt that you ought to adopt it and that she thought so too, and that if you were in her family she would make you."

If Miss Vandervoort was really as popular as she is pictured, it is difficult to see why she took such an interest in the colorless little heroine. Nothing could have been better for Alice, however, than the older girl's downright speeches. She is especially vehement against the Philistinism Alice has grown up in.

"I really think there is an element of viciousness in the virtue of a small town which is worse than loose-slippered liberality. I think narrowness, whenever and wherever you meet it, is the most irritating of all the vices. Of course, I am a woman, and I can only talk and rage about these things in a perfectly ladylike and refined way; but they make me desperate.'

"'Do I make you feel like that?' asked Alice.

"'Oh, no, not quite yet—but I am afraid of what you are going to be. You have set your feet on the slippery downward path of Perfection, and I only wish you could see how stupidly conceited you appear to a pagan outsider, because you believe so absolutely that you are right and I am wrong. Now, I don't agree with you. I am wrong enough, Heaven knows, only you are more wrong than I.'"

There is a great deal of keen good sense in the book, and it is full of little things that you want to read aloud, as that about Alice's music, which brought tears to your eyes—"or, if it did not go that far, perhaps it just made the bridge of your nose ache." In fact, it is a very poor story, charmingly written.

One can forgive a good deal of nastiness in a book if it is only interesting enough, but a story like "Those Good Mormons," (Rand, McNally & Co.) that is both dull and nasty, is unpardonable. It is perfectly legitimate to treat only one phase of life, so long as it is assuredly a phase, and stands in its proper relations to the whole; but when one particular phase—and a very displeasing one—is treated as being the whole of life, and all the world is represented as belonging to it, the picture is as distressingly out of focus as an amateur snapshot. That lack of proportion is what M. Le Gallienne defines as decadence. De Maupassant might have written a far worse book that would have offended far less, for his wit and charm cover a multitude of sins, but in Gyp's hands the story is drearily, realistically unpleasant. Perhaps it is not quite fair to judge by a translation even a well done one, it is an acknowledged fact that few French novels can stand the broad, cold light of the English language. Still, it is hard to see how, even in its native land, the book could have had a raison d'etre.

Gertrude Warden has given her book rather a deceptive title in "The Sentimental Sex," (D. Appleton & Co.) One expects something in the line of "The Ascent of Woman," a treatise on feminine problems, a disquisition on the marriage laws. Instead, one gets nothing but the trashiest kind of a trashy novel in a London setting. There is a literary atmosphere flimsily decadent, a heroine with a complicated past, and an honest, pig-headed Bushranger, who is left on the last page with a pistol pointed at his heart. The title is purely ironical, for the women had had all the sentimentality knocked out of them long before the story began.

In "Sir Mark," (D. Appleton & Co.) Anna Robson Brown has given us stirring tales of adventure in a historical setting. The hero, who has been brought up at the Pretender's court, goes back to England to recover some family jewels, and, after great difficulties and dangers, escapes with them to Holland. On the money they bring he goes to America, where he falls in with a set of desperate characters, whose idea is to use him all they can and then quietly dispose of him. He is saved, however, marries an American girl, and becomes a loyal servant of Washington's government.

Ada Cambridge's last novel, "A Humble Enterprise," (D. Appleton & Co.) is a story of a plucky Australian girl who, on her father's death, supports her family by running a tea room. There is a wealthy young man, love at first sight, a little family opposition, and then all comes right.

MOORE'S POISON OAK REMEDY
Cures Poison Oak and all Skin Diseases. Sold by all druggists

J. W. Carmany, 25 Kearny St. Ladies' and gentlemen's outing shirts to order a specialty.

HER FIRST INTERVIEW

BY JULIET WILBOR TOMPKINS

"He's the Republican candidate, you know," the editor had said. "Make it about eight hundred words."

She was not shy, but for all that her heart beat uncomfortably fast as the great man came into the hotel parlor. He, on his part, looked a little surprised. Her better days were recent and their atmosphere still hung around her.

"The Daily Electrifier wants eight hun—a short account of your life, if you don't mind," she began. "I hope you'll tell me all you can, for I never interviewed anyone before, and I don't quite know how to do it."

The candidate smiled encouragingly.

"I'll do my best," he said.

"It feels very impertinent," she went on, relaxing into dimples. "I want to know just where you were born, and when, and why."

"Well, I was born in Washington," he began, staring reminiscently at the ceiling. She glanced up demurely from her note-book.

"Washington, B. C.?" she asked.

"No, nor D. C., either," he answered, coming back to the present with a laugh.

"Then it's Washington Territory," she said, scribbling triumphantly.

"Only it happens to be a State now," he remonstrated.

"Is it? What a pity," she answered. "Territory is so much more interesting and romantic. It sounds like Indians and bears and prairies."

The great man looked slightly astonished.

"They ought to have thought of that," he murmured, after a pause.

"A woman would have," she said. "That's just why I want woman's suffrage. Men never consider the poetical side of things, or beauty, or anything like that. If we helped run the government, it would be a great deal more picturesque."

"I haven't a doubt of it," said the great man, in a dazed tone.

"Is woman's suffrage on your platform?" she asked, evidently proud of the technical term.

"Good G——, well, ah—no, I hardly think it is," he answered.

"You must take it up," she said easily. "It's the only sensible thing. But I ought to be asking you questions. Why are you a Democrat?"

"Perhaps because I'm a Republican," said the candidate, growing rather red.

"I meant Republican," the new reporter said tranquilly. "Do tell me what's the difference. It used to be something about free trade, but you don't hear much about that now, and I can't tell which party is which."

"Well, the whole country is having a little difficulty on that very subject," he began.

"Oh, I'm glad of that," she interrupted. "I thought it was just my stupidity. If everybody's puzzled, I shan't need to bother about it. I know there is some trouble about silver or gold. It's like London bridge."

"London Bridge!" said the Republican candidate, pressing his hand to his head. "What do you mean?"

"Didn't you ever play that when you were little?" she asked. "It's 'London Bridge is falling down,' you know. When you choose sides for the tug-of-war, they ask you whether you'd rather have a gold coach or a silver castle, and whichever you choose, you take that side and pull."

"I think you have a very fair understanding of the national attitude," said the great man.

"I ought to know something about your childhood," she went on, frowning at the point of her pencil to make it write. "Haven't you some pictures of yourself as a little boy? It would be dear to print them with 'The Republican Candidate' written beneath."

"I'm afraid I haven't any with me," he answered glancing at his watch.

"That's too bad. We have some fascinating ones of us when we were small. Both of the boys wore plaid stockings and a billow curl, and my sash was tied within three inches of the bottom of my skirt," she said, with a laugh that nobody could have helped joining.

"They are great fun," he said, rising. "Now, I'm afraid——"

"Is my half hour up?" she said regretfully. "I've enjoyed meeting you more than I can say. It was ever so good of you to tell me so much. Good-bye." She shook hands and left him with a little friendly smile. Her skirts still rustled as she went. The Republican candidate stood watching her go, though he knew three men were waiting for him.

"To-morrow's paper ought to be interesting," he said, shaking his head. "I only hope the editor—" But he went away leaving the sentence unfinished.

As Usual.

Little Freddy—I think mamma must be getting well, now, 'cause she's awfully cross.

Father (sotto voce)—Yes, and she's making everybody else sick.

Humidity.

He lived on an isle in the far southern seas,
Where the air was so moist fishes swam in the trees—
Where birds did betake them to water to fly,
And the clothes were hung out in the rivers to dry!

—Chicago Record.

Enlightened.

Jones (observing neighbor digging in vegetable garden)—Putting in time?

Neighbor—No; potatoes.

Among the many great Financial Corporations on the Pacific Coast, none rank higher than the

FIREMAN'S FUND INSURANCE CO.

Its Agents are found throughout America, and its Record for Prompt and Equitable Settlement of All Honest Losses is Firmly Established

D. J. STAPLES, President — WM. J. DUTTON, Vice-President — B. FAYMONVILLE, 2d V.-Pres., Sec'y
J. B. LEVISON, Marine Sec'y — LOUIS WEINMANN, Asst. Sec'y — STEPHEN D. IVES, General Agent

QUEEN LILY SOAP

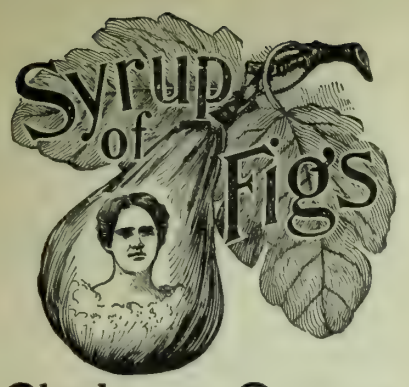
BEST ON EARTH
FOR LAUNDRY USE

Patronize Home Industry

Wedding Invitations are properly engraved and in correct form, at ROBERTSON'S

WEDDING

Invitations, Announcements, Cards, etc., Engraved and Printed. Correct style, low rates. 20 samples and directions for correct form, modern weddings, mailed postpaid for 10 cents in stamps. BRUNT, FINE PRINTING, 535 Clay St., San Francisco, Cal.



Gladness Comes

With a better understanding of the transient nature of the many physical ills which vanish before proper efforts—gentle efforts—pleasant efforts—rightly directed. There is comfort in the knowledge that so many forms of sickness are not due to any actual disease, but simply to a constipated condition of the system, which the pleasant family laxative, Syrup of Figs, promptly removes. That is why it is the only remedy with millions of families. and is everywhere esteemed so highly by all who value good health. Its beneficial effects are due to the fact, that it is the one remedy which promotes internal cleanliness, without debilitating the organs on which it acts. It is therefore all important, in order to get its beneficial effects, to note when you purchase, that you have the genuine article, which is manufactured by the California Fig Syrup Co. only, and sold by all reputable druggists.

If in the enjoyment of good health, and the system is regular, then laxatives or other remedies are not needed. If afflicted with any actual disease, one may be commended to the most skillful physicians, but if in need of a laxative, then one should have the best, and with the well-informed everywhere, Syrup of Figs stands highest and is most largely used and gives most general satisfaction.

FOR GRIPPE
IT'S A DANDY

VINA BRANDY

AND

It's Pure! That's Sure!

VINA DISTILLERY CO.
819 Market St., S. F.

CHARLES S. WHEELER ERNST H. LUDWIG

Ernst H. Ludwig & Co.

THE MODEL AMERICAN CATERERS

Supply Wedding Breakfasts, Luncheons, Dinners, Matinee Teas and Receptions on shortest notice. Also Terrapin Entrees Luncheons and Dinners. Ice Cream, Cake, &c.

Telephone 2388 1206 SUTTER STREET

CRECIENTE

IMPORTED SEA SALT FOR BATHING

Healthful and Invigorating!

SOLD BY DRUGGISTS AND GROCERS

The Lost Art of beautifying the Face and plumping the Figure, is recovered in the rare "Toilet Article" known as Dr. O. P. Brown's Tissue Builder, made from an old Roman Oil Formula. It makes neck, arms and bust plump and firm. Druggists $1.00; by mail $1.10. Sample, by mail, with "Woman's Life," illustrated, 10c. 47 Grand St., Jersey City, N. J.

THE LANTERN PARADE

The Wheelmen's Demonstration in Favor of Good Roads.

On the evening of July 25th—the date of this issue—the wheelmen of San Francisco will assemble at the end of the Folsom Street Boulevard and ride with lantern-decked wheels along that thoroughfare, cross to Market street, dismount and walk along the City's main street, up and down till the people have seen them thoroughly, and then go out to Van Ness Avenue and listen to five minute talks for a while from men who have something to say about one of the most important elements of a modern municipality—its streets.

A parade like this is called a demonstration. It is a lawful method to be pursued by any organized body for the purpose of calling public attention to itself, its magnitude, its needs, its deserts. The parade of Saturday night will mean that every wheelman who takes part in it is a man willing to undergo no inconsiderable amount of personal discomfort for the purpose of accomplishing the ends he is seeking. That the number of wheelmen who are in line on that occasion should be multiplied by five when it is desired to determine the number of nonpartisan votes that the wheelmen of this city will cast at the coming municipal election for any officer having to do with care of the streets, is evident enough when you consider the trouble and danger involved in participating in a demonstration of this character at night over unsafe streets. Where you will find one wheelman whose enthusiasm for good streets will lead him to the length of taking part in a lantern parade, you will easily find five who appreciate the importance of the principles sought to be accentuated to the extent of cutting loose from party affiliations and voting for such Supervisors, such a Superintendent of Streets, such a Mayor, as have pledged themselves to a wise and economical expenditure of liberal appropriations for street improvements. So one thing to be remembered in viewing the procession, is, therefore, to multiply its apparent strength by five at least if you wish to arrive at the voting strength of the wheelmen of this City.

Again, there is another important feature in this parade. The mounted aids are delegates from the various improvement clubs of the City. These clubs, in the aggregate, represent a block of voters, independent of party affiliation on these issues, only second in numerical strength to the wheelmen themselves. The lantern parade of July 25th is a declaration to the people and the politicians of the City that these two great bodies of thinking voters are working together.

Another thing that the parade will serve to bring forcefully before the people. The wheelmen of this City have such a system of organization that the results of the work of a committee appointed to test the tendencies of nominees for municipal offices having relations with the care and improvement of the streets can be quickly and surely communicated to every user of the wheel within its limits. The League of American Wheelmen for this division has been busily engaged for months in securing lists of the wheelmen of every locality of the State, attached and unattached; the California Associated Cycling Club numbers within its ranks more than fifteen per cent of the cyclists of California; the Cycle Board of Trade makes it easily possible to determine the name and address of every person who has purchased a wheel in the State. By this means it becomes possible to place in the hands of practically every wheelman of San Francisco definite data as to the opinions, promises and tendencies of any candidate. And this will be done. Is there any room for doubt as to the outcome?

It needs but a word to show the importance of street making and repair in this City, and that the matter is of sufficient magnitude to constitute a legitimate political issue. Up to 1892 thirty-one millions of dollars were expended in San Francisco in the construction and maintenance of streets and sewers, mostly cheap and comparatively wasteful. Since then the annual expenditure has averaged about two million dollars and much good work has been done with it. So when we select our candidates for Supervisors, Mayor and Superintendent of Streets, we are called upon to choose men who will have the spending of four millions of our money during their term of office. If this money is spent wisely the wheelmen will be first to feel the benefit and they are consequently the legitimate body to stand for the issue, though of course every citizen interested in the city's welfare can be counted in its favor. The wheelmen are a unit on street and highway improvement. There is no dissenting voice in their ranks on that subject, and they can be relied upon to stand together, politically and otherwise, on this issue.

C. MICHENER.

BICYCLE GAMES IN ENGLAND

Simple wheeling is no longer enough, and England is setting the fashion of bicycle games. One of the first to be adopted by cyclists was polo. The game had for years been played on horseback, and in the winter time on skates, but it is now played on bicycles. Naturally the unexpected and ludicrous tumbles taken by the players furnish no end of amusement to the spectators. The game as played on wheels does not differ materially from the original game as played on horseback, but it is much more interesting when played on a smooth rink surface.

Another unique idea is that of a bicycle obstacle race, which is more like a hurdle race than anything else. The riders are started off as in ordinary races. Placed across the track are hurdles, and as the riders come to a hurdle they dismount and, lifting the machines over, remount and ride to the finish line.

In another race the competitors ride to a certain point, where sacks of corn are placed. The idea is that each of the riders shall take a sack of corn and carry it on his bicycle to the finishing point. As the sack of corn weighs some seventy-five pounds, this race requires strength as well as skill. Then there are numerous more or less absurd contests, in which the rider has to carry an egg in a spoon, or pick up potatoes, or drop balls in buckets. Perhaps the most difficult of all is the umbrella race. In this each rider has an umbrella which he is obliged by the rules to open at the start and keep open to the finish. An umbrella is not the easiest article in the world for a pedestrian to successfully manipulate, and the difficulty is much greater when one is a-wheel and there happens to be a breeze blowing across the track.

Another race is called the "dressing race," and is subject to the following rules: "Bicycles are brought to the starting point and the coat and vest of the latter are laid on the ground. After the starting signal is given, each competitor, without any assistance, is obliged to put on his vest and coat, mount his wheel and make the best of his way to the winning post, where he is to arrive with his vest and coat entirely buttoned. The vest must have at least five buttons and the coat at least three buttons." It was even tried to have a thread and needle race, in which the contestant should thread a needle as he went, but as most of the riders found this nearly impossible standing on firm ground, it was given up, or reserved for feminine sprinters. All of these races are known in England as "gymkhana" on wheels, and there is no doubt that they will be introduced in this country by the wheelmen of society. They will certainly be an attractive and novel innovation. There is apparently no reason why tent-pegging, so popular on points in India, should not be introduced in connection with the bicycle. Cutting an apple with a sword has also been successfully tried as a test of skill.

LIGHT VERSE

Don't Wobble.

The man who gets on a bicycle
Would better first count the cost;
He must make up his mind to ride straight and true—
For if he wobbles he's lost!

The girl who would capture the rich young man
She has set her heart upon
Must never relax her tender smile,
For if she wobbles she's gone!

The fellow who's bet on the Board of Trade
That wheat will jump sky high
Must be careful to see that it climbs and climbs,
For if it wobbles—goodby!

The man in the mask who holds a gun
Till you quit, of your cash bereft,
Must point her straight as a shaft of fate,
For if she wobbles he's left.

You mustn't get tight on wobbly drinks,
You mustn't wear wobbly clothes,
You mustn't come home with a wobbly jag,
When the keyhole wobbly goes.

Now the moral of this little chanson is
As you wander the wide world through,
If you want to achieve anything, keep straight,
For a wobbling gait won't do.

—Chicago Dispatch.

Blows.

The giant powder in the blast
Is blowing up the boulders;
The maiden with pneumatic sleeves
Is blowing up her shoulders.

The baker to the kitchen maid
Is blowing up his crumpets;
The milkman in the lower hall
Is blowing up the trumpets.

The gentle zephyr from the South
Is blowing the narcissus;
The cook who thinks she knows it all
Is blowing up the "missus."

The father down upon his knees,
Is blowing up the fires;
The daughter in her bloomer suit,
Is blowing up her tires.

—Yonkers Statesman.

Mary's Hat.

Dear Mary had a great big hat—
She was a dressy creature—
And men who sat behind in church
Could never see the preacher.

And when she wore it to the play
It quite obscured the stage;
So all the men who couldn't see
Were thrown into a rage.

Now, from the men who sat in church
There came no ill-report,
While those who could not see the stage
Dragged Mary into court.

—Chicago Record.

A Crossroads Song.

Happiest times in Georgia lan',
With a honey to kiss an' hug;
Boy with bait in a oyster can,
Follerin' man with a jug.

An' it's so long, honey, an' wait fer me
Tell the stars peep outen the sky;
I'm gwine now whar the fish bites free,
An' I'll fish tell the jug runs dry!

—Atlanta Constitution.

Chew Adams' Pepsin Tutti-Frutti. It is sovereign for indigestion and agreeable to the taste

Kelly's Corn Cure never fails. 25 cents 102 Eddy Street

J. F. Cutter

EXTRA

Old Bourbon

has been a staple family and medicinal whiskey for a quarter-century

E. MARTIN

—AND—

CO.

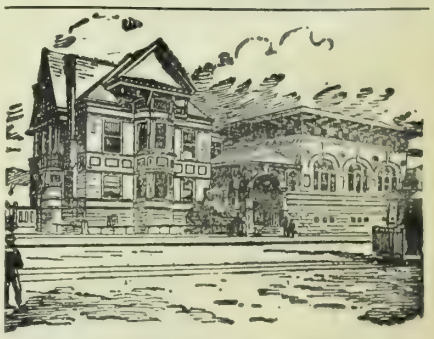
411 MARKET ST.

SAN FRANCISCO

Good Appetite

Is restored and the disordered Stomach and Liver invigorated by taking a small wineglassful, before meals, of the celebrated . . . . . .

Peruvian Bitters



TRINITY SCHOOL

FOUNDED 1876

3300 Washington Street, San Francisco

BOARDING AND DAY SCHOOL FOR YOUNG MEN AND BOYS

Prepares for University and College. A Faculty of eleven Professors and Teachers. Boarders limited to forty. An Accredited School with the University of California and the Leland Stanford Jr. University

Term Opens Aug. 3d

REV. DR. E. B. SPALDING, Rector

Peralta Hall

A Boarding School for Boys

Under the direction of the most competent masters. Situated at Berkeley, one of the most healthful spots in California. Sheltered from fogs and convenient to the city. Thoroughly accredited into University of California and Stanford. Send for catalogue and other particulars to

J. J. MORAN, Manager

BERKELEY CALIFORNIA

MISS HAMLIN'S SCHOOL

AND

VAN NESS SEMINARY

1849 Jackson Street
San Francisco, Cal.

BOARDING AND DAY SCHOOL FOR GIRLS, under the joint direction of Miss Sarah D. Hamlin and Mrs. Edna Snell Poulson.

The fall term will open Wednesday, August 5, 1896.

It is intended to bring the College Preparatory Course into the Accredited System of the University of California. The study of Natural Sciences will be a special feature of the school work.

Ziska Institute : 1606 Van Ness Ave.

School for Girls. English, French, German. Thirtieth year begins August 3d.

MME. B. ZISKA, A.M., Principal.

NEW YORK HAIR DRESSING STORE

MME. E. KESSING, Proprietress

Artistic Hair Dressing and Shampooing. A new preventive for the hair falling out. Superfluous hair removed. 1704 Market Street, San Francisco

BAY STATE OYSTER HOUSE AND GRILL ROOM

15 Stockton Street

Oysters served in all styles. Orders for Theatre Parties given special attention M. M. ADLER, Prop.

MADE IN CALIFORNIA

I acked away with the other things he has a full assortment of STANDARD outing SHIRTS.

NEUSTADTER BROS., Mfrs.

MENNEN'S BORATED TALCUM TOILET POWDER

Approved by Highest Medical Authorities as a Perfect Sanitary Toilet Preparation

For infants and adults

Delightful after shaving

Positively relieves Prickley Heat, Nettle Rash, Chafed Skin, Sunburn, etc. Removes Blotches, Pimples; makes the skin smooth and healthy.

Take No Substitutes. Sold by druggists or mailed for 25 cts.

SAMPLE MAILED (Name this paper) FREE

GERHARD MENNEN CO., Newark, N. J.

Removed TO 1306 Market Street and selling Hats and Caps lower than ever

HARLOE

FRISCO'S FAVORITE HATTER

COTTON SAIL DUCKS

22-inch, in all numbers. Medium, Soft and Hard

ALSO

Heavy Naught, Wagon and Draper Ducks

From 30 to 120 inches wide

Monumental and Imperial Ounce Ducks

Manufactured by Mount Vernon Company Baltimore

Murphy, Grant & Co. Pacific Coast Sole Agents

Merchant Tailor MARSHAL F. JONES

ROOM 115 PHELAN BUILDING

SAN FRANCISCO, CALIFORNIA

Charles Lyons London Tailor

Business Suits from $15.50

Fine Dress Suits from $19.50

1212-1218 Market Street 302 Kearny Street

906 Market Street, San Francisco

MRS. EDITH E. McLEAN

PHYSICIAN FOR THE HAIR

Has a Canadian Vegetable Tonic for the Hair that will make it grow when all else fails. Dandruff removed. Terms moderate. High-class references.

Office Hours 10 to 12 and 1 to 6. Rooms 45, 58 and 60 ST. ANN'S BUILDING SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.

SCOTT & McCORD

HAY AND GRAIN MERCHANTS

OFFICE, 615 SIXTH ST.

IN THE CURRENT

Women as Drummers — The Emancipated Woman in Iceland.

A dozen years ago there was scarcely a woman drummer to be found in the country, but now they are found in every conceivable line of business, and, according to the New York Sun, are proving remarkably successful. It is hard to say who among the women has been the longest on the road. There are many veterans whose territories extend from ocean to ocean, and from the great lakes to the Gulf of Mexico. Two lay claim to the honor of being the first in the field. One is Mrs. Kate M. Green, who lightens the burden of womankind by selling washboards for an Evansville, Ind., house; the other is Miss Zindel. The latter has met with great pecuniary success in selling shell goods. Those who are uninitiated so far as women drummers go, must not think for an instant that they handle a line of goods suitable only for women. They carry everything from chewing gum up to machinery. Miss Zindel has been on the road for a decade, traveling all over the United States. As an example of her success, it is said that in 1894 she sold $300,000 worth of goods, and that wasn't a good business year, either. This gives an idea of woman's capacity for doing such work.

Undoubtedly the youngest woman on the road is a mere slip of a girl living in Florence, S. C. She is nothing more than a child, and yet she has covered thousands of miles and made enough money to support an almost helpless family since she was 13 years of age, three years ago. Her name is Ellen Caddelle—J. Ellen Caddelle she has signed herself since she has assumed the dignity of a "lady drummer," as she calls herself. She began by canvassing for a paper, and gradually rose through indelible slates for marking linen, baking powder, soap and sigars, to perfection tins and photographs of her 16-year-old self. Between times she is writing a book on her experiences. A woman drummer has unlimited chances for getting copy. One tells of spending a night in a North Carolina farm-house, where she had a most delicious supper and the cleanest of quarters.

"'What's my bill?' I asked, 'and that of the driver.'

"'W-a-l, I scarcely know,' answered the old man. 'You had two meals o' cooked victuals, a bed, an' keep fur the colts. Hit soun's like a heap o' money, I know, stranger, but call hit 15 cents.'

"'Mek hit 10, ole man,' put in the old woman.

"Really, tears sprang to my eyes, I had been unusually successful that year, so I slipped a $5 bill into the old woman's hand and told her to buy herself and Sal a new dress. They actually didn't know what it was, and when I explained I left both women crying and the old man coughing and blowing his nose. To my mind that is one of the most interesting of my experiences."

It is a strange fact that as drummers of millinery women are not at all successful. Groceries seem to be more in their line. Dozens of women are making money for their employers and themselves selling flour, soda, cocoa, baking powder, buckwheat, and other things. The woman drummer has this advantage over the man in handling things. She stops in a small town a few days, sets up an impromptu kitchen in a grocery store, and invites all the women in the town to call in and see a demonstration of the merits of her goods.

"She shows them what delicious biscuits can be made from her flour or with her baking powder, she lets them taste cocoa more delicious than they ever dreamed of, and her batter cakes made of the buckwheat flour that she carries are so light and spongy that even the men are tempted to go in to try them. What man drummer can do this? It is perhaps as collectors of money that women have accomplished the most. A man who had no intention of settling a claim will often be forced into it by pride if a woman comes collecting. He doesn't like the idea of being found out by the other sex. Women don't always look at those things in the right light.

* * *

How does it happen that the woman of Iceland has quietly possessed herself of emancipation long before the women of Europe and America dreamed of clamoring for it? From the earliest period the Icelandic woman has enjoyed distinct individuality. The wife has always held the place of an equal with her husband in matters pertaining to the home. In the old days she wore a bracelet, from which hung the insignia of office—her keys and purse. Now that she has laid aside the gold wristband, these significant household accoutrements are carreid in the dress pocket; but they are hers, nevertheless. In all matters of church and parish she has her vote and, as the church and state are combined, this is in reality a civic privilege. She also has full municipal suffrage, but as yet cannot vote upon matters pertaining to commerce nor for members of parliament, though there is a strong sentiment abroad in favor of giving her these additional advantages. Women take part in many political meetings, and talk upon all political subjects. During the althing sessions great numbers of the most intelligent women of the capital city are in constant attendance. For some years there has existed a political society of women, and when momentous questions affecting their interests are before the legislative body large meetings are called and addressed by women, setting forth their claims.

* * *

The fashionable watch of the day is open faced. The sale of open-faced watches is increasing, especially in fine watches, but it is increasing also in watches of other grades. Of fine gold watches sold in the city probably two-thirds are now made open faced. Of all the watches sold in the United States, gold and silver, probably from a quarter to a third are now made open-faced. The modern watch has for one of its characteristics thinness. A man's watch, which is now made more especially to wear with evening dress and is all the time growing in favor, is a plain, thin open-faced gold watch which takes up but little room in the pocket. Perfect in its simplicity, this watch is at the same time of fine workmanship and great beauty. It sells at $190. A gold watch not so thin nor so finely finished, but a very handsome modern watch and an excellent timekeeper, by the same makers and bearing their name, can be bought in open face, the case of 18-carat gold, for $65; in double case for $70.

But gold watches and good watches, too, can be bought for very much less than these prices; in fact there never was a time when watches generally were made in such tasteful shapes, or when they were so good for the money, or so cheap as now.

An Important Amalgamation.

Over the door of a well-known business house in the wholesale district of this city has gone a new sign, "Jesse Moore Hunt Company." This means the consolidation of two reliable concerns—the Jesse Moore & Co. of Louisville, Ky., founded in 1853, and the house of Moore Hunt & Co. of this city, established in 1875; hence the new style of the firm, "Jesse Moore Hunt Company."

Under this new banner will be continued the manufacture of the celebrated Jesse Moore whiskey, the excellence and uniform quality of which has gained for the house a world-wide reputation. The change has much significance for the trade, as it will bring them in more immediate touch with the manufacturers, while at the same time insuring them of the absolute purity and superiority of the Jesse Moore brand over all others. In all the years that this famous brand has been on the market it has never once faltered in its increasing popularity.

Poodle Dog Restaurant, S. E. corner Grant Avenue and Bush street. Private dining and banquet rooms. Telephone 429. Blanco & Bruno, proprietors.

THE OVERLAND LIMITED

"The Overland Limited," via Union Pacific, takes only three and a half days to Chicago, and only four and a half days to New York.

The Union Pacific is the only line running Pullman double drawing-room sleepers and dining cars, San Francisco to Chicago, daily, without change, and composite buffet smoking and library cars between Salt Lake City, Ogden and Chicago. Only one change of sleepers to New York; dining car service the entire distance.

Upholstered Pullman tourist sleepers San Francisco to Chicago daily without change. Personally conducted tourist excursions to St. Paul and Chicago every Friday.

Tickets and sleeping car reservations at general office, No. 1 Montgomery street, San Francisco. Reservations secured in advance by all Trans-Atlantic steamship lines. Tickets on sale to and from all points in Europe. D. W. HITCHCOCK, General Agent, San Francisco.

If you wish to look neat have your suits cleaned and pressed for $1.00. Bay City Clothing Renovatory, 221½ Geary, rooms 19, 20, 21. 'Phone Main 5859.

When you are selecting a wedding present, go to S. and G. Gump, 113 Geary street. They have a magnificent variety to choose from.

CENTEMERI KID GLOVES.
Removed to 128 Post street.

Use only Richardson & Robbin's Canned Meats at picnics

FINEST ON THE MARKET

BEWARE OF IMITATIONS

EEL RIVER CREAMERY

SEE THAT THIS STAMP IS ON END OF SQUARE

A FINE GRAIN DELICIOUS FLAVORED BUTTER

If you appreciate a DELICACY Ask your Dealer for the BRAND

BALDWIN THEATRE Al Hayman and Co. Incorp'd Props.

GRAND REOPENING MONDAY, JULY 27TH

SEVENTH ANNUAL TOUR!

Chas. Frohman's Empire Theatre Co.

From the Empire Theatre, New York, presenting the principal New York Successes

First Week Only, Clyde Fitch's Comedy

BOHEMIA

As Presented for Over 100 Nights at the Empire Theatre

Monday, Aug. 3: The Benefit of the Doubt

Monday, Aug. 10: The Masqueraders

CALIFORNIA THEATRE Al Hayman & Co. Incorp'd Props

FAREWELL WEEK! Monday, July 27th

The Favorites: L. R. Stockwell's Players

FRED'K WARDE ROSE COGHLAN

The Grandest Shakespearean Revival in Years

An Elaborate Scenic Production of

The Merchant of Venice!

Frederick Warde as Shylock. First time here

Rose Coghlan as Portia. First time here

NOTHING LIKE A DECADE!!

Monday, Aug. 3d: Chauncey Olcott

Columbia Theatre.

BELASCO & MAYER AND CHARLES FROHMAN MANAGERS

Nothing But Succeses!

MONDAY, JULY 27TH

Another Great New York Lyceum Theatre Comedy by the

FRAWLEY COMPANY

John Madison Morton's Delightful Play

THE HIGHEST BIDDER!

August 3d: A Social Trust

First presentation upon any stage, and First Appearance with the Frawley Company of Wilton Lackaye, Louise Thorndyke-Boucicault, Alice Pixley

Orpheum

O'FARRELL STREET, BETWEEN STOCKTON AND POWELL

Week commencing Monday, July 27th

NOTE THE GREAT DRAWING CARDS

George Techow

The Greatest Troupe of Performing Cats in the World

Lydia Yeamans-Titus

Refreshing Songs and Refined Comedy

Biondi, in New Operatic Sketches

Vadis Sisters, Electric Acrobats

And a Great Vaudeville Company

Reserved seats 25c.; balcony 10c.; opera chairs and box seats 50c. Matinees Wednesday, Saturday and Sunday

Tivoli Opera House

MRS. ERNESTINE KRELING : : Proprietor and Manager

Season of Italian and English Grand Opera under the Direction of Mr. Gustav Hinrichs

This Saturday Evening, Martha

Tomorrow Evening, Mignon

Repertoire beginning Monday, July 27th

Monday, Wednesday, Friday, Sunday Evgs., Carmen

Natali, Bertini Humphreys, Schnabel, Mulle, Loomis, Michalena, DeVries, Pache, Karl, Tooker, Perron, Royce, etc., in the cast

Tuesday, Thursday, Saturday Evenings, Faust

Bertini Humphreys, Russell, Casati, Michalena, Raffael, Pache, Abramoff, Perron, etc., in the cast

Popular Prices : : : 25 and 50 Cents

BAJA CALIFORNIA

DAMIANA BITTERS

"Damiana" is a powerful aphrodisiac and special tonic for the sexual and urinary organs of both sexes and a great remedy for diseases of the kidneys and bladder. For weak nerves these bitters are invaluable, and leading physicians recommend them as the greatest invigorator known. Long-winded testimonials are not necessary. "Damiana" Bitters are known on their merits. (Send for Circular.)

NABER, ALFS & BRUNE, Agents

323-325 Market St., S. F.

Ask your Blacksmith to shoe your horse with

PHŒNIX HORSE SHOES

GIVE THEM A TRIAL

H. S. BRIDGE & CO.

Merchant Tailors

Many Novelties in Imported Wear. Shirts to Order a Specialty.

622 Market Street, San Francisco

(Up-stairs, opposite Palace Hotel)

San Francisco Carpet Beating and Renovating Works

D. MACKINTOSH & CO.

Successors to S. S. Ferguson & Co.

Renovating, Laying and Refitting Carpets a Specialty

Telephone South 36 23 and 25 10th St., S. F.

CHAUNCEY M. DEPEW, the famous orator, statesman, railroad president and millionaire, in an interview said of his recent visit to Del Monte: "I visited Monterey, and I call it the most beautiful place in the world. Monte Carlo cannot compare with it. Its seventeen-mile drive is unparalleled for fineness."

When Mr. Depew says it is the most beautiful place in the world he knows what he is saying, and means it, for he has seen pretty much all the beautiful and interesting places in the world many times over . . . . .

The Tavern of Castle Crag, the most beautiful, attractive and accessible of all mountain resorts, will open for the reception of guests June 1, and will close October 1, 1896.

GEORGE SCHONEWALD, MANAGER

CAMPING

Season 1896

Reduced Rates for Campers' Excursion Tickets

To the following Resorts, situated on the lines of the Southern Pacific Co.

Santa Cruz Mountains

ALMA, LAUREL, FELTON
BEN LOMOND, WRIGHTS, GLENWOOD
BOULDER CREEK

Shasta Region

SWEET BRIAR CAMP
SHASTA SPRINGS SHASTA RETREAT
MT. SHASTA CAMP

For information as to Ticket Rates, Routes of Travel, etc., address or call at any Ticket Office of Southern Pacific Company, or at

General Passenger Office
No. 4 Montgomery Street, Second Floor

Or at City Ticket Office
613 Market Street, Grand Hotel, San Francisco

ILLUSTRATED FOLDER MAILED FREE ON APPLICATION

WM. H. MENTON
Excursion Passenger Agent

RICHARD GRAY
General Traffic Manager

T. H. GOODMAN
General Passenger Agent

Pacific Coast Steamship Co.

Dispatch steamers from San Francisco for ports in Alaska 9 a.m. July 3, 13, 18, 28, August 2, 12, 27.

For British Columbia and Puget Sound Ports, July 3, 8, 13, 18, 23, 28 and every fifth day thereafter.

For Eureka, Humboldt Bay, S. S. Pomona, 2 p.m. July 5, 8, 12, 16, 20, 24, 28 and every fourth day thereafter.

For Newport, Los Angeles and Way Ports, 9 a.m. July 2, 6, 10, 14, 18, 22, 26, 30 and every fourth day thereafter.

For San Diego, stopping at Port Hartford, Santa Barbara, Port Los Angeles, Redondo -- Los Angeles -- and Newport, 11 a.m. July 5, 8, 12, 16, 20, 24, 28 and every fourth day thereafter.

For Ensenada, San Jose del Cabo, Mazatlan, La Paz, Altata and Guaymas, Mex., S.S. Orizaba, July 3 and 25th of each month thereafter.

Ticket Office: Palace Hotel, 4 New Montgomery St.

GOODALL, PERKINS & CO.
General Agents
No. 10 Market Street, San Francisco, Cal.

A. K. DAGGETT

Drawing of Deeds and all Legal Papers a specialty

NOTARY PUBLIC
14 Montgomery St., S. F.
Telephone 305

Coolgardie Gold Fields

FREMANTLE, AUSTRALIA
First Class $220 Steerage $110
Lowest Rates to CAPE TOWN

S. S. "Australia," Honolulu only, Tuesday, Aug. 4, 1896, at 10 a.m.

S. S. "Mariposa," via Honolulu and Auckland, Thursday, July 23, 1896 at 2 p.m.

Ticket Office 114 Montgomery St.
Freight Office 327 Market St.

J. D. SPRECKELS & BROS. CO., General Agents

The German Savings and Loan Society

526 California St., S. F.

Capital actually paid up in cash - -	$1,000,000 00
Deposits December 31, 1895 - -	30,727,586 59
Reserve Fund - - - - - -	750,000 00
Guaranteed Capital - - - - -	1,200,000 00

OFFICERS

President, B. A. BECKER
First Vice-President, EDWARD KRUSE
Second Vice-President, A. C. HEINEKER
Cashier, A. H. R. SCHMIDT
Assistant Cashier, WM. HERRMANN
Secretary, GEORGE TOURNY
Assistant Secretary, A. H. MULLER

DIRECTORS

B. A. Becker, Edward Kruse, A. C. Heineker, O. Shoemann, H. Horstmann, Ign. Steinhart, Dan'l Meyer Nic. Van Bergen, Emil Rohte

Attorney, W. S. Goodfellow

San Francisco Savings Union

532 CALIFORNIA ST

Deposits June 30, 1896 - $23,657,219
Paid Up Capital and Surplus - 1,594,085

ALBERT MILLER, Pres. E. B. POND, Vice-Pres.
LOVELL WHITE, Cashier

DIRECTORS

GEORGE W. BEAVER ROBERT WATT
THOMAS MAGEE GEO. C. BOARDMAN
W. C. B. DE FREMERY DANIEL E. MARTIN
ALBERT MILLER PHILIP BARTH
E. B. POND

Loans upon San Francisco and Oakland Real Estate, and Farms and Farming Lands in the country.
No charge is made for pass book or entrance fee.

Mutual Savings Bank of San Francisco

33 Post Street, below Kearny, Mechanics' Institute Building

Guaranteed Capital, $1,000,000

JAS. D. PHELAN, Pres. GEO. A. STORY, Cashier
S. G. MURPHY, JOHN A. HOOPER, Vice-Pres.

DIRECTORS—Jas. D. Phelan, S. G. Murphy, John A. Hooper, James Moffitt, C. G. Hooker, Frank J. Sullivan, L. P. Drexler, Robt. McElroy, Jos. D. Grant.

Interest paid on term and ordinary deposits.
Loans on approved securities. Deposits may be sent by Postal Order, Wells, Fargo & Co., or Exchange on City Banks.
When opening accounts, send signature.

ROYAL EXCHANGE ASSURANCE

OF LONDON
Incorporated by Royal Charter A. D. 1726
Capital Paid Up, $3,446,100 Assets, $21,584,413
Surplus to Policy Holders, $8,980,251
ROBERT DICKSON, Manager
NATHAN & KINGSTON, San Francisco Agents
501 MONTGOMERY ST.

Aachen and Munich Fire Insurance Co.

Of Aix La Chapelle, Germany. Established 1805
Capital, $2,250,000.00
Total Assets, $6,854,653.65
United States Department
204 SANSOME STREET, SAN FRANCISCO
VOSS, CONRAD & CO., General Managers

When You Leave Town

place your valuables in the

SAFE DEPOSIT VAULTS
OF THE
FIRST NATIONAL BANK
CORNER OF BUSH AND SANSOME STREETS
Office Hours, 8 a. m. to 6 p. m.

DIVIDEND NOTICE

THE GERMAN SAVINGS AND LOAN SOCIETY

526 California Street

For the half year ending June 30, 1896, a dividend has been declared at the rate of four and twenty-six hundredths 4 26-100--per cent per annum on term deposits, and three and fifty-five one-hundredths -- 3 55-100 -- per cent per annum on ordinary deposits, free of taxes, payable on and after Wednesday, July 1, 1896.

GEO. TOURNY, Secretary.

ASSESSMENT NOTICE

Best and Belcher Mining Co.

Location of principal place of business—San Francisco, California. Location of works—Virginia District, Storey Co., Nevada.

Notice is hereby given that at a meeting of the Board of Directors held on the 2d day of July, 1896, an assessment (No. 60), of Twenty-five cents per share was levied upon the capital stock of the corporation, payable immediately in United States gold coin to the Secretary, at the office of the company, room 33, Nevada Block, 309 Montgomery St., San Francisco, California.

Any stock upon which this assessment shall remain unpaid on the

6TH DAY OF AUGUST, 1896,

Will be delinquent, and advertised for sale at public auction, and unless payment is made before will be sold on Thursday, the 27th day of August, 1896, to pay the delinquent assessment, together with costs of advertising and expenses of sale. By order of the Board of Directors.

M. JAFFE, Secretary.

Office—Room 33, Nevada Block, 309 Montgomery St., San Francisco, Cal.

ORDER YOUR CARRIAGES AND COUPES OF THE

PACIFIC CARRIAGE CO.

At Baldwin Hotel
200 Sutter Street, corner Kearny
48 Eighth Street, or
St. Nicholas Hotel, Market and Ninth Streets
Steamer and Train Service a specialty 'Phone 1950

BONESTELL & CO.

Dealers in PAPER

Fine Coated Papers a Specialty

401-403 SANSOME ST.,
San Francisco, Cal.

—A— SAFE GUIDE

No man knows all there is to know about advertising. The subject is too profound, too complex, too perplexing, for any single person, or for any dozen persons, for that matter. The path to success in advertising is full of dangerous places. All business men would do well to engage a safe guide to conduct them past the danger spots—to tell them what to do and what to avoid doing.

PRINTERS' INK

Is a weekly journal for advertisers, published at 10 Spruce St., New York. It is a magazine of ideas, of suggestions, of advice. Advertisers the world over read it and write for it. It is the advertising authority of America—probably of the globe. Business men will find it a safe guide. To secure its services as guide costs $2 a year. A sample copy costs nothing.

HIRSCH-KAHN & Co.

MANUFACTURING OPTICIANS
IMPORTERS of OPTICAL GOODS
PHOTOGRAPHIC APPARATUS & SUPPLIES ETC.
333 KEARNY STREET
SAN FRANCISCO CAL.

REMOVAL

Rountrees English Chocolate, Kohlers Swiss Chocolates, and all brands of Foreign and Eastern Confectionery, imported by . . . .

W. L. GREENBAUM,

of 205 SUTTER ST., will, after December 1st, be found in large and commodious quarters at 128 POST ST., Bohemian Club Bldg.

Brushes

For barbers, bakers, bootblacks, bathhouses, billiard tables, brewers, bookbinders, candymakers, canners, dyers, flour mills, foundries, laundries, paperhangers, printers, painters, shoe factories, stablemen, tar roofers, tanners, tailors, etc.

BUCHANAN BROS.

TEL. 5610 609 SACRAMENTO ST.
BRUSH MANUFACTURERS

THE PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU

510 MONTGOMERY ST., S. F.,

Reads all papers on the Pacific Coast, and supplies clippings on all topics, business and personal.

Pacific Towel Co.

Telephone 1780 No. 9 Lick Place, San Francisco

GEO. E. MOORE, Proprietor

PERRIER-JOUET CHAMPAGNE EXTRA DRY "SPECIAL"

Also specially selected stock of Clarets and White Wines on hand.

W. B. CHAPMAN, Sole Agent Pacific Coast
123 California Street

THE WAVE CLUBBING LIST

FOR 1896

By special arrangement with the Publishers, THE WAVE is prepared to offer the following list

SUBSCRIPTIONS MUST BE PAID IN ADVANCE

THE WAVE and CENTURY	$6 00
" " ARENA	5 00
" " LITTELL'S LIVING AGE	7 75
" " ART AMATEUR	5 75
" " LIPPINCOTT'S MAGAZINE	4 50
" " MUNSEY'S	3 50
" " ATLANTIC MONTHLY	5 75
" " YOUTH'S COMPANION	3 75
" " NEW ENGLAND MAGAZINE	5 00
" " HARPER'S MAGAZINE	5 50
" " HARPER'S WEEKLY	5 70
" " HARPER'S BAZAAR	5 70
" " HARPER'S ROUND TABLE	4 00
" " SCRIBNER'S MAGAZINE	5 00
" " REVIEW OF REVIEWS	4 50
" " ST. NICHOLAS	5 00
" " OVERLAND	4 75
" " COSMOPOLITAN	3 50
" " FRANK LESLIE'S MAGAZINE	4 90
" " PUCK	6 50
" " JUDGE	6 50
" " LIFE	7 00
" " LIFE'S COMEDY	3 50
" " LESLIE'S WEEKLY	5 70
" " DEMOREST MAGAZINE	4 00
" " SCIENTIFIC AMERICAN	5 00
" " SCIENTIFIC AMERICAN SUPPLEM'T	6 50
" " N. Y. DAILY SUN	8 00
" " " SUNDAY "	4 50
" " CASSELL MAGAZINE	3 75
" " ARGOSY	3 50
" " PUBLIC OPINION	4 50
" " SUNDAY WORLD	4 75
" " CRITIC	5 50
" " FORUM	5 00
" " NORTH AMERICAN REVIEW	6 50
" " TABLE TALK	3 25
" " NINETEENTH CENTURY	6 25
" " CONTEMPORARY REVIEW	6 25
" " FORTNIGHTLY REVIEW	6 25
" " BLACKWOODS MAGAZINE	6 25
" " TRUTH	6 25
" " DELINEATOR	3 50
" " VOGUE	5 50
" " TOWN TOPICS	7 50
" " DAILY JOURNAL	5 00
" " SUNDAY JOURNAL	3 75
" " ILLUS. AMERICAN	5 75

STORIES OF THE DAY

A little Scotch boy, to whom railways were unknown, was taken to a village near which a branch line passed. The next morning, while out in the garden, he saw a train go by. For a moment he stared in dumb astonishment, then, running into the house, he shouted, "Fayther, fayther, come oot: There's a smiddy ran off wi' a row of houses, and it's aw a' dron by the back o' the town."

* * *

If the following joke really did come from the Christian Guardian, to which it is credited, that paper deserves a large and sudden boom in its circulation. The story is about an Irishman and a Frenchman, who were disputing over the nationality of a friend of theirs. "I say," said the Frenchman, "that if he was born in France he is a Frenchman." "Begorra," said Pat, "if a cat should have kittens in the oven would you call them biscuits?"

* * *

When President Lincoln first met Governor Tod of Ohio he expressed some curiosity about the Governor's name. "I never could understand how you came to spell your name with only one d," he began. "Now, I married a Todd, and she spells her name with two d's, and I believe she knows how to spell. What is your authority for using only one?" "Well," drawled Governor Tod, "my authority for it is in part the fact that God spells His name with only one d, and it seems I should be satisfied if He is."

* * *

We have great cause to be thankful for the efficiency of the police. The following incident well illustrates their invariable presence of mind. A small boy happened to be crossing a bridge just as another small boy fell into the water. A policeman asked the boy on the bridge whether he could swim. The boy said he could, and with great presence of mind the officer thereupon dropped him over the balustrade into the river. After a hard struggle the boy who was dropped in succeeded in rescuing the one who fell in. The policeman has not yet been promoted for his bravery.

* * *

One of the most famous breaks on record was that of the late Earl of Portarlington, who never could remember people's names. One day at a Marlborough house garden-party, on receiving a gracious nod from an elderly lady, accompanied by a few words of kindly inquiry after his health, he replied: "You are very kind, madam; your face seems strangely familiar to me, but for the life of me I can not remember your name." After an agonized pause, a shaking bystander managed to convey to him that the name he was struggling for was that of her Most Gracious Majesty Victoria.

* * *

Another story of the late Eugene Field's irrepressible love of joking comes from the Youth's Companion. He and his wife had entered a street car, to find all the seats taken save one at each end of the car, and they seated themselves accordingly. When the conductor collected the fares Mr. Field [illegible] as he gave him a dime, at the same time pointing to the far end of the car: "This is to pay the fare of the lady over there—the one wearing the new, beautiful brown silk dress." All eyes were turned to her, and her pretty face took a most becoming rose color, but back of the reproving glances she threw him was one of mingled indulgence, appreciation and mirth at the unexpected and apparently truthful announcement.

* * *

Senator Blackburn is a rattling stump speaker, and is noted as being only happy when he has all of a convention to himself. He hates interruption, and is never so happy as when talking. At a big silver meeting in Lexington, called in his honor he made a great talk on silver, and wound up by pledging himself anew to the white metal. "If ever I desert the cause of silver," he announced, "may my right hand forget its cunnning and my tongue cleave to the roof of my mouth." Instead of applause this heroic sentiment created a titter. The audience smiled. Blackburn sat down, and the chairman, an old friend, bent over towards him, "Joe," he whispered, "that talk about your tongue cleaving to the roof of your mouth is too strong for your own people. They believe you are sincere about silver, but they know that nothing you could do short of suicide would ever stop you from talking."

* * *

It was the tact and genuine kindliness of Dolly Madison that made her one of the most prominent of American women. Several episodes mentioned in Mrs. Goodwin's "Life of Dolly Madison" are significant of this. At one of her levees, her attention was drawn to a rustic visitor, a youth who was evidently suffering all the torments of embarrassment. He had at last ventured to help himself to a cup of coffee, when Mrs. Madison walked up and addressed him. In the surprise of the moment, the lad dropped the saucer, and strove to crowd the cup into his pocket. His tactful hostess took no notice of the accident, except to observe that in such a crowd no one could avoid being jostled, and straightway turned the conversation to the boy's family, and ended by sending her regards to his excellent mother, and bidding the servant bring another cup of coffee. On another occasion two old ladies from the country arrived at the White House while the family were still at breakfast. To the surprise of the rural visitors, the woman they had come to see appeared in a stuff dress of dark gray, protected by a large housewifely white apron, and with a linen kerchief pinned about her neck. Her simplicity of manner and attire completely swept away their awe, and before departing one of them found courage to ask: "Perhaps you wouldn't mind if I kissed you—just to tell the folks about!"

A SAVING OF ONE-HALF

Baggage transferred to trains or steamers and return. Trunks, 50c each for the round trip. Morton Special Delivery, 650 Market street and 408 Taylor street.

Hotel St. Nicholas, corner Market, Hayes, Larkin and Ninth. Ira R. and James H. Doolittle.

The Maison Riche serves the best lunch in the city for 75 cents.

SEA BEACH HOTEL, SANTA CRUZ, CAL.

The Ideal Summer Resort should offer gaiety for the gay, rest for the weary, a beautiful country for the nature lover, a pleasant home and genial climate for all. These and many other attractions may be found at the Sea Beach Hotel, within easy reach of San Francisco. For additional information, address—

JOHN R. CHACE,
Proprietor.

The Club Hotel
5 Bund, Yokohama

Hotel Metropole
1 Tsukiji, Tokyo

First-class Hotels, centrally situated, well furnished. ENTIRE FOREIGN MANAGEMENT. Experienced English Matron in attendance. Excellent table under the superintendence of qualified foreign Chef.

The Hotel steam-launch attends steamers arriving and departing. Passengers are met at the Railway Station. Visitors have the option of messing either in Tokyo or Yokohama, without extra charge—The only Hotels offering such an advantage. Certified Guides are in attendance at both Hotels. European Hair-Dresser on the premises.

THE CLUB HOTEL COMPANY, Limited, Proprietors

E. C. SIOEN, Manager YOKOHAMA — E. DEWETTE, Manager TOKYO

THE GRILL ROOM SERVICE
—OF THE
PALACE HOTEL

Has been extended to what was formerly the City Restaurant. This immense room, which has a direct entrance from Market Street is known as - - - -

"THE LADIES' GRILL ROOM"

NEW DEPARTURE—CHARACTERIZED BY PROMPT SERVICE—MODERATE CHARGES

Capitola Hotel

CAPITOLA BY THE SEA

Situated on the water's edge of Monterey Bay. Surf Bathing, Hot Salt Water Baths. Table served with every delicacy of land and sea

First Class in Every Respect!

OPEN THE YEAR THROUGH THE ENTIRE SEASON

For further particulars apply to

HEPBURN & TERRY
Capitola, Santa Cruz County, Cal.

THE LICK HOUSE

Occupies the block bounded by Montgomery, Post and Sutter Streets

IT IS——
——scrupulously clean;
——accessible to all street car lines and places of amusement;
——conveniently situated for business men;
——a quiet, model place for a family to spend the winter;
——moderate in price, yet first-class in every particular.

AMERICAN OR EUROPEAN PLAN

K. B. SOULÉ, Manager

BYRON

Byron Hot Springs, Cal.,
July 6, 1896.

I have been suffering from repeated attacks of rheumatism during thirteen years. The last attack began about six months ago, the trouble being principally in the hips and knees. I was bed-ridden for two weeks previous to my start for Byron Hot Springs, where I was advised to go by some friends who had been cured of rheumatism there. I arrived at Byron on June 24, 1896, and after two weeks' treatment left there feeling as well as I ever felt in my life.

(Signed) D. MATHIOT,
Traveling Agent Standard Oil Co.,
Portland, Oregon.

BYRON

Blithedale

The nearest Summer Resort to San Francisco, and the most charming, is within five minute's drive from Mill Valley Station. Wooded hills shelter it from the wind and fog. Rose paths and beds of fragrant clover surround the houses, and all around are the redwoods—300 acres of woods. The cottages have porcelain bath tubs and electric lights and perfect sewerage. The never failing brook runs through the place. Table excellent—cream every day. Terms moderate. For particulars address—MRS FARRAR, who will be at Blithedale after April 15th.

The place will open on May 1st.

Napa Soda Springs California's Famous Mountain Spa!

HAVE YOU BEEN THERE LATELY?

One thousand feet above Napa Valley. Climate unsurpassed. Views magnificent. Table supplied from orchard and ocean, field and farm. Hot and cold Napa Soda water baths. Telephone and Postoffice. Burros to ride. Bowling alleys, tennis, croquet, swings and hammocks. New improvements every year. Gas and running water in every room. Relief for asthmatics. WARM WATER SWIMMING TANK. An ideal summer resort. Children's paradise, mother's delight, husband's rest. Address ANDREW JACKSON, Napa Soda Springs P. O.

For those who appreciate Comfort and Attention

A QUIET HOME CENTRALLY LOCATED

OCCIDENTAL HOTEL
SAN FRANCISCO

WM. B. HOOPER, MANAGER

COMET OOLONG

The oldest and most reliable brand of Tea on the market. Sold only in ½ lb. papers at 20 cts. per paper.

ALL GROCERS KEEP IT

GEO. GOODMAN

Patentee and Manufacturer of—Artificial Stone

Schillinger's Patent — In all its branches

SIDE WALK and GARDEN WALK A Specialty

Office, 307 MONTGOMERY ST. Nevada Block, SAN FRANCISCO

THE WAVE

This Paper not taken from the Library. to be

VOL XV. No. 31 SAN FRANCISCO, AUGUST 1, 1896 PRICE 10 CTS.

OUR NEWEST CITIZENS

CHINESE NATIVE SONS REGISTERING AT THE CITY HALL

THE WAVE

Is published every Saturday, at THE WAVE Building, No. 24 Montgomery Street, San Francisco.

Subscription, $3.00 per year, $1.50 six months, 75 cts. three months. Foreign subscriptions—countries in postal union—$5 per year. Sample copies free on application. The trade is supplied by the San Francisco News Co., 210 Post Street; east of the Rocky Mountains by the American News Co., New York.

THE WAVE is kept on file and is for sale at Brentano's, 17 Avenue de l'Opera, Paris, France; 31 Union Square, New York City; 1015 Pennsylvania Avenue, Washington, D. C.; and 206 Wabash Avenue, Chicago.

Advertising rates and all other matters pertaining to the business of the paper, address THE WAVE, 24 Montgomery Street. Eastern Agent, E. Katz, 230-235 Temple Court, New York.

HARRISON M. PARKER, Business Manager

Entered at the San Francisco Post Office as second-class matter

THE WAVE PUBLISHING COMPANY

SAN FRANCISCO, AUGUST 1, 1896

CONTENTS

Editorials	2-3	A Millionaire's Mansion	9
The Exempt Firemen	4	In Society: by The Gossip	10
Borderland: by J. W. T.	5	The Theatres	11
Things and People	6-7	Fiction in Review	12
A Chat With Viola Allen	7	The Bicycle Parade	13
Fisherman's Wharf, by Peg Woffington	8	In the Current	14
		Stories of the Day	15

THE FINANCIAL QUESTION.

It is to be regretted that the newspapers engaged in procuring ballots for and against silver do not at the same time invite the voters to briefly set forth the reasons for such convictions as they may have one way or the other. Such a proceeding would doubtless uncover a world of misinformation. The wide variety of contradictory reasons for espousing free coinage which exists among the advocates of silver is one of the most inexplicable things in the campaign. Where under the heavens some of the notions came from will never be explained. The writer discovered a man last week—a man of some intelligence—who favored free coinage at the ratio of sixteen to one because he believed that "16 to 1" meant that sixteen silver dollars would be coined for every gold dollar issued by the United States. For this reason he strongly favored Bryan and free silver. Think of that! Nor would he budge from this conviction. With the calm self-satisfaction that goes with stubborn ignorance he refused to listen to any other explanation. He was full of prophecy of the good times that were to follow in the train of his 16 to 1, and could not be disturbed in the belief that he had an intelligent grasp of the financial problem. This man no doubt represents a type. Every individual does. But pause for a moment and think of the misconceived and mis-shapen notions that will have full play next November. Contemplate if you will the unnumbered thousands of misinformed men who will solemnly record their judgment on the most important question that has been presented to the American people in a generation. The present campaign must be one of education. The time is all too short to make it thorough, though not so brief, perhaps, but that much misinformation may be corrected. The willful ignorance now prevailing is not only astounding, but it is downright shameful as well.

There are two sides to this question. No man of common sense denies that honest men may differ in their views upon it. But we may anathemize the absolute, deliberate and willful ignorance that will have a hand in shaping a governmental policy which by the testimony of its enemies and friends will either kill us or cure us. There are radicals upon both sides. There are gold cranks as well as silver cranks. But the great mass of the American people, while they may be misled at first, will refuse to take sides with either radical wing when education is complete.

Last week we analyzed the financial plank of the democratic party, demonstrated its weakness and exposed its inconsistencies—not all of them, however, for one article would hardly be sufficient for that purpose. A gentleman, who is a friend of silver, pronounced our argument "all right," but declared with some boastfulness that we lost sight of the fact that silver would increase in value when democratic free coinage principles should prevail in the United States. That no such thing as a 52 cent dollar would then exist. It is the theory of the silver men that when silver is placed upon an equality with gold in our mints it will at once begin to approach a similar equality in the markets of the world, and that the ratio of 16 to 1 which once existed will be restored. This is a matter of firm belief with the silver men, and it is upon this belief and upon this theory alone that they base all their pleasant predictions of future prosperity. Understand, then, every hope, every prophecy, every assurance of good times which are "sure" to follow free coinage, is based upon the single trust that the value of silver will be doubled and the white metal restored immediately it is rehabilitated; or, to speak in the language of the silver man, "Gold will come down and silver go up until gold is worth sixteen times as much as silver."

The commercial ratio of gold and silver to-day is about 32 to 1; that is, an ounce of gold will buy about 32 ounces of silver. To realize the dreams of the silver advocate the ratio must be changed to 16 to 1. If the writer could share in this belief he would lean strongly toward the silver side of the issue. If he could find a single, potent historical fact to justify such a belief or fortify the theory, then might the views here expressed take on another coloring. No such thing exists. It is a creature of hope, an intangible thing that lives in dreams alone. We hope it is clear in the mind of the reader that every promise of prosperity made by the silver man falls to the ground if this theory fails, and that immeasurable misery will follow that failure. Then let us examine this question together, and try to discover for ourselves if this theory is really justified upon any reasonable hypothesis. We have access to the same facts and to the same historical knowledge that is possessed by any of the friends of gold or silver, and ought to be able to reason it out ourselves. To make this theory hold together and to render it plausible to reasonable men, one must have some example, some fact, to justify the belief and illustrate its application. Let us see what the facts are.

Mr. Harvey, the acknowledged champion of silver, in his little work entitled "Coin's Financial School," attributes the downfall of silver very largely to what he calls "The crime of 1873." He declares, and so does every other advocate of free coinage, that legislation alone is responsible for the shrinkage of silver value. (We will not go into the matter of overproduction, or of supply and demand, but will consider the matter from the purely silver standpoint; i. e., legislation.) Of course Mr. Harvey does not tell us that the legislative action of the United States alone produced this unfortunate result, for we would not believe him. No one would. He doesn't intend to convey that meaning. The legislation to which he refers was that of all the great nations of the world—the United States, Germany, France, Belgium, Italy, Switzerland and Greece. If any legislation was responsible for the downfall of silver, it was that of these countries combined, and not that of the United States alone. History demonstrates, and Mr. Harvey admits, that the demonetization of silver by any one of these countries could not have affected the value of the white metal. Then would not the reverse of this be true, and may we not ask, "How could the remonetization by any of them materially increase its value?" England demonetized silver away back in 1816. Harvey says in his little book: "From that period (1816) to 1873 the parity of the two metals was not affected." The demonetization of silver by England did not affect its value! If the demonetization of silver by England, the richest nation of the earth, did not depreciate its value a fraction of a cent, when all the great nations of the world stood out against that policy, how is it reasonable to presume that its remonetization by the United States will increase the value of that metal while all the great nations of the world are standing out against its policy? We must reason from some sort of a basis. It is absurd to say that this theory of the silver man is a good theory because it sounds pleasant upon our ears. We must have some tangible thing to fortify us in our hope and prove that we are not mere dreamers. Silver did not depreciate in value when demonetized in England in 1816 because there was an unlimited demand for the metal in America, Germany, France, Belgium, Italy, Switzerland and Greece. To restore the conditions existing in 1873, bi-metallism must be adopted in all these countries, as well as in the United States. Then may the friends of silver hope, nay in view of the past they may almost declare with certainty that, despite the increasing production of that metal, it will bound up to its old place among the precious metals of the earth. It is to accomplish this most happy end that the republican platform pledges its party. There are facts and reasons and arguments to justify the theory of the republican platform, but there is not the thinnest shred of a fact or the suspicion of a reason to lend justification to the democratic experiment.

This is not the only argument, however, against the theory that solitary action on our part can achieve this wonderful appreciation of silver. One of the strongest arguments against the theory that the United States alone can affect favorably the value of silver is to be found in the experiments that have already been tried in that direction. The Bland-Allison bill of 1878 authorized the purchase of between two and four million ounces of silver per month to be coined and made full legal tender. The Sherman bill of 1890 authorized the purchase of four million ounces per month. Yet between 1878 and 1894, when these two laws respectively were in full operation, silver fell from 89 cents to 60 cents per ounce. This does not argue in favor of the silver theory. It flatly contradicts it. In meeting this condition the silver man hides behind the statement that these laws were trifling and inadequate, and did not create an "unlimited demand." He will tell you that when an "unlimited demand" is created his theory will commence to operate, and not till then. He will not tell you, however, that the amounts authorized to be purchased by these acts exceeded, mark you, exceeded the total output of all the mines in the United States. The mere fact that the United States alone remonetizes silver would not create an 'unlimited demand," any more than did the Sherman law or the Bland-Allison bill. Neither would it begin to restore the conditions existing in 1873. Nothing will ever restore the conditions then existing except international bi-metallism, and this the republican party is pledged to. By international bi-metallism we do not necessarily mean that England should be included, for the parity was once maintained without her assistance. But the silver man antagonizes the conservative plan of securing international agreement, and tells you that America can "force" the European countries to a bi-metallic standard. This statement is the mere bluster of a swaggering bully. It is not the commonest kind of common sense.

Dr. Otto Arendt, the greatest friend of silver in Germany, answers this claim of our silver men very completely. He says that the free coinage of silver in America at the ratio of 16 to 1 will drive all the American gold to Europe, and will absolutely postpone the possibility of the European nations coming to a bi-metallic standard for generations to come. Dr. Arendt is a bi-metallist where there is no profit in being a bi-metallist. Out of all the leading bi-metallists in America there are scarcely a dozen who do not own or have an interest in silver mines. They are prompted by no such unselfish spirit as prompts the European bi-metallist, but are influenced largely if not wholly by the profit which they hope will come to them individually at the cost of their country and its people.

Our "fear" of the disaster to follow free coinage is entitled to as much consideration as is the "hope" of prosperity entertained by the other side. Our unpromising predictions are more strongly fortified by reason and by facts than are their rosy prophesies. To support their theory they offer hope alone. The pleasing prospect presented by their prophets lures on the man surrounded by misfortune. It is a phantom, an unreal and intangible thing. Like the treacherous mirage that quickens the hope of the weary and thirsty traveler on the desert and beckens him from the true and beaten path to certain death, so does the rosy promise of prosperity held up by the advocates of silver deceive and lure the desperate and despondent man to his own and to his neighbors' certain ruin. When the traveler dying with thirst realizes the fearful and cruel deception that nature has practiced upon his weak and shattered frame, despair takes possession of his soul. Unless he be strong, indeed, he sinks to earth a helpless, hopeless thing, and moans out the remnant of his poor life beside the very spot where he had hoped to slake his all-consuming thirst. If this nation experiments with this financial question, if we are to be beckoned away from the beaten and plain path by the mirage of free coinage, who shall answer for the despair that will follow in the train of this most cruel deception, and who shall say where all the consequences of the ensuing wretchedness may end?

THE POPULIST CONVENTION.

The Populist convention was evidently drunker than the Democratic—that was its chief distinguishing characteristic. The Democratic mob was awed into something of decency by the presence of respectable galleries, and was kept under a certain control by its leaders. But the populists were without leadership and without shame. Otherwise the conventions were similar—they stood for the same financial and economic fallacies and nominated the same candidate for the presidency.

When the McMaster or the Bancroft of the future writes of the populist convention he will be forced to tell a story of national disgrace. His verdict must be that not since the mob governed Paris a century ago has the world witnessed such a scene of disorder, violence and passion in a representative national body. For four days fourteen hundred delegates in a national convention stood upon chairs and tables shouting at each other, only varying the monotony by singing songs, without sense or tune, and engaging in free fights upon the floor. It is subject for farce, if it were not so significant of worse times to come. Coxey was there, and Coxeyism was the spirit of the convention. To march upon Washington and "stand up" the government was the one idea of the delegates. There was not a man in the body, evidently, who did not believe that he was pre-eminently fitted to manage the affairs of this nation—yes, there was one—a preacher, be it said to the credit of the cloth, who asked the delegates how they could expect the country to confide the conduct of its business to men who did not have sense enough to hold a convention. The chairman was Senator Allen of Nebraska, who showed himself to be easily the largest man in his party, and a political manager of much adroitness, but he had little control over the hysterical and drunken crowd. He found it necessary to post deputy chairmen in a line from his platform to the remotest end of the hall, through whom his rulings could be carried to the howling neighborhood, and to supplement each of these deputies was a squad of police to keep the delegates from killing each other. There never was such a convention before, but our fear is that there may be again, for the animal has tasted blood.

WATSON'S NOMINATION.

By nominating "Tom" Watson of Georgia as their candidate for the vice-presidency the populists have made it much less likely that Bryan will be elected. This independent nomination was brought about by the middle-of-the-road men, who are the office-seeking element in the party. Without such a nomination they saw that the populists would be but as bunches of paper on the tail of the democratic kite. But with it they saw that they had a weapon with which to "kill"—as the boys say—the democratic kite if they failed to receive sufficient recognition in the way of offices. Watson's nomination was made, in short, to compel the democratic party to give a "square deal on the plums." No offices, no Bryan—that is the patriotic position of the people's party. Already in Kansas the populists have made a proposition to the democrats that they will sell out Watson for the State ticket, they will endorse the democratic electors if the democrats will endorse the populist State ticket.

Mr. Bryan may find before the campaign is over that it had been better for him had he manfully stuck to Sewall and let the populists flock by themselves. From now until November the country will be scandalized by bargaining between democrats and populists. The latter are in a position to blackmail, and they will avail themselves of their opportunities. It is not at all unlikely that a serious breach will come between these two friendly enemies before election. Senator Marion Butler, who has been elected chairman of the national convention, is a middle-of-the-roadster; he prefers a republican to a democratic alliance, as he showed in his own State by combining with the republicans and electing a republican as his associate in the Senate; the democrats are the ones he fears. Senator Jones of Arkansas is an old-school Southerner, no match for the clever up-to-date youngster from North Carolina, but an honest, strong man, of deep party loyalty. Between these two there is no natural tie; they represent opposing influences and classes in the South, and if Senator Jones gains Senator Butler's support we may be certain the price will be large.

FUSION IN CALIFORNIA

Should a bargain be reached between democrats and populists, as to fusion, there will be much difficulty in carrying it out. Fusion is hard to effect at any time, most of all under Australian ballot laws, such as the States now have. In California fusion can be effected in only one way that we can see — the way suggested by Mr, Franklin K. Lane, — unless either the populists or democrats entirely sell out to the other side. The State committees of the two parties could agree upon an electoral ticket composed, let us say, of six democrats and three populists, that being the proportion of their votes in the last election. This composite ticket would be placed on the ballot with the understanding that whichever party showed the greatest strength in the vote for Lieutenant Governor should have the entire electoral vote. In this way the vote of the State, in case this ticket defeated the republican electoral ticket, and the populists polled more votes for Lieutenant Governor than the democrats, would be cast for Bryan and Watson. If the democrats had more votes than the populists the three populist electors would vote for Bryan and Sewall. In no other manner that we can see can the votes of both populists and democrats be cast for Bryan. For if two electoral tickets were on the ballot the Bryan votes would be divided, and so might have a majority and yet be defeated.

As there are more democrats than populists in this State, such a fusion scheme would be practically the withdrawal of Watson by the populists in California. To this the populists would have serious objection naturally, but if they do not make such a surrender they have but one option, if they wish to vote for Bryan, and that is to force the democrats to surrender to them their entire electoral ticket.

The Kansas method of selling out Watson for State offices of some sort is, of course, practical, but the populists would not endorse such a corrupt bargain.

To "fuse" we see, therefore, will be a matter requiring the most delicate management. It is by no means certain that Bryan will get the populist vote throughout the country, especially in Southern States where feeling between the parties runs highest. In every State there will have to be a compromise made, and this means a struggle for advantage and the arousing of bitter feeling. Watson will not withdraw, and so end the trouble. Senator Butler thinks that Sewall should. But Bryan says Sewall should not. It is altogether such a mess as might be expected from two such mobs as those that met at Chicago and St. Louis—the chaotic outcome of chaos.

THE FRIEND OF THE MOB.

That the criminal element of San Francisco has at least one journalistic friend and sponsor must be apparent to every lawless scoundrel in the community. There was to have been a parade last Saturday night in behalf of good roads. The wheelmen of San Francisco, numbering several thousand, had determined to make a demonstration in favor of repaving Market street and the maintenance of decent highways. For a short distance the ladies and gentlemen participating in the demonstration were allowed to parade unmolested. At Eighth and Market the procession was met by a jeering, hooting crowd of ruffians, who crowded in upon the participants, and obstructed the passage of the bicycles by pushing sticks between the spokes of the wheels. They upset the riders, deliberately tore the lanterns and ornaments from the passing vehicles, knocked several of the riders down, beat one indignant participant almost to death, and hurled insulting epithets at the ladies in the parade. Finally the vicious mob managed to compel the procession to abandon the greater portion of its proposed line of march, and turn up Market street. Thousands of people were waiting for its passing on Kearny street, not knowing of the disgraceful performance going on elsewhere. Having accomplished this much, the mob set about to derail the street cars, break windows and terrorize peaceable on-lookers.

Every morning paper in the city had some account of this outrage except the Examiner. It was silent as the grave, and pictured the procession as a march of triumph brilliant with lanterns and as peaceful as a Sabbath day. Let the burglars and the highwaymen form a protective union of sufficient numbers and threaten to boycott the paper daring to publish accounts of their crimes, and it is safe to say that the high-minded journal will not dare offend them.

The Examiner understands thoroughly the position it occupies. It knows that a truthful account of this mob's proceedings would irritate a good many of its readers who participated therein, and it was prudent perhaps that it refrained from all mention of it.

THE IRRECONCILABLE UNEMPLOYED.

The unemployed made an exhibition of themselves last week at Metropolitan Hall. They always do, whenever they are offered work. Nothing is so enraging to the professional unemployed as an offer of labor by means of which they may honestly earn food and shelter and raiment. The code of honor in vogue among them reads, "Beg rather than work for a bare livelihood." With them it is no dishonor to demand alms and food and raiment, no degradation to receive something for which they have done nothing. If there was a place where the hungry man might earn his meals, there would be no excuse for the lusty beggar who hails you on the street. Such chaps could not then pretend that lack of work had driven them to begging. Therefore they hate the man who suggests a means by which they may honestly earn the necessities of life. They are quick to denounce such a philanthropist as a "tool of the money power," who is bent on "crushing American Labor." The mere contemplation of such wretches sickens the heart, and curdles the milk of human kindness in the breast of charity.

Last week the Salvation Army with the most charitable and kindly intentions held a meeting at Metropolitan Hall for the purpose of discussing and devising the best methods of helping the unemployed. Hugh Craig was chairman of the meeting, and among the list of vice-presidents were some of the best known names in town. Commander Booth-Tucker, brimming over with enthusiasm and good will, declared that he looked to San Francisco to solve the important question of providing for the hundreds who are out of work. He said he believed that what San Francisco did would be the foundation stone of a great reformation that would extend and grow until it covered the whole United States. The plan that he proposed had worked successfully in England, and he advocated the purchase within easy reach of San Francisco of about a thousand acres of farming land, where the unemployed could be given work, and all necessity for begging removed. He prophesied that such a farm would be self-supporting, and that there would be besides a surplus that could be used in the interest of the laboring classes. The plan met with hearty approval, and doubtless considerable money could have been raised on the spot for its consummation. Fortunately, or unfortunately perhaps, a large number of the unemployed had gathered at the meeting, and strange to say received the proposition with very marked disapproval. They hissed the speakers, gave voice to groans and shouts of derision, and succeeded at last in breaking up the meeting in disorder and confusion. Then these honorable unemployed gentlemen held a meeting of their own, where they denounced the Salvation Army and talked loudly of their own cause. One of the speakers declared that under existing conditions nothing could be done for the unemployed and that as time rolls on their numbers must increase. He was in favor of staying in the street and parading before these men, and so force them to recognize their existence. He did not consider that giving them an opportunity of earning an honest living was a sufficient recognition, but continuing, said: "If a man is a criminal, they give him food and shelter; if a man is honest, they say to him 'Lie down and starve.'" According to this very honorable gentleman's theory, he prefers to be treated as a criminal, and given food and shelter, not to be invited to work for it. "The unemployed," he said, "should be united in their purpose, knowing that these men will do nothing and will not get off your backs until you throw them off." He did not explain how "these men" were on their backs, or what they were doing there, or what they would accomplish by throwing them off; but he did say he would parade before them. "I would go to the restaurants and eat," he continued. "Allow the police to arrest you if they want to. Suppose a hundred and fifty thousand men should go into the stores in Chicago, eat what they want and say, 'We cannot pay. Arrest us.' What would be done? Fear is the only thing that will bring the capitalist pirate to terms."

This declaration sounds so much like an Examiner editorial that we are a little afraid the speaker has filched it from its columns without giving that journal proper credit.

Then another gentleman announced that he had made the discovery that in time of famine and pestilence the Governor has the power to suspend the law enforcing the collection of debt. The gentleman announced this discovery as being one of great portent, but refused to divulge just what use he proposed to make of it. Perhaps he proposed to have himself and the shiftless beggars about him declared a pestilence, and upon the strength of that most appropriate declaration suspend the operation of the laws.

The Japanese government, if the daily press is to be believed, has concluded that in the construction of its new navy the bulk of its work shall go to England. The daily press is endeavoring to create the impression that this movement on the part of Japan is dictated by diplomacy, and that the Japanese court, with an eye to the future, is attempting to engage the friendship of Great Britain; so that in the contests to come, it may have a powerful ally on the sea.

The truth is that the daily press of this city has created the impression in Japan that American vessels are loaded down to the Plimsoll line with defects apparent and concealed. All the lying statements of the San Francisco press concerning the war vessels turned out on this coast are on file in the Japanese Marine Bureau, and that they have been used to our disadvantage is manifest from the results. This is another victory for our public spirited press.

At last Balzac has got—not a statue, but an allegorical effigy; and the allegory comes from the banks of the Nile, too. M. Marquet de Vosselot, the sculptor, has put the master's head upon a Sphinx. M. de Vosselot maintains that this is an appropriate and artistic arrangement. Appropriate, because Balzac was a Sphinx who asked society more questions than he answered; artistic, because Balzac had unstatuesque legs and abnormal adiposity. Victor Hugo used to say that Balzac, like all great men, had supplied his own pedestal. The author of the "Comedie Humaine,"it seems, would have done well to supply his own statue also.

Few men have ever been tempted as was the late Benjamin H. Bristow. When a member of President Grant's cabinet he discovered the existence of the great whisky ring, and determined upon its destruction. Within it were some of the most influential politicians of both parties in the country, but with a courage equal to that of Samuel J. Tilden when he declared against the Erie canal ring, Bristow brought every resource within his power to bear for its destruction, notwithstanding the offer from the ringsters that if he would give up the pursuit, they would make him the next Republican nominee for the persidency. The bribe failing they at once started a back fire, and raked up every incident of his life that could possibly be construed against him, besides charging him with many acts of which he had never been guilty. But President Grant, with that loyalty which was so large a part of his nature, stood behind Bristow and saw him through the fight; and when nominating day next came round, Bristow received a most complimentary vote. It has often been said he would have been nominated in 1876 but for Blaine's great strength. He was never a blind partisan, and had even unto his death a respectable following of conservatives, more patriotic than partisan.

KNICKERBOCKER ··S HOUSE
FROM AN OLD PHOTOGRAPH

A GROUP OF THE OLD BOYS

ST. FRANCIS' HOOK AND LADDER HOUSE
FROM AN OLD PHOTOGRAPH

THE EXEMPT FIREMEN

Did you ever visit the Exempt Firemen up at Old Monumental Six's? Have you ever heard the grizzly old boys up there recount the exciting tales of San Francisco's early fires, when houses were built of the lightest and most inflammable material and millions of dollars were consumed in a few hours? If you have not, then you have missed a something. The men who sit about up there in chairs, and dream away the summer afternoon once ran the old machine. Their hair is white, their faces show the marks of time, and their limbs have lost the suppleness of youth; but their eyes are as bright, and their hearts as brave, now, in the evening of life, as they were long ago, when the sun was just rising on ambitious manhood. Up on Brenham Place, just off Clay street and facing the historic Portsmouth Square, is all that remains of that gallant band of Volunteer Firemen. The old machine, "Big Six," is still there, and a remnant, only a remnant, of the brave and willing lads who once sprang to the ropes with eager hands, sturdy limbs, and strong hearts, and went forth to do battle with the flames. The surroundings were once all that one might wish, but now you must pick your way through troops of noisy Chinese children at their play, and the air is none too savory, nor the neighborhood over respectable. The environment is not so inviting as of old.

Once there, however, the place is full of interest. Should you undertake to recount the happenings within gunshot of this spot, you would recite the early history of San Francisco. The first Custom House of the port, a low adobe structure, once stood here. The first public school was built upon this Square, away back in 1847. It was here, too, that the gallant and eloquent Baker delivered his masterly funeral oration over the body of the murdered Broderick. Just opposite was the Union Hotel, where Broderick's body lay in state. The old Bella Union, the Olympic, and the Jenny Lind theaters were grouped about the Square; and on the corner below stood the old El Dorado gambling house, where tens of thousands of dollars changed hands nightly. From the lips of the kindly old boys who lounge about the engine house you may hear many a tale of early days that bristles all over with human interest.

One may not, in an article as brief as this, narrate the history of the great fires that swept San Francisco when it was young. There were great fires, and a narrative of them would make a volume rich with stirring incidents, crowded with tales of valor, and of action, and of self-sacrifice, that went to the yielding up of even life itself. They were a noble band! And as the early historian Frank Soule says in his "Annals of San Francisco," published in 1854, "Their hard fought battles, their many victories, and the able defense exercised over their precious charge, have gained them, better than laurel or gold, the sincerest thanks and warmest attachment of their fellow citizens. * * * Honor to whom honor is due! Give it freely to the Fire Department! And when o it, to the whole body of enlightened and public-spirited and prominent citizens! They have poured out their means with no stinting hand in the formation of the department!"

These are brave and pretty words. But how, in the light of subsequent events, have these "sincerest thanks and warm attachment of their fellow citizens" benefited these men in their old age? How have these priceless "thanks" and this "warmest attachment" which are "better than laurels and gold" served the gallant and generous men who "poured out their means with no unstinting hand" to protect this growing city against fire? Go up to Brenham Place among the old men there, and ask. They do not whine. They take on no contemptible, mean spirit of complaint. But they do speak with some sadness, and with some feeling, when they think of all that they have done, and set it beside what has been done for them. The comparison tells strongly against this great municipality, and speaks loudly of the ingratitude of the masses.

There are only a hundred of these old Exempts left. Some are rich and prosperous. Claus Spreckels was one of them. Ex-Mayor Alvord of the California Bank another. They do not all need help, but there are those among them who do, and badly. In the paid Fire Department, there are but seven members of the old Volunteers. Others might be cared for, not in active service, perhaps, but in some places where vigilance and fidelity to duty alone were needed. For while they may have lost in youth and vigor, they have not lost in honor or fidelity. It is not much for them to ask. They feel it is not much, and I feel, too, as though it should be granted them for the mere asking.

Mr. John D. Spreckels, who has some political control, might give the future of these old boys his personal attention. He would not only be performing a commendable act of justice, which would earn their everlasting gratitude and the appreciation of all who understand how neglected they have been, but he would be serving those who worked side by side with his father in youth and who remember him with exceeding kindness.

The old house is to some extent a museum, a harboring place for every memento of the early San Francisco Fire Department. About the walls are portraits of the old boys taken long, long ago; daguerreotypes, later artotypes, and the still later and more modern photograph. There, too, is the fox-tail for which the rival companies once competed. Horses did not pull the machines to the fire in those days. The boys did that work themselves, and there was great rivalry among them as to which should arrive first upon the scene. It may be said in passing, the fireman's life of to-day is "play" beside the work performed by these men. The ancient leather helmets, which made the old fire laddies so picturesque, are there in abundance. Scraps of paper, pieces of hose, speaking trumpets, and all manner of relics most dear and sacred to them, are kept securely locked in glass cases. The old machine, old "Big Six," is there, all bright and polished. It is to them something of a Deity—something very sacred.

Away back in 1863, when the first steam-engine came to the coast, and thoughts of the old machine had not

VIEW OF MONUMENTAL 6'S HOUSE AND SURROUNDINGS TAKEN IN THE FIFTIES

THE VOLUNTEERS' PLOT IN LAUREL HILL CEMETERY

been hallowed by time, they sold it to Virginia City. Afterwards, it was sold to Corvallis, Ore. The old boys up in Brenham Place began to regret having parted with it, and they yearned to have the old machine with them once again. After an absence of twenty-four years it was rebought, and re-established in its home at Brenham Place, and now they would not part with it at any price. One of the machines stored in the old house appeared in the Admission Day parade in 1850, and there are now living but two of the boys who marched in this brave com pany to celebrate that day—John L. Durkee and Henry D. Hudson.

DEATH MASK OF DAVID C. BRODERICK
TAKEN ONE HOUR AFTER DEATH

They have letters among their mementoes as well, letters from the sweet voiced Catherine Hayes (Kate Hayes, the boys all call her), a letter from Mme. La Countess Marie de Landsfeldt Heald, she who was Lola Montez, and another from Elisa Biscaccianti (who died but a day or two ago in Paris), tendering them benefits and concerts at the American theater. The benefit of Lola Montez netted them thirty-six hundred dollars. They prize these things, prize them above gold, and love to dwell upon the beauty and talents of these old singers, who were once the idols of the hour.

The fire-bell rang while we sat there. Every grizzly head was alert. Conversation was hushed, and one veteran, older than the rest, counted the tolling of the bell. Another reached for the signal card. "One, three, two," announced the first veteran, "Pine and Mason," said the one with the card. And I believe there was imaged upon the mind of each a picture of the scene about Pine and Mason, with its approaches, its surroundings, and every detail of the neighborhood.

They have not long to live, these old men. There are but a hundred of them left—a mere handful—and those who stand in need of aid are ready and willing to render as vigilant and faithful service as they did to the municipality in days gone by. They stand in want, some of them, and it is a shame that one may say so.

In looking over the relics one wonders what will become of them when the last of this little band is gone. They should be preserved, and preserved in some place more inviting to the public. The memory of the service rendered by these brave men should not be blotted out. It would not cost much to duplicate in Golden Gate Park the old Monumental Six House, and after the last one had been gathered to his fathers, to move all these trinkets and relics, which are so precious to them, out there among the trees and flowers as a monument to their heroism, their bravery and self-sacrifice.

A list of the surviving volunteers is appended. It shows that many of those who once ran with the machine are to-day presidents of banks, great capitalists, wholesale merchants and politicians:

Jno. L. Durkee, Wm. Alvord, Martin Bulger, Samuel Newman, Claus Spreckels, Christian Kobicke, Jno. Stratman, A. P. Hotaling, Jno. J. Guilfoyle, Chas. Kimball, R. T. Brown, Wm. G. Badger, Geo. H. Hobe, Geo. B. Hess, J. M. Praire, S. M. Locke, Geo. T. Bohen, John McCarthy, I. W. Lees, J. H. McMenomy, Jos. S. Marshall, Jas. Smith, Henry Sutliff, Charles M. Plum, John Mengel, George W. Kennard, Charles Schultz, Samuel Stryker, John S. Eels, A. Browning, B. P. Wilkins, Wm. L. Ryckman, John M. Gardner, C. Vorrath, Pincus Harris, Henry D. Hudson, Jno. T. Mahoney, John Brougham, Chas. W. Saunders, W. Irving, P. B. Quinlan, J. B. F. Louis, Chas. Reed, A. J. Jessup, Henry A. Chase, R. Caverly, S. S. Cohn, John Dryer, Jas. Madden, Jas. S. Kohn, Mark Harris, C. Turner, Jr., J. W. Kemp, G. W. Osborn, Henry Wheeler, John Grief, Godfrey Fisher, N. R. Lowell, I. Harrington, M. J. Dolan, Jas. O'Donnell, P. H. Flemming, Edw. Commins, E. Valencia, Jos. Figel, Jas. Grady, Adam Smith, T. R. Harders, J. J. Mundwyler, J. J. Crowley, Jacob Freeman, Herman Bendit, Michael Ryan, C. Murr, D. A. Finn, John Cook, B. H. Schunhoff, R. D. Blauvelt, Jr., T. B. Robinson, M. Farrell, H. Peyser, Jas. Riley, Andrew Bahrs, Thos. Neary, E. T. Anthony, Chas. R. Nolte, Henry Hock, Wm. Larkins, Henry Voorman, Leon Aradou, Ed. Staffleback, John G. Heim, Simon Fitzpatrick, Washington Irving, Wm. McDermott, Thos. Fox, Jas. W. Kentzel, Chas. B. McFarland, B. P. Wilkins, Louis Bente, Francis Richards.

BORDERLAND

BY JULIET WILBOR TOMPKINS

"You know I'm your sweetheart, Ham," Judy still says when we get confidential. The remark has become historical with her, like Veni, vidi, vici, or Carthago delenda est; though when I mention this, she says: "Don't be silly!" In disposing of things she doesn't understand, Judy is beyond her years. I never let her lose sight of the fact that I have a grown-up sweetheart, too, whom, in fact, I married a few years ago, but she comforts herself with the reflection that men of my advanced age always are married, anyway, and on the whole treats my wife very kindly. Judy and I have known each other for twelve years, or going on thirteen, as she prefers to have it called, though it will have to go on for eleven months and fourteen days before she reaches the dear, lovable, maddening, storm-and-stress teens. Ethel does not find children very interesting, but she knows what it is to me not to have any little Judys of our own, and for my sake is nice to our small neighbor; so I get along very comfortably with my two sweethearts.

I don't know how I should ever have succeeded with my stories if it hadn't been for Judy. It isn't only the copy I get out of her—though I have used her bodily for six entirely different girls and one boy, besides putting little pieces of her in every one of my creations—but it's her intense, absorbing interest in every line, that spurs me on and often makes me do better than I know how. When I've done a story, I type it myself and take it up to Ethel, who reads it when she has finished her practicing or whatever she is doing.

"It's very good of its class, dear," she generally says. "A story of that kind isn't supposed to have much to it, of course. As long as they pay you so well, I suppose you ought to keep on with them, though in theory I hate to have you do pot-boilers. Oh Hamilton, I am so anxious for the time when you will do something really good, something deep and truly worthy of you. Still I think you are right not to begin your great work till you are more mature."

"I'd rather wait a few years," I agree.

"You made a mistake on the second page; I put a V on the margin. you say, 'reading a copy of Punk,' where you mean Puck, of course. If I were you, I would leave this out, 'Straws tell which way the drink goes.' It is a little ordinary, don't you think so? You ought to keep the type cleaner. The a's are all blurred."

Ethel is the dearest woman in the world, but she lives among the immortals. I go away a little subdued, and carry the story to Judy, who giggles over every line and laughs till she cries at the jokes, and invariably thinks it the best thing I ever did.

"Oh Ham, it's perfectly sweet," she says at the end. "Where are you going to send it? Don't you wish it was coming out right off to-day? I simply can't wait. Now read it to me all over again." And we work ourselves up to such a pitch of enthusiasm that I go home with a new idea sizzling in my brain and inspiration so strong upon me that I must sit right down and try it out, though, as Ethel says, I've done enough for one day already, and ought to be taking some exercise.

I'll never forget the first night of my little play, "Out of the Frying-Pan." Judy was in the audience with my wife, but I huddled down in corners behind the scenes, tripped over by actors and sworn at by managers (who apologized when they recognized me), mechanically repeating over to myself the different scenes and wondering how I ever saw anything funny in them. Well, it was a hit, as perhaps you remember, and the house laughed enough to satisfy even Judy. When it was over, half the people I knew and a great many I didn't know came up and shook hands with me, and a lot of them went home with us and there was a very joyous excitement. Ethel wished it had been a really great play, such as I had it in me to do, and thought it was dear of me to be so cordial to all those tiresome people who wouldn't allow us to get away; and I let her see how all the fuss and congratulations bored me and belittled my actual abilities. Then Judy and I got in a corner and had a good hug, and said any number of vain, conceited, exulting things, though I'm afraid they were all about me. In my heart I knew Ethel was right, and that it was a very trivial sort of a thing, but I couldn't help being glad that Judy didn't find it out.

One day I had just finished a story which seemed to me the best I had done for months. I was feeling keyed-up and excited, as I always do after writing hard and fast, and, my wife being out, I took the story over to read to Judy. I found her in the garden with a lanky, delicate-looking boy of about 14, whom she introduced as Roy Martin, a sort of a cousin, who, with his mother, was going to stay a week or so with them. He looked rather heavy company for my bright little girl, and I felt sorry for her with a whole week of him before her.

"I wanted to read you something," I said significantly. She looked dubiously at her guest, then drew me a little aside.

"I can't leave him now, when he's just come," she whispered, "but I'll run over after tea. I'm crazy to hear it."

I walked back again oppressed by a sudden feeling of flatness, which always follows the happy stage when you have been writing. I was blue and bored that afternoon and irritable at dinner, and Ethel said that if I would drink so much strong coffee I couldn't expect not to be nervous. She even put hot water in my second cup, which is the most irritating thing I know. Judy came over after her tea, but the reading was not a success. She missed some of the best points, and several times seemed absent-minded. Her praises were manifold, but general instead of particular, and she skurried away without even talking it over—instead of staying on till I had to make remarks about people's bed-time.

The next day was Sunday, and I went over as usual to get Judy. Every week we took a certain electric car that whizzed us out into the country before we knew it, and there we would run races, sit on fences (and didn't that top rail grow sharp after a while!), and climb up a fascinating little creek of more stones than water, singing everything we knew. She had a dear little voice, and was the one person in the world who admired mine, so we enjoyed our concerts tremendously. Judy met me at the gate this particular Sunday, and said that Roy was coming, too, so off we started in the best of spirits. But someway, the day was a failure. Roy could'nt sing, and looked bored when we did, so the concert was given up. When we sat down by the brook and I started to tell Judy about a new plot I had thought out, Roy broke in with an account of a fishing trip he had once taken, a stupid tale, in which his polite little hostess appeared deeply interested. We weren't any of us quite at our ease, and the simple, happy, good-timey feeling was all gone. Once or twice I saw Judy talking to Roy in a new way, with a great deal of lifting and dropping of eyes and elbowing of silly little puffed sleeves. She stopped, looking somewhat ashamed, when she saw me watching her, and we all went home rather silent.

For the next few days I saw almost nothing of my small neighbor. She ran in every day as usual, but fidgeted around the room instead of settling in the big leather chair, and stayed only a few minutes. I missed her absurdly. The inspiration seemed gone out of my work, and everything I wrote ended in the waste-basket—my own, not the editorial one. On Thursday I saw Roy go off with another boy, and wondered if I should not have a caller. Sure enough, Judy appeared not ten minutes later, and curled up in the big chair with a long sigh.

"Well, little girl?" I said by way of encouragement, for I saw there was something on her mind.

"Ham, dear, I don't know what to make of it," she said slowly. "I guess I'd better tell you right out." I lit my pipe and settled myself for confidences. "I've thought a lot about it," she went on, "and it's so queer. Now Roy is a boy." I nodded assent. "He isn't half so nice as you are. He never says funny things that make me laugh, and he doesn't laugh when I say something funny, the way you do."

"Is he stupid?" I asked, to help her on.

"Yes, I guess he is, a little. He just talks about himself and what he did on that fishing trip and how he broke his arm, and he wasn't a bit interested in my measles. He isn't very polite, either. But the funny part is—" She paused doubtfully.

"The funny part—?" I said.

"Please don't be hurt, Ham, for I really do love you best, yet someway I always want to be with Roy. If he goes out, I have fits till he comes back, and if I go out and he doesn't want to come with me, I'm just as mad! Why, Hamlet," here she came and sat on the arm of my chair, and I politely aimed my pipe the other way, "I don't even want to stay with you when I know Roy is around, yet you are more fun than anybody, and he isn't any fun at all. Isn't it queer?" It was very queer. I never had heard of such a case, and couldn't explain it to her at all, though we talked it over for an hour. Then she went back and hung around the gate till Roy came in sight, when she suddenly became very much absorbed in peeling bark off the birch tree.

The next few days I did not see my little sweetheart at all. Roy and his mother went away Saturday, and all that evening I hoped for a visit, but she did not come. Sunday she was waiting for me at the gate as usual, and we took the car, both rather silent. When we were established on our favorite stones by the brook, I ventured to break the ice.

"Well, Judy," I began, "so your visitors have gone."

"Yes, they've gone," she said. There was a short silence, then she made one of those strange remarks that children startle us with, perhaps, without themselves understanding all that they imply: "Ham, dear, something's begun, and something's ended, and I don't know what it is!" Poor little Eve! The first taste of the apple is not always sweet. "You know I'm your sweetheart still," she added wistfully. We had a long talk, and Judy was growing quite bright and like herself, when suddenly her face clouded over again.

"There's something else," she said. "I wasn't going to tell you yet, for I knew how you'd feel about it, but I guess I'll have to. The doctor wants mother to go down South before the cold weather comes and stay there six months, so that she won't have the grip again, and she's going to take me with her. Isn't it horrid?"

"Six months," I exclaimed. "How am I going to get along without you, I'd like to know? How can I write without talking the stories over with you first? Why, Judy, I can't spare you."

"I know," she said, "but you've got your other sweetheart. I shan't have anybody at all."

Some two months later, I called to say good-by to Judy's mother, who was to start for Florida the next day.

"You are taking away my little inspiration," I told her. "I shall be utterly lost without her."

"She has been quite forlorn at the idea of leaving you," her mother said. "I have just this minute had a letter from Mrs. Martin, saying that she and Roy will join us down there for the winter, and I hope that will console Judy a little. Roy isn't strong, and they want to keep him out of school for a year."

As I left the house I met Judy, who took my hand and escorted me back to my study.

"To-morrow's good-by, Ham," she said dismally. "I'll be almost in my teens when I come back, and I'm afraid we'll never have such good times again." Two little tears began to roll down her cheeks.

"Oh, yes, we will," I said cheerfully. "And think of the fun you are going to have with Roy."

"Roy?"

"Yes; your mother just told me that Roy is going to be with you all winter, so you see—"

"Oh, goody, goody," she shouted, jumping around the room. Then suddenly she looked at me. I smiled, but she was not to be fooled.

"We're sweethearts just the same," she said, with a hug. "I'll always love you best. But something's ended, Hamlet, and something's begun."

A German chemist has hit upon a new method of making delicious champagne of apples. It so closely resembles the genuine article that only expert judges can distinguish it.

VIOLA ALLEN AND ROBERT EDESON

MRS. THOS. WHIFFEN AND J. E. DODSON

WM. FAVERSHAM AND VIOLA ALLEN

SCENES FROM "THE BENEFIT OF THE DOUBT" AT THE BALDWIN THEATRE

ELITE, PHOTOGRAPHER

THINGS AND PEOPLE

All native born Americans being entitled to the privilege of voting, why not Wong Fook, Leong Geet, See To Ju and Su Lock, who were born within the 24th and 32d districts of the city and county of San Francisco. Strange names for Americans these, curious additions to the heterogeneous medley of nationalities which make our population. Did the makers of the Constitution ever anticipate Ng. Gun or Lee Hoy among those who would claim for themselves its protection? Yet these citizens are on the great register—the former entered as a capitalist, the other as an artist, and they will aid in determining whether McKinley or Bryan is to be president of the United States. Considering the magnitude of California's population of Celestials it is not extraordinary there is now an up-cropping of native born men among them. There are children at every door step in Chinatown, gaily bedizened, shy little urchins, who play gleefully on the sidewalks and escape by the miracle of their childhood death through the thousand trap doors and cellar entrances in which the district abounds. They all learn English, these youngsters, being taught it at the Mission school, and in due course they join—at least the young fellows do—the Parlor of Native Sons which Wong Fook, the interpreter, has organized. This is a species of political club, to membership in which only bona fide Californians are eligible. The official title is United Parlor of Native Sons of the Golden State, and there are some 2,000 names on its register. A condition of membership is a knowledge of English, though in the conduct of the Parlor's proceedings the Celestial tongue is not discriminated against.

***

The soul of Wong Fook longs for political recognition. He it is who has banded these natives together, the purpose of organization being to secure to native-born Chinese the rights of citizenship. The soul of the interpreter revolts against the injustice of taxation without representation, and he purposes his California brethren shall vote just as often as their Caucasian compatriots. The by laws of the United Parlor are curious in their regulations. They forbid profanity save in cases of great provocation. The speakers have the floor until their say is ended. Article V. reads: "Members are not allowed to smoke opium in the parlor; to bring in any part of opium outfit; to gamble in any form whatever; to carry arms or weapons of any kind; or to bring in immoral females of any sort. Members are fined $50 for each offense." Smoking, sleeping in the lodge rooms, rough playing and expectoration are prohibited. However, they are bright young men, these two thousand Native Sons, and they have their orators, who grow patriotic at intervals. I wonder, indeed, what the future of such an organization may be. Mayhap, a Chinese contingent will form an important section of future political parades. Imagine the Dragon in a McKinley procession, and some Poon Gay or Lee Kin officiating as vice president of a ratification meeting. Up to date eighteen Chinamen have registered at the City Hall, though I am told several hundred more propose to claim citizenship ere the time is up. Those who have faced the ordeal thus far, awaited a turn with their American brethren and imperturbably swore to the fact of their birth in this free realm. The officers of registration at once questioned their right, but the record was unimpeachable. One Chinaman, rather less intelligent-looking than the others, was asked to read the Constitution, and did so with that facile monotony of tone which is characteristic of Celestial elocution. However little he understood the document, there remained no question of his ability to read and write, and he, too, was passed with the rest.

***

One may be forgiven for suggesting to Mr. Hearst the desirability of publishing Ambrose Bierce's mutter simultaneously in his two newspapers. The present arrangement makes the Examiner a week late with Prattle that New York has had the previous Sunday. The Sabath journals arrive in a bunch Friday morning, and there is nothing to prevent the Bulletin or the Chronicle copying the matter which the Examiner publishes with the pretense of originality a week later. The same criticism applies with greater force to the other features of the Sunday paper. No great trouble is involved in preparing the features a week in advance and dispatching the proof to San Francisco, since the Typographical Union forbids the use of matrixes. This would be a more dignified arrangement, and we unfortunates would not feel how unimportant we really are beside New York.

***

National Committeeman Dwyer, who has just returned from Chicago, gives an interesting impression of the demeanor of Possibility Bryan presenting himself to the convention. As he faced the audience his face wore an expression of triumph, as if he realized his opportunity and knew that the honor would be awarded him could he but obtain a chance to speak. The chance came, and the nomination, too, which, indeed, could only have gone to a man who had spoken better. It is the intention of the National Committee, I am told, to use Bryan in the doubtful States, and it is proposed that he address meetings in Illinois, Iowa, Indiana and Nebraska, which States he is depended on to convert by his eloquence to the silver wing.

***

Maurice Barrymore was at the Lambs' Club in New York one night when the two Drew brothers were under discussion. Someone was commenting on the fact that John had met with unlimited success, while Sidney was invariably a failure.

"Yes, it couldn't be helped," said Barrymore thoughtfully. "It's just that John Drew and Sidney didn't!"

***

French restaurant keeping is in nowise as profitable an occupation as in by-gone days. No longer is Julius or Achille or Louis a capitalist under his obsequiousness. No longer has he a ranch in the country to which he proposes retiring in the course of events. No longer does he disdain 10 cent tips, he who in happier days regarded a quarter as the smallest token in the repertory of gratuities. That the old traffic is not dead is evinced by the fact that the restauranteurs continue in business at their old places. However, the gay set has lost its vim and its digestion. Champagne no longer flows like water at the provocation of a successful mining deal. Hard times enforce economies in Burgundies, and there is a suspicion that the Chateaus which are served as high-priced clarets have little but their labels for their pretensions. Besides all this the taste for the "wine" has steadily decreased in the last half decade. The men who drink champagne for the flavor are club men and their enjoyment is had within club walls. Apropos of restaurants, these institutions are credited with being responsible for the growth of the absinthe habit here. It cannot truly be said this liquor has a great vogue in San Francisco. In certain sections of town it has votaries who, true to tradition, consume nothing else. Though certain young men out of bravado, and certain hardened drinkers for a new sensation, order absinthe, it cannot be urged that the vice is peculiarly a San Francisco failing. That is clearly proved in a recent issue of the Chronicle, in which testimony on the point was presented.

***

Though the salary which is accorded judges amounts merely to the receipts of a third-class practice, the duties of the role do not bear heavily upon the incumbent. There is occasionally the necessity of preparing an important decision, which takes time and thought, but for the most part a judge is free at 4 o'clock, with few cares before 10 next morning. To those members of the profession who have been compelled by the exigencies of practice to work hard, the leisure of the bench is a temptation, to which, sooner or later, they succumb. There are a good many candidates for the several vacancies at the forthcoming election, and among others, I am told that Carrol Cook is considering with some favor the idea of accepting a nomination to succeed Judge Murphy. In that department, Cook, with his unrivaled knowledge of criminals and their affairs, would be an ideal judge, and there is little doubt of his success, should he decide to run. Another lawyer of ability, who has come out into the open as a candidate for ermine, is Rhodes Borden, who now officiates as chief of staff in the City and County attorney's office.

***

Not content with aiding the republicans of Santa Clara to express his wishes in convention, the versatile Jim Rea enforces his will by means of the Democracy. This gallant gentleman nominates his republican friends to office, and cleverly opposes to them a set of democratic dummies, whom the community perforce rejects. So craftily does this chameleon boss manage the two parties that his favorites are perennially in power and his own supremacy is as unquestioned and as unjustifiable as the rule of the autocrat of China. Why the good citizens of San Jose, especially the democrats, permit the rule of Rea, is as explicable as the long endured sovereignty of Buckley in San Francisco. No one dares dispute the path with the bold, shrewd and jovial Jim, and he rules by force and terror of a dozen victories. Besides, he is personally a pleasant, generous fellow, who has that fidelity to friendships which is so potent a principle in the power of a political leader.

***

There is current among the leaders, however, an impression that the time for reform is at hand. An attempt to wrest the Democracy from Rea's strong clutch would find sympathy and support in the State Committee. To what bad circumstances he has brought the party was exhibited by the character of the delegation which represented the county at the Sacramento convention recently. Its participation there subserved the private purposes of its real leader rather than the welfare of its constituency. At the head of it was Sam Rucker, a trusty friend of Rea. Apropos of certain other affiliations of a social character which Mr. Rucker possesses, an amusing tale is told. It betrays the curious conditions which sometimes make political influence. Rucker had a falling-out with W. W. Foote, who desired to go to Chicago, and announced he would cast the delegation's vote against his aspiration. A friend of the latter telegraphed at once to the chairman of the Republican State Central Committee, Major McLaughlin: "Rucker is going to cast Santa Clara against Bill Foote. See that he votes them for him." Soon afterwards the wire conveyed the following message from the republican leader to the restive democrat: "Sam Rucker, you will not strengthen yourself with me by voting delegation against "Ole Bill." This mandate carried weight, for Santa Clara's twenty-three were for Foote to a man. In justice to Mr. Rucker it should be explained that he regards the Major in the light of a prospective father-in-law.

***

Trouble brews in the Olympic Club, I fear. Conditions are not financially favorable; there has been a serious decline in membership, and the prize fighting plan of procedure, though it promises sound money returns, does not commend itself to the conservative element. Another abuse that needs rectifying pertains to the character of men recently posted for membership under the rule of the directorate, which offered remission of dues and life memberships to those who brought in the most men. Under this incentive a number of persons ineligible from various causes have had their names put up, and in certain instances have run the gauntlet of the general vote. Latterly, however, there has been a quickening of conscience, and the objectionable names were taken down. It also appears that certain of the directors have allowed themselves to enter this membership competition, violating the precedent which prescribes that the board shall take no action in this direction. This is the usual time for Olympic squabbles, however, and possibly the conditions are but little worse than usual.

The project of Baron Von Schroder, who proposes establishing a bath house, club house and other facilities for luxury and comfort at Point San Pedro, should attract general attention. Here is the only beach on the bay shore off which bathing is enjoyable. The warm currents from the Sacramento and San Joaquin rivers curve into this crescent, and the water is always of an agreeable temperature, and the sandy beach makes a comfortable footing. Point San Pedro is the old camping ground of the Roseleafs, who repaired there on their Sabbath excursions in the Frolic and picnicked comfortably on the sand. The plan which the Baron has outlined includes the purchase of a hind paddlewheel steamer to convey passengers from San Rafael to the beach, and also a steamer service from the city. Willis Polk is preparing plans for the club and bath houses, and the promise is of a very swell resort.

***

My announcement that the Stevenson fountain had advanced to the stage of foundation, was premature. The model is still under the hands of Douglas Tilden, who is experimenting with various effects. The sculptor oscillates between that task and the Native Son monument, which is to be unveiled Admission Day, '97. However, he expects to have the fountain ready before Christmas, and the contractor agrees that little time will be lost in setting it up. Would it not be an appropriate idea to commemorate the anniversary of the great novelist's death with the unveiling of this his memorial? No more fitting date could be decided on.

***

That dread avenger, the moral law, how it does punish defaults, how it avenges neglect of its salutary rulings! This man or the other may disregard its codes and principles with impunity, but time finds him out, and the world knows at what price his pleasure has been enjoyed. How the derelictions we all know sooner or later become notorious. As long as Soandso's little affairs are out of the newspaper who cares? Society winks, but all of a sudden something happens, and it's all over town, and the matrons elevate their eyebrows and Soandso betakes himself into retreat and damns someone's awkwardness. Wonders, I suppose, why society does not continue blind to what it so long blinked at; laments its inconsistency and rails at conditions which have suddenly submerged him. Still it's only for a time. Nothing is fatal but marriage and cheating at cards, and from both you may recover, via divorce, inheritance, or discovering a gold mine. However, one is brought face to face again with the old saw which makes virtue its own reward, which, indeed, is much the same as declaring that if you don't get into debt you have no bills to pay. All of which, however cynical it sounds, is unfortunately true. There are women (Heaven bless them) and men, too, whose observance of the moral law is founded on firmer ground than etiquette; whose right-doing is dictated by principle instead of by convention, but they are not generous entertainers and their names are seldom in the papers. So their good opinion has no market value, unless you wish to marry their daughters or run for office. Even then, the rest of the world will declare a man's private affairs have nothing to do with his ambitions, and you have the old problem over again—material for immemorial moralizing.

***

Auditor Broderick need feel no shame for speaking the truth of Mayor Sutro. Those who have watched dispassionately the official career of this blusterer whose pretentions are as insincere as they are vociferous, have long held the opinion which he expressed. The sole fault with the Auditor's epithets was that they lacked vigor. Mayor Sutro is much more than he announced. He is a subversive hypocrite loyal only to the interests of his vanity and his pocketbook. He has the viciousness of a demagogue, the greed of a monopolist and the swaggering presumption of a bully.

***

From Mr. Fredericks, who manages the specialty called "Fredericks' Troupe of Demon Athletes," I have the following epistle, in which is given the performers' side of the large salary proposition. My information was derived from a member of the Orpheum staff, and was as authoritative as comment about the financial circumstances of any individual can be. As for the contention about railway fares—it is well known these are footed by the management. Of course a company traveling on its own resources has to meet fares and freights, but the high-priced attractions such as Biondi, the Black Patti and others, are furnished with tickets back and forth, and beyond the cost of living, have but few expenses. However, here is the communication:

Los Angeles, July 29, 1896.

Editor of The Wave: I see you mention in your paper about performers' pay and all the money taken away by them. Now, you state that Miss Western has banked $150,000. I am sorry to inform you that if she had that amount of money she would not be in the business. You also speak of the Maisanos. Mr. Maisano gets $250 per week, but he don t get a chance to pocket much of it. A man that has a troupe has all the responsibility and must pay his people, keep up all wardrobe, pay hotel accounts, agent, railroad fares, etc., and when he settles all bills he just makes a living. You will not find one performer in a hundred that has $500 to his name. I have a troupe of five people, and with my expenses just manage to make a living. Railroads, hotels and agents get most of my hard earned money, and every one looks to performers for tips. Now, I wish you would mention this in your paper, and not let the public run away with the idea that performers take all the money with them when we work for hotels and railroads. I have given over $100 a year for tips to stage hands. I came from New York to California. Two weeks are lost in traveling. I work six weeks and then I jump to New York with seven people. From there I go to London; that takes $1,000 of my money. What have I left of the six weeks' hard work? Not a good living. I would sooner have $20 a week steady for myself than $300 a week and have a troupe to look after.

CONN. FREDERICKS.

In a recent number of "The Outlook" there is a brief account of a wise woman's devices for getting a restless small boy through a tiresome railway trip. They were very simple, but so attractive that the candy-man passed unnoticed, and even running up and down the aisle lost its charm. If the Pullman Company would tack up copies of that article in every sec tor, they would double the pleasures of traveling. No matter how much you love children, it is annoying to have them eternally bumping their heads in your aisle and turning uninvited somersaults over the back of your seat. Once, when I had some important writing to do en route, a little girl hung persistently over my shoulder, her feet presumably in the next section, and glued her eyes on my paper. Hints and glances were unheeded, and her parents were evidently so thankful to have her kept quiet for a while that I hadn't the heart to rouse them from their novels, and so she stayed on. I don't know whether she could read or not, but she spoiled my article. Then she stood in front of my section and recited all the spelling lessons she had had in the last three months—an implied criticism that I resented. Perhaps it was all very dear and "cunning," but—well, writing makes one somewhat nervous and irritable, I suppose. It isn't the children's fault, and to make friends with the dear, jolly, natural ones adds a great deal to the pleasure of travelling. But the parents who spoil children until they are hopelessly embarked on the silly age, and then turn them loose on an inoffending car-load of people—there should be separate trains for such. And there is a great deal to be said on the children's side. They are tired and restless, and can't go out doors, and as the grown-up people feel very much the same way after several days of sand, sage and alkali, they often get scant sympathy. I once befriended a forlorn little daughter of the Slapping Motherhood on such a trip, telling her stories, and getting a great deal of amusement out of her quaint remarks. When we separated, she gave me a tremendous hug. "Ah," she said, "I do love you, you're so polite to me!" Poor little soul! Politeness was not in the maternal category of My Duty to My Children. One often wonders how much the train life of families reflects their home life. If one has crossed the continent often, one shudders and hopes—not at all.

The Queen of Sweden, who is one of the richest women in the world, owes her great wealth to the gambling tables at Weisbaden, which were owned by her brothers, from whom she inherited her vast fortune. Her Majesty, who is a bit eccentric, always dresses in the costume of the Salvation Army, to which organization she belongs.

A feature of the Paris exposition of 1900 will be a section devoted to the history of Christianity from the beginning to the present day, with representations of the Temple of Jerusalem, the scenes of the life of Christ, Pagan and Christian Rome, Constantinople and the lives of the saints.

COMMANDER BOOTH-TUCKER

Commander Booth-Tucker of the Salvation Army led services among the Chinese recently, dressed as a Chinaman. This militant minister believes that like elements work best on each other, and in addressing different audiences he assumes the garb with which they are most familiar. In the portraits the first represents the Commander in full regimentals, the center one as a Chinese merchant, and in the third he is a tramp--his garb for the slums.

A CHAT WITH VIOLA ALLEN

Miss Allen took me to her dressing room, where she let in the fresh air, dismissed her maid, and settled herself to be interviewed with a pleasant cordiality that tempted one to forget business and simply make friends. I was anxious to know if her dramatic talent was inherited.

"My father was the first one of his family to go on the stage," she told me. Her voice, by the way, is one of her greatest charms, being low and unusually sweet, without any stage affectation. "His career grew out of a Shakspere club to which he belonged. I myself didn't show a bit of dramatic talent when I was small. I never recited pieces or sang "I Love Little Pussy," or performed in any way, for I was shy. When I went on the stage I was very young—I know they always say that, but really and truly

VIOLA ALLEN
PHOTO BY THE ELITE

I was—and I don't believe I had ever been in a theater more than a dozen times in my life."

"How did you come to do it?" I asked.

"It was a mere chance. My father wanted someone to play the part of a very young, innocent girl, who knew nothing whatever of the world, and that was just what I was, you see. So I left school and began rehearsing, with my gowns still at the tops of my boots."

"Weren't you terribly frightened?"

"Well, really, I didn't know enough to be," said Miss Allen, with a laugh. "I didn't take myself very seriously in those days, and it was all great fun. I played the part of my father's daughter, so I could always whisper to him, 'Now tell me when,' and he always did."

"I don't suppose you ever feel a bit nervous now," I ventured.

"Indeed I do, on first nights," she answered decidedly. "Starting a new play is always rather dreadful, and you can't help feeling unpleasantly anxious about it. We begin one next Monday, and I wish it were well over." She shook her head apprehensively, with a little widening of her eyes, which are large and dark and very expressive.

"When you have an entirely new part, how do you get your conception of it?" I asked. "Creating a character must be partly a matter of inspiration, isn't it?"

"It is largely a matter of study," Miss Allen answered "I always begin by reading the whole play over a number of times, to see in just what relation my character stands to the others, and what their point of view is. The others represent public opinion—what the world around this girl thought of her—and that can generally be relied on to a certain extent. If all agree in their attitude towards her, I know she must have the qualities that command that attitude, whatever it may be. Then, of course, a certain amount of my own self goes in, just as an author makes copy out of her own personal emotions for her characters. That is why acting is so very exhausting. To a certain extent, you are the person you represent."

"And she is always a person who goes through an abnormal amount of experience," I added. "Do you like you sad or your jolly parts best?"

"It all depends on one's mood. If I'm feeling stimulated I enjoy every minute of a gay part, and it's easy to laugh and be high spirited. But when you're tired or depressed, it is very hard to carry on just the same, and then it comes easier to do a sad part. And of course the audience makes a difference. Why, if there is one person in the house who looks bored or inattentive, or is restless, you can't have a moment's peace till you have conquered that one, too. Your whole audience must be with you."

"But when you can always carry them with you, it must be fascinating," I said, rising.

"Still, there is a good deal of truth in what Jefferson said—don't you remember? An actor is a thing of the moment, and when his few best years are over, there is nothing else. An author or an artist has a lasting medium for his achievements."

"But he must always reach the people through his medium, while you have direct contact with your audience," I remonstrated. "Your success is right on the spot, while he generally has to wait till he's dead for his. Besides, dusty books on a high shelf don't mean much."

"But dusty programs don't mean anything at all," she answered.

THE FISHERMAN'S WHARF

A Bit of Italy Dropped Into San Francisco Bay.

Follow the water northward from the ferries towards Telegraph Hill and about midway between the two you will find the fisherman's wharf, a little bit of Italy dropped down there where the land curves westerly and the houses seem to be crawling up the steep cliffs to the old tower.

On radiant sunshiny days when the sky and water are blue the wharf makes a warm and living picture; the russet sails turn almost to gold in the sunshine, the little dirty white boats seem to have just washed their faces and put on new blue and green neckties, the fish gleam like the "shining soul of a jest," and the fishermen's dark, foreign faces brighten and soften under the genial influence of warmth and light.

Their always voluble tongues become more so—l'allegro is the time—they hitch up their belts (worn low about the loins so the shirt bags in front like a Fedora vest), and give their caps a jauntier tip. They swagger a bit, gesticulate with more abandon, chatter with more vivacity, become more southern, Italian, expansive and picturesque. On foggy days the picture is changed; it becomes a study in brown and gray: the sails, the nets spread out on the pier to dry, even the men themselves—as much as can be seen of them—are tan colored or brown, that beautiful brown which is born of tan-bark, Italy, sun and salt-water.

The water that ripples past the piles is leaden like the sky above it; the pier itself is an indeterminate brownish gray. "The smell of ships, that earnest of romance," is in the air, the schooners on the bay look mysterious and phantom-like. One can fancy pallid, gray-clad, ghostly figures are stealing about their decks, and one's mind goes back to the dreams of long ago, the fancies, the imaginings of childhood, when to be a wild-eyed pirate of superlative courage and accomplishments—who routed men-of-war single-handed, conquered everybody, graciously spared the brave, protected the weak and then sailed away, away, away, over the sea in search of gold and adventure—seemed the most aristocratic and delightful of occupations.

But fog or sunshine, the nets must be mended and the lines disentangled, so almost every day in the year the piers are dotted with stooping, laboring figures, and two broken rows of lateen sail boats line the wharf, rising and falling in the water with a sickening little roll as the waves strike them broadside. Sometimes, when one of the fishermen die, they fly gay red, white and green flags, but mostly bob quietly up and down entirely unadorned save by their swarthy owners, who, even when they have homes, generally breakfast, lunch and dine on board. At first glance it seems a strange custom, but when one remembers how irregular their lives are, how dependent their comings and goings upon wind and tide, it is easily understood. Even the most careful of housewives would find it hard to have meals "on time," where time is kept by vagrant breezes and man's (often drunken man's) caprice.

The fishermen's wives, however, are not idle; they cook for a family of youngsters; they bear children, which is something—though their husbands don't think so—and in addition to this they make the interminable and necessary nets, some of which, the drag-nets, for instance, only last three or four months, and are about forty feet long. But occupation, always a blessing, must be a double one to these women. To sit at home with folded hands and wait for the husband or lover who may never return; to listen to the fog horn or rising wind and know that your man or your boy is far out near the Farallones in his cockle-shell, or perhaps off Hunter's point with the tide running out—swift, relentless—and the boat bottom up; to picture to yourself the shivering bodies and the stiffening fingers which cling to that bottom—there are few things worse. Can you realize it, my lady, you who have but to stretch out your hand to touch your dearest or bring him to you. Believe me, life is not all beer and skittles to those who "go down to the sea in ships" or to their womankind.

These fishermen spend their lives, excepting an occasional spree, on these twenty-five foot boats. They are out sometimes for five days or a week, sometimes but one day, sometimes two, and they live when out on sour red wine, hard-tack, spaghetti, onions, garlic and hope, though in dock they are great fellows for stew.

I've seen them breakfasting off red wine, watermelon and stew, always with onions and bait (small fish) gleaming through the gaping hatches and smelling aloud to heaven. They sit about on the little decks generally in groups of three or four, dressed in garments which salt water has turned to one indefinite hue—with now and then the flare of a red handkerchief or a new cap—and eat voraciously, gesticulate wildly and talk vehemently.

Again you may see one, serene, smelly and sensuous, dropping leisurely down a ladder to his boat, humming as he goes. On his head he wears a straw (or something that looks like straw) tam o' shanter, a red cap or an English felt hat, if the latter you are struck by the intrinsic ugliness of our men's headgear and breathe a prayer. Speak to him and he will probably reply with a few words of mongrel English "talka," on a dark lagoon of Italian, and he may inquire affectionately if you "wanta the sardina."

Sometimes they speak very good English. "I never yet," said one of them with Italy in his eyes and America on his tongue, "I never yet have seen a good day on the bay, but if you will come down on a Thursday afternoon, when most of the boats are in, you will see some very pretty scenery." In spite of his quaint use of scenery he told me many things I wanted to know, and told me where the different fish were found—the turbot on the Alameda flats, the striped bass in Sonoma creek, flounders near Mare Island, pompano and smelt in deep water that anchovies are caught in shore nets and rock cod with hook and line off the Cordell banks; that the boats went further south for mackerel and barracuta; that mullet, tom cod and dead men were sometimes hauled up in the same net, and that of the lot the corpse was the most profitable for he brought an unfailing ten dollars from the Coroner.

He told me, too, that his mother considered the perils of the sea less than those of the city, and that she sends a little brother (about eight years) out in the boats with his father "to keep him out of the streets during school vacations."

PEG WOFFINGTON.

AS THE TIDES TURN

THURSDAY AFTERNOON AT THE WHARF

ET CETRA

I know a sweet young lady who emphasizes her feeling in her face; I know a disagreeable one, who makes an exclamation point of her nose.

I fight shy of Strephon, because he belittles his friend.

The man who forgets a wrong is invincible; the man who forgives one is divine.

If you find a man who is just, honest and discreet, crown him king at once.

An ass clothed in a lion's skin lives an uncomfortable life, and dies an ass.

When thwarted ambition and envy can find no other way to vent its spite, it becomes a reformer.

Applause is a wonderful stimulant to self-sacrifice.

The fear of God and the love of lucre have kept the world in turmoil.

If the Ten Commandments were in full force, business and pleasure would cease.

The truth may be a vice when it does harm.

The Anarchists would found a society for the relief of the rich.

Men are divided into two classes, those who wear saddles and those who wear spurs.

Conscience is the name which the orthodox give to their prejudices.

Lies are the only weapons with which virtue can be assailed.

Scandal is the offspring of spite, and gossip the recreation of vice and vulgarity.

PHUT.

MENDING THE NETS

WESTERN PALACES

No. I. THE RESIDENCE OF MR. ISIDOR SCHWARTZ

A MILLIONAIRE'S MANSION

The Home of a Guatemalan Capitalist.

On the corner of Buchanan and Clay streets stands one of the handsomest houses in San Francisco, a combination of stone and brick, for which Mr. W. J. Mathews of Oakland is architecturally responsible. It was built by Mrs. Moses Hopkins half a dozen years ago, but has since passed into the hands of Mr. Isidor Schwartz. One does not enter too easily, after ringing the door-bell. There are as many different stages as there are degrees of friendship, after one has passed through the double swing doors at the top of the marble steps. These swinging doors were about the first of their kind in San Francisco, though in New York they have been used for a long time, the system being known as the New York Vestibule Entrance.

From the octagonal vestibule, marble floored and wainscoted with mahogany, one passes through a single door of hospitable width to the entrance hall, leading into the reception room. This was one of the first of the white and gold rooms that swept over the town, and perhaps one of the most elaborate. The walls are hung with silk, and the woodwork, Renaissance in style, is decorated in colors, with beautifully designed cornices. Leaving this room, you at last reach the main hall, with its polished floor and broad oak staircase, and are fairly within the house. On the left is the dining room, wainscoted in antique oak. Heavy rafters cross the ceiling, sarcastically suggesting primitive simplicity and strings of onions, an idea that the array on the great sideboard hardly carries out. Perhaps the most attractive feature of the dining room is the bay window behind the heavy oak arch. There comfortably secluded breakfasts may be served, or tete-a-tete luncheons, or even cosy little dinners, when there is almost nobody at home. It would be an ideal corner for the "children's table," which is spread at big Thanksgiving dinners and other occasions when relatives are inevitable and children a matter of course. Two doors, separated by a fireplace, connect the dining room with the main hall, on another side of which wide doors lead to the living room. This room, Moorish in design, is divided into two parts by heavy columns and wainscoted in mahogany, and its furniture, like that of the other apartments, is Renaissance in character. Next comes the billiard room, octagonal in shape by reason of its cut-off corners, but covered with a square dome, in which a stained glass skylight is set. Mahogany wainscoting reaches within two feet of the ceiling, and in a recess some fourteen feet wide is a great open fireplace, with seats built into the wall on either side. One of the cut-off corners forms a side of the little octagon room known as the den, a place specially designed to encourage the use of tobacco. Everything about it, even the decorations of the walls, suggests smoke, and every known comfort a smoker can enjoy is there.

Upstairs the bedrooms are chiefly furnished in birdseye maple, and there is a fascinating boudoir done in white and gold. On the floor above are a couple of extra guest chambers and the servants' rooms, while the basement floor contains the kitchen and all the unattractive machinery of a large house.

It is to be regretted that bicyclists are often seen riding with open mouth. With some, this pernicious habit was fixed in childhood. But when it is observed only after exercise, such as bicycling, it indicates that the heart and lungs have been subjected to undue strain, which should not be repeated. Medical experience affirms that so long as the cyclist can breathe freely with the mouth closed he is safe, at least so far as heart strain is concerned.

Mr. John Hays Hammond, the American mining engineer who has been recently brought into such prominence in South Africa, declares, according to a cablegram from London, that he will not return to Johannesburg. Mr. Hammond states it to be his intention to try to divert English capital to the United States for the development of gold mines. The Pacific Coast stands very much in need of some developing agency such as Mr. Hammond will probably control, and the benefit which would result to the mining regions of the West through such exploration and development is incalculable.

WEARY

Not as a means of grace,
And hope of glory, No.
But could I see thy face,
And hear the blessing flow,
As when thy living lips the promise poured,
Then would I kneel and wait for mercy, Lord.

"Ye weary, come to me
And I will give you rest,"
Have I not bent the knee,
And all my soul confessed?
Art Thou a myth, Oh God! or am I blind,
Groping in gloom for peace, I cannot find?

Oh! shed one beam of light,
And when my flesh is wrung
Through agony's long night,
When all my life is hung
On retrospection's cross, and when the spear
Of conscience strikes my soul, then be Thou near.

Whisper one word of hope,
That my faint heart may know
How with these fears to cope,
And respite gain from woe;
Bind up my wounds, and breathe the healing balm
Of one kind word, to comfort and to calm.

Not for a heaven unearned
Nor to escape a hell,
My lips have often burned
To drink of Mercy's well;
Yearning, in that sweet flood, themselves to steep,
And drift away from life in dreamless sleep.

—LOUIS A. ROBERTSON.

Highest of all in Leavening Power.—Latest U. S. Gov't Report

Royal Baking Powder

ABSOLUTELY PURE

IN SOCIETY

How the Smart Set Has Amused Itself This Week.

The paper chase supplies to San Rafael an absorbing topic of conversation. The institution is given up to equestrian exploits, and the prowess of this maid and that man recur with poignant frequency. Episodes of the chase are the current circulating medium of conversation, and anticipation is concentrated on the forthcoming expedition, for there is to be another today. On Saturday last, Baron Von Schroeder and Miss Currey officiated as hares, and the Baron saw to it that the chase was not an easy one. A course of infinite difficulties he led, up hill and down dale, across the side of the high hill behind the Lichtenberg place, and around Inspiration Point. Indeed, it took good riding to be in at the death. Mr. Archibald caught the Baron, and Miss Tiny O'Connor captured Miss Currey. Perhaps it would have been more appropriate had the first honors gone to Miss Tompkins, whose riding was particularly clever and daring, but she suffered the disadvantage of a tumble en route, turning a sharp curve. She speedily recovered, however, and was awarded second honors. Mr. Archibald also experienced a shock, and still carries around with him a lame arm as the result of a carriage which inconveniently intruded itself in his path.

Otherwise, life at the Hotel Rafael is sufficiently gay for the young people, and by no means tiresome for the matrons. They have a new belle over there in the person of Miss Sussman, an exceedingly pretty girl, tall and dark, whose poses are of the Gibson order. She has become a great favorite, and will, I believe, go to the cotillions next season under proper auspices. Saturday night last, the Baron gave a hunt dinner, at which the participants of the chase appeared en grande tenue. Among the guests were the Misses O'Connor, Miss Emma Spreckels, Miss Tompkins, Miss Gwynne and Miss Currey, together with Mr. and Mrs. Crooks, Count Du Parc, Vladmir Artsimovitch, Mr. Archibald, Mr. Greenway and others. There was a choice menu, some of the Baron's best claret to drink, and any amount of fun recounting the incidents of the day's adventures. Another entertainment was the dinner which Mr. and Mrs. Crooks gave at Fairfax Villa, their guests being Mrs. Folger, Miss Gwynne, Miss Thomas, Miss Tompkins and Miss Currey, together with Mr. Greenway, Mr. Pardie, Mr. Archibald and Mr. Greenwood. They were driven there in a four-in-hand by the host, and enjoyed an Italian meal cooked by Pastori himself, in which macaroni, polenta and other delicacies figured in appropriate array.

Though the crowd at the hotel is much given to riding and driving, bicycling has its own vogue. Mrs. Crooks, Mrs. Nutall, Mrs. Tay and the O'Connors, all ride. The Gerstles and the Hechts are great wheelwomen, and on their silent steeds gather at the hotel every afternoon. On Sunday last, Mr. and Mrs. Osgood Hooker, Miss Genevieve Goad and Mr. Wilsee rode up from Sausalito on their wheels, had lunch at the hotel and returned in the evening. Quite a party of visitors were over on Sunday. Miss Williams had Mr. Heath and Gerald Rathbone as her guests. Miss Thomas entertained Miss Laura Adams and Frank Van Ness. Tim Frawley was Mr. Archibald's guest for the chase and remained over the best of Sunday. Mrs. Webster Jones still has Miss Gertie Foreman with her. Altogether, there is lots going on, and everyone is having a good time. Among the most attractive of the younger girls are Miss Susie Blanding and Miss Breckenridge, who bid fair to be belles in the days to come. They are bright, gay, smart, young ladies, whose fascinations are already in evidence.

On Mr. Walter Hobart's return, polo has again become living issue at Burlingame. The young millionaire is back, with his bride, his coach and his horses, and seems as happy and as full of vitality as ever. There is quite an assemblage of distinguished rigs now at San Mateo. George Newhall has a fine array of vehicles. Henry Crocker, who has the Harry Howard mansion for the summer, drives the coach which he purchased recently from Talbot Clifton. He has a strong hand for the ribbons and tools the big vehicle through the devious avenues which lead to his front door in brilliant style. Then there is the Burlingame coach which Mrs. Tobin drives so cleverly, equipages enough for a veritable coaching parade should the occasion present itself. By the way, Mr. Crocker had a party out for a moonlight drive last week in the new coach. Among his guests were Mr. and Mrs. Al. Castle, Mr. and Mrs. Harry Williams and some others.

At Burlingame the topic is the pony and steeplechase racing at Del Monte. The Association has announced its programme—five races for Wednesday the 26th of August, and six races for Saturday the 29th. The prizes aggregate $1500, together with the Del Norte cup—a mile handicap. In most of the events the rules prescribe gentlemen riders, but there are several events in which there will be jockeys up. The degree of Walter Hobart's participation will decide the success of the races. If the young millionaire proposes capturing all the prizes, as no one doubts his ability to do, the interest will be slight. His stable is beyond competition. However, if he contents himself with the cup then there will be fun in plenty, as the entries will be general. It is a pity the comic element, which Talbot Clifton generally provided, will be absent this time, though there is no predicting new developments of clowns. Another interesting question applies to the participation of the Country Club. Enthusiasm is not being manifested among its members as the Burlingamites carried off all the credit last August, and but a corporal's guard watched the pigeon shoot. The institution objects to being relegated to a secondary position and its determination will hardly add to the success of the celebration.

Del Monte has been enjoying an influx of Eastern belles and heiresses. Several Kentucky beauties shared the hospitality of this charming resort during the past week, and with all due respect to the loveliness of the Blue Grass State, I may assert that the California girls had no reason to dread the comparison. The visitors had excellent chances of experiencing what California hospitality really is. Judging by their remarks a friendly bond is rapidly being formed between California and Kentucky.

Contrary to general report, the advent of the big waist has not struck terror to the heart of fashion's devotees. Waists have been growing larger and still larger, until now they are the distinguishing mark between the cultured belle and the shop girl. Mrs. Osgood Hooker was among the first to frown down the eighteen and twenty-inch waist measurement. Her followers are legion. If twenty-seven inches is the fashionable measure, many of our belles have out-fashioned fashion and have her models of beauty and ultra-style many months back.

The most pleasant reports come from the invalids. Miss Romie Wallace is once again able to be up and out. Mrs. Alexander McBean has sent out word that she will be able to see her friends next week, and Mrs. Osgood Hooker is able to be about without cane or crutch, and will be ready shortly to mount her wheel once again.

Mr. and Mrs. Rudolph Spreckels are at San Rafael and I am told are seriously contemplating the leasing of the Mayo Newhall residence. Miss Joliffe is their guest.

Although the names of some of the debutantes for the coming season have been announced, he will indeed be a prophet who may predict the outcome of the season. Popularity and belleship are all very well, but the girls who won the matrimonial prizes last season were the dear little girls, the sweet, demure ones. Will this mean a change of tactics? Time alone can tell.

The details of the Gerstle-Levison marriage were admirably managed. An out-of-doors wedding in midsummer. How pretty and appropriate. The decorations were delightfully artistic. Indeed, it seems a sacrilege to call that artistic arrangement of fragrant and beauteous blossoms decorations. The bride looked charming. Her gown was the perfection of the conturiere's art, and it was not made in Paris, either. The finest of white crepe lisse over shining ivory satin. The effect was exquisite. The bridesmaids looked so dainty and summery, in their pretty gowns, white over green. The maid of honor's gown was an inimitable creation. Truly, I have never seen such an assemblage of smartly-gowned women. Those who came from San Rafael and the environing towns wore, for the most part, lawns and organdies, smothered in lace of course. The hats were dreams. Big leghorns for the most part with nodding plumes.

To my mind the prettiest girl at the gathering was Miss Sadie Hecht, one of the bridesmaids. And the most stunning matron without the vestige of a doubt was Mrs. Marcus Gerstle. Her gown was of dainty figured organdie over white silk, and she wore a large white picture hat with numberless white flowers. One of the most striking gowns was that worn by Miss Florence Greenbaum. It was of white organdie over blue silk and fitted to perfection her tall, supple figure. Long, black gloves reached to the puffed elbow sleeves, and a large black picture hat with black plumes completed the stunning costume. Among other pretty gowns I noticed was one worn by Mrs. Dr. Arnold. A white organdie over yellow silk, and a white picture hat. Miss Grace Hecht looked extremely pretty in a pale blue silk with white lace insertions. Miss Olga Triest wore white and black silk with large white fichu, and was much admired, as was also Mrs. Hilda Castles' gown of white organdie trimmed with butter lace, and large white hat with black plumes.

As might have been expected the presents were gorgeous. Such silver I have never seen. An enormous box came from the groom's family and another from the Fireman's Fund, as did also a handsome grandfather's clock.

Louis Sloss' present to his neice was a baby grand piano. From her father the bride received a check in several ciphers.

An interesting engagement to be noted is that of Miss Beatrice Bachman and Sam L. Dinkelspeil. He is a son of Mr. and Mrs. L. Dinkelspeil, and the prospective bride, who is a great favorite in the younger set, is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Simon Bachman. The engagement is the first of importance in Jewish circles this summer.

Oakland is again asserting its right to make music, and it looks as though some good concerts would be the result. A new choral society is being formed under the direction of Mr. Ben Clark, the leader of the choir at the First Presbyterian church. Mrs. F. S. Stratton, the musical sponsor of the Friday Morning Club, has taken a great interest in this new organization, and the first program is to have several Handel numbers as well as others less ambitious. Choral clubs have been started several times before this in Oakland, but have never progressed farther than a first concert. Perhaps a poor programme has had as much to do with these failures as anything, for there never was any lack of people ready and willing to go. That musical organizations across the bay can succeed is shown by the Friday Morning Club, and also by the Orpheus, a choral club of male voices that has made itself well known and liked.

One of the prettiest of the recent entertainments was given in the beautiful old Merritt place, on Jackson street, where Snell's Seminary has taken up its quarters. The party was given by Miss Mariedna Snell, a niece of the principal's, in honor of Miss Plummer of Portland. The evening was devoted to music, dancing, and—thanks to the moonlight—strolling about the gardens. Among the guests were Miss Hush, Miss Selby, Miss Joliffe, Miss Moffett, Mr. Ralston, Mr. Sessions, Henry Inman, Will English and many others.

On Tuesday evening a whist party was given by Dr. and Mrs. John A. D. Hutton of Berkeley, to celebrate the tenth anniversary of their wedding.

A number of people are away for their yearly outing. Miss Sophia Newlands is spending the summer at Riverton, Lake Tahoe. Mrs. F. S. Stratton is at Blithdale, Mrs. J. C. Tucker at Castle Crags and Mr. Brayton at Napa Soda.

During the past week a dinner party was given at the Vendome, by Mrs. W. T. Adel, in honor of her daughter's birthday. There was also a very pretty wedding at the hotel, that of Miss Kitty A. Utschig of San Francisco to Mr. Gustave Hueter. Miss Lizzie Utschig acted as bridesmaid, and after an elaborate breakfast, Mr. and Mrs. Hueter left for Santa Cruz and Monterey. Among those who have registered at the Vendome during the past week are R. R. Grayson of San Francisco, accompanied by his sister, Mrs. W. C. Ralston, Mrs. C. E. Hayes of Oakland and M. Tranchant of Paris; R. Duirola and party, Mrs. Victor Mathen and party, Dr. Louis Lazeo and party and A. Davis of Guatemala; Mrs. C. T. Mills of Mills College, accompanied by Miss Nutting, Mrs. M. D. Taaffe, Master Randall Taaffe and Miss Stinson, Governor Budd, Mrs. J. T. Love and Miss Mabel Love.

STARTING AFTER THE HARES AT SAN RAFAEL

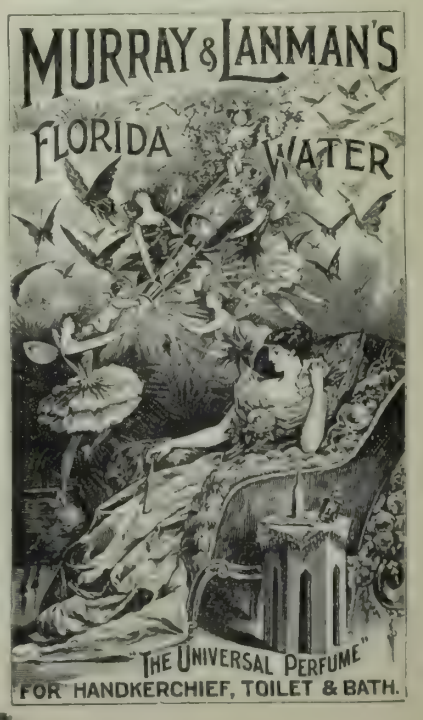
PHOTO BY THORS

The Original Swain's Bakery, 213 Sutter St., stands without a rival and has stood the test for years. The most delicious meals are served by gentlemanly attendants, and the management takes pride in having everything orderly. It is just the place for business men and ladies out shopping to lunch.

For Restoring Lost Vitality, Curing Nervousness, and for Purifying and Enriching the Blood Vintine stands without a peer. Not a patent medicine. Sold by Brooks' Homeopathic Pharmacy, 119 Powell st. Order from your druggist

Dr. C. W. Decker, Dentist, 806 Market Street

CENTEMERI KID GLOVES.
Removed to 128 Post street.



THE THEATERS

Viola Allen in "Bohemia" — The Frawleys in New Plays.

This Paris! Tut, tut, my dear compatriot, we Americans know our own country when we see it; this "Bohemia" of yours is in Petaluma, Milpitas or Hoboken. You put your hand to the plough and then turn back. That's what the matter, Mr. Fitch. The native hue of resolution was sicklied in with the pale cast of thought. I've no doubt, not the slightest, that you started out intending to be very bold, bad and "Frenchy." There are signs of that a-plenty. So you selected Murger's "Vie de Boheme" for your text,—you shut your eyes, plunged in boldly, and then—you faltered, you considered the situation (too late, alas, too late) and evidently ended by rewriting your play in a Y. M. C. A. building, in order to get an atmosphere which would palliate your original sins.

The result is an incongruous jumble, a salad of rose-leaves and onions—which nevertheless is very palatable—a play which is undoubtedly amusing, and is full of bright dialogue, but lacks body.

It reminds one of a charmingly chiffoned, ruffled and jeweled ball dress with no one to show it off. This effect is perhaps largely due to the players, who, with one or two exceptions are not fitted for their roles. Viola Allen, a good but not magnetic actress, who is capable of portraying the gentlewoman or the society girl, is totally at sea in "Bohemia." She gives you no idea of Mimi's status, circumstances or occupation. One is quite surprised to see her unchaperoned and making flowers. Mimi, as she presents her, has no individuality. She is a flavorless, colorless, unidentified bag of something, with no stamp on it, except—in big letters—"Probably Pure." Yet at times her work had its good points. I doubt if Miss Allen could act any part without giving it a certain sincerity and womanliness. She is never offensive; her faults are negative; she seldom overacts, and somehow or other she wins your respect.

Ida Conquest, the slim, the coquettish, looked like a "Musette" (an American Musette), but she acted like a spoiled, frivolous, heartless society person. Perhaps there is not so much difference between a grissette and a girl of that description as I think, but I feel, in spite of this reflection, that Fitch has not done his duty to Murger's "Musette," and that Ida Conquest has simply carried the neglect a little further. However, she was quite charming in an irresponsible, pouting fashion, and she looked very fetching in her gay gown, and she climbed the stone wall daintily, airily, captivatingly. Annie Irish was, as usual, hard and mechanical; her voice artificial and stagey, her methods obvious. For an instance, her exaggerated panting as she sat by Rudolph in the third act and listened to his praises of Mimi; such violent commotions do not begin and end so suddenly in the human, or even in a volcano. How much more acutely he could have been made to feel the pang she felt had it been shown by the tense stillness of repressed feeling instead of this wild upheaving of her beautiful bosom and her gorgeous gown.

The best work done was undoubtedly that of May Robson and J. E. Dodson, who were both capital. I have seldom seen a more horrible old woman on or off the stage than May Robson's Mme. Benoit, and it was all done so quietly. She took too long, however, to make out her receipt, and Ida Conquest too long to put on her frills.

What a dreary play "Moths" would be without Lady Dolly, and what a flight of imagination to give her such a daughter as Vera—about as natural as to hatch a dove from a vulture's egg. But from Ouida one expects neither sanity nor probability, only wit.

With the single exception of Miss McAllister I cannot see that the Frawleys have added in any way to their reputation by their production of "Moths," while George Leslie has obliterated the memory of every laugh he ever gave in his "Duke of Mull." One gets desperately tired of saying the same thing over and over again, but I must once more express my regret at Blanche Bates' jerkiness. She would have made a really charming Fuschia Leach if she had only overcome her intolerably spasmodic manner of speaking and her nervous motions. She sang her little song very pleasantly, with a good deal of discrimination and tact, and she looked very delightful as she sat elbows on table and eyes on her Duke's, but the next moment she was off again, twisting, fidgeting, setting one's nerves on edge. Repose should be her motto. She should think of it, dream of it, strive for it.

Margaret Craven was tolerable as Vera, though not so winning as I have seen her. She made several crass errors similar to the one in the first act, when she said, "This is the world," accenting the "is"—instead of this—as if someone had contradicted her. Power had a better opportunity than usual and availed himself of it. Worthing made the most of Correze. Lansing Rowan as Jeanne displayed a long shapely throat and a remarkably well-poised figure, but she is still far from at ease on the boards, and rather conscious.

Adams' Tutti-Frutti Chewing Gum for Indigestion

MRS. THORNDYKE-BOUCICAULT

We find ourselves in strange company at the Columbia this week. In "The Highest Bidder" we are introduced to a double-barreled widow, who has sued two men for breach of promise and yearns for another to pluck; we see men kicking one another without serious results and "Cheviot" says something in the auction scene which sounds like "I can't do no more." I don't remember any other Cheviot using two negatives, and perhaps Clarke's doesn't, but it sounds that way. Of course Worthing will be accused of imitating Southern in this play, but, after all, does he? It seems to me he only imitates himself—I don't believe he thinks enough of anyone else to pay them the compliment—and succeeds in being very amusing.

The love-making between Blanche Bates and him is rather clumsy—they should work harder during rehearsals, and labor less in public.

It was amusing and interesting to watch Charles Wingate's efforts to lift his little role from obscurity. He acted vigorously, insistently and all the time. Never before have I seen such enthusiasm. He kissed the little Ross eagerly, he hopped upon his stool joyously, he frowned prodigally and smiled lavishly. In fact, he played with all the stops out and the hard pedal down, looked rosy, happy, young, and if nobody else liked it I—and he—did.

PEG WOFFINGTON.

The Maison Riche serves an elegant dinner at popular prices.

DRAMATIC NOTES

Denman Thompson is to appear for a limited number of times in "The Old Homestead" during the coming season.

The last two performances of "The Merchant of Venice" will be given at the California Theatre tonight and Sunday.

Della Fox is securing the services of some very clever people for her next season in "The Little Trooper" and "Fleur de Lis."

Henry Arthur Jones, who is the author of "The Masqueraders," also wrote "Saints and Sinners," "Judah," "The Dancing Girl," "The Case of Rebellious Susan," and others of equal success.

Among the three graduates of the Columbia Theatre School of Dramatic Art, Miss Edna Elsemere goes out next season with Pete Daily; Lilian Dane with Koster & Bial, and Georgia Stewart with Corinne.

Among the stars who are coming to the Baldwin during the coming season and who will be seen here in that capacity for the first time are Kathryn Kidder, Della Fox, Otis Skinner, Robert Hilliard, Beerbohm Tree, John Hare, etc.

Next week at the Baldwin, "Bohemia" will give place to Pinero's "Benefit of the Doubt," a play of a more serious character, treating of social decadence and fin de siecle follies. The week following, Henry Arthur Jones' drama, "The Masqueraders" will be given.

Chauncey Olcott will open his season of Irish drama at the California Theatre next Monday night, August 3rd, with the play "Mavourneen." It is some years since Mr. Olcott has appeared before an audience in this city, and this is his first appearance here as a star. "The Irish Artist" will follow "Mavourneen."

At the Orpheum next week, the Nelson sisters, who are described as among the most competent female athletes, will do a variety of new and difficult acrobatic feats. Among the musical attractions are Drummond Sthaley and Belle Birbeck, the Black Patti, and Biondi. Lydia Yeaman's Titus has been a great success this week, even against the competition of the eminent cat-trainer and the clever Italian mimic.

Monday evening next, the Columbia Theatre inaugurates a new season. Mr. Wilton Lackaye, the well-known character actor, makes his first appearance as Silas K. Woolcott in "A Gold Mine," made famous by Nat Goodwin. Miss Louis Thorndyke Boucicault, the handsome and accomplished comedienne, has the role of the Honorable Mrs. Meredith. She has a delightful voice and laugh, a fine stage presence. "A Gold Mine" has an excellent plot, and its least virtue is by no means the national character of its incidents.

Next Monday, Tuesday, Thursday, Friday and Sunday evenings we are to have at the Tivoli Opera House renditions of Leoncavallo's tragic opera, "Pagliacci." The cast will include Miss Nina Bertini Humphreys, Sig. Michelena, Sig. Maurice De Vries, John J. Raffael and Martin Pache. On Wednesday and Saturday evenings Gounod's "Faust" will be rendered, with Mme. Natali as Marguerite, and the new contralto, Miss Bernice Holmes, as Seibel. The sixth week will be devoted to four performances of Meyerbeer's "Hugenots," alternated with Balfe's "Bohemian Girl."

Jinks—"To-day I pleased a pretty woman by telling her that a certain red-faced, snub-nosed, bald-headed mortal looked like her."
Winks—"Get out!"
Jinks—"The red-faced, snub-nosed mortal was her first baby."
—Tit-Bits.

First Boy—"Your father must be an awful mean man. Him a shoemaker, and makin' you wear them old boots!"
Second Boy—"He's nothin' to what your father is. Him a dentist, and your baby only got one tooth!"

"Scotch and Soda" is the fashionable drink in the east at present, and is fast becoming the fad out here. With a good quality of whisky, such as the "White Horse Cellar" Scotch Whisky, it makes one of the most pleasant and cooling drinks we have tried, and is sure to make a hit.

"Thank you, but I cannot dine with you; I must go home to my queen."

Does not your wife seem more charming when the steak is tender and the biscuits light, and the tea what tea can only be?

Charming tea heightens the charm of her who pours it. Schilling's Best is charming tea, and the rarest flavor of all is Ideal Blend.

$1.25 for 200 cups—a pound.

RENTS BALDWIN & HAMMOND

COLLECTED AND INSURED

10 Montgomery St.

CRECIENTE
IMPORTED SEA SALT FOR BATHING
Healthful and Invigorating!
SOLD BY DRUGGISTS AND GROCERS

GRAY HAIR RESTORED
to its natural color by LEE'S HAIR MEDICANT, no dye harmless, pleasant odor, $1.00 a bottle
LEE'S HAIR TONIC removes dandruff, stops hair from falling out and promotes growth $1.00 a bottle
LEE MEDICANT CO 108 Fulton st., N Y
Illustrated Treatise on Hair on application FREE

Use only Richardson & Robbins' Devlled Meats for picnics

FICTION IN REVIEW

"Love Is a Spirit," "Checkers," "Yekl, a Tale of the New York Ghetto.

In "Love Is a Spirit" (Harper's), Julian Hawthorne is more mystical and mesmeric and spooky than ever. It is a rhapsody of love, love that can live and soar free from the human body, and yet revels in its earthly gratification, love that will go on forever after death if it is not defiled in life, love that can bring the dead back to earth and the living up to heaven. It is a tropical, heavily-scented story, told with deep, quick breaths and half closed eyelids.

" 'Will you have some tea?' 'No, thanks. Our talk shan't be strangled with beverages.'

Their talk! What had they been saying to each other? Words are wheels, on which you roll along and dream other things. But that deep voice of his vibrated in her ears, and reached a secret place low in her bosom, whence she took her breath. It said things interior to words, which she loved to hear.

'Shall we walk in the rose-garden, then? And you can smoke a cigar.'

'By Jove, yes!—the rose-garden. I never yet had roses enough.'

'Come with me, and you shall have them.' "

She is an innocent young girl, living in dreams, he a world-worn man with a wife in the background. They fall in love, and he goes through bitter struggles with his conscience.

Conscience is victorious, and he is about to go back to his wife, when the news comes of her death. Then he starts to go to the girl and confess all, but she meets him on the way, knowing and forgiving everything and promising that they shall enjoy eternity together. They spend a weird afternoon riding side by side, before he discovers that she is only the spirit of his beloved, the real Yolande having been drowned the day before. We leave him kneeling beside her dead body. Her last words to him before she disappears dwell on that spirituality of love that is the theme of the book:

"Love is stronger than earth—he is a spirit! Tell me, beloved, is it not me and not my body that you love? Yes, I know it, for have you not loved me to-day? And if you saw me not through that veil, but as I am, and heard me say I love you, and saw me alive in a world more beautiful than that valley where first we met, and knew I was waiting for you in this glorious world in a house built for us by our love, and yet that I should be always near you, both when the eyes of your own spirit were open and when they were closed, nearer than on earth I could ever have come, and safe from all perils of my own ignorance or your noble misgivings, so that our union, even while you stayed here, would grow each hour more entire, and at last, when time had dissolved the final barrier, perfect, like the marriage of fire with light—if God granted to us to know all this as of our own knowledge, would you not be content? * * * Beloved, would you grieve to lose a shadow, gaining this reality? * * * Be happy, as I am, that I am no longer in the distance somewhere outside you, far or near, but in your heart of hearts—in the heaven that our two immortal hearts have made!"

"Checkers" (H. S. Stone & Co.) is nominally a character study of a sporty, vagabondish, engaging young "tout" of the race tracks. In reality it is a compendium of a certain class of slang, with this Chicago Chimmie Fadden as a background. Checkers is an inveterate gambler and player of the races, though during his short married life he settles down into the most staid and domestic of farmers. Then his wife dies and his money is lost, and things go very badly with him. At last his farm is restored to him, and he is helped to his feet again, though whether he stays there or not is a matter of doubt. Mr. Henry M. Blossom, Jr., himself was evidently sceptical, for he ended the book and came away just then. Here is a specimen of Checkers' style of conversation, apropos of girls:

"I never had much time for them myself, but my friend 'Push' Miller had them coming his way in carriages. * * * He used to play a system on them. I think he caled it the Fabian system, after some old joker in the war, who used to win his battles by running away. You see, the other guys would come chasing after this joker, and when he got them where he wanted, he'd go out and nail them—easy thing.

"Well, this Fabian system was a dead sure winner for Push, and if I were you I'd try it. The next time you get together, 'jolly up' Sadie. Don't push it too strong; but just enough as that Pert will notice it—she'll get jealous. 'Jolly' Sadie harder, but be polite to Pert, and pretty soon you'll have her guessing. The chances are that before long she'll make a play at you—give her the frozen face."

The dialect is often bright and original, but is marred by an irritating use of quotation marks. They give the expressions they surround an apologetic look, which does not at all suit Checkers' nonchalant manner of saying what he pleases. His character and mode of life are in themselves explanations of his phrases, which are in no more need of special enclosures than Dr. Johnson's Latinisms or Mr. Meredith's verbal skyrockets.

This same annoying trick of labeling the dialect is prominent in "Yekl, a Tale of the New York Ghetto," by A. Cahan (D. Appleton & Co.). Here all the English words and expressions that have crept into the Yiddish of the New York Jews are italicized, giving the conversation an air of strained and unnatural emphasis. The study of such expressions would be interesting by itself, but in a novel it is as tiresome as a multitude of foot-notes. This may seem a small detail, but so are boots and gloves and hats in comparison to the magnitude of a personality, and yet even these count in a first impression. The book as a whole is an interesting, if not very forceful, picture of a low class of Jews whom New York has robbed of their simplicity and primitive reverence, leaving them with a cheap smartness, an absence of all high motive, and vulgarity unlimited. Yekl himself is well drawn, but no book of that class could rouse a very loud echo while Zangwill's "Children of the Ghetto" is still ringing in our ears.

Sir Walter Besant's new novel, "The Master Craftsman (Frederick A. Stokes Co.), deals with one of the author's favorite situations—the voluntary return of a young aristocrat to the people. Sir George Burnikel loses his money, and, instead of accepting a well-paid sinecure, goes back to the trade of his ancestors and becomes a boat-builder. When wealth comes to him again he hands it over to his cousin, who, at the other end of the social see-saw, has risen from a craftsman to a powerful M. P. Not content with exchanging positions, the two men exchange fiancees as well, each settling down with the one nature had intended for him all along.

In "The Finding of Lot's Wife" (Frederick A. Stokes Co.), Alfred Clark has put enough material for a dozen ordinary novels, but style and construction are unfortunately deficient. The scene is laid in the mountains south-east of the Dead Sea, and we have battle, murder and sudden death in quick succession, to say nothing of insanity and miracles. No conceivable horrors, however, can redeem puppet-like characters and pages of lifeless platitude. J. W. T.

MOORE'S POISON OAK REMEDY
Cures Poison Oak and all Skin Diseases. Sold by all druggists

POETIC RYTHMS IN PROSE

In the August Atlantic Monthly there is an article by Edward E. Hale, Jr., on "Poetic Rhythms in Prose," in which, after feeling his way for some time, the author finally decides that the introduction of metrical passages into prose is apt to be annoying. "So much for metrical snatches in prose; where they are only dimly apprehended they may not trouble, but as soon as we appreciate them they offend. They do not make good prose rhythm; they are, as has always been said, faults, blemishes in good prose." Mr. Hale cites a number of passages of which this is undoubtedly true, as they are not poetical in substance, and the fact that they are metrical in form seems more or less an accident; but one cannot help wishing that he had made a study of Blackmore's "Lorna Doone" before he finally gave his decision.

Passage after passage of that exquisite story is written in blank verse, solemn, spirited, or musical, as the sense requires, and introduced with such art that it seems utterly unconscious and unpremeditated. We glide out of it as easily as we were led into it, without break or jar or straining to keep the rhythm, so easily, indeed, that one may read some distance without discovering that one's sense of pleasure is due to anything more than beautiful words and spirited style.

"But when I came unto the spot
Where the Doones had killed my father,"—

What a strange little thrill of awe those ominous spondees give to half a dozen simple words. A bell seems to toll through them. Contrast that with the galloping dactyls of John's first ride on the famous mare. I have put the passage into verse form, but not a word is changed:

But there came a shrill whistle from up the home hill, where the people had hurried to watch us;
And the mare stopped as if with a bullet;
Then set off for home with the speed of a swallow, and going as smoothly and silently.
I never had dreamed of such delicate motion, fluent and graceful and ambient,
Soft as the breeze flitting over the flowers,
but swift as the summer lightning.
I sat up again, but my strength was all spent, and no time left to recover it;
And at last, as she rose at our gate like a bird, I tumbled off into the mixen.

The author is wise enough to keep to prose in trivial passages or conversations, using metre chiefly when there is an emotion to be expressed. For that reason there is much less rhythm in the latter half of the book, which deals more with people and events than sentiment. When the author's great love of nature and trees and water gets into words, they inevitably shape themselves into poems.

And if one stood beneath an elm, with any heart to look at it,
Lo! all the ground was strewn with flakes
(too small to know their meaning),
And all the sprays above were rasped and trembling with a redness.
And so I stopped beneath the tree and carved "L. D." upon it,
And wondered at the buds of thought that seemed to swell inside me.

Perhaps Mr. Hale is right in his general principle that definite rhythm is out of place in prose, for not everyone can succeed as the author of "Lorna Doone" has, and a poor attempt is more displeasing than the boldest prose ever written. Still, such a famous exception as Blackmore's must undermine a general rule, and though we may admit "it is better not," we still say "it can be done." Let me add just one more example, as restful and drowsy as a cradle song:

But all the middle of this valley was a place to rest in.
To sit and think that troubles were not, if we would not make them.
To know the sea outside the hills, but never to behold it;
Only by the sound of waves to pity sailors laboring.

LITERARY COMMENT

The feature of the August Lark is a two-page cartoon by Porter Garnett, illustrating in an amusingly literal manner, Touchstone's verbal "school of fence" as described in the third act of "As You Like It." Mr. Garnett has done some very ingenious bits of versification for the Lark, and among his tours de force is a Glose in praise of Omar Khayyam, an old Provencal form, seldom attempted in English. Mr. Garnett is also an ultra purist and has contributed several clever skits to the Lark, one in the last number containing 96 grammatical and rhetorical blunders, skillfully concealed from the uninitiated.

Newton Tharp is the latest addition to the ranks of "Les Jeunes" (who seem to inhabit an Eveless Eden); and the very decadent parody called "The Garden of Forgetfulness" could only have been done by Bruce Porter. The subtlety of this satire finds a foil in the slang paraphrase of "Hamlet," a page as nearly vulgar as the Lark has ever dared to insert, barely saved, as always, by eccentric typography.

The only poem in No. 16, is a little lyric, cast in an Elizabethan mould, bearing the quaint Herrick-like caption, "On Helen's Foolishness Not to be Cast Down by Misfortune." The gay Vivette is evidently away on a vacation, and the usual chapter from her biography is taken by the Fable of Dream-Butter. The effects of a new beverage is depicted by Gelett Burgess, in an illustration to the lines:

Many People seem to Think
Plaster o' Paris good to Drink;
Though conducive unto Quiet,
I prefer another Diet.

* * *

The August St. Nicholas publishes some poems written by Margaret Frances Mauro, a child not yet 14, which show remarkable promise. Though childish in conception, they have a rhythm and swing that many mature poems lack, and show vivid imagination and keen love of beauty. She has humor, too, as the last few lines of "Bonnie Lassie" show:

"I'm dreamin' o' my Jamie,
Who said he would be true,
He lo'ed me vera dearly
Before he met wi' you."

Perhaps "The Monster 'Practising' " would be a better example, however, for this may have been written in all seriousness. A little girl of 13 may be too young to know how tragically true to life, and therefore how amusing, it is. "The Lily" and "The Shadow Song" are perhaps the most original. It would be interesting to watch the development of Margaret Mauro's career, and also to notice what effect this early publication has upon her. Heaven grant her the strength to work, and keep her little head unswelled!

Among the many great Financial Corporations on the Pacific Coast, none rank higher than the

FIREMAN'S FUND INSURANCE CO.

Its Agents are found throughout America, and its Record for Prompt and Equitable Settlement of All Honest Losses is Firmly Established

D. J. STAPLES, President — WM. J. DUTTON, Vice-President — B. FAYMONVILLE, 2d V.-Pres., Sec'y
J. B. LEVISON, Marine Sec'y — LOUIS WEINMANN, Asst. Sec'y — STEPHEN D. IVES, General Agent

QUEEN LILY SOAP

BEST ON EARTH
FOR LAUNDRY USE

Patronize Home Industry

Hartwell, Mitchell & Willis
SUCCESSORS TO DODGE BROS.
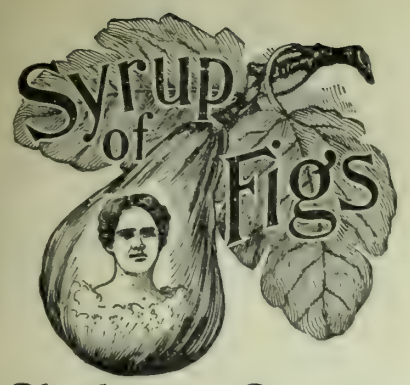
225 Post Street, near Stockton
FINE STATIONERY AND ENGRAVING
Books of All Kinds . . .
Books on Financial Questions
At OUR BOOK STORE
Formerly Beach's. 107 Montgomery St.
Visitors to Our City Specially Welcome

Wedding Invitations are properly engraved and in correct form, at ROBERTSON'S

WEDDING
Invitations, Announcements, Cards, etc., Engraved and Printed. Correct style, low rates. 20 samples and directions for correct form, modern weddings, mailed postpaid for 10 cents in stamps. BRUNT, FINE PRINTING, 535 Clay St., San Francisco, Cal.

Fall Style Neckwear and Hosiery at J. W. Carmany's, 25 Kearny Street.



Gladness Comes

With a better understanding of the transient nature of the many physical ills which vanish before proper efforts—gentle efforts—pleasant efforts—rightly directed. There is comfort in the knowledge that so many forms of sickness are not due to any actual disease, but simply to a constipated condition of the system, which the pleasant family laxative, Syrup of Figs, promptly removes. That is why it is the only remedy with millions of families, and is everywhere esteemed so highly by all who value good health. Its beneficial effects are due to the fact, that it is the one remedy which promotes internal cleanliness, without debilitating the organs on which it acts. It is therefore all important, in order to get its beneficial effects, to note when you purchase, that you have the genuine article, which is manufactured by the California Fig Syrup Co. only, and sold by all reputable druggists.

If in the enjoyment of good health, and the system is regular, then laxatives or other remedies are not needed. If afflicted with any actual disease, one may be commended to the most skillful physicians, but if in need of a laxative, then one should have the best, and with the well-informed everywhere, Syrup of Figs stands highest and is most largely used and gives most general satisfaction.

FOR GRIPPE
IT'S A DANDY

VINA BRANDY

AND

It's Pure! That's Sure!

VINA DISTILLERY CO.
819 Market St., S. F.

CHARLES S. WHEELER ERNST H. LUDWIG

Ernst H. Ludwig & Co.

THE MODEL AMERICAN CATERERS

Supply Wedding Breakfasts, Luncheons, Dinners, Matinee Teas and Receptions on shortest notice. Also Terrapin Entrees Luncheons and Dinners. Ice Cream, Cake, &c.

Telephone 2388 1206 SUTTER STREET

We Have Appointed

Coburn, Tevis & Co.

OUR AGENTS FOR

CHOCOLATE
MENIER

MENIER & CO.

THE BICYCLE PARADE

Notes and Comments on the Sacramento Tournament.

"The lantern parade was a failure!" That is the verdict of all the people who saw it after it left Twelfth and Folsom streets. "It is the grandest thing we ever saw," said the people who saw it when it first started.

The daily papers have gone into the description of the affair quite fully, and at this time it only remains to add some definiteness to their reports of it. As to the number of wheelmen in line, I made a careful count of the division made up of the California Cycling Club and their friends after it had formed and some ten minutes before the procession started, and found there were about one hundred and forty members of the club and about eight hundred unattached friends. A careful estimate made by multiplying this number by a figure obtained by dividing the space in Shotwell street occupied by the whole body by the space occupied by this division, gave as a result at least six thousand wheels ten minutes before the parade moved. This number was increased considerably afterward. Shotwell street, from 26th to 18th was jammed with wheels and riders, and furnished the prettiest sight of the evening just before the body started.

For a time all went well and it was easy to ride along, but gradually the people crowded in till the lane that was left open hardly permitted a single rider to pass at a time. By the time we reached Fourteenth street, I think at least half the riders had quit in disgust. Here a running fight with the toughs commenced, and those of us who had thoughtfully provided ourselves with wrenches and hardwood clubs found good use for them.

At Eighth and Folsom the whole affair developed into a regular riot and the police were utterly powerless. This was practically the last of the procession and the thousands and thousands of people who went down town that night to see a spectacle which should have been well worth the trouble found merely a scattering wheelman here and there in the mob.

It was really too bad, for a great deal of pains had been taken to make this demonstration a success, and much money and effort had been expended. However, although the general public went away with the idea that the force of the wheelmen in San Francisco amounts to little, those who were managing the parade were well satisfied. It showed that six thousand wheelmen will respond to a call that involves a mighty disagreeable job. It showed the participants in the parade—the wheelmen themselves—the necessity of exerting their strength to the end that the police department may be in fuller sympathy with them; that their requests to the street transportation companies may have greater weight; in short, as a man prominent in bicycle affairs said late that night, "We must capture the works next election."

The recent tournament of cycle racing in Sacramento was a success financially and otherwise. The interest taken in the sport there seems greater than in San Francisco, and on one occasion an audience of some two thousand people was present to witness some mere preparatory training. The track is stated by the riders to be faster than the San Francisco Pavilion track, but it is so similar to it that it is difficult to see where the difference comes in.

It is to be noted that Mr. Oscar Olsen here took occasion to add to his present unsavory reputation for careless riding. You will remember that after his shameful performance at the San Jose meet, I made the suggestion to the Racing Board that in justice to the riders who were forced to compete with him, Mr. Olsen should be given an opportunity to practice riding the bicycle some other where than in track races. I sincerely trust that his conduct at Sacramento has convinced the Board of the necessity of this.

Mr. Allan Jones, who caused one of the worst spills of the meet, has given good cause for careful watching. Nothing very definite need yet be said, perhaps, but if he continues to be unfortunate in this way, he will surely be placed by the cycling public in the same catagory with Olsen and Campbell.

The various clubs are already making their plans for amusement during the coming winter. The season for club runs will be over in another month or so, and then for some three or four months outdoor cycling becomes a matter of individual risk. Some substitute must be found to keep club life alive during that period, for otherwise club members will find themselves comparative strangers to each other when they meet again for the first run of the spring.

Whist annexes and chess annexes seem to be most popular means to be adopted for promoting intra and inter-club relationships during the winter season, and many of the cycling organizations of the city will give card parties in the future which will serve to bring about inter-club contests that will keep the friendly rivalry so necessary to healthy club feeling. By this means many acquaintanceships ripen into real friendships, and the usefulness of the organizations is enhanced. C. MICHENER.

Chew Adams' Pepsin Tutti-Frutti. It is sovereign for indigestion and agreeable to the taste

RIPPLES

He Never Erred.

"Excuse me," remarked the little man to the paying teller at the bank, "but I believe you remember me?"

"Yes," replied the teller, "I remember you. Your name is Smith—John Smith. I cashed a twenty-five hundred dollar check for you this morning."

"Yes, sir, that's right; and I'm glad to see that you remember me, as you made a slight error this morning, and—"

"We never make errors in this bank, sir."

"But, sir; it isn't right."

"I can't help whether it's right or wrong. You should have counted your money before you left the desk."

"I did count it, sir, and it seemed all right; but after I reached my hotel I counted it again, and found that you had made a mistake."

"I have told you, sir, that we never make mistakes here."

"But, sir—"

"Don't but me; I know my business. The money was all right when you counted it here, and you have either lost some of it or else had your pocket picked. You will have to stand to one side, as there are others who must be attended to."

"I would like to convince you that—"

"You can't convince me of anything, and you will oblige me by leaving the premises."

"Had I not better leave my card so you may send for me in case you find that you have made a mistake?"

"No, sir; I don't want your card."

"Very well," replied the little man, meekly, and he slowly took his departure.

The next morning, however, and for a week following the following advertisement appeared in all the principal daily papers of the city:

If Mr. John Smith, who cashed a check for twenty-five hundred dollars at the first National Sandbank on the morning of the 6th inst., will call at the bank as early as convenient he will greatly oblige the paying teller.

The paying teller had inadvertently over-paid Mr. Smith the sum of two-hundred and fifty dollars.

How He Knew.

Bloomer—Good morning, Mr. Blossom.

Blossom (handing him a twenty)—Here you are.

Bloomer (surprised)—Why, how did you know I was going to ask for a twenty?

Blossom—By the way you addressed me.

Bloomer—Well, I'll fool you the next time.

Bloomer (the next time)—Hello, Blossom!

Blossom (handing him a twenty)—Take it.

Bloomer (greatly surprised)—You certainly must be a mind reader!

Blossom—No; I don't claim to be.

Bloomer—Well, then, how did you know I was going to ask for a twenty?

Blossom—By the way you addressed me.

Bloomer—That's what you said the last time, and I addressed you entirely different.

Blossom—That may be; but I've noticed you address me only when you want a twenty.

No Wonder.

"Yes," remarked Mrs. Blossom to a sympathetic neighbor, "poor Joe has had a bad attack of nervous prostration."

"Why, I hardly understand how he could be affected that way merely from a sprained ankle."

"Well, you see, when they picked him up on the street, some bright person sent for the ambulance, and after they got poor Joe into it and started for home, the continual clanging of the gong on the ambulance completely upset him. I'm afraid it will be many months before poor Joe will be able to be out again."

Too Much of a Task.

"I hear your barber dropped dead while shaving you this morning."

"Yes; I bet him twenty dollars that he couldn't shave me without talking, and he gave up the ghost before he had my face lathered."

Probably Deserved It.

"I see that young Jones made his debut as an actor the other evening. Did you attend the performance?"

"No, but I attended his funeral yesterday."

Meant Well.

Bloomer (as he drains his whisky glass)—By Jove, I believe there was a fly in that whisky!

Barkeeper—I'm very sorry, sir, but let me give you another.

Correct.

Teacher (to new scholar)—What is your name?

New Scholar—Brown.

Teacher—Do you spell it with an "e?"

New Scholar—No, mam; with a "b."

Starved to Death

in midst of plenty. Unfortunate, yet we hear of it. The Gail Borden Eagle Brand Condensed Milk is undoubtedly the safest and best infant food. "Infant Health" is a valuable pamphlet for mothers. Send your address to the New York Condensed Milk Company, New York.

Kelly's Corn Cure never fails. 25 cents 102 Eddy Street

J. F. Cutter

EXTRA

Old Bourbon

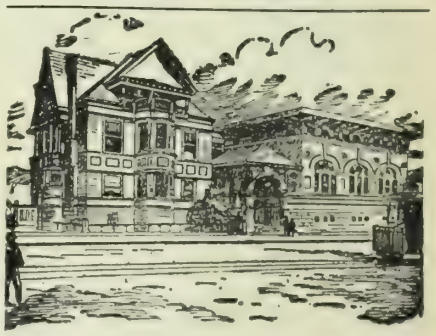
has been a staple family and medicinal whiskey for a quarter-century

E. MARTIN
—AND—
CO.
411 MARKET ST.
SAN FRANCISCO

Good Appetite

Is restored and the disordered Stomach and Liver invigorated by taking a small wineglassful, before meals, of the celebrated . . . . . .

Peruvian Bitters



TRINITY SCHOOL
FOUNDED 1826
3300 Washington Street, San Francisco
BOARDING AND DAY SCHOOL
FOR YOUNG MEN AND BOYS
Prepares for University and College. A Faculty of eleven Professors and Teachers. Boarders limited to forty. An Accredited School with the University of California and the Leland Stanford Jr. University
Term Opens Aug. 3d
REV. DR. E. B. SPALDING, Rector

Peralta Hall
A Boarding School for Boys
Under the direction of the most competent masters. Situated at Berkeley, one of the most healthful spots in California. Sheltered from fogs and convenient to the city. Thoroughly accredited into University of California and Stanford. Send for catalogue and other particulars to
J. J. MORAN, Manager
BERKELEY CALIFORNIA

MISS HAMLIN'S SCHOOL
AND
VAN NESS SEMINARY
1849 Jackson Street
San Francisco, Cal.
BOARDING AND DAY SCHOOL FOR GIRLS, under the joint direction of Miss Sarah D. Hamlin and Mrs. Edna Snell Poulson.
The fall term will open Wednesday, August 5, 1896.
It is intended to bring the College Preparatory Course into the Accredited System of the University of California. The study of Natural Sciences will be a special feature of the school work.

Ziska Institute : 1606 Van Ness Ave.
School for Girls. English, French, German.
Thirtieth year begins August 3d.
MME. B. ZISKA, A.M., Principal.

JOHN HARADEN PRATT
TEACHER OF PIANO
SONGS ARRANGED
3021 Buchanan Street
Orders left with Sherman, Clay & Co.

BAY STATE OYSTER HOUSE AND GRILL ROOM
15 Stockton Street
Oysters served in all styles. Orders for Theatre Parties given special attention M. M. ADLER, Prop.

"Standard" Time

The time to wear "Standard Shirts" is ALL the time. A home industry—made here in San Francisco. Ask your dealer . . . . . .

White Percale Outing

NEUSTADTER BROS., Mfrs.

MENNEN'S BORATED TALCUM

TOILET POWDER

Approved by Highest Medical Authorities as a Perfect Sanitary Toilet Preparation

For infants and adults. Delightful after shaving.

Positively relieves Prickley Heat, Nettle Rash, Chafed Skin, Sunburn, etc. Removes Blotches, Pimples; makes the skin smooth and healthy.

Take No Sub-titutes. Sold by druggists or mailed for 25 cts. SAMPLE MAILED (Name this paper) FREE

GERHARD MENNEN CO., Newark, N. J.

ELECTRIC..

Supplies
Construction
Repairs

CALIFORNIA ELECTRICAL WORKS

....35 MARKET STREET

COTTON SAIL DUCKS

22-inch, in all numbers. Medium, Soft and Hard

. . ALSO . .

Heavy Naught, Wagon and Draper Ducks

From 30 to 120 inches wide

Monumental and Imperial Ounce Ducks

Manufactured by Mount Vernon Company Baltimore

Murphy, Grant & Co. . . Pacific Coast Sole Agents

Merchant Tailor MARSHAL F. JONES

ROOM 115
PHELAN BUILDING

SAN FRANCISCO, CALIFORNIA

Charles Lyons London Tailor

Business Suits from $15.50
Fine Dress Suits from $19.50

1212-1218 Market Street 302 Kearny Street
906 Market Street, San Francisco

Physician for the Hair . . . .

MRS. E. E. McLEAN has a Canadian Vegetable Tonic for the hair that will make it grow when all else fails. Dandruff removed. Terms moderate. High class references. Office hours, 10 to 12 and 1 to 6.

Rooms 45, 58 and 60
ST. ANN'S BUILDING
SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.

SCOTT & McCORD
HAY AND GRAIN MERCHANTS
OFFICE, 615 SIXTH ST.

IN THE CURRENT

Princess Maud and the Street Arab—Funeral of the Duc de Nemours.

The Princess Maud once went shopping all by herself, strictly incog. As she was walking along the street she was accosted by a little street Arab, who was busily engaged in the absorbing task of earning his living by retailing "fresh spring flowers, penny and tuppence a bunch." The princess stopped by him and while choosing some flowers she was a little startled by the lad saying in an excited and familiar whisper: "It's all right, miss; I knows yer, but I'll keep it dark and won't spilt on yer." The princess smilingly shook her head in denial. "Yes, I do knows yer," (more emphatically); "yes, Princess Mawd; I twigged yer directly." It was this same Princess who when but a little girl gratified her early democratic ambitions by lagging behind her nurse in Hyde park to buy an orange, and sit down upon the grass to suck it 'like other little girls.'"

* * *

The recent funeral of the Duc de Nemours reminded the world that there is still a royal family in France. Their lot is a tragic one, living as exiles in their own country; going here and there unnoticed by their own people, treated as simple citizens, and, as occurred recently at Versailles, seeing the very title "Royal Highness" erased from the burial certificate of one of their number by a subordinate employed in the Mayor's office. Only when some member of their house is carried to the tomb do they, by a strange irony of fate, appear for a moment reinvested with some of their former state. A public demonstration in honor of the dead Duc de Nemours was of course impossible, but there was a general rallying of the Legitimist forces, and everything was done to lend to the event a solemn and even royal character. At least 2000 people gathered to accompany the body to Dreux, the burial place of the house of Orleans, and the state funeral carriages and the royal hearse destined to carry the Kings of France to their last resting place were in readiness at the end of the journey. The princesses, with their ladies in waiting, were placed in the former, the coffin was carried to the latter by the body servants of the Duke, and the long procession began its march. First the carriages, then the hearse drawn by six horses, caparisoned in black, with the arms of France in relief, and led by grooms in mourning livery; behind, three Sisters of Charity and a priest; next the Duke's valet de chambre, followed by some 30 servants of the household. Here a break in the line, marked by a master of ceremonies in special uniform, leading the male members of the royal family, at the head the Duc de Chartres, as proxy for the exiled Duc d'Orleans (the King), and the two sons, the Compe de Eu and the Duc d'Alencon; behind, the sons, grandsons, nephews, grandnephews and cousins, all, of course, in full evening dress, as were likewise the guests of honor, who came next in order. At the end followed a confused mass of men and women of more or less distinction, all looking upon the arduous climb to the royal domain behind Dreux as a triumphant declaration of their political creed. Without, the entire space under the small dome was occupied by the high catafalque, encircled by scores of candles and surmounted by the crown of France veiled in crepe. To those who looked on, it was as though the world had rolled back several centuries, and France had never known a Revolution.

* * *

Women do not take half enough care of their shoes, and the consequence is that they not only look badly, but wear out quickly. The constant friction going on between a woman's skirts and her boots is exceedingly hard on the latter, and it makes no difference whether a dress skirt is bound with coarse mohair braid of the finest silk velvet, the result is the same sooner or later. In order to offset this wear and tear she should have her boots dressed every day, or at least every other day. It makes them wear twice as long. All shoes, slippers or boots should be cleaned on the foot, unless a person has a pair of trees.

Use only Richardson & Robbin's Canned Meats at picnics

When tan shoes get dusty or muddy and become water-stained, the best thing to do, if they are very dirty, is to take a soft rag, some water and soap and wash them thoroughly. Don't let the water soak in. Wring the rag out until it is rather dry, rub on a little soap and wipe the shoes thoroughly. Take another cloth and wipe them as dry as possible and then apply some russet shoe polish lightly and evenly with a sponge. As soon as this dries shine the shoes by quickly drawing a dry cloth over them. Every woman who affects tan footwear should provide herself with a supply of russet shoe polish, though a lemon can be used to take off stains. As for patent leather, it is made by a peculiar process. To begin with, every particle of oil is eliminated from the skin, it is scraped, and a coating of varnish applied. It is scraped again and the same process repeated three or four times. Finally the enamel is applied, just as it is to any other substance, the leather having been subjected to great heat. It is impossible to tell whether the temperature has been exactly right or not, and for that reason no man will guarantee the leather. It should always be warmed before being worn in cold weather. There is a mistaken idea prevalent that water hurts patent leather. This is not true to any greater extent than it is of any other kind. Dust, however, is harder on it than on any other varieties of leather. If it is inclined to break, the dust gets in and plays havoc with the most expensive of shoes. Dust should be removed by wiping the shoes with a wet sponge while they are still on the feet, and then they should be briskly rubbed with a dry cloth. There are many different ways of polishing patent leathers, but nothing is any better than a few drops of kerosene on a clean, soft cloth.

On Helen's Foolishness, Not to Be Cast Down by Misfortune:

Helen says, "O, let's be gay,
Spite of threatened sorrow!"
Helen makes a smile today,
Slay a tear tomorrow.
Helen says, "a laugh is best!"
Sips the foam, and spills the rest.

Helen is a foolish maid,—
Though her road is hilly,
Helen never is dismayed;
Foolish,—yes, and silly.
Spite of all that I can do—
Helen, makes me foolish, too!
—Gelett Burgess in the Lark.

A Lamentation.

She is engaged. Ah, woe is me!
Her love-touched heart no more is free;
Her soul is wooed, her beauty won,
This charming maid of twenty-one.
Ye gods! What mortal agony
As ails my breast and makes me flee
From sight of man! What lunacy!
Alas! I am indeed undone.
She is engaged.

No longer can her graces be
A heaven on earth, an ecstacy;
No longer, when the shining sun
Each day his fiery course hath run,
Can I be glad, for it's to me
She is engaged.
—The Lotus.

A—"Dr. Jarley is simply absorbed in his profession."

B.—"I should say he was. Why, they do say that when he proposed to Madge Ginx, he never squeezed her hand once, but kept his finger on her pulse all the time."
—Tit-Bits.

THE OVERLAND LIMITED

"The Overland Limited," via Union Pacific, takes only three and a half days to Chicago, and only four and a half days to New York.

The Union Pacific is the only line running Pullman double drawing-room sleepers and dining cars, San Francisco to Chicago, daily, without change, and composite buffet smoking and library cars between Salt Lake City, Ogden and Chicago. Only one change of sleepers to New York; dining car service the entire distance.

Upholstered Pullman tourist sleepers San Francisco to Chicago daily without change. Personally conducted tourist excursions to St. Paul and Chicago every Friday.

Tickets and sleeping car reservations at general office, No. 1 Montgomery street, San Francisco. Reservations secured in advance by all Trans-Atlantic steamship lines. Tickets on sale to and from all points in Europe. D. W. HITCHCOCK, General Agent, San Francisco.

The most noted connoisseurs of wines pronounce Mira Valle Vintages the finest of home production. They have always stood well and were among those which received honorable mention at the Bordeaux Exposition. For sale by P. Klein, 604½ Geary st.

For health and strength: Damiana Bitters.

DR. H. G. YOUNG—Bridges and teeth without plates a specialty. 1841 Polk street.

If you wish to look neat have your suits cleaned and pressed for $1.00. Bay City Clothing Renovatory, 221½ Geary, rooms 19, 20, 21. 'Phone Main 5859.

CENTEMERI KID GLOVES.
Removed to 128 Post street.

FINEST ON THE MARKET

BEWARE OF IMITATIONS

EEL RIVER CREAMERY

SEE THAT THIS STAMP IS ON END OF SQUARE

A FINE GRAIN DELICIOUS FLAVORED BUTTER

If you appreciate a DELICACY
Ask your Dealer for the BRAND

BALDWIN THEATRE (AL. HAYMAN AND CO. INCORP'D PROPS)

Second Week, commencing Monday, August 3d

Charles Frohman's Empire Theatre Co. from the Empire Theatre, New York, presenting the Latest Comedy success

The Benefit of the Doubt

The Most Brilliant Success by A. W. Pinero

The same Complete and Elaborate Production as seen in New York!

Monday, August 10th: The Masqueraders

CALIFORNIA THEATRE (AL. HAYMAN & CO. INCORP'D PROPS)

Commencing Monday, August 3d

The Singing Irish Comedian

The Beautiful Irish Idyl: CHAUNCEY OLCOTT

MAVOURNEEN

By Horace W. Townsend and Geo. H. Jessop

During the performance Mr. Olcott will sing the following songs, written and composed by W. J. Scanlan for this play: Molly O, The Ould Countrie, Ring the Bells, and Mavourneen; also, She And I Together, and The Snowy Breasted Pearl.

Monday, August 10th: The Irish Artist

Columbia Theatre.

CRIDLAND & ABBEY, GOTTLOB & CO. LESSEES AND MANAGERS

A Double Important Event! First production by the

FRAWLEY COMPANY

The Most Brilliant American Comedy Ever Written:

A GOLD MINE

Full of Humor, Pathos and Charm!

First appearance with this Company of Wilton Lackaye America's Greatest Character Actor, and Louise Thorndyke-Boucicault, Handsome, Accomplished, Brilliant.

New Scenery! Magnificent Gowns!

August 10th: THE GREAT UNKNOWN

Orpheum

O'FARRELL STREET, BETWEEN STOCKTON AND POWELL

Week commencing Monday, Aug. 3d

NEW AND GREAT CARDS

The Four Nelson Sisters, the World's Greatest Female Acrobats

Drummond Stahley and Belle Birbeck
The Musical Blacksmiths

Sissiereta Jones, the Black Patti

Biondi in a New Sketch

Lydia Yeamans-Titus
And a Great Vaudeville Company

Reserved seats 25c.; balcony 10c.; opera chairs and box seats 50c. Matinees Wednesday, Saturday and Sunday

Tivoli Opera House

MRS. ERNESTINE KREUING : : Proprietor and Manager

Season of Italian and English Grand Opera under the Direction of Mr. Gustav Hinrichs

This Saturday Evg., Gounod's Immortal Opera, Faust
Tomorrow Evening, Carmen

Next Week: Monday, Tuesday, Thursday, Friday and Sunday Evenings, Leoncavallo's Tragic Opera
PAGLIACCI

Wednesday and Saturday Evenings, FAUST

Great Casts! Correct Costumes!
Beautiful Scenery!

Popular Prices : : : 25 and 50 Cents

Ask your Blacksmith to shoe your horse with

PHŒNIX HORSE SHOES

GIVE THEM A TRIAL

H. S. BRIDGE & CO.

Merchant Tailors

Many Novelties in Imported Wear. Shirts to Order a Specialty.

622 Market Street, San Francisco
(Upstairs, opposite Palace Hotel)

ABRAMSON-HEUNISCH CO. (Incorporated)

IMPORTERS AND JOBBERS OF

Brewers' and Bottlers' Supplies, Corks, Druggists' Glassware, Etc.

26-28 Main St. San Francisco

TERRA COTTA PRESSED BRICK FIRE PROOFING GLADDING, McBEAN & CO. 1358-1360 MARKET ST. WORKS, LINCOLN CAL.

S. F. CARPET BEATING AND RENOVATING WORKS

D. MACKINTOSH & CO.
Successors to S. S. Ferguson & Co.

Renovating, Laying and Refitting Carpets a Specialty

Telephone South 36 23 and 25 10th St., S. F.

CHAUNCEY M. DEPEW, the famous orator, statesman, railroad president and millionaire, in an interview said of his recent visit to Del Monte: "I visited Monterey, and I call it the most beautiful place in the world. Monte Carlo cannot compare with it. Its seventeen-mile drive is unparalleled for fineness."

When Mr. Depew says it is the most beautiful place in the world he knows what he is saying, and means it, for he has seen pretty much all the beautiful and interesting places in the world many times over . . . . .

The Tavern of Castle Crag, the most beautiful, attractive and accessible of all mountain resorts, will open for the reception of guests June 1, and will close October 1, 1896.

GEORGE SCHONEWALD, MANAGER

CAMPING

Season 1896

Reduced Rates for Campers' Excursion Tickets

To the following Resorts, situated on the lines of the Southern Pacific Co.

Santa Cruz Mountains

ALMA, LAUREL, FELTON
BEN LOMOND, WRIGHTS, GLENWOOD
BOULDER CREEK

Shasta Region

SWEET BRIAR CAMP
SHASTA SPRINGS SHASTA RETREAT
MT. SHASTA CAMP

For information as to Ticket Rates, Routes of Travel, etc., address or call at any Ticket Office of Southern Pacific Company, or at

General Passenger Office
No. 4 Montgomery Street, Second Floor

Or at City Ticket Office
613 Market Street, Grand Hotel, San Francisco

ILLUSTRATED FOLDER MAILED FREE ON APPLICATION

WM. H. MENTON
Excursion Passenger Agent

RICHARD GRAY
General Traffic Manager

T. H. GOODMAN
General Passenger Agent

Pacific Coast Steamship Co.

Dispatch steamers from San Francisco for ports in Alaska 9 a.m. July 3, 13, 18, 28, August 2, 12, 27.
For British Columbia and Puget Sound Ports, July 3, 8, 13, 18, 23, 28 and every fifth day thereafter.
For Eureka, Humboldt Bay, S. S. Pomona, 2 p.m. July 5, 8, 12, 16, 20, 24, 28 and every fourth day thereafter.
For Newport, Los Angeles and Way Ports, 9 a.m. July 2, 6, 10, 14, 18, 22, 26, 30 and every fourth day thereafter.
For San Diego, stopping at Port Hartford, Santa Barbara, Port Los Angeles, Redondo -- Los Angeles -- and Newport, 11 a.m. July 5, 8, 12, 16, 20, 24, 28 and every fourth day thereafter.
For Ensenada, San Jose del Cabo, Mazatlan, La Paz, Altata and Guaymas, Mex., S.S. Orizaba, July 3 and 25th of each month thereafter.
Ticket Office: Palace Hotel, 4 New Montgomery St.

GOODALL, PERKINS & CO.
General Agents
No. 10 Market Street, San Francisco, Cal.

A. K. DAGGETT

Drawing of Deeds and all Legal Papers a specialty

NOTARY PUBLIC
14 Montgomery St., S. F.
Telephone 305

Coolgardie Gold Fields

FREMANTLE, AUSTRALIA
First Class $220 Steerage $110
Lowest Rates to CAPE TOWN

S. S. "Australia," Honolulu only, Tuesday, Aug. 4, 1896, at 10 a.m.
S. S. "Monowai," via Honolulu and Auckland, Thursday, August 23, 1896 at 2 p.m.

Ticket Office 114 Montgomery St.
Freight Office 327 Market St.
J. D. SPRECKELS & BROS. CO., General Agents

The German Savings and Loan Society

526 California St., S. F.

Capital actually paid up in cash	$1,000,000 00
Deposits December 31, 1895	30,727,586 59
Reserve Fund	750,000 00
Guaranteed Capital	1,200,000 00

OFFICERS
President, B. A. BECKER
First Vice-President, EDWARD KRUSE
Second Vice-President, A. C. HEINEKER
Cashier, A. H. R. SCHMIDT
Assistant Cashier, WM. HERRMANN
Secretary, GEORGE TOURNY
Assistant Secretary, A. H. MULLER

DIRECTORS
B. A. Becker, Edward Kruse, A. C. Heineker,
O. Shoemann, H. Horstmann, Ign. Steinhart, Dan'l Meyer
Nic. Van Bergen, Emil Rohte
Attorney, W. S. Goodfellow

San Francisco Savings Union

532 CALIFORNIA ST

Deposits June 30, 1896	$23,657,219
Paid Up Capital and Surplus	1,594,085

ALBERT MILLER, Pres. E. B. POND, Vice-Pres.
LOVELL WHITE, Cashier

DIRECTORS
GEORGE W. BEAVER ROBERT WATT
THOMAS MAGEE GEO. C. BOARDMAN
W. C. B. DE FREMERY DANIEL E. MARTIN
ALBERT MILLER PHILIP BARTH
E. B. POND

Loans upon San Francisco and Oakland Real Estate, and Farms and Farming Lands in the country.
No charge is made for pass book or entrance fee.

Mutual Savings Bank of San Francisco

33 Post Street, below Kearny, Mechanics' Institute Building

Guaranteed Capital, $1,000,000

JAS. D. PHELAN, Pres. GEO. A. STORY, Cashier
S. G. MURPHY, JOHN A. HOOPER, Vice-Pres.

DIRECTORS—Jas. D. Phelan, S. G. Murphy, John A. Hooper, James Moffitt, C. G. Hooker, Frank J. Sullivan, L. P. Drexler, Robt. McElroy, Jos. D. Grant.

Interest paid on term and ordinary deposits.
Loans on approved securities. Deposits may be sent by Postal Order, Wells, Fargo & Co., or Exchange on City Banks.
When opening accounts, send signature.

ROYAL EXCHANGE ASSURANCE

OF LONDON
Incorporated by Royal Charter A. D. 1726
Capital Paid Up, $3,446,100 Assets, $21,584,413
Surplus to Policy Holders, $8,980,251
ROBERT DICKSON, Manager
NATHAN & KINGSTON, San Francisco Agents
501 MONTGOMERY ST.

Aachen and Munich Fire Insurance Co.

Of Aix La Chapelle, Germany. Established 1805
Capital, $2,250,000.00
Total Assets, $6,854,653.65
United States Department
204 SANSOME STREET, SAN FRANCISCO
VOSS, CONRAD & CO., General Managers

When You Leave Town

place your valuables in the

SAFE DEPOSIT VAULTS
OF THE
FIRST NATIONAL BANK
CORNER OF BUSH AND SANSOME STREETS
Office Hours, 8 a. m. to 6 p. m.

ASSESSMENT NOTICE

Best and Belcher Mining Co.

Location of principal place of business—San Francisco, California. Location of works—Virginia District, Storey Co., Nevada.

Notice is hereby given that at a meeting of the Board of Directors held on the 2d day of July, 1896, an assessment (No. 60), of Twenty-five cents per share was levied upon the capital stock of the corporation, payable immediately in United States gold coin to the Secretary, at the office of the company, room 33, Nevada Block, 309 Montgomery St., San Francisco, California.

Any stock upon which this assessment shall remain unpaid on the

6TH DAY OF AUGUST, 1896,

Will be delinquent, and advertised for sale at public auction, and unless payment is made before will be sold on Thursday, the 27th day of August, 1896, to pay the delinquent assessment, together with costs of advertising and expenses of sale. By order of the Board of Directors.

M. JAFFE, Secretary.

Office—Room 33, Nevada Block, 309 Montgomery St., San Francisco, Cal.

BAJA CALIFORNIA

DAMIANA BITTERS

"Damiana" is a powerful aphrodisiac and special tonic for the sexual and urinary organs of both sexes and a great remedy for diseases of the kidneys and bladder. For weak nerves these bitters are invaluable, and leading physicians recommend them as the greatest invigorator known. Long-winded testimonials are not necessary. "Damiana" Bitters are known on their merits. (Send for Circular.)

NABER, ALFS & BRUNE, Agents
323-325 Market St., S. F.

REMOVAL

Rountrees English Chocolate, Kohlers Swiss Chocolates, and all brands of Foreign and Eastern Confectionery, imported by . . . .

W. L. GREENBAUM,

of 205 SUTTER ST., will, after December 1st, be found in large and commodious quarters at

128 POST ST., Bohemian Club Bldg.

ORDER YOUR CARRIAGES AND COUPES
OF THE

PACIFIC CARRIAGE CO.

At Baldwin Hotel
200 Sutter Street, corner Kearny
48 Eighth Street, or
St. Nicholas Hotel, Market and Ninth Streets
Steamer and Train Service a specialty 'Phone 1950

CRESTA BLANCA WINES

AWARDED
THREE HIGHEST AWARDS
AT

THE ATLANTA EXPOSITION

OF SIX MEDALS
AWARDED TO CALIFORNIA

Cresta Blanca Wines

OBTAINED THREE

WETMORE-BOWEN CO.

140 Montgomery Street
Under Occidental Hotel

HIRSCH-KAHN & Co.

MANUFACTURING OPTICIANS
IMPORTERS of OPTICAL GOODS
PHOTOGRAPHIC APPARATUS & SUPPLIES ETC.
333 KEARNY STREET
SAN FRANCISCO CAL.

BONESTELL & CO.

Dealers in PAPER
Fine Coated Papers a Specialty
401-403 SANSOME ST.,
San Francisco, Cal.

Brushes

For Barbers, bakers, bootblacks, bathhouses, billiard tables, brewers, bookbinders, candymakers, canners, dyers, flour mills, foundries, laundries, paperhangers, printers, painters, shoe factories, stablemen, tar roofers, tanners, tailors, etc.

BUCHANAN BROS.
TEL. 5610 609 SACRAMENTO ST.
BRUSH MANUFACTURERS

THE PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU

510 MONTGOMERY ST., S. F.,

Reads all papers on the Pacific Coast, and supplies clippings on all topics, business and personal.

Pacific Towel Co.

Telephone 1780 No. 9 Lick Place, San Francisco
GEO. E. MOORE, Proprietor

PERRIER-JOUET CHAMPAGNE EXTRA DRY "SPECIAL"

Also specially selected stock of Clarets and White Wines on hand.

W. B. CHAPMAN, Sole Agent Pacific Coast
123 California Street

THE WAVE CLUBBING LIST

FOR 1896

By special arrangement with the Publishers, THE WAVE is prepared to offer the following list

SUBSCRIPTIONS MUST BE PAID IN ADVANCE

THE WAVE and	CENTURY	$6 00
"	ARENA	5 00
"	LITTELL'S LIVING AGE	7 75
"	ART AMATEUR	5 75
"	LIPPINCOTT'S MAGAZINE	4 50
"	MUNSEY'S	3 50
"	ATLANTIC MONTHLY	5 75
"	YOUTH'S COMPANION	3 75
"	NEW ENGLAND MAGAZINE	5 00
"	HARPER'S MAGAZINE	5 50
"	HARPER'S WEEKLY	5 70
"	HARPER'S BAZAAR	5 70
"	HARPER'S ROUND TABLE	4 00
"	SCRIBNER'S MAGAZINE	5 00
"	REVIEW OF REVIEWS	4 50
"	ST. NICHOLAS	5 00
"	OVERLAND	4 75
"	COSMOPOLITAN	3 50
"	FRANK LESLIE'S MAGAZINE	4 90
"	PUCK	6 50
"	JUDGE	6 50
"	LIFE	7 00
"	LIFE'S COMEDY	3 50
"	LESLIE'S WEEKLY	5 70
"	DEMOREST MAGAZINE	4 00
"	SCIENTIFIC AMERICAN	5 00
"	SCIENTIFIC AMERICAN SUPPLEM'T	6 50
"	N. Y. DAILY SUN	8 00
"	" SUNDAY "	4 50
"	CASSELL MAGAZINE	3 75
"	ARGOSY	3 50
"	PUBLIC OPINION	4 50
"	SUNDAY WORLD	4 75
"	CRITIC	5 50
"	FORUM	5 00
"	NORTH AMERICAN REVIEW	6 50
"	TABLE TALK	3 25
"	NINETEENTH CENTURY	6 25
"	CONTEMPORARY REVIEW	6 25
"	FORTNIGHTLY REVIEW	6 25
"	BLACKWOODS MAGAZINE	6 25
"	TRUTH	6 25
"	DELINEATOR	3 50
"	VOGUE	5 50
"	TOWN TOPICS	7 50
"	DAILY JOURNAL	5 00
"	SUNDAY JOURNAL	3 75
"	ILLUS. AMERICAN	5 75

STORIES OF THE DAY

Wherever Wilton Lackaye goes, he takes a bag-full of good stories, and flings them around with reckless generosity. One of his newest is about a clergyman, who, on visiting a school, held up a bright, new dollar, and promised it to the child who should give him the best answer to two questions. "Now, my child, whom do you love best?" he began, turning to the nearest youngster. "My papa," was the prompt answer. "Very good, indeed. And why do you love him best?" "Because he gives me nickels." His reverence smiled approval and turned to the next, who loved his mamma best. "And why, my dear?" "Because she taught me to pray." The clergyman beamed with delight. "Excellent, excellent! And whom do you love best?" turning to a bright-looking boy, who sat next. "Jesus Christ, because he died to save me," was the fervent answer. "The best of all," exclaimed the clergyman, springing up. "The dollar is yours. And now, my little man, what is your name?" The urchin took the dollar, then looked demurely away. "Ikey Goldstein," was his answer.

* * *

Matt Sneider always had a rooted objection to learning any more of his part than he could help, and never dreamed of committing anything like a letter, which could be read off. In Richelieu, a great deal of the plot hinges on a communication from the King, which Mauprat gives Baradas, saying, "Read, read." Once, for pure wickedness, Will Thorne, who was playing Mauprat, handed Baradas a blank sheet, knowing perfectly well that Sneider could not say a word of it. "Read, read," he commanded. Baradas looked at it gravely, then handed it back saying, "You read it!" Thorne, of course, had never learned it, so he exclaimed, "Nay, you!" forcing the letter back upon the unhappy Sneider, who took it, and said sorrowfully, "Mauprat, would you know the truth? I can't read!" "Then," said Thorne, "we will withdraw and discuss this at some length," which they did, leaving the audience somewhat bewildered.

* * *

Charles Richman began his theatrical career under adverse circumstances which his quick wits turned into favorable ones. He was acting with a certain star, who, according to his own story, discharged him eleven times for incompetence. Still, he stayed on, and finally she proposed marriage to him. Richman told her she shouldn't joke that way with him, whereupon she discharged him in good earnest. Richman went to another prominent actress, looking for a place. "But why did you leave ——?" she asked in surprise. "Discharged for incompetence," was the laconic answer. The actress laughed and decided that he was original enough to be worth trying, and from that moment his success began.

* * *

Charles Salisbury played for three seasons with a stock company in Buffalo, where he was most cordially disliked. He was away just before the fourth season began, but telegraphed, "When do we open?" "Wouldn't have you at any price," came the cutting answer. With cheerful promptness, Salisbury wired back, "Terms accepted. What do we open in?"

* * *

Beerbohm Tree is rather fond of expounding his theories and describing his experiences, and is generally surrounded by a crowd of eager sycophants, who ask nothing better than to listen and admire. Once at the Green Room Club in London, Henry Hamilton sat patiently among the listeners for a long time, then suddenly started up. "Just wait a minute," he exclaimed. The actor paused and everyone looked around. "Now, let's talk about me," he continued affably.

* * *

Desdemona lay dead, and James, as the swarthy Moor, pressed his agitated hand to his forehead. In the midst of his anguish, he noticed that a large layer of his complexion had come off on his hand, and acting on a wicked impulse, he gently stroked the face of his murdered wife until it wore a dusky moustache and imperial. Soon Amelia burst into the room and rushed to the bedside, but instead of a cry of despair, a hysterical whoop broke from her. One by one the others followed, each in turn choking explosively, until the great Warde himself, alias Iago, was seen heaving with laughter over the victim of his treachery. After the play he called James aside. "That was very funny, my boy," he said kindly, "and it will cost you just fifty dollars." And Desdemona was glad of it.

A SAVING OF ONE-HALF

Baggage transferred to trains or steamers and return. Trunks, 50c each for the round trip. Morton Special Delivery, 650 Market street and 408 Taylor street.

Hotel St. Nicholas, corner Market, Hayes, Larkin and Ninth. American or European plan. Ira R. and James H. Doolittle.

The Maison Riche serves the best lunch in the city for 75 cents.

SEA BEACH HOTEL, SANTA CRUZ, CAL.

The Ideal Summer Resort should offer gaiety for the gay, rest for the weary, a beautiful country for the nature lover, a pleasant home and genial climate for all. These and many other attractions may be found at the Sea Beach Hotel, within easy reach of San Francisco. For additional information, address—

JOHN R. CHACE,
Proprietor.

The Club Hotel
5 Bund, Yokohama

Hotel Metropole
1 Tsukiji, Tokyo

First-class Hotels, centrally situated, well furnished. ENTIRE FOREIGN MANAGEMENT. Experienced English Matron in attendance. Excellent table under the superintendence of qualified foreign Chef.

The Hotel steam-launch attends steamers arriving and departing. Passengers are met at the Railway Station. Visitors have the option of messing either in Tokyo or Yokohama, without extra charge—The only Hotels offering such an advantage. Certified Guides are in attendance at both Hotels. European Hair-Dresser on the premises.

THE CLUB HOTEL COMPANY, Limited, Proprietors

E. C. SIOEN, Manager, YOKOHAMA — E. DEWETTE, Manager, TOKYO

THE GRILL ROOM SERVICE
—OF THE—
PALACE HOTEL

Has been extended to what was formerly the City Restaurant. This immense room, which has a direct entrance from Market Street is known as - - - -

"THE LADIES' GRILL ROOM"

NEW DEPARTURE—CHARACTERIZED BY PROMPT SERVICE—MODERATE CHARGES

Capitola Hotel

CAPITOLA BY THE SEA

Situated on the water's edge of Monterey Bay. Surf Bathing, Hot Salt Water Baths. Table served with every delicacy of land and sea

First Class in Every Respect!

ORCHESTRA THROUGH THE ENTIRE SEASON

For further particulars apply to

HEPBURN & TERRY
Capitola, Santa Cruz County, Cal.

THE LICK HOUSE

Occupies the block bounded by Montgomery, Post and Sutter Streets

IT IS—
—scrupulously clean;
—accessible to all street car lines and places of amusement;
—conveniently situated for business men;
—a quiet, model place for a family to spend the winter;
—moderate in price, yet first-class in every particular.

AMERICAN OR EUROPEAN PLAN

K. B. SOULÉ, Manager

Blithedale

The nearest Summer Resort to San Francisco, and the most charming, is within five minute's drive from Mill Valley Station. Wooded hills shelter it from the wind and fog. Rose paths and beds of fragrant clover surround the houses, and all around are the redwoods—300 acres of woods. The cottages have porcelain bath tubs and electric lights and perfect sewerage. The never failing brook runs through the place. Table excellent—cream every day. Terms moderate. For particulars address—MRS. FARRAR, who will be at Blithedale after April 15th.

The place will open on May 1st.

Rest and Recuperation

for invalids and tired-out people can be found at Byron. The wonderful tonic effect of the waters and baths, the exhilarating yet balmy air, and the sense of quiet and repose, is a combination unequalled. Write for particulars to

Byron Hot Springs
Contra Costa Co., Cal.

Napa Soda Springs California's Famous Mountain Spa!

HAVE YOU BEEN THERE LATELY?

One thousand feet above Napa Valley. Climate unsurpassed. Views magnificent. Table supplied from orchard and ocean, field and farm. Hot and cold Napa Soda water baths. Telephone and Postoffice. Burros to ride. Bowling alleys, tennis, croquet, swings and hammocks. New improvements every year. Gas and running water in every room. Relief for asthmatics. WARM WATER SWIMMING TANK. An ideal summer resort. Children's paradise, mother's delight, husband's rest. Address ANDREW JACKSON, Napa Soda Springs P. O.

For those who appreciate Comfort and Attention

A QUIET HOME CENTRALLY LOCATED

OCCIDENTAL HOTEL
SAN FRANCISCO

WM. B. HOOPER, MANAGER

COMET OOLONG

The oldest and most reliable brand of Tea on the market. Sold only in ½ lb. papers at 20 cts. per paper.

ALL GROCERS KEEP IT

GEO. GOODMAN

Patentee and Manufacturer of—Artificial Stone

Schillinger's Patent — In all its branches

SIDE WALK and GARDEN WALK A Specialty

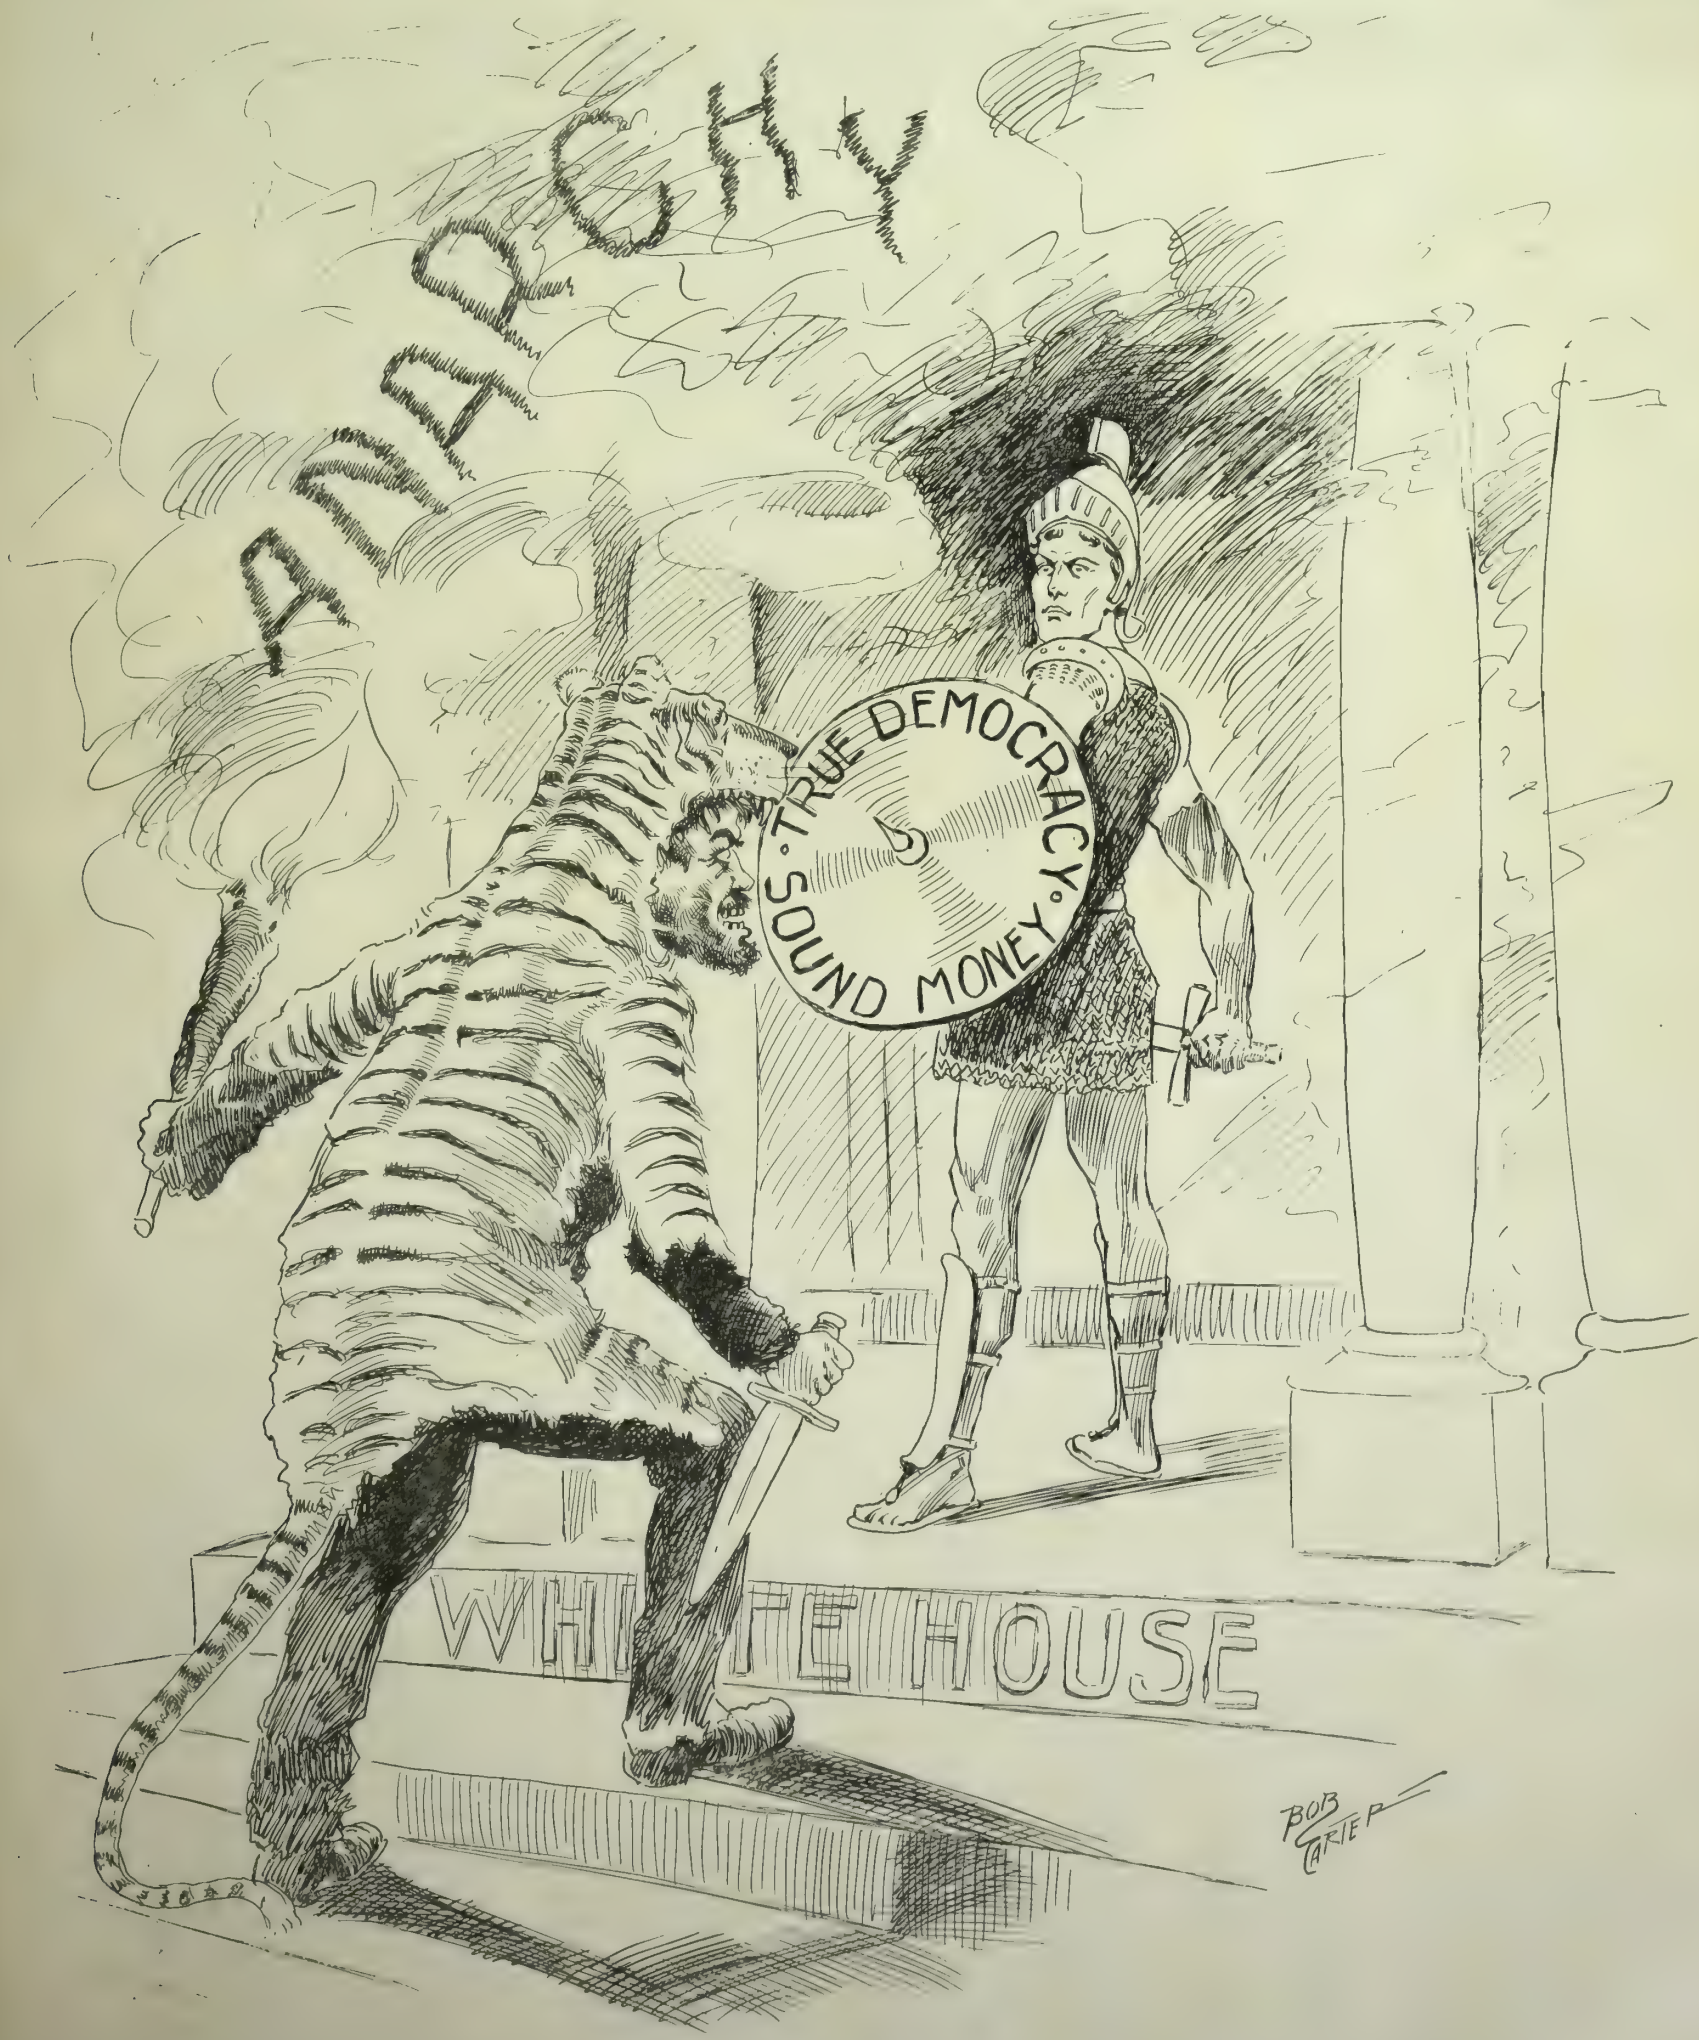
Office, 307 MONTGOMERY ST. Nevada Block, SAN FRANCISCO

CALIFORNIA STATE LIBRARY

This Paper not to be taken from the Library.

THE WAVE

VOL XV. No. 32 SAN FRANCISCO, AUGUST 8, 1896 PRICE 10 CTS.



"POSITIVELY NO ADMITTANCE"

THE WAVE

Is published every Saturday, at THE WAVE Building, No. 24 Montgomery Street, San Francisco.

Subscription, $3.00 per year, $1.50 six months, 75 cts. three months. Foreign subscriptions—countries in postal union—$5 per year. Sample copies free on application. The trade is supplied by the San Francisco News Co., 210 Post Street; east of the Rocky Mountains by the American News Co., New York.

THE WAVE is kept on file and is for sale at Brentano's, 17 Avenue de l'Opera, Paris, France; 31 Union Square, New York City; 1015 Pennsylvania Avenue, Washington, D. C.; and 206 Wabash Avenue, Chicago.

Advertising rates and all other matters pertaining to the business of the paper, address THE WAVE, 24 Montgomery Street. Eastern Agent, E. Katz, 230-235 Temple Court, New York.

HARRISON M. PARKER, Business Manager

Entered at the San Francisco Post Office as second-class matter

THE WAVE PUBLISHING COMPANY

SAN FRANCISCO, AUGUST 8, 1896

CONTENTS

Editorials	2-3	The Latin Quarter	8-9
The Clearing House	4	Political Personalities	9
Politics Made Easy; by John Henry Patrick	4	Herr Techow's Feline Soubrettes	9
Richard Le Gallienne; by Elizabeth Knight Tompkins	5	In Society; by The Gossip	10
		The Theatres; by Peg Woffington	11
The Christian Church Covention	5	Fiction in Review	12
Things and People	6	New York Topics	13
The Nelson Sisters	7	Late Verse	13
Indian Education	7	Her Point of View	14
		Stories from the Magazines	16

SILVER REPUBLICANS.

When did it become the fashion among Republicans to accept as gospel the distorted construction placed by a Democratic press upon their party platform? The issues invented by the Democratic press are totally dissimilar to those joined by the platforms of the parties. It is not true that the Republican party is pledged for gold. This is not a war of gold against silver, not a campaign of the rich against the poor. The capitalistic clutch of Wall and Lombard streets nowhere appear in the Republican platform; and the Republican who declares it does, draws his inspiration, not from the utterances of his party leaders, but picks it from off the lying tongues of his party's ancient adversaries. The Republican who would support silver in a rational manner, and at once preserve the finances and integrity of the nation, free from dangerous and unnecessary disturbance, can give more good, sound, substantial reasons for approving the financial plank of his own party than can he for deserting it and flying to the radical and ill-digested declarations of its opponents.

The Republican platform pledges that party to promote international bi-metallism, and even the most rampant and irreconcilable friend of silver must admit that international bi-metallism is the only, mark you, the only, plan upon which may be based the slightest semblance of a reasonable hope of restoring silver to its old ratio. The Republican platform declares that it is not proper to debase our currency, and take the desperate chance of "forcing" European countries to an international agreement. That platform is pronounced in favor of maintaining our money, coin and paper, at their present value, and at the same time gives a solemn pledge to exercise its kindly and powerful offices in behalf of international bi-metallism. Is there anything treasonable in such utterances? Is there anything of animosity towards silver in this language? Do the silver Republicans who threaten to forsake their party believe that the test of patriotism, and the pledge of true fealty to silver, may only be evidenced by a total disregard for every other consideration? Must the Republican party to indicate its friendliness to the white metal abandon every idea of conservatism, forsake every rule of sound governmental policy, and fling to the breeze its party banner polluted by the wretched device of "Silver at any cost?" Are frenzy and madness the only means of demonstrating our friendliness to silver? The Democratic platform bristles with them, and there lies the danger. It does not express any tender solicitude for the maintenance of the present standard of values. Reckless of every consequence that may follow, it takes up a doubtful, untried and most unpromising theory, and with the bit between its teeth, declares flat-footed for free and unlimited coinage of gold and silver at the ratio of sixteen to one. Declares that one dollar's worth of silver bullion shall be equal to two dollars in gold. The leaders of that misguided party tell us that this is the only plan which promises to accomplish international bi-metallism, and they tell us that its adoption by these United States will "force" the European nations to their knees. On the slim chance that these tactics will prevail, they ask the American people to put at stake, not only the Nation's honor and financial credit, but the prosperity and well-being of its citizens as well.

The truth of this matter is, both parties are aiming to secure international bi-metalllism. The only question at issue is the question of methods. One is radical and of doubtful efficacy, and the other is conservative and at least safe. In one lurks the danger that always goes with radicalism, in the other the safety that goes with conservatism. If Mr. McKinley is elected and fails to secure international agreement, we will at least have no great financial disturbance; the country will move along, as it has for twenty-three years, with its finance undisturbed, and the question open for calm deliberation four years hence without any new and harassing complications or shrinkage in values. Should Bryanism come out victorious in America, and his bulldozing plan of "forcing" prove a failure, no such peaceful conditions will exist, and calm and dispassionate judgment could not be brought to bear upon the subject; the country would be thrown into financial disorder, and distrust would stalk over the land. While Mr. Bryan would be fixing his tinseled theories upon the statutes of the land and engrafting his weird fancies upon our laws and public policy, what would become of the farmer, the house-holder, who has a mortgage payable in gold? While these gentlemen, who are desperately attempting to "force" the European countries into an international agreement, were filling our country with a debased and depreciating money, who would take care of the pensioned soldiers, the widows and orphans dependent on stated incomes, investors, building and loan associations, and the like? While Mr. Bryan is experimenting, all would be financial chaos; while Mr. McKinley is experimenting, there would at least be no disturbing influences to work upon our commerce and our trade or crowd our trembling merchants into the courts of bankruptcy. It is a most desperate gamble. None but the desperate would hazard so much upon such a doubtful experiment. Both parties aim to achieve the same result. They are like two physicians summoned to save the life of the same patient. The quack prescribes a nostrum, the ingredients of which, if administered, might end the very life it is intended to prolong. Could you truthfully say the conservative physician was an enemy of the patient because he interposed a firm and resolute objection to administering such a dose and taking such desperate chances? Heroic treatment is not justified when there remains untried a safe and conservative method of treatment. The cases are parallel. The Democratic party is the quack with the nostrum. It is the young physician, full of enthusiasm, perhaps, but it is full, too, of extreme danger to the patient.

Apologizing for his advocacy of Bryanism and silver, the Republican will tell you the Nation has tried for twenty years to obtain international bi-metallism by mutual agreement, and has met with failure. He will tell you it is now time to try "forcing" at whatever cost; that things cannot grow much worse than they are now. This is mere talk. "Things" can grow infinitely worse. The sentiment in favor of bi-metallism has grown in Europe since the last monetary conference, and we have profited, beside, in our experiences of the past.

It is being claimed by Democrats and by the friends of silver that James G. Blaine during his lifetime was an ardent advocate of the sort of bi-metallism which was endorsed by the Chicago platform. They will quote to you his opening statement on the subject, made in the great debate of 1878, and point to it as a reason why Republicans should desert their party for that of Bryanism. The claim made is a base slander of the dead. Mr. Blaine's attitude on the subject is identical with the present Republican platform, and his arguments are the same that are advanced by the advocates of McKinley against the pretensions of Bryanism. Republicans should closely read what he then had to say:

"I believe then, if Germany were to remonetize silver and the kingdoms and states of the Latin union were to re-open their mints, silver would at once resume its former relation with gold. The European countries, when driven to full remonetization, as I believe they will be in the end, must of necessity adopt their old ratio of 15½ of silver to 1 of gold, and we shall be compelled to adopt the same instead of our former ratio of 16 to 1. If we fail to do this we shall, as before, lose our silver, which, like all things else, seeks the highest market; and if 15½ pounds of silver will buy as much gold in Europe as 16 pounds will buy in America, the silver, of course, will go to Europe. But our line of policy in a joint movement with other nations to remonetize is simple and direct. The difficult problem is what we shall do when we aim to re-establish silver without the co-operation of European powers, and really an advance movement to coerce these powers into the same policy. Evidently the first dictate of prudence is to coin such a dollar as will not only do justice among our citizens at home, but will prove a protection—an almost barricade against the gold monometallists of Europe, who, whenever the opportunity offers, will quickly draw from us the $160,000,000 of gold coin we now hold. If we coin a silver dollar of full legal tender, obviously below the current value of the gold dollar, we are simply opening our doors and inviting Europe to take our gold. With our gold flowing out from us we shall be forced to the single silver standard, and our relations with the leading commercial countries of the world will not only be embarrassed, but crippled."

This truly great man's argument is as good to-day as it was then. Mark well what he prophesies the consequences would be, and apply them to the Bryan platform.

He was unalterably opposed to a silver dollar that did not contain enough metal to make it as valuable as a gold dollar. He then predicted, as we now predict, the fearful consequences that would follow the triumph of Bryanism. If Mr. Blaine in 1878 was vigorously opposed to the adoption by this Government of a policy that would commit it to stamping 100 cents upon silver which was in point of fact worth only 92 cents, what would be his indignation to-day at the proposal to adopt the fifty-three cent dollar? There was a disparity of only eight cents in 1878, yet he objected strenuously to the proposed experiment, with all that great ability that marked him as a statesman. Here is what he had to say upon free coinage:

"The question before Congress, then—sharply defined in the impending House bill—is, whether it is now safe and expedient to offer free coinage to the silver dollar of 412½ grains, with the mints of the Latin union closed and Germany not permitting silver to be coined as money. At current rates of silver the free coinage of a dollar containing 412½ grains, worth in gold about 92 cents, gives an illegitimate profit to the owner of the bullion, enabling him to take 92 cents worth of it to the mint and get it stamped as coin and force his neighbor to take it for a full dollar. This is an unfair advantage, which the Government has no right to give to the owner of silver bullion, and which defrauds the man who is forced to take the dollar. It surely follows that if we give free coinage to this dollar of inferior value and put it in circulation we do so at the expense of our better coinage in gold; and, unless we expect the invariable experience of other nations to be in some mysterious way suspended for our peculiar benefit, we inevitably lose our gold coin. It will flow out from us with the certainty and force of the tides. Gold has indeed remained with us in considerable amount during the circulation of the inferior currency of the legal tender, but that is because there were two great uses reserved for gold—the collection of customs and the payment of interest on the public debt. But if the inferior silver coin is also to be used for these two reserved purposes, then gold has no tie to bind it to us. What gain, therefore, should we make for the circulating medium, if, on opening the gate for silver to flow in we open a still wider gate for gold to flow out? If I were to venture upon a dictum on the silver question I should declare that, until Europe remonetizes silver, we cannot afford to coin a dollar as low as 412½ grains. After Europe remonetizes on the old standard we can afford to coin a dollar above 400 grains. If we coin too low a dollar before general remonetization, our gold will leave us. If we coin too high a dollar after general remonetization our silver will leave us. It is only an adequate value before and after general remonetization that will preserve both gold and silver to us.

Consider further what injustice would be done to every holder of a legal tender or national bank note. That large volume of paper money—in excess of $700,000,000—is now worth between 98 and 99 cents on the dollar in gold coin. The holders of it, who are, indeed, our entire population, from the poorest to the richest, have been promised from the hour of its issue that their paper money would one day be as good as gold. To pay silver for the greenback is a full compliance with this promise and this obligation, provided the silver is made as it always has been hitherto, as good as gold. To make our silver coin even 3 per cent less valuable than gold inflicts at once a loss of more than $20,000,000 on the holders of our paper money. To make a silver dollar worth but 92 cents precipitates on the same class a loss of nearly $60,000,000. For whatever the value of the silver dollar is, the whole paper issue of the country will sink to its standard when its coinage is authorized and its circulation becomes general in the channels of trade. * * * Were Congress to pass a law to-day declaring that every legal tender note and every national bank note shall hereafter pass for 95 or 97 cents on the dollar, there is not a constituency in the United States that would re-elect a man who supported it, and in many districts the representative would be lucky if he escaped merely with a defeat at the polls.

Yet it is almost mathematically demonstrable that the same effect will follow from the coinage of an inferior silver dollar. Assurances from empirics and scientists in finance that remonetization of the former dollar will at once and permanently advance its value to par with gold, are worth little in the face of opposing and controlling facts. The first effect of issuing any silver dollar that will pay customs dues and interest on the public debt, will undoubtedly be to raise it to a practical equality with gold, but that condition will only last until the amount needful for customs shall fill the channels of its use and the overflow going into general circulation will rapidly settle to its normal and actual value, and then the discount will come on the volume of the paper currency, which will sink, pari passau, with the silver dollar in which it is made redeemable. That remonetization will have a considerable effect in advancing the value of the silver dollar is very probable, but not enough to overcome the difference now existing—a difference resulting from causes independent of our control in the United States."

In 1878 the United States was coining the trade dollar for use in the China trade. The bullion value of that dollar exceeded that of the standard dollar of America. It contained 420 grains, 378 of which were pure silver; our present silver dollar contains only 371.25 grains of pure silver. Speaking upon this subject, Mr. Blaine referred sarcastically to the debased silver dollar, which coinage at sixteen to one would then have forced upon the country. He said:

"Ever since we demonetized the old dollar we have been running our mints at full speed, coining a new silver dollar for the use of the Chinese coolie and the Indian pariah—a dollar containing 420 grains of standard silver, with its superiority over our ancient dollar ostentatiously engraved on its reverse side. To these outside barbarians we send this superior dollar, bearing all our national emblems, our patriotic devices, our pious inscriptions, our goddess of liberty, our defiant eagle, our federal unity, our trust in God. This dollar contains seven and one-half grains more silver than the famous dollar of our fathers, proposed to be re-coined by the pending bill, and more than four times as many of these new dollars have already been coined as ever were coined of all other silver dollars in the United States. In the exceptional and abnormal condition of the silver market now existing throughout the world, we have felt compelled to increase the dollar with which we carry on trade with the heathen nations of Asia. Shall we do less for the American laborer at home? Nay, shall we not do a little better and a little more for those of our blood and our own fireside? If you remonetize the dollar of the fathers your mint will at once be put to work on two different dollars —different in weight, different in value, different in prestige, different in their reputation and currency throughout the commercial world. It will read strangely in history that the weightier and more valuable of these dollars is made for an ignorant class of heathen laborers in China and India, and that the lighter and less valuable is made for the intelligent and educated laboring man, who is a citizen of the United States. Charity, the adage says, begins at home. Charity, the independent American laborer scorns to ask, but he has the right to demand that justice should begin at home. In his name and in the name of common sense and common honesty, I ask that the American Congress will not force upon the American laborer an inferior dollar, which the naked and famishing laborers of India and China refuse to accept."

We have quoted Mr. Blaine at this great length so that when the silver man, the Democrat, or the deserting Republican, tells you that he is following in the footsteps of James G. Blaine in his advocacy of free coinage of silver, you may tell him flatly and openly that he states that which is not true. You may tell him that Mr. Blaine was opposed in 1878 to a silver dollar which contained only 92 cents worth of silver, and that were he alive today he would raise his voice in earnest and impassioned protest against the threatened freak of finance which now proposes a silver dollar worth only 53 cents.

WATSON'S OPINION OF BRYAN.

Mr. Thomas E. Watson, the nominee for Vice-president on the Populist ticket, conducts a newspaper down in Georgia. The files of that hitherto obscure journal have, now, therefore, become an important factor in ascertaining what Tom's views are upon given subjects. His neighbors in Atlanta know him as "Tom Watson," editor of the People's Party paper. Had he not been a journalist, the world would never have known just what he thought of Mr. Bryan, the Democratic candidate for President. Between the time of Bryan's nomination and the Populist convention, Mr. Watson was noisily abusive of the Democratic nominee, and in the light of subsequent events his views then expressed have become doubly interesting. His first criticism was directed against the meaningless rhetoric of Orator Bryan, which sent a chill of suspicion down his back. Tom does not like figures of speech, and he did not hesitate to say so. Quoting one of the Boy Orator's ringing flights of rhetoric, he sarcastically says: "What meaning does such a statement convey to the average mind? What does Mr. Bryan really mean to say? We doubt if Mr. Bryan himself really knew."

This criticism is, of course, unkind; but Mr. Watson was not only displeased with the Boy Orator from the River of Platitudes, but he even suspected his integrity. Being the local spokesman for the party of suspicion and discontent, he must question Bryan's sincerity and his honor, which he does in the following purely Populistic terms:

"Do you suppose that the rank and file can see the way in which the Bryan managers are now dickering with Tammany Hall, David B. Hill and the Wall street influences?

What is being offered those goldbugs of New York?

What price do they ask? At what figure are they to sell and you to buy?

Upon what terms are these colossal goldbug influences going to throw their support to a free silver candidate?

Mr. Crisp knows. He knows how he made the deal with them for the speakership, and he can arrange accordingly for the Presidency. He knows how in 1892 there was an open pledge to the people and a secret pledge to Wall street, and he knows who got the goods.

And the Populist rank and file know it, too.

The rank and file in the People's party are its bosses, and they mean to remain so.

They can see that instead of free silver being stronger in the Democratic party than before, it is weaker. They can see that the goldbug Democrats are on the constant increase.

Therefore the Populist rank and file intend to do all in their power to foil and repudiate those leaders who have listened to the tempter. The rank and file will take the bit in their own teeth and travel right straight along in the middle of the road."

It is pleasant to reflect that Tom may be Vice-president some day, and Speaker of the House, then we may grow accustomed to his style, and his good, plain, homespun English may not jar upon us as it does to-day. If Watson was suspicious he was also convinced that it would be useless to elect Bryan; he points with a prophetic and truthful finger to the utter folly of voting for him; declares Bryan to be a weak man, who will not be strong enough to stand up to his declarations, and says:

"Bryan will find his hands tied if elected, and can no more secure the passage of the free coinage law than Cleveland secured tariff reform."

These are pretty good reasons for supporting McKinley, who may at least accomplish something toward international bi-metallism, which is the only true way of befriending silver. Editor Watson, however, does not stop at this point, but in a most unkindly vein refers to the Boy Orator as a wind-mill. He is not satisfied with declaring his speeches unintelligible; not content with suspecting him of trafficking with Wall street, not satisfied with declaring him a weak man, who would prove a disappointment if elected; but he must characterize him as a "wind-mill." This is what he says:

"The Democratic plan of campaign seems to be that Bryan is to run the wind-mill while Sewall runs the pay-train. If Sewall rattles out his cash as fast as Bryan rattles out his speeches, times are going to become lively."

These are the views entertained by the vice-presidential nominee on the Populist ticket, with respect to the man nominated as the head of his ticket. They were given to the world at a time when Mr. Watson had nothing to conceal, and was only bound to speak what he truthfully believed. The reader will admit they show the wholesome touch of sincerity. But Brother Watson was not satisfied with his own opinion; he fortified his judgment with an article written by Editor Rosewater of the Omaha Bee, who says that Bryan is regarded in Omaha by the best business men regardless of party, as " a man of immature judgment, who would constitute an extra-hazard ous risk as head of the national Government," a view which Editor Watson heartily endorsed.

If the Democratic candidate is not good enough for the respectable wing of the Democracy, and is even, in moments of frankness, considered as an extra-hazardous risk as head of the national Government by the Populist leaders, what shall we say of the Republican who is willing to adopt the child of chance and forsake every tradition of his party at such an hour and for such a man?

THE ABDICATION OF THE QUEEN.

If Queen Victoria read the American newspapers she would learn that it was the desire of her "kin across the sea" that she should abdicate before the Prince of Wales passes into the period of second childhood. The rumor cabled to this country last week that the Queen had visited London for the last time, and was about to remove the crown from her head and retire altogether from the world, met with an expression from the American press which may be epitomized so: "It is almost time that the Prince had his turn." The American idea of rotation in office is perhaps responsible for much of this feeling. A good thing should go round—is the rough statement of a well-settled notion in the American head It is not that our people have the slightest dislike for the Queen of Great Britain; on the contrary, she is held here in higher esteem than any other monarch. Her reign has been the most liberal in English history, and her people have enjoyed a prosperity which has made them the richest in the world. Queen Victoria has been the most successful woman ruler who ever sat upon a throne, not excepting Elizabeth or Isabella. A man or woman of less sense would have made the last fifty years bloody and sad for the English people. But this little woman submitted to see her power taken from her gradually and notoriously, without moving a finger to stay the hand of the British Democracy. She knew that such a move meant a war between the spirit of the old and of the new, a real and awful war, in which the new must win. She saw that it could not be long, no matter how strong the opposition, before the rising flood of democratic government would sweep away the throne, and that the wisest policy was to delay the day by gradual concessions. In this period of transition she has been neither weak nor obstinate, impetuous nor afraid. She has had the sense rare among women with power in their hands, to lean on the advice and judgment of strong men, whom often she personally did not like. Her court has been the most exemplary that history tells of; no other woman ever headed a court in which there were so few scandals and so little intrigue. It is no matter of wonder, then, taking what we in America would call her "splendid official record" into consideration, that England should be loth to lose so wise a governor, even though the popular Prince sits by in patience, growing old and realizing that he may yet die a prince.

But sovereigns seldom abdicate or commit suicide—never, we believe, except under pressure or because of mental trouble. Men with power cling to it as long as they can. Poets and philosophers may speak in derision of power as a satisfaction, but the proof that it is such lies in the little fact that those who have power fight against, death, disease and disaster to hold it, and never yield until it is torn from them. In Europe, however, at this time, there is much talk of other abdications than that of Queen Victoria. As a London correspondent some time since expressed it, abdication seems to be in the air.

At no time since the eventful years of 1848-49, when the whole of Europe may be said to have been in open insurrection against the mediaevally autocratic tendencies of its rulers, have there been so many reigning sovereigns who are declared to be on the point of abandoning their thrones. In 1848 the monarchs were mostly Princes born in the previous century, and reared within the influence of its traditions, utterly incapable, therefore, of comprehending such new fangled notions as popular government and national institutions. Sooner than lend their names to any such subversive ideas, which they regarded as synonymous with sanguinary revolution of the character that brought Louis XVI and Marie Antoinette to the scaffold, they preferred to abdicate; and it was during those two eventful years that the thrones of Austria, Sardinia, Bavaria, France and Holland, were vacated by their occupants. If to-day, half a century later, their successors desire in their turn to abdicate, it is that they, too, have become firmly convinced that popular legislation is incompatable with good government—that is, as viewed from the throne—and that it is impossible to reconcile any longer two such diametrically opposed institutions as Crown and Parliament. In this, perhaps, they are not far wrong; for there is no doubt that the development of popular government in the direction of democracy must naturally tend to diminish the power and the prestige of the throne.

Every new prerogative and right secured by the people or by their constitutional representatives is so much taken away from the monarch; and as time goes by it is becoming more and more apparent that, from a popular point of view, kings and emperors are superfluous, an anachronism, mere costly figureheads, whose weakness and lack of power render them an object of ridicule rather than of reverence, and that they constitute no serious obstacles to political, commercial or even intellectual development. Indeed, there seems to be no place left for them in the coming century, unless it be that of mere social arbiters, whose power is restricted to the decreeing of the laws of fashion and of conventionality, and whose authority is exercised not by virtue of any written law, but merely by means of tact. In a word, the Prince of Wales, as he is now, the ruler of English society, is the only man who answers to the idea of a twentieth-century sovereign.

LIGHT-WEIGHT SUBSIDIARY COIN.

It is not generally known that the weight of two half dollars will not equal the weight of a standard dollar, although their purchasing power is equal. If the Democratic platform be embodied in our laws every dollar of subsidiary silver money in circulation will be light weight and fail to fill the demand for a sixteen to one ratio. They no doubt, would be called in and re-coined.

The condition that brought about this disparity in the two classes of coins is not without some historical interest. In the early fifties America was reduced to the necessity of using "shin-plasters" and postage stamps for small change. Europe had drained the United States of all its silver, and great inconvenience in small transactions was the result. There was profit in shipping American silver to Europe then, just as there will be a profit in shipping gold if Bryanism prevails. Congress determined to put an end to this depletion, and ordered the quantity of silver in the subsidiary coin reduced to an amount that would make it unprofitable as a speculation. The Act of 1837 declared that the American dollar should contain 412.50 grains of pure silver, the half dollar 206.25 grains, the quarter of a dollar just half that much, and so on. The act of 1853 reduced the quantity of silver in the half dollar to 192 grains, and the quarter, the dime and half dime respectively, one-half, one-fifth and one-tenth of that weight. The declaration of the Democratic platform in favor of the coinage at the ratio of sixteen to one applies equally to the subsidiary coin, and therefore every half dollar will, should 16 to 1 prevail, be 14.25 grains light weight. There is a great deal over sixty million dollars of this light weight money in circulation. To re-coin it would probably tax the utmost capacity of all our mints for nearly a whole year. In passing, attention might be directed to the fact that the Democratic platform only demands that the standard silver dollar shall be a legal tender. It has nothing to say of the subsidiary coins.

If any one ever asks you what the crime of 1873 was tell him that in 1873 the silver in a silver dollar was worth about a dollar and four cents in gold. That the silver miner could make more profit in selling his silver in Europe as bullion than he could by taking it to the American mint. That no one was fool enough to take a dollar and four cents worth of bullion to the mints and exchange it for a dollar in coin, so the Government simply stopped coining silver dollars.

John Russell Young of the New York "Herald," famous in both diplomacy and journalism, is now engaged on a biography of General Grant. He was at Canton when McKinley was nominated, and was the first man to press the Republican candidate's hand after the vote was recorded at St. Louis.

THE CLEARING HOUSE

How the Daily Balances are Made Up at this Institution.

A half hour in the Clearing House can spoil more illusions than anything I know. It is like going reverently into the temple of an idol, to find Mary Jane shining up the sacred features with brass polish and an old rag. Gold, the mysterious, the toiled-for, is brought in with careless nonchalence, swung over indifferent shoulders in coarse bags, which are dumped down as disrespectfully as though they contained cobble stones. Twenties are tossed about like jackstones, and tens utterly ignored. It does not seem possible that these foolish little counters, some dull and some bright, control the going round of the world, ruling it with a command far more merciless and despotic than that which any human ruler has ever assumed. Did you know that twenty thousand dollars was a miserable little heap, hardly as big as Webster's Unabridged? Yet a man may give twenty years to earning it, and think he has done well. If you have lurking in you a touch of miserliness, go to the Clearing House, and see your god shorn of his wonder and his glory, with neither glint nor glitter left to charm you in his yellow eyes. A single bright twenty suggests golden possibilities, undreamed treasures of possession and adventure and romance; but scores of them mean mere practical certainties, business dealings and prosaic investments, which, however useful and advantageous, lack the charm of suggestiveness. To have everything before you and nothing left to imagine—what an inestimable loss that would mean in the matter of illusions and day-dreams!

At a few minutes before 2 in the afternoon the Clearing House is as quiet and empty as a school room at big recess. A curving row of desks, like demure little box stalls, runs half around the room, at one end of which the manager's desk rises, so like a judge's box that one is constantly looking for announcements from it. Every desk has its number, which corresponds to that of some bank, and at 2 o'clock the settling clerks take posession. It is their business to find the balance due to or from the Clearing House, from data furnished by the messengers. These latter line up in front of the desk at a tap of the bell, holding in their hands large sealed envelopes, carefully labeled and containing checks against the banks signified. At a second bell they start briskly forward, delivering these envelopes, and for a few minutes it all looks like an animated game of "Going to Jerusalem."

Then the messengers depart; the clerks prepare their statements and follow, and there is a few minutes' quiet, while the manager adds, subtracts and compares, before a crash on the counter announces the arrival of the first bag of gold. If it is a sealed bag it is weighed and set aside, an accurate enough method, since it is to be counted by the bank that receives it before 3 the next afternoon. If unsealed, it is counted and piled in little wooden trays. If the sum brought is a large one, say forty or fifty thousand, an expressman chaperones its way through the streets, but little trifles of five thousand or so come unattended. The messengers are of all sorts, old and young, jolly and anxious, but one feels that they must be immensely superior morally, to be sent around in charge of those comfortable little fortunes. The Clearing House handles some two millions in checks every day, using about three hundred thousand dollars in gold. By 3 o'clock the money that is due to the Clearing House has all been deposited, and being identically the same amount as that it owes, is paid across the counter and carried off as nonchalently as it was brought in. Here in San Francisco the same performance is gone through every morning also, though in many places it is only done once a day. One might add that Clearing House customs have changed materially within the past five years—much for the better, indeed, for though the precautions taken are very much greater, the system has been simplified.

MANAGER SLEEPER AT HIS DESK

THE SAN FRANCISCO CLEARING HOUSE
211 SANSOME STREET

R. R.

The oratory unloosened at the Populist convention was rich and rare. Ignatius Donnelly, who made Bacon of Shakespeare, remarked: "The Populists are willing to swallow the bolus of Democracy when gilded by the genius of Bryan." Cyclone Davis of Texas delivered himself of this scriptural sentiment: "Men from the South must not be required to take this young Samson, the People's party, and lay it on the altar of Democracy, but they would accept the Joshua of Nebraska if they could be assured of a candidate for the vice-presidency." A Missouri delegate eloquently announced when his State was called: "We have nothing to say save that we are forninst the man from Maine," while a Texan remarked in language not to be exceeded in strength and directness that "Watson would remain on the ticket until hell freezes over."

In Australia horses and cattle are now being branded by electricity from storage batteries. The temperature is uniform and the brand safe and artistic.

WAITING FOR THE BALANCE

POLITICS MADE EASY

BY JOHN HENRY PATRICK

At last I had decided to be rid of all my doubts. For weeks my days and nights had been full of torture. I was growing nervous, almost hysterical, and my wife was adding to my torment every night and morning by begging me to tell her what great trouble was driving me insane. Poor Mary! what faith she did show in me. Any other woman in the world would have gone home to her mother confident in the belief that I had lost all love for her and was badly mixed up in some affair which must end in frightful scandal. But her good heart never harbored suspicion. She could believe that other men were wanderers, but not "her Jack;" no, no, he was the one lone man for whom the primrose path of dalliance was less attractive than the thorny one of duty.

But now the glad hour of relief was at hand, the mysteries were to be revealed, the crooked made straight. It might not be the most manly thing to do, but it was the quickest and the safest. I could stand the strain no longer. Either my mind had to give way or this one thing had to be done. So I rang Professor J. Dryden Black's bell, and was shown in to his waiting room.

I looked about at my companions, and recognized some of them at once as among the most prominent politicians of the city, democrats and republicans, but all worried, anxious, unhappy. It was a rare gathering of rare men. But what brought them to such a place, I wondered. Could it be that this strange professor held some secret for them, too?

At last my time came, and I stepped into the Professor's room, full of curiosity. He was a tall, wiry man—the Professor—with a strong aquiline nose and a pair of sharp eyes.

"Professor Black," I began, "I'm afraid I'm losing my head. You see it's this way, professor. I—"

"Democrat or republican?" inquired the professor, interrupting me and speaking in a sharp, jerky, counting-house way.

"Democrat," I answered.

"Right this way, sir. No time to lose to-day. Working from 7 in the morning till 12 at night. Step right in here, sir." And so speaking the professor opened one of the doors at the other end of his office.

"But, professor," I said, holding out my hand by way of protest. "I must explain, you see—"

"No need of explanation, sir. Thousands of similar cases. Just had a United States senator and a great editor. They've all got to come here. Sit right down there."

I sat down at a small table on which was a little machine that looked like a small windmill or an electric fan.

"Look straight at that," he said authoritatively, and he touched a button.

I looked, and saw revolving before me in brilliant silvery figures those haunting characters that had almost driven me crazy—"16 to 1." The loathsome things enchanted me now. I looked and looked and looked. At last I fell asleep. I know I did. For when I awoke—what a change!

"You're all right, now," said the professor. "The democratic platform won't trouble you again. I've got the only way you brainy men can find to bring you into line. What do you think of free coinage now?"

I stood up, drew back from the table a step, and raising my right hand toward the ceiling, shouted, "Why, gentlemen, it's the only salvation for the country. Shall we govern ourselves, or shall we remain forever the tools, the suppliant tools, of the money kings of Wall street and the bond-holding tyrants of Europe. Give me free silver and—"

And so I suppose I would have continued for hours—I, who had been so strong a gold man, a Clevelandite—if the professor had not reminded me that his time was precious.

I was a convert to free silver. My mind was clear. I saw it perfectly. The democrats and populists were right. All my trouble was gone. The scales had fallen from my eyes. No more need I worry myself crazy over "Coin" and Laughlin and Horace White and Senator Jones; no more headaches nor sleepless nights.

I paid the hypnotist his twenty-dollar fee gladly. If he had said fifty, it would have been the same. Now I could support my ticket in good conscience, and if I was wanted in Congress—well, I could stand on the platform now. Oh, it was good to be a democrat once again!

As I turned to go out of the office and told the professor of my gratitude, it occurred to me to ask what he did for free silver republicans who needed relief. He stepped to the other door at the end of the room, and showed me an apparatus just like the one that had charmed me into the democratic faith, and as he touched the button I saw that it gave forth in darts of golden light the word "Protection."

Dear Mary! how glad she was that evening as I came bounding up the steps! Poor girl, she cried as she saw my happy face. Like a woman, wasn't it?—not a tear when I was gradually going insane, but when I was saved she had to cry.

The luggage carried by Li Hung Chang filled up the greater part of one side of the court-yard of the Grand Hotel, Paris. It struck the ordinary spectator as decidedly shabby, consisting mostly of wooden boxes. There were two leather valises among it, and a case of champagne. One of the suite carried a cage containing two live fowls.

Some of Great Britain's latest guns will be employed for the first time during the autumn campaign in the Soudan. They carry a highly explosive shell ten miles, and each shell is capable of disabling two hundred of the enemy. These guns have such a rapid-fire capacity that before the first shell bursts three others are on the way in the same direction.

Miss Florence Lauterbach, daughter of Edward Lauterbach, president of the New York Republican County Committee, has begun the study of law as a student in the office of her father.

RICHARD LE GALLIENNE

BY ELIZABETH KNIGHT TOMPKINS

The sound of this name alone awakens expectations which only genius could fulfill. Richard is solid, substantial good sense, to be depended on in literary emergencies, well-balanced, clear, logical—English: Le Gallienne is lightness and grace, with that peculiarly happy turn for expression which associates itself with tongues that are French. Of course the sound is deceptive, we say to ourselves. No man could unite these qualities in himself—at least he could perfectly well, but he almost never does, outside the world of fiction, wherein a man can look and be and feel and think and do all in the same little 6x2 exterior, and nobody seems especially surprised at it, which is stranger yet. That is what we say when our ears have caught only the music of his name, which has been in the air for the past two or three years, and the music of his phrases has not yet reached us. When we once begin to read, we struggle a while with incredulity, saying: "The man is writing better than he knows how; he can't keep it up," and then he does keep it up, and we struggle a while longer and finally give in and exclaim: "A new prophet has arisen out of Israel." And henceforth Richard Le Gallienne is a word with which to exorcise the evil demons of literary pessimism. We hear with sorrowful forebodings that his health is poor, that his nights are mostly nuits blanches, spent propped up on pillows, wrestling with the foul fiend asthma; and we wonder with a keen personal regret if he is destined before long to join Thrysis and Adonais, Lycidas and the rest of that glorious company whom the gods love. The man has an unusual faculty for awakening a personal interest in his readers; he does not have to force his preferences on indifferent or inattentive ears; we are eager to know even the details of his last sleepless night, although that is what he never tells us. It grieves us to remember that we count for nothing in his life; it really seems as if such a strong sense of sympathy must be mutual. We are interested in him not only as a thinker and an artist in words, but as a lover, and the tragedy of his life, which pervades everything he writes, is as constantly in our minds as in his. We feel about his "White-Soul" and her death as he does in regard to two other lovers: "Surely, I felt, God owed more than He could ever repay to these two lovers, whom it had been so easy to leave to their simple joys."

One of the most encouraging thoughts about Le Gallienne is that his later books are a distinct advance on his earlier ones; the artisan is becoming more and more merged in the artist. The "Religion of a Literary Man" is full of thought, but it is thought conceived under the influence of others. It is a perfectly legitimate influence; nothing is stolen or borrowed, but the book belongs to the school of Matthew Arnold rather than to the individual Le Gallienne. He stops just where his master does in his conclusions, on a side-hill, and, like him, chooses to call it the bottom. Still I suppose it is difficult for an un-English mind to make sufficient allowance for English prejudice and reverence for things and ideas that have been, and to forgive the extent to which even the greatest English minds are unduly influenced by the past. In the same way, the first series of "Prose Fancies," for all the beauty of such sketches as "White-Soul," suggests Lamb and several others. The machinery of its construction, too, can still be heard rumbling away in the background.

The "Book-Bills of Narcissus," on the other hand, is distinctively original. It is a delicious idyl, overflowing with humor and pathos, like everything else of Le Gallienne's, and taking our breath away with its quaintness and unexpectedness of expression, marred only by a superfluity of inverted commas. It seems ungrateful to make small criticisms on a book that charms away our senses as this one does; but in the principle that underlies it this is more than a small criticism. We keep asking ourselves why an author who has in so unusual a degree the courage of his opinions should apologize in this way for the turn of his phrases. It is a comfort to see that this tendency is less noticeable in his later works.

"Retrospective Reviews, a Literary Log," is both discouraging and encouraging to the modest reviewer, discouraging because it makes him feel the perfunctory commonplace, the uninspired mediocrity of his own attempts, and encouraging because it proves conclusively that book reviews can be literature, and spurs him on to another encounter with the troops of ready-made phrases and job-lot criticisms that flock into his head at the sight of a book and a pen in combination.

The second series of "Prose Fancies" (Herbert Stone & Co., Chicago) is a distinct improvement on the first series in more ways than one, but in none so much as that the author now monopolizes our attention. He suggests no one but himself to our minds. Then, it is more even; almost none of the Fancies remind us that our author earns his living by the creations of his brain, or that they were written for any other reason than the pure love of putting beautiful thoughts in a less perishable form. Perhaps the exquisiteness of the style and the exuberance of the fancy are the two qualities which impress us the most in this little book—after a certain indescribable something which we will call deliciousness, a felicitous something which makes us laugh with a sudden sense of gratification, even when there is no apparent humor.

GERTRUDE ATHERTON
THE CALIFORNIAN NOVELIST WHO IS NOW WRITING BOOK CRITIQUES FOR LONDON "VANITY FAIR"

If we want fine, idiomatic, rhythmical English, worthy of adorning a Rhetoric under the head Style, and not for the student to correct, either, we have only to open the book at random. Take the very first page and read the description of the locality in which is laid the scene of "A Seventh Story Heaven," an idyllic little sketch that raises longings to go and do likewise, to leave stupid conventionalities for stupid people who know and can know no better things. Here it is:

"It lies aside from the great exchange which looks like a scene from 'Romeo and Juliet,' in the moonlight, from the town hall from whose clocked and gilded cupola ring sweet chimes at midnight, and whence, thronged above the city, a golden Britannia, in the sight of all men, is seen visibly ruling the waves—while in the square below the death of Nelson is played all day in stone, with a frieze of his noble words about the pedestal. England expects! What an influence that stirring challenge has yet upon the hearts of men may be seen by any one who will study the faces of the busy imaginative cotton brokers, who, in the thronged and humming mornings, sell what they have never seen to a customer they will never see."

"About the Securities" is a pathetic little Fancy that suggests autobiography, and so does "Death and Two Friends," although the author expressly tells us that it was written "before an event in the writer's life to which, erroneously, some have supposed it to refer." At all events, it was a premonition.

It is hard to be perfectly unbiased in judging Le Gallienne with the musical combinations of sound and sense that he gives us still in our ears, and the tears and the smiles that he invokes simultaneously still in our eyes, and on our lips; it is hard to forget his interesting personality, and think calmly and dispassionately; how will it be five, ten years from now? Is that which charms us so greatly literature, or is its influence due to a certain facility of expression backed by a wonderfully accurate pulse for the spirit of the times? Are we carried away by him because he is of the stuff of which great writers are made, or because his thoughts and the clothes he puts on them are of the same fashion as our own? Time only will tell. This is one of Le Gallienne's greatest charms, this wonderful modernness of his. He is so completely in the current that we resign ourselves to his guidance in absolute security that he will not run us up against old-fashioned prejudices and antiquated superstitions.

CHRISTIAN CHURCH CONVENTION

While the Christian Church convention was in session at Santa Cruz, every morning found hundreds of members assembled on a great rock by the ocean for the sunrise prayer meeting. It must have brought back to the sun strange memories of his ancient worshipers, of Memnon's sonorous greeting, of dawn hymns sung on the roofs by muffled figures turned toward the East. Poor dethroned king, he is now merely a combination alarm clock and hot air furnace, and his absence would have been nothing more than a trifling inconvenience to the worshipers on Prayer rock. Perhaps he realized that if one can't be a divinity, one can at least be a good janitor, for he did his best, without envy or malice. After this service, the members of the convention separated for fishing, driving and swimming, being wise enough to consider the bodily well-being as well as the spiritual, and human enough to take keen delight in the fresh salt air that floods the Santa Cruz beaches.

The convention held its first meeting on the afternoon of July 27th, at the Garfield Park tabernacle. Thirty-six societies were present, represented by one hundred and twenty-three delegates, and the time was devoted to reviewing the work accomplished by the various Christian churches, reading papers and considering suggestions.

The next evening everybody went to the tabernacle to hear Susan B. Anthony's address on Woman's Suffrage, resolutions in favor of which were afterards adopted. The same day articles of incorporation of the Christian Church of California were filed in the County Clerk's office. Its object is to proclaim the gospel of Christ and to convert the world to Christianity. It will not exercise ecclesiastical control or interfere with the discipline of the local churches, and there is no capital stock.

The remaining days of the convention were taken up largely with religious meetings and business reports. The latter were very favorable, showing that the church is rapidly increasing in membership and that, in spite of hard times, the collections have been very good. Before the next meeting, Garfield Park will be much improved. It has already been planted with trees and palms, but wild grasses and tar weed have vanquished the intended lawns and disfigured the circle around the Tabernacle. The land owned by the church is known as Christian Park, and extensive improvements for this are planned. Next season the members will be able to erect their tents and buildings on their own property instead of renting land outside for those purposes.

THE MORNING PRAYER

During the Christian Church Convention at Garfield Park, Santa Cruz, the morning service was conducted on Prayer Rock, a picturesque promontory which juts some distance into the bay

MAJOR-GENERAL N. T. JAMES
A PROMINENT UNDERWRITER, APPOINTED BY GOVERNOR BUDD TO SUCCEED THE LATE GENERAL DIMOND
Photo by Imperial Studio

THINGS AND PEOPLE

Though the bicycle habit has not the social vogue it originally enjoyed, that is not the basis for assuming that wheeling is among the lost arts of women. At first, cycling ranked as a fad, a novel diversion, but its pleasures soon wore on its devotees among the smart set, whose bikes became bores, or merely the excuse for fugitive outings. But the others, the girls and matrons who, having learned to ride for fun, kept on for the exhiliration of the rapid motion—for the health and vigor this open air exercise conferred—they are more enthusiastic than ever. You see them out in the Park early in the morning—often alone—more frequently with husbands, brothers, lovers, perhaps, flitting rapidly over the smooth road to the Cliff. There is an assumption, I know, that better class females do not go awheeling on the Sabbath, but with this verdict I cannot agree. Though the successful guidance of a bike lends rather more punctuation to conversation than is agreeable, feminine companionship is as much a joy in cycling as it is grateful in other pursuits. Time was when one saw but few tandems in the Park, and then only with men astride. I counted twelve couples—in two instances, girls alone—in the rest, males and maidens sliding along swift as light and with evident enjoyment. The restrictions of business leave few hours to an industrious man, which he may devote to the wheel—it is not extraordinary then that the leisure of Sunday is made use of. It is a strong feeling for the convenances which would prevent a woman making use of the same opportunity with its certainty of companionship. On the road last Sunday between the Panhandle and the porch of the Cliff House abomination I counted sixty-four feminine wheelists, of whom only a dozen wore skirts. The others rode diamond frames, in bloomers—despite the fashionable edict which condemns pantaloons. It cannot truly be said, however, that time or practice add to the charms of the lady cyclist, though it may be assumed a woman of graceful figure will look as well on a wheel as in street dress. This last leaves me regretfully to conclude that the women I watched would have lacked physical charm under any circumstances. Among the exceptions I noted a young matron well known in society, a tall, slim blonde, who looked exceedingly smart in a light check skirt, a blue shirt waist and a chip straw hat. The effect was excellent and a relief. The variations on bloomer effects observable are amusing. One pretty and well set up girl, in severe black, wore golf stockings of the latest coloring, which she filled to advantage. Every man she passed gazed admiringly at her limbs, and it is safe to believe there will be a score of similarly clothed calves in view next Sunday.

***

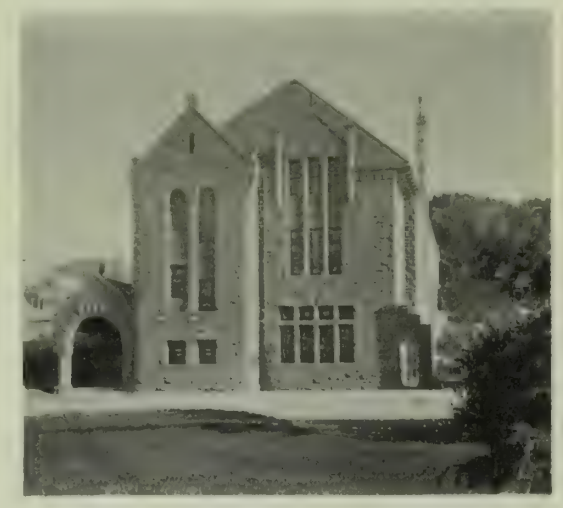
The Republican split in Oakland with Hilborn and Judge Frick on opposite sides of the bloody chasm has infused hope into the hearts of the Democracy. Prior to this development of hostilities within the ranks of the dominant party there were no candidates for the role of Congressman from the Third. Now, the woods are so full of them that the committee hesitates to call the district convention together for fear of a blockade. Remembering it is the home of statesmen of which we speak, this condition is only natural. The "Ole Bill" contingent has a candidate in the person of Warren English; the Fitzgerald wing of the party thinks Matt Tarpey who was not acceptable to them for National Committeeman, would make an admirable Congressman. The intermediate faction is impressed by the capabilities of Alec Baum, a bright young lawyer of the environment. Seth Mann, who is associated in business with Congressman Maguire, aspires also, and is understood as having the moral support of that distinguished politician. There being neither Gallaghers nor Tracys in Oakland, this support cannot be regarded as a factor—it is merely a "Bless you, my boy, go in and win." There are also attorneys from Willows, and, as one might expect, Henry McPike, whose persistency deserves better reward than the continual disappointment which besets his efforts. Truly a proud crowd of aspirants, who will all be generously envious of the man who carries off the palm.

***

The anticipation of winning California has bred in the Democracy a congregation of Senatorial candidates. The Legislative Committee of the State Central organization is composed, with certain exceptions, of men who wish to wear Senator Perkin's toga. There is W. W. Foote, for instance—hailing from the native land of statesmen, Alameda county—his pretensions are natural. Steve White wishes to supervise the selection of men who may vote for him two years hence. James G. Maguire throbs with Senatorial ambitions—feels he would adorn the upper halls of Congress—an impression he shares with certain Gallaghers and Tracys of his political family. Governor Budd's aspirations are so general that it would require a code commission to classify them, but in the list is a desire to go to Washington. He also proposes attending the meetings of this committee to assist in assorting Senators and Assemblymen. The chairman, Frank Gould, expects to succeed Governor Budd next election, and is there for prominence, while Gavin McNab and Congressman Caminetti are negative quantities, and being without aspiration are there for the good of the cause best presented. It is possible the proceedings of this body will furnish food for piquant comment through the campaign, as it is rare so many men wanting the same prize are pitted against each other's pretensions so early in the political game.

***

Among the guests at the Occidental Hotel is a stout, vigorous, bespectacled, square jawed gentleman, whose identity is revealed to an unsuspecting community by his watch chain. This is a ponderous arrangement of letters and chains in solid gold, which spells from vest pocket to pocket the name of E. F. Kellner. That chain, together with certain diamond accompaniments, cost its wearer the Governorship of Arizona. It is an interesting story of a single vanity indulged to the fullest extent, and the terrible consequences. Kellner is the wealthiest man in that territory, engaged at Phoenix in a business which yields him $25,000 per annum and also at Globe, where his store makes a profit of $50,000 every year. He has mines and properties yielding large returns, and possesses the means of gratifying this single weakness, for in all other respects he is a most sensible man. This weakness is an inordinate desire for jewelry. He has superb diamond shirt studs, ponderous lockets, an emerald in his collar button, and cuff links studded with gems. He has precious stones and gold for all articles of apparel, and would be a prize of the first magnitude to the bunco-steerer smart enough to guide him to his lair. The story goes that when Cleveland was elected President his fellow citizens determined that E. F. Kellner, a respected and solid merchant, a man who had grown up with the territory and capable of aiding its further development, was of all others the individual for Governor of Arizona. He was generously and authoritatively recommended in such positive terms that his appointment seemed certain. In an unlucky moment he decided to go East to press his own suit. Kellner went to Washington, and after the usual formalities, was admitted to the presence of the President. Invited by the great man to seat himself, the Arizonan threw open his vest, displaying the full wealth and glory of his precious adornments. No duchess need have blushed above the diamonds that adorned the facade of his shirt; the historic chain spread its links and letters across his stomach. Cleveland blinked at the magnificent spectacle. The conversation which had begun cordially subsided into a chilly silence. The luster of the gold failed to thaw the temperature. Kellner retired, and a few days afterwards the successful merchant and able administrator was "turned-down" for an insignificant person named Franklin, who had neither recommendations nor jewelry. It seems the glory of Kellner had been too much for the President.



NEW EDIFICE OF HOWARD PRESBYTERIAN SOCIETY

***

It is neither an impressive nor a beautiful building in which the Howard Presbyterian Society is now housed. It is a stone structure located at the entrance to the Park, and has more the appearance of a hall than of a chapel. It is massive rather than graceful, and there is neither meaning nor suggestion of ecclesiastical condition in the stone facade, which salutes the bicyclist as he enters the Panhandle. The institution was dedicated last Sunday. It is virtually free from debt, and so the congregation was relieved of the painful necessity of listening to a depressing appeal for financial aid. The main auditorium is on the second floor, with room for some four hundred people. The dedication services under the direction of Dr. Fountain R. Farrand, were properly elaborate. The Howard Presbyterian Society is one of the oldest organizations in the State. It was organized in May, 1850, in a carpenter shop on Natoma street. Later

QUEEN VICTORIA
WHOM THE NEWSPAPER CORRESPONDENTS INSIST IS ABOUT TO ABDICATE THE THRONE OF GREAT BRITAIN
THE LATEST PHOTOGRAPH OF HER MAJESTY

W. D. M. Howard, from whom the street and church are named, endowed the society with a lot upon which was built the first hard-finished structure in San Francisco, the lumber for which was brought all the way from Maine.

***

The romantic period of California's history is recalled by the death of an old miner named Reagan, who expired last week in St. Mary's hospital. A survivor of the early and interesting days, when Eagle Bar was a popular region, the days which still live in the pages of Bret Harte, he departed alone, forgotten by comrades. The story of this man's life brings one back to the conditions of early-day mining. When Leland Stanford was elected a justice of the peace at Eagle Bar in 1856, he appointed Reagan constable, and there was established between them a friendship which furnished the basis of an inestimable service some years later. From El Dorado, Stanford went to Sacramento, established himself in business, and in due course was elected Governor. Reagan continued mining on the Bar in partnership with a heavy-set pugilistic Englishman, with whom he had established friendly relations. At the time of the great Heenan-Sayers mill Reagan and his chum speculated much over the result, and on mail day both took a holiday, and set out for Placerville to obtain the earliest news. On the way to town they discussed the contest with growing warmth, the Englishman advocating Sayers and Reagan insisting on the staying qualities of his adversary. Whiskey added to the feeling, and that night, tramping home without obtaining news of the decision, they set to fighting on their own account. The Englishmen knocked Reagan down and sat upon him, whereupon the latter, drawing a clasp knife, buried it several times in the conqueror's neck. There was little sympathy for the murdered man, who was a quarrelsome fellow, but Reagan was captured, convicted of murder in the second degree and sentenced to San Quentin for life.

***

In the meantime Stanford, elected Governor of the State, was on his way to Sacramento for inauguration. The plight of his old associate moved him to sympathy, but of his intentions he said not a word. Reagan, in charge of the sheriff, reached the capital on the day of the ceremony, which his escort waited over to witness. Returning to jail, the sheriff found an official envelope notifying him that the Governor had been pleased to grant his prisoner a full pardon. It was Stanford's first official act. History does not record aught of this subsequent meeting, but Reagan, broken by his troubles—his hair had turned white—retired to a rocky canyon on the American River, and there passed the remainder of his days, washing barely enough gold to keep him in food and clothing. He never stirred out save for provisions, and lived sad and lonely for thirty-six long years. A few months ago certain half-forgotten relatives in San Francisco learned that the old man's wits were failing him at last, and one of them traveled to the rough little cabin off the river. He returned with Reagan, whom he found a hopeless invalid, and his final days were passed comfortably enough in the hospital.

***

Eagle Bar is by no means abandoned in these fin de siecle days. Though the age of its glory, when it had three thousand natives and as many aliens, has long gone by, gold is still found there. Twelve months ago George Whittell and J. M. Cunningham of the Luning estate bought the right to mine at Eagle Bar, persuaded thereto by a certain engineer, who promised rich results on the investment. Unfortunately this functionary was not equal to his undertaking. He put in coin building a road, and sunk in the hillside a shaft, instead of tunneling, as the expert had prescribed. The result was a considerable loss, which a new management is endeavoring to repair. It is credible that there should be much gold in the sands over Eagle Bar, as it was only the surface the pioneer miners worked, and the layer of debris is deep above the bed-rock. Besides, in these days of improved methods and chemical decompositions the infinitesimal grain is obtainable at an expenditure per ton which makes its extraction a profitable operation.

The inevitable question, Lackey, or Lac-Kay, was being discussed in all its moods and tenses at rehearsal on the Columbia stage the other morning. Frawley took part, so also did Worthing and Harry Corson Clarke. Finally the subject, Wilton Lackaye, was applied to for final determination.

"Don't ask me," he replied. "Worcester says Lac-Kay and Webster Lac-Key, and who am I, to decide when lexicographers differ?"

Lackaye is authority for this story about Barrymore. It seems Barry, as they call him in the profession, had been supporting Mrs. Bernard Beere, who was playing a New York engagement at the big house then known as Hamerstein's and now familiar as "Koster & Bial's." It was a highly-spiced society drama, full of exotic situations and equivocal dialogue, but in spite of stars and play, the business was light. Meeting the leading man, Lackaye remarked: "What's this I hear, Barry—they say that play's obscene."

"That wouldn't make any difference, old fellow," was the reply. "The place is so big you cannot hear a word."

***

Another tale illustrating the quickness of retort which characterizes Maurice Barrymore. Accompanying Manager J. M. Hill home from a rehearsal of "Money Mad," the twain passed a blind beggar rattling piteously at a zither. Hill, who was a pompous person, stopped, and with a grand air, drew some copper change from his pocket and dropped it into the mendicant's hat.

"It is a rule of mine never to pass a beggar without almsgiving," he commented in philanthropic tones. "But, Barry, those fellows have no gratitude."

"Bless you," replied Barry, with an encouraging pat, "the fellow is blind, and will never know those were pennies you gave him."

INDIAN EDUCATION

A Gathering of Teachers Entrusted With the Cultivation of the Red Man.

On Monday evening the convention of Indian teachers had its first session at the Girls' High School. These gatherings were inaugurated three years ago, with the purpose of bringing the educators of the Indians together to exchange views and become acquainted with each other. The United States Government is making great efforts to save the remnant of the aboriginal population of this continent by education and training. Of all the countless red men who called this their country when Columbus stepped ashore, not more than about a quarter of a million are left, and these are dwindling away rapidly under the influence of a superior civilization. About a quarter of a century ago the first attempts at rescuing them from annihilation were made, and these attempts have at length grown into an extensive educational system. Upwards of forty thousand Indian children are at present being trained and taken care of in the Indian schools, and twenty thousand more are gradually being brought under the same influence. At first these institutions were run in a way similar to the common schools of the country, but at present the chief object is to make the Indian self-supporting by teaching him a trade. Agriculture, or farming, is the main thing that the Indians are taught, that being the only line in which they could compete with white men, and for this reason Indian schools and agencies have farms of their own, which are worked by white farmers with the assistance of the Indian pupils.

A number of the California Indians are found in Lake County, north of the Bay of San Francisco, and in single settlements and bands as far as Klamath River, on the banks of which there are several thousand. A great many are located in the Pitt River valley and its tributaries, and between here and Southern California, where there are a dozen small settlements.

There are now twenty day schools and three boarding schools for the Indians of this State, the most successful being the ones in Hoopa Valley, near the Klamath River, and in Perris, near Riverside.

A great deal of attention is paid to the education of the girls. They do the domestic work of the schools, and are taught housework, cooking and washing, sewing and dress-making. Their decorative instincts are also encouraged, for when it dawns on the Indian mind that a room is a thing to be beautiful, a first step has been made towards realizing what the word home means. Social life is made as prominent as possible, and every opportunity is given for social intercourse, for one of the hardest things to contend with is the Indian's utter lack of sympathy with the advancement of women. Treat a squaw like a human being! The idea is utterly incomprehensible to him. He has always looked upon the woman as his slave, created merely for his pleasure and comfort, and standing in constant need of correction with a club. The school is trying to root out this idea, and to accustom the Indian youth to look upon his sister as an equal and a creature of understanding, but he does not take kindly to the notion, and the task is discouragingly difficult.

One of the greatest drawbacks in the effort to civilize the Indian is found in the unreasoning prejudice of the white population against him. They still cling to the old idea that the only good Indian is a dead Indian. Nevertheless, he has his lawful place in the scale of humanity, and there is no denying that he has been persecuted and robbed without mercy. Instead of ostracising him from white society, it is our business to try to make amends for the way we have treated him; having helped him down to the depths of degradation, it is only fair that we should try to help him up again.

The Indian race is well gifted, chiefly with artistic taste, and the power to execute artistic work. Not only drawing and music, but every kind of handiwork is easy to them. They learn rapidly, and if we can teach them how to translate power into accomplishment they will soon become very useful members of our communities. They are not thieves and robbers, as many people consider them. Their honesty as a whole stands upon a considerably higher level than that of their white neighbors. When they go cattle stealing, they do so because they are hungry, and they are hungry because the white men have taken their land and killed their game, without teaching them how to make a living or how to provide for themselves in any other way. It is for the purpose of righting these wrongs inflicted by past generations that the United States Government has taken upon itself the task of educating the Indians, of teaching them some of the arts for which their natural talents prepare them, and of turning them into good citizens.

At the convention papers were read on the different systems of educating the Indians, a great deal of stress being laid on the importance of manual training. Miss M. Burgess urged the necessity for removing the children from the reservations. To carry the Indian to civilization, she said, cost much less than to carry civilization to the Indian, and was much more effective. The picture shows four of the Indian school girls, Misses Prudie and Edna Eaglefeather of Osage, Oklahoma; Miss Pierr of Silets, Oregon, and Miss Kruger of Chimawa—the latter twain being duly accredited teachers, and present as delegates to the convention. The Eaglefeathers, as members of the Oklahoma tribe, the richest Indians in the States, are well-to-do, and have been educated to be self-supporting. The elder has taken a course at the Drexel Institute in Philadelphia, and is a competent typewriter and stenographer. Her sister is learning millinery, and shows taste and aptitude. They are traveling with Miss Burgess, who shows these young women as the proofs of her educational theories. Dr. Hailman, Superintendent of the Indian schools, presides over the convention, assisted by Dr. A. H. Heineman and Professor Rakestraw, who are supervisors of Indian schools.

EDUCATED INDIAN MAIDENS ATTENDING THE CONVENTION OF TEACHERS IN SAN FRANCISCO
Photo by Marceau

The rumor that Henry Irving is thinking of playing Robespierre in a drama by Sardou recalls the fact that the hero of the French Revolution has already been a figure in the English drama. Something more than twenty-five years ago Edmund Falconer, then celebrated as a dramatist and actor, attempted the character in a play of his own making, but with such a rich Irish brogue that it became much more of a comedy than a tragedy.

AN INDIAN FAMILY ON GENRAL BIDWELL'S RANCH AT CHICO

FEMININE ATHLETES

The feminine question in athletics is vigorously asserted at the Orpheum this week by the Nelson Sisters. Their act consists of tumbling and balancing, and ranks with the best acrobatic performances we have ever had here. They are wonderfully dextrous, extraordinarily swift of movement, and though muscled like Japanese wrestlers and built like battle ships, these young women are as supple as indiarubber. What discount for sex?—you wonder, after watching these deep-chested maidens hurl each other around as one might a handball—such shoulders and arms and thighs and legs. They might be football players, and yet with those limbs built to sustain great weights they could only be acrobats.

THE NELSON SISTERS
Photo by Fearnaught, Louisville

Four young women in pink tights, flitting over the Orpheum stage lightly as cats, the cynosure of a thousand eyes, performing impossible feats with easy grace, leave an impression on the retina which the same maidens seen in conventional garb do not suggest. One of them, Lily, is taller, more shapely than her sisters, but the shortest and strongest of the four is the eldest, Anita—she who balances her sister at impossible angles on a ladder. They have dark eyes—at least, Lily has; large, Spanish orbs—and strong rather than handsome faces. But their great strength has been gained at the expense of all delicacy of outline—their powerful limbs, like round towers, are so muscled that the soft curves of the calf, of the thigh, the long graceful lines of the Diana, of the Venus de Medici, are broken by protuberant sinews, hard as steel.

Miss Anita, who alone of the sisters has much English, though they were born of English parentage, but in Buenos Ayres, talks intelligently of their life and acrobatic achievements.

"To be an acrobat, you must inherit first, and then begin tumbling while yet a baby. My father," she continued, "is George Nelson, who for eighteen years piloted a circus through the Southern Americas. He commenced giving me lessons on my third birthday. He himself is an acrobat, and a very strong man. English? Yes. My mother, too—but we were born where the language was Spanish and never talked any other tongue. It is so long ago that I cannot remember when I commenced, nor can I think of a time when I could not do somersaults and handsprings, you know. But tumbling is only a part of what our father taught us. We can all ride—circus way—particularly my youngest sister here, who can do any trick on horseback. Dance, too—Spanish dances, of course, sing and perform on trapeeze and bars. That's easy. You can just say we can tumble because we were caught young and besides our father and mother and their fathers and mothers were acrobats. It comes to us naturally. Yes, there is a great deal of the knack inherited. I know that."

I have often been told that children in a circus are ill-used. So I asked Miss Nelson.

"Well, we get whipped some, not much. The whip helps, you see. One of my sisters could do nothing without a cut or two—just a reminder—quickened her muscles. Now father is older and much more patient, and he's teaching my little sisters. He never touches them, and they do splendidly. It's best not to whip if you can help it."

"Tell me by what particular exercise you made so much muscle," I asked Miss Nelson.

"Constant exercise," she answered. "I'll take any girl of strong constitution and engage to teach her enough tumbling to transform her figure. You see it increases the size of the thighs and strengthens the muscles of the back. She may not make an artist in our way, but still grow powerful. Now, the bars, and particularly the trapeze are best to strengthen the arms and shoulders."

"Is there any comparison to be made between the strength of men and of women?" I asked.

"A man who is strong is generally stronger than a woman, no matter if she be an acrobat," she answered. "There are female Sampsons, but such great strength is an accident, I think. My brother had a training less severe than my father gave me, yet he is much stronger and bigger."

Miss Nelson told me she thought her profession a fairly good one; it paid well and was not more dangerous than any other. The girls are not restricted to any diet—eat all they want, amuse themselves in a normal way, and the younger sisters are carefully guarded from temptation by the elder, who is a stern chaperone, and never lets them out of her sight. No late suppers for these muscular young ladies, nor oysters, nor roast beef sandwiches with pickles at midnight

A LANE IN THE LATIN QUARTER

FURRY SOUBRETTES

Herr Techow's Wonderful Cats at the Orpheum.

Watching Herr Techow's trained cats trip about on the stage of the Orpheum, one would never dream of the months and years of patient labor that have been spent on those yellow-eyed soubrettes. It all seems as easy and natural as if, in a moment of inspiration, he had said to a number of feline friends: "Let's go and play games," and they had said, "Let's," and forthwith gone on the stage. Trained dogs often have a harassed air, and seem pitifully nervous about results, but cats have a natural brassiness that carries them through without a qualm, and a personal dignity which forbids the very mention of a stick. One realizes that under no circumstances were Herr Techow's performers ever ill-treated, and that they reserve the right to throw up their job the moment th y please. Their master takes them very seriously, as one must who has spent twelve months teaching a four-footed beast to walk on its two front legs, but he is kindness and patience personified.

"I worked at my cats three years before I took them on the stage," he said, speaking with a strong German accent. "I take a cat when it is about a year old—a kitten is too fly-away, and hasn't enough intelligence—and begin by simply getting acquain ed with it. I feel it, s av with it, call it by name on every occasion, until it gets really attached to me, and knows me from everybody else. We spend weeks just in ge ting intimate."

"And then what is the first step?" I asked.

"I take a piece of meat, and hold it out so," answered Herr Techow, getting up to illustrate his words, with me as the cat. "Then I walk away, and the cat follows, until she gets the meat. Gradually in that way she learns to follow my motions. From there I go on. Take the cat of mine who walks on its fore legs, balancing its body in the air. There is a trick which took me a year to get into pussie's head. I used to lift up her hind legs, and make her walk so every day, until her muscles were strengthened, and she would do it of her own accord.'

"Do you ever beat them?"

"Oh, never. You have to beat a dog occasionally, and when you do, it always makes you better friends, but a cat would never forgive you. You could not do a thing with her after that. No, I never use anything more than a word, or a light tap with my stick, just to show what I mean."

PROFESSOR TECHOW'S FELINE SOUBRETTES

I wanted to know what trick was the most difficult.

"Perhaps the one in which the cat goes in and out between my feet, and then jumps over a stick. It took a long time to teach that. Oh, I could train a dozen dogs in the time it takes me to teach one cat. They are far less clever."

"Is there a difference in cats?"

"Oh, yes. I can tell by the look of the eyes whether one will be worth training or not. I have every kind, of course—French, German, Persian, Angora, everything. In New York I keep twenty in reserve, training them whenever I have time, in case one of these should die. Of course, I choose a cat partly for its looks—mine must all be prettily marked—but the expression of the face has a great deal to do with my choice. Perhaps the cleverest member of my family at present is the one who jumps through a hoop of fire. They make good tight rope walkers, because their tails are such fine balancing poles. Oh, it all takes time, time and patience," Herr Techow added solemnly, "but I keep on, and at last it steals over them what I want. Then we are all right."

THE DAGO AT HOME

A Glimpse of the Latin Quarter of San Francisco.

When the theaters announce that the scene of a new play is laid in the Latin Quarter of Paris, the inhabitants come down from the hills to see it; but a trip through the real Latin Quarter of San Francisco would never occur to them. Italian operas, Greek dramas, Dago burlesques, run day and night in its quaint streets, and nobody knows or cares except the art students, who revel in its kerchiefed women and swarthy babies. They, on their part, however, do not always appreciate the picturesque qualities of the artist, and curse him roundly in many varieties of Dago if he stays too long in their crowded alleys. However, such objurgation but adds to the local color of the environment. The Quarter is full of individuality, of color, of tumble-down tenements and clothes lines glowing with red and blue garments. Grouped round the corners you see women with kerchiefs or shawls twisted about their heads in a way that reminds you of Florentine byways. No ward of the region is more foreign than Pollack Place, a cul de sac on the slopes of Telegraph Hill. Here the bootblacks and lime peddlers live, and the traveling musicians never find any lack of girls to dance to their playing. Above them towers the old "castle," full of picturesque suggestion, even if it is only a beer hall, owned by one Adolph Sutro. In the days of its prosperity as a dance hall and saloon, a cable used to connect it with the dancing world that lived in the lower altitudes, its patrons not belonging to that class known as carriage company.

In this, the oldest part of the city, one occasionally comes across a shabby, ramshackle tenement that keeps a few forlorn traces of its better days, for in early times this was the truly aristocratic quarter. Fashion left it and drifted down across Market street and out to Rincon Hill, then back to Van Ness avenue, and now is steadily climbing the Pacific Heights and out along Broadway, though no man can tell which way she will jump next. Only one thing is sure, and that is she will never go back to any spot she has once left. The few dismal relics that the excavations of the hill have left will never be cheered in their old age by younger generations of their own rank in life. They are hopelessly left behind.

The shanties that cling to the east slope of Telegraph Hill belong to the fishermen, who crowd the wharves below, and flock to Lucchetti's for their dinners, savory with garlic and onion, and set off by a bottle of raw claret when he can afford it. The Mexicans of lower Broadway patronize Luna's, near the church of St. Francis, while Italians, students and Bohemians gather at Martinelli's and the Bon Gusto. To be quite correct, you must first get an appetizer in the shape of an Amer-Picon, then give yourself over to ravislio and spaghetti and liberal quantities of Dago "footjuice." If that does not prove you a genuine disciple of the Latin Quarter, nothing will.

It is a grand occasion in our little Italy when the military companies turn out. Antonio climbs down from his garbage cart and Lorenzo deserts his fruit wagon, and soon, with cocks' feathers on their heads, music playing and flags flying, they are marching proudly through the narrow streets, past the admiring women on the doorsteps and the staring babies in their arms. The members of these companies are largely recruited from the scavangers, and if one of these dies, the funeral is the occasion of a grand display. In all pomp and glory they descend into the town, playing the Dead March, and traverse as many prominent streets as possible on their way to the graveyard. They are a picturesque sight, as intensely in earnest as children playing funeral, and not a little amusing to the undramatic American mind.

A glance at the geography of San Francisco will show at once why the foreign colony has settled in this corner of the city. Close by lie the fish market and the wharves, while the fruit business is centered between Clay and Sansome streets and the waterfront. Most of the foreigners make their living in gathering and selling fruit and fish, so it is not strange that they should settle on the hills close above. Besides, the skies up there are truly blue, not gray, as they look from below, and that alone would be reason enough to an Italian.

In these days of the new womanhood the eternal feminine is being exaggerated to an alarming extent by the persistent application to her of such terms as authoress, lecturess, reformeress, doctoress, lawyeress, and whatnot. The canons of English usage do not require feminine terminations except in cases where it is absolutely necessary for the sake of clearness, and as an antidote to ambiguity. To say that Mrs. Smith is an authoress is as redundant as to say that she is a female woman or a widow lady. As a matter of fact, the feminine word actress is the only noun of its kind which has become naturalized and that might be readily dispensed with without offering either insult or injury to the English language.

Marriages by proxy are contracted to this day in Holland, and are mostly practiced by Dutchmen who, having gone abroad, prefer to marry the girls they left behind them in this convenient manner than to go to the expense and probable inconvenience of returning to Holland for the purpose of the ordinary marriage solemnization.

POLITICAL PERSONAGES

Senator Call of Florida is an adroit campaigner. In election time he travels among the common people, stopping over night at the cabins of the natives. His garb includes a pair of old trousers, in which there is a large rent. Invited to stop at a cabin over night, where he has been arguing questions with the farmer, he always accepts, and as he is about to retire says to his host: "I have a bad rip in this pair of pants. Will your good wife put a few stitches in them for me?" Of course the good wife is only too glad to have a chance to mend the trousers of a United States Senator. She stays up an hour darning the hole in her best style. Next morning the Senator is profuse in his thanks, but once he is well on his way a ready knife puts the trousers in the same condition, and they are ready for another experience.

Ex-Attorney-General Garland has given up his Washington residence, and elects to spend the remainder of his days at Hominy Hill, his Arkansas home. Garland was always a shy man, but after the Pan-Electric Telephone episode he became shyer than ever, and rarely visited even the Senate chamber, where he had before been so popular. Garland figured as one of the eccentric politicians at the Capitol, a softened edition of Davy Crockett and Sam Houston. His habitual garb was a loose-fitting suit of black, crowned with a light slouch hat, and he never could be persuaded to wear a dress suit. His life has been a sorrowful one, and he felt particularly the death of his daughter, an attractive young girl, who had become deeply religious, and in a fit of depression committed suicide.

Silas Bryan, the father of the Democratic candidate, was a politician, but a great man at prayer. He served in the Illinois legislature, and invariably before addressing the Chair dropped to his knees and offered a silent prayer. It was his custom, during the proceedings, when in doubt, to go down on his knees and ask guidance of the Almighty. Subsequently he was made a Circuit Judge, and it was his habit in the courtroom, while the attorneys were making arguments, to slide down behind the Bench and seek spiritual refreshment. Candidate Bryan is said to be as religious as his father, but is less demonstrative. His law partner, who is also his friend, announces that he never heard Bryan utter a word of profanity, and it is said, he never used tobacco or intoxicants in any form.

Ex-President Harrison is a candidate for the United State Senate from Indiana. He is to take the stump for McKinley and advocate sound money as against free silver, but refuses, it is said, to mention the candidate in his speeches. During the presidential campaign of 1888 Harrison made an average of five orations a day through Indiana, every one of which was recorded by Democratic stenographers. Yet so able is the man that though each speech was carefully scanned, they never yielded an opportunity for an accusation of inconsistency. Harrison, it is said, prefers the United States Senate to the White House, and, besides, Mrs. Harrison wishes to have a taste of public life at Washington.

Secretary Carlyle's glory as a politician has departed forever. He left the Senate, where he had a place for life, to enter the Cabinet, where he had a hard task-master and political striplings for associates. Throughout his life he had been a free silver man, and his success in Kentucky was due to his espousal of that cause. On becoming Secretary of the Treasury, however, his horizon broadened, and he announced that no greater evil could befall the country than the inauguration of the free coinage policy. Unfortunately, he lacked the moral courage to admit that his views had changed, and the attempt to appear consistent and square his record deprived his conversion and personality of either influence or value. He will return to law practice.

Thomas E. Watson, the nominee of the Populists for Vice-president, is nearly forty years old. He left the University at Macon in his sophomore year for lack of money, and in 1892 was elected a member of Congress. He is the man who leveled a general charge of drunkennes against Congressmen, and being taken to task in the House demanded the charge be formally investigated. The committee's verdict pronounced the charges false and libelous. Subsequently, in 1894, Watson was beaten for Congress by Black, after a terrific fight, and since then he has devoted himself to running a Populist newspaper in Atlanta.

The story that Arthur Sewall, the Democratic nominee for the vice-presidency, is worth six million is laughed at in Maine. His intimate friends estimate his wealth at but half a million dollars. The ship-yard, which the papers represent as the biggest in New England, is a small affair, consisting of but two buildings, a machine shop and a blacksmith and bending shop; and owing to the dullness of the industry, it has been closed down for the past three years. He owns shares in some twenty vessels, and his bank stock is worth sixty thousand dollars.

Governor Bradley of Kentucky attributes his election to an ancient overcoat which he wore stumping the State. The ingenuous mountaineers saw in the greasy garment proof positive that the candidate was of the people,, and so he triumphed—the first Republican Governor ever elected in Kentucky. It is not this overcoat, however, that Bradley wears at his duties in the executive mansion. The fateful garment reposes in a convenient cubboard, ready for emergencies.

Highest of all in Leavening Power.—Latest U. S. Gov't Report

Royal Baking Powder

ABSOLUTELY PURE

IN SOCIETY

How the Smart Set Has Amused Itself This Week.

Society has had a quiet dull summer season, but I suppose that minor events episodes worth in ordinary times a line have a column given them. The annual outing at Del Monte, however, promises a relief to this inactivity. This season it is not the "outing" of the Country Club, but rather the annual meet of the Pacific Coast Pony and Steeplechase Racing Association. This organization is composed of members of the Burlingame and other clubs and comprises the contingent given to polo and amateur racing. It was formed soon after the first race meet at Del Monte and now it has the entire celebration to itself—the shootists having retired in its favor. It is not extraordinary that pigeon-killing has given way finally to more exciting and humane sports. Since the annual shoot furnished an "Examiner" sensation there has been little interest in it. Though Society has not held absolutely aloof, it has offered no encouragement, and since the first season the Reds and Blues have boasted no feminine audiences for their achievements. Last August the Country Club was thrown so completely in the shade by the superior attractions of polo and racing that the members determined to relinquish the field to the horses. They promise to assist with their wives and daughters, but as spectators, and not actors.

Between polo, the paper chase, the colts parade, and the egg and spear race, together with the racing and steeplechasing of the Pony Association, the programme of entertainment is most attractive. Already the news of it going the rounds has proved a social incentive, and I am told of applications for rooms at Del Monte flowing in at a brisk rate. The manager suggests that those who would be comfortably housed apply for quarters at the earliest moment. It is not surprising that there should be a rush, inasmuch as many people have been saving themselves up for this outing. In the same connection, by the way, there is talk of having the tennis doubles at Del Monte at the same time. Over the races considerable interest prevails in regard to the degree of Walter Hobart's participation. Thus far he displays a tendency to be retiring. It is not probable he will show up with the array of horses and carriages that were so great a feature of last year's outing. He will probably participate, of course, but with his polo string rather than with his race horses. This gives a fairer field for the others and will really add to the interest and excitement of the meet.

Mr. and Mrs. Charles Baldwin have chosen the meet as the occasion of returning to the world. Since their marriage they have lived secluded at the Baldwin ranch, neither seen nor heard by the society in which they are so prominent. It is a veritable old time honeymoon they are having—an ordeal from which most brides and grooms shrink nowadays. I presume Mr. Baldwin will participate in the polo games at Del Monte. At Burlingame they are practicing for the contests, and there are prospects of close finishes. Besides the accident to Walter Newhall's coach there is one more interesting topic in San Mateo—the ball which the Will Crockers are to give. It will be a species of house-warming for society in general has seen nothing of the interior of this new home, the mural decorations of which Bruce Porter had the responsibility. The occasion of the entertainment is the presence of certain prominent mining people who have become interested in Prince Poniatowski's Calaveras mining enterprises.

Mrs. J. A. Folger gave a charming luncheon under the trees at San Rafael last Thursday. Mrs. W. S. Woods, Mrs. W. Gwin, Mrs. Webster Jones and several others were present.

A dinner of twelve was given at Mrs. Judge Garber's last Sunday in honor of General Forsythe.

Mr. and Mrs. H. M. A. Miller have been spending a few days at San Rafael.

Mr. and Mrs. Rudolph Spreckels are still at the Hotel Rafael, where Miss Marguerite Jolliffe is visiting them.

Mrs. Maude Berry Fisher will soon leave for New York.

Miss Amy Requa gave an engagement dinner last Friday, four engaged couples being present. These were Miss Claire Ralston and Dr. Bullitt, Miss Myra Prather and Harry Miller, Miss Luite Booth and Dr. Sherman, Miss Amy Requa and Captain Long. The decorations were in red, white and blue, in honor of Captain Long's profession.

The upsetting of Mr. George Newhall's coach last Sundty proved a serious affair. He, with his mother, Mrs. Jimmy Robinson and Gilbert Palache, undertook to drive from Burlingame to Spanish Town on his big black and red tally-ho, drawn by four spirited horses. West of the Crystal Springs Dam, and about three miles from San Mateo, the road becomes very narrow, passing between a bank and a ravine, and it was here that the horses took fright at a flock of turkeys. They soon became unmanageable, and Mr. Newhall, fearing the ravine, turned them up the bank. The coach was upset, pinning Mrs. Newhall, Mrs. Robinson and Mr. Palache to the ground, while Mr. Newhall was thrown among the struggling horses, who were soon quieted by the footman. Drs. Brown and Ward were summoned from San Mateo, and it was discovered that Mrs. Newhall had a badly fractured collar-bone. She is quite advanced in years, and a good deal of anxiety is felt about her. Mrs. Robinson had three ribs fractured, and Mr. Palache's nose was broken. Bruises and scratches were distributed around impartially. Certain worthy people might lay the blame of this catastrophe to coaching on Sunday, but if every man who aimed to drive a spirited four-in-hand were required to show a certificate of horsemanship, Sabbath-breaking would not be such a serious matter. Abroad, driving is made an earnest study under competent masters, for they recognize there that it takes more than muscle to manage four lively horses. Surely, enough bones have been sacrificed already at Burlingame to amateur experiments.

Miss Eloise Davis, youngest daughter of Dr. Henry C. Davis, was seriously injured while on a pleasure trip to Fort Bragg. With a party of six she was returning on a hand-car from a dinner party, when, through some accident, the handle of the car struck her at the base of the skull, paralyzing her from the waist downward. She was somewhat better by last reports, but is still in a serious condition. Dr. Davis went at once to Redwood Lodge, and as soon as possible they will return to their home in town.

Oh, for the "melancholy days" and their music, their bright lights, their magnificent, but, oh, so drear, chit chat, their dances, their everything. If it were not for the hope of the good things that are to come, the dull, stale, flat, unprofitable monotony of these midsummer days, might almost tempt one to try for the undiscovered country.

There is not even a bit of harmless gossip to read over and discuss—that is to say in town. At Del Monte they are speculating on the season to come and discussing what will undoubtedly be the next important engagement announcement—that of the young millionaire just returned from a successful South African trip and the charming young woman who so pleasantly performed the duties of chaperone to last season's beauty and belle. If the lady makes as successful a wife as she was a perfect chaperone—her charge married the catch of the season—the South African gentleman is thrice to be congratulated.

Besides gossiping at Del Monte, they are wearing velvet ribbon belts. The narrow velvet ribbon belt is the last freak of fashion, and will probably be carried into the coming season in town, though it is not likely to become common. It is both too expensive and too perishable. Miss Alice Hagar has a bewildering variety of belts and quite as many bands and buckles, though her favorite seems to be white velvet ribbon, fastened by a cameo buckle of exquisite design and most delicate workmanship.

Saturday is the "day off" at San Rafael, Sausalito and all the country places within reach of the city, for then their inhabitants come to town to shop and lunch and attend the matinee. At the afternoon performance of "Bohemia" on Saturday last, I saw ever so many San Rafaelites. All the Sloss family, the sisters, the cousins and the aunts, were there. Miss Goad, attended by her brother, came over from Sausalito. I sat directly opposite her, and I missed more than half the play admiring her, gazing upon her hair and eyelashes. Miss Goad is an ideal tailor-made girl, expressly designed by nature for a boiled shirt and starched collar.

The wedding of Miss Claire Ralston and Dr. Bullitt is set for Wednesday, the 19th, at St. Paul's, Oakland. It is to be an elaborate and charming affair, though the details are as yet a secret. All that has been revealed is that there are to be bridesmaids and a corresponding number of ushers. "I don't want all the details of my wedding published and republished months in advance," Miss Ralston insists. "People get so tired of it." All we know is that her wedding to the young and aristocratic Louisville physician is to be an elaborate affair. It would be hard to resist a large wedding in a house so ideally adapted for one. The rooms are large, opening conveniently one into each other, and are furnished in exquisite taste. There are any number of pieces of valuable mahogany and in the library there is a beautiful collection of tea cups, Miss Ralston's only fad. Many of the cups are engagement cups, taken from friends both East and West.

Mrs. Ames and the Misses Alice and Bessie Ames are expected back late in the fall. During their stay in Berlin the young ladies have been devoting all their time to the study of music, Miss Alice to the violin, of which she is already a master, and Miss Bessie to the violincello. Socially the Ames have been having a most delightful stay in the German capital. Miss Ames's married sister has been making her home there for a number of years past, and is the center of a charming circle, both of German and American social and artistic lights.

Mrs. Ames and the Misses Ames will probably return with Mr. and Mrs. McCutcheon and Mr. and Mrs. Schmiedell.

For entertainment this coming season the world of society looks largely towards the young matrons, and a great deal is naturally expected of Mrs. Walter Hobart. As she is to have the added responsibility of a young girl under her charge—she is to chaperone her sister, Miss Williams—there will undoubtedly be much entertaining at the Hobart house.

Mr. and Mrs. Charles Baldwin are also expected to entertain largely, and Miss Jessie Hobart, a debutante, is to be Mrs. Baldwin's especial charge.

Among the other young matrons of whom society confidently expects so much are Mrs. Osgood Hooker and Mrs. Schmiedell, who will be settled comfortably by that time. The recent death of General Dimond removes a charming entertainer from the field, Mrs. Joseph Tobin. The Dimond residence has been put upon the market, so it is probable that Mrs. Jarboe and Mrs. Tobin will have individual homes.

Mrs. Dean has returned to Paris, where she is to chaperone her grandchildren, the children of Mr. and Mrs. De Young. Mr. and Mrs. De Young are expected home in September. Last year Mrs. De Young contemplated an out-of-door entertainment ,after the English fashion, at her country place in San Rafael, but the lateness of the season prevented her carrying out her plans. Her early return this year may permit, it is hoped, the fulfillment of those intentions.

Mr. and Mrs. Colin Boyd have returned from a most delightful Northern trip. At Victoria they were feted and dined and were the especial guests of many of the warships stationed in the harbor. On their return home they visited all the Sound cities and Northern points of interest.

Why is it, I wonder, that actresses who know so well the shams of the stage, weep so copiously at the play. Tuesday night, at the Baldwin, Blanche Bates, watched "The Benefit of the Doubt" from a stage box, and shed quarts of tears over the misfortunes of the heroine, charmingly impersonated in this instance by Miss Allen. They were not stage tears, but genuine ones that left their traces behind them. Speaking about the stage, I wonder if mothers who have disorderly season as society actors to cure them of boys have ever thought of giving them a this miserable fault. Mothers want to watch our leading gentlemen of the stage to fall in with my remedy. The society actor never fails to pull the portiers together after he enters a door. And as for chairs, when he has finished his little speech that he delivers seated, he rises and carries his chair back to the corner from which he originally hauled it. What orderly men all parlor actors must be!

Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Austin, accompanied by Mr. and Mrs. McLaren, have gone to Tahoe for a short trip.

THE GOSSIP.

The Original Swain's Bakery, 213 Sutter St., stands without a rival and has stood the test for years. The most delicious meals are served by gentlemanly attendants, and the management takes pride in having everything orderly. It is just the place for business men and ladies out shopping to lunch.

For Restoring Lost Vitality, Curing Nervousness, and for Purifying and Enriching the Blood Vintine stands without a peer. Not a patent medicine. Sold by Brooks' Homeopathic Pharmacy, 119 Powell st. Order from your druggist

Undoubtedly.

"Senator Joe Blackburn, in accordance with his time-honored custom," says the Chicago Times-Herald, "has gone into his bourbon fast. At every National Convention he swears off on the beverage endeared to the heart of the Kentuckian. This abstinence lasts until the day of his departure for home. They tell a good story on the man from the blue grass region. He had an exciting argument in a Senatorial cloakroom at Washington several years ago as to the relative value of brandy and whisky as man's greatest boon. In the midst of the argument the stoical, prohibition Senator Blair, of New Hampshire, entered the room. Forgetting the well-known total abstinence tendencies of the New Englander, Senator Blackburn appealed to him to settle the dispute. "I do not know the difference between whisky and brandy," replied Senator Blair with a face as passive as a Japanese doll. After Blair had departed Blackburn's eyes actually moistened with sympathy as he shook his head sadly and said: "Poor old man! His stomach must be in awful shape."

Stablekeeper (referring to robe)—By the way, shall I put in a buffalo? The ride over the mountains will be a little stiff.

English Blood—Couldn't you let me 'ave a 'orse, you know? I'd rather not drive a buffalo the first time, you know. —Washington Evening Times.

A Note of Interest.

The block on Sutter street between Kearny and Montgomery is fast becoming the center of the leading tailors of San Francisco. The latest removal to that location is that of Mr. Sam N. Levy, who for several years past has been located at 209 Sutter street. The store to which he has lately moved at 113 Sutter street has been renovated and restocked in a manner becoming to so fashionable a tailor.

Poodle Dog Restaurant, S. E. corner Grant Avenue and Bush street. Private dining and banquet rooms. Telephone 429. Blanco & Bruno, proprietors.

Mr. Hirshman, who for many years had a jewelry store at 113 Sutter street, has removed to 10 Post street, under the Masonic Temple.

Use only Richardson & Robbins' deviled meats for picnics.

Dr. C. W. Decker, Dentist, 806 Market Street

Dainty and Refreshing

PAR EXCELLENCE

"THE UNIVERSAL PERFUME"

For the Handkerchief, the Dressing-table and the Bath.

Murray & Lanman's

FLORIDA WATER

Its fragrant, lasting sweetness exerts a subtile charm and never tires or cloys.

Ask your Druggist for the genuine Murray & Lanman's.

THE THEATERS

"The Benefit of the Doubt" at the Baldwin.

One of the most encouraging facts about human beings is that the majority of us search, in a dull, fumbling, abstracted fashion, it is true—but still search, for something to love and trust or admire.

We want someone to "believe in"; we are always looking, in our poor, short-sighted way, for integrity, loyalty, magnanimity; we snatch at their very shadows and continually clothe some frail fellow-man with garments which bag disheartenningly, yet still satisfy somewhat our craving for the beautiful, and feeds the flame in us which burns ever upward.

It might be said that we look for these noble traits simply because they make the most comfortable companions, if it were not for the fact that we desire to find them in books and plays quite as ardently as in life. The work of art—be it in marble, or on canvas, or printed on paper—which expresses only the dark side of life and men will never awake any real interest in the average man's heart.

He wishes to read of or look at something human and lovable. He wants a heroine with whom he could fall in love, a hero who is a "fine fellow," and a villain with whom he can sympathize—but he doesn't get them. That is the reason this admirably constructed, technically perfect play of Pinero's, "The Benefit of the Doubt," has been given to half empty houses this week. That, and the fact that one could go around the corner and see a "jolly good fellow," and several other amiable persons, for fifty cents.

In the "Benefit of the Doubt," there is not a single person one would care to have around, except a middle-aged auntie, and we all know that middle-aged aunties are not the most interesting things in the world, even when played by Mrs. Whiffen.

The other dramatis personae are, first, a jealous wife (Olive Allingham), who is so vacillating that she seeks one day a divorce, and the next, like a whipped cur, begs her husband for a reconciliation. Finally she makes herself detestable by eavesdropping. Then we have the husband (Jack Allingham), who assists at the eavesdropping. This describes him accurately and sufficiently. Next comes Mrs. Frazer, who has been "great chums" with Mr. Allingham. She has dined and passed the evening with him at hotels, etc., evenings which he says he will "always remember." He has kissed her and she has petted him, but it was all Platonic. We are evidently expected to believe this and to think that the Judge was a brute for allowing Mrs. Fraser nothing more than "the benefit of the doubt." We are also expected to believe that Mrs. Allingham had no grounds for jealousy, as if (granting that her husband's feeling for Mrs. F. was Platonic), every woman with a soul in her body is not, and rightfully, alarmed when her husband gives his friendship to another woman; for friendship is the best part of love, and, if felt for an ordinarily attractive member of the opposite sex, propinquity will do the rest. But to return to Mrs. Fraser—after being dragged through the mud in the case of "Allingham versus Allingham, Fraser intervening," she decides (her husband's stock of belief having given out) to run away.

Now, to run away comfortably, one needs money—even foolish Mrs. Fraser knew this—so what does she do—does she sell her jewels? Or try nursing, or any of the things a woman might be supposed to do under the circumstances? No, she trots off to Jack Allingham, goes to his country place and borrows money from him. Borrows money from the man of all men one would think she would avoid—unless she was in love with him, which we are assured she wasn't.

LYDIA YEAMANS-TITUS
WHO IS PLAYING HER FOURTH ENGAGEMENT AT THE ORPHEUM
Photo by Sarony, New York

Adams' Tutti-Frutti Chewing Gum for Indigestion

MISS IDA CONQUEST
OF THE EMPIRE THEATRE COMPANY
Elite, photographer

While in his parlor (with Madame Allingham glued to a curtain) Mr. Allingham offers her unlimited champagne cup, though she has just told him she has eaten nothing for hours.

The result is, the preposterious little woman becomes intoxicated; she reels about and smokes a cigarette, which of course is very naughty, but somehow it is positively pleasant and proper compared to the little business arrangement. Altogether, it is quite as impossible to sympathize with Mrs. Fraser as with Mr. and Mrs. Allingham, so there is nothing left for us but to center our affections on the aforesaid middle-aged auntie.

Throughout this intricate jumble Pinero handles his scenes as dexterously and brings his puppets on and off the stage as smoothly as an old poker player handles his cards. There is no clumsiness, no wasted material. Everything is managed deftly and effectively, but there is a paucity of flesh and blood.

Why Mrs. Frazer and Mr. Allingham were not in love, since they enjoyed one another's society to such an extent, and believed and trusted and admired so fully and affectionately; why Mrs. F. took the little trip to Allingham's place unless she had a very, very tender feeling for him these things will always remain a mystery to me.

Mrs. Allingham would have been an unloving idiot if she had not been jealous and suspicious, yet throughout she is treated and treats herself as an altogether unreasonable being. If she had not laid the trap for Mrs. Frazer and degraded herself by listening behind the curtain, and if the role had been played by any other than Annie Irish, faith I think we would all have been on her side.

The cast for the female parts seemed to me injudicious in most instances. It is quite impossible to associate such an inconsistent, flighty character as Mrs. Allingham's with Viola Allen's face and personality. I have the temerity to assert that Ida Conquest would have filled the role better. If I were dictator she would certainly have a try at it and Viola Allen should do Olive Allingham, and Annie Irish—what would I do with the Irish? Um, that would require consideration. At any rate, she shouldn't have anything to say. I'd not give her a chance to uplift that voice or air her stilted accents.

Ida Conquest showed a strong tendency to break into Musette's "ha ha, ha ha," but I can forgive her for she is a fascinating little body, and on the whole did rather well, though her English girl, who had been "dreadfully brought up and talked slang," was decidedly tougher than her "Musette"—wherefore, Ida, wherefore?

Among the men Gottschalk and Dodson distinguished themselves. The former had a small part which he made very amusing and almost prominent (in spite of his twenty lines), yet without obtruding himself in the least. He has reduced the art of effacing himself, when the exigencies of the occasion demand it, to a fine art. If he were a woman he would know, I think, how to grow old, and do lots of other disagreeable and inevitable things gracefully.

It has often been intimated to me that aunts are an entirely superfluous, interfering and unimportant class (these intimations are doubly painful, as I was made an aunt without being consulted), yet both in "The Benefit of the Doubt" and in "The Gold Mine" aunts play very important and useful parts. In fact, the plays simply couldn't exist without them, so I begin to think better of the despised relative.

In "The Gold Mine" the aunt, in the person of Mrs. Thorndyke-Boucicault, is a very gay, very, very golden-haired and generous individual, who tries to throw away ten thousand pounds on a scapegrace nephew, but is forestalled by a glittering California hero—impersonated by Wilton Lackaye. Mrs. Boucicault is tall, thin and graceful, with a rather sweet voice and an obviously studied, but nevertheless pleasing, way of speaking, walking and sitting. There is a little suggestion, a faint, far-away one, of Bernhardt about her. It is impossible to judge accurately of her ability from her handling of so slight a part as that of Mrs. Meredith, but she seems to have rather a light and finished style. But, oh, that hair, and those turkey-red ears! The hare's foot had been busy there, alas, too busy, yet her face was pale—such partiality is distressing.

Lackaye has a smug, well-fed face and a big, well-fed body. He made an excellent western American, and if he will abjure the wild-eyed glare he favored us with once or twice he will do very well.

Arbuckle was a villain again; it seemed to depress him a little, but this only added to his charms.

PEG WOFFINGTON.

The Maison Riche serves an elegant dinner at popular prices.

DRAMATIC NOTES

The San Franciscan who has not paid a dollar and a half for a reversed seat at Koster and Bial's, in New York, can have no idea how vastly superior the bill presented at the Orpheum is to that of the Gotham vaudeville house. I was there last June and make bold to say that the Orpheum, where the best seats are but fifty cents, presents a programme beside which the New York show will not bear comparison for a moment. There were but two real features at Koster and Bial's. They were Biondi, who is now at the Orpheum, and Chevalier, the coster singer. True, the New York show is housed in a more elaborate building; the appointments are better, there is more of velvet and gilt, but appointments do not compensate one for a meager entertainment at dollar and a half rates.

The programme presented at the Orpheum this week is one of wide variety and much excellence. Ross Snow, the tramp who was so excrutiatingly funny in "1492," is just as mirth-provoking as a speciality artist. Biondi, even though he speaks solely in Italian, never allows interest to flag. His rapid changes of character suggest that he has all the talents necessary to a politician. Lydia Yeamans-Titus' performance has lost none of its freshness. Indeed, to her inimitable presentation of the little girl who sings "Mother Told Me So" she has added new business that gives the performance an additional flavor of interest. The audience does not seem to be willing to let her off the stage. This, I believe, is her fourth engagement at the Orpheum, yet her work possesses that admirable and infrequent quality which seems never to tire.

Staley and Belle Birbeck were clever. The latter is a remarkable high kicker. The remainder of the programme is up to the Orpheum standard, which I consider a high standard, as the opening lines will indicate.

The special attraction at the Orpheum next week will be the mesmeric performances of Professor Kennedy, who will select subjects from the audience to testify to his power as a hypnotist. Herr Techow's cats promise a number of new tricks.

"The Huguenots" is put down for Monday, Wednesday and Friday evenings of next week at the Tivoli. On Tuesday, Thursday and Saturday "The Bohemian Girl" will be given. During the weeks following Verdi's "Aida," "Il Trovatore," "La Traviata" and "Cavalleria Rusticana" will be produced, and the grand opera season will close with Humperdink's fairy spectacle, "Hansel and Gretel."

At the California next week Chauncey Olcott's new play, "The Irish Artist." He is a popular fellow, is Chauncey, and a great wheelman. He makes a run with the Olympic wheelmen to the Cliff House on Sunday morning, and is their guest at breakfast there. His singing will be a feature of the League of the Holy Cross meeting at the Pavilion in the afternoon.

Henry Arthur Jones's play, "The Masqueraders," will be played at the Baldwin during the third and last week of the Empire Theater Company's engagement, beginning next Monday night. "The Gay Parisians" will follow the week after.

It is said that originally Ramsay Morris and Hillary Bell's new play, "The Social Trust," was called "The Final Judgment." Morris was asked one day if that meant the New York judgment. He became frightened at the thought that the least apprehension might become general and so changed the title.

"The Great Unknown," one of Daly's farce comedies, will be brought out at the Columbia next Monday night. The cast will include Mrs. Thorndyke Boucicault, Mr. Wilton Lackaye, Frank Worthing and many others.

Real tea is different from what you know unless you have drunk tea in Ceylon, or China, or Japan. It has a delicacy and charm and inspiringness of flavor that not one American in ten thousand has any idea of.

Schilling's Best — roasted in San Francisco — fresh, with the full tea-flavor in, as the tea nations drink it.

QUEEN LILY SOAP

BEST ON EARTH
FOR LAUNDRY USE

Patronize Home Industry

FICTION IN REVIEW

"The Feasts of Autolycus" and Other Current Literature.

The strange thing about "The Feasts of Autolycus" (The Merriam Co.) is that it is written by a woman. That Elizabeth Robins Pennell wrote it is not so strange, for she is given to odd flights. Generally speaking, one would expect a gastronomic rhapsody to spring from the masculine pen, and "The Virtue of Gluttony" is a surprising chapter to come from a feminine boudoir. The author herself acknowledges this, and laments woman's lack of this "cardinal virtue."

"Today women, as a rule, think all too little of the joys of eating. * * * Is it not true that the woman who would economize, first draws her purse strings tight in the market and at the restaurant! With her milliner's bill she may find no fault, but in the butcher's book, or grocer's, every half penny is to be disputed. * * * First, then, let her know that the love of good eating gives her an object to life. She need not stray after false gods; she will not burden herself with silly fads, once she realizes that upon food she may concentrate thought and energy, and her higher nature—which to her means so much—be developed thereby."

And so on, in the same half-ironical, true-word-in-jest strain. It may be true that good eating improves one's looks, and "gluttony is the best cosmetic," though the memory of triple-chinned dowagers, pasty or crimson, bearing down on the terrapin and pate, raises private doubts; but when the author claims that woman is "bewitchingly lovely in the very act of eating," one must protest. Eating is necessary, and pleasant, and to be heartily indulged in, but becoming—no! No earthly glamour could make it that. Women have put away the absurd folly of being ashamed to eat, and young ladies named Maud have no place in this generation, but surely it is not necessary to go to the other extreme and deify mastication. It is an ugly process of laboring jaws and unavoidable little crunches and swallowings, be the table manners ever so perfect. And when an end of macaroni wiggles off the fork, or a piece of lettuce unexpectedly unfolds at the very entrance—let us turn away. It is the only thing to do under the circumstances. After a pean to eating in general, Mrs. Pennell goes on to describe ravishing breakfasts, delerious luncheons and omnipotent dinners, lingering over them with a love that is more than maternal. She revels in such words as "dainty," "choice," "juicy," while "tender morsels" punctuate every meal. She is almost equal to "relishing her victuals." It would not be strange if she did, for she certainly knows what is good to eat, and how to cook and serve it.

"It matters not how many courses between oysters and coffee Fashion may decree, if, turning your back on her and her silly pretensions, you devise a few that it will be a privilege for your guests to eat, a joy for them to remember. Bear in mind the master's model luncheon and its success. No menu could have been simpler—none more delicious. The table was laid for three, a goodly number, for all the slurs cast upon it. At each plate were two dozen oysters with a bright golden lemon: at each end of the table stood a bottle of Sauterne, carefully wiped all except the cork, which showed unmistakably that it was long since the wine had been bottled. After the oysters roasted kidneys were served; next, truffled foie-gras; then the famous fondue, the beautiful arrangement of eggs beaten up with cheese, prepared over a chafing-dish at table, stimulating appetite by all the delights of anticipation. Fruit followed, and coffee; and last, two liqueurs, 'one a spirit to clear, and the other an oil, to soothe.' Be not content to read, but go and do likewise!"

The ecstacy of baked sole is as passionate as Swinburne, as love-laden as the songs of Solomon.

"Take your sole,—from the waters of Dieppe would you have the best—and place it, with endearing, lover-like caress, in a pretty earthenware dish, with butter for only companion. At the same time, in sympathetic saucepan, lay mussels to the number of two dozen, opened and well cleaned, as a matter of course; and let each rejoice in the society of a stimulating mushroom; when almost done, but not quite, make of them a garland round the expectant sole; cover their too-seductive beauty with a rich white sauce; rekindle their passion in the oven for a few minutes, and serve immediately and hot. Joy is the result—pure, uncontaiminated joy. If this be too simple for your taste, then court elaboration and more complex sensation after this fashion: From the first unite the sole to two of its most devoted admirers, the oyster and the mussel—twelve, say, of each—and let thyme and fragrant herbs and onion and white wine and truffles be close witnesses of their union. Seize the sole when it is yet but half cooked; stretch it out gently in another dish, to which oysters and mussels must follow in hot, precipitate flight. And now the veiling sauce, again white, must have calf's kidney and salt pork for foundation, and the first gravy of the fish for fragrance and seasoning. Mushrooms and lemon in slices may be added to the garniture. And if at the first mouthful you do not thrill with rapture, the Thames will prove scarce deep and muddy enough to hide your shame."

* * *

When Mr. Maeterlinck's characters lean towards each other and begin, "How dark it is!" "Yes, isn't it dark!" "Dark as pitch," we feel a sympathetic awe of the dark, and little chills creeping along our vertebræ testify to the power behind the commonplace phrases. But it is not safe for anyone else to try the same effects, for, without Maeterlinck, the power is gone, and the form becomes a mere trick. Mr. Henry B. Fuller should have thought of this before he wrote "The Puppet Booth" (The Century Co.), a collection of spasmodic plays done in the manner of the great Belgian. The beginning of "The Cure of Souls" gives a good example of this:

"A pool in the heart of the primeval forest; close beside it a human habitation—half lodge, half chapel. The pool is fed by a small stream, which, rising high above, forms a waterfall over a ledge of rock, and is emptied by means of a larger stream lying many feet below. Close to the edge of the pool a flock of lambs are grazing, and two or three swans."

Swans, of course. A tale of this decadent type is as incomplete without swans as Lohengrin himself. Parenthesis are fully as numerous, and even more trying. Here is an example:

"(Pas de Deux. — Through the floor rise Ruination and Damnation (a man among women) decked in desperate convolutions of red, black and yellow, and swirl and swing and swoon before a shifting array of imps and devils. A fierce light beats upon their gyrations, but the throne behind them still remains in shadow.)"

What does it all mean? What is it for? Does Mr. Fuller himself really know?

A number of books containing short stories have come out lately, none of them better than "In Homespun," by Edith Nesbit (Roberts Bros). This is a collection of quiet little stories about English country people, slight and unimportant of plot, but so full of human nature, so alive with rustic personality, as to leave the impression of an actual experience. Sometimes they are frankly and deliciously unprincipled, these heroines of the Sussex downs; often noble and high-souled, but always as real and vivid as though they had just passed through the room. They tell their own stories in the first person with naive garrulity, innocently betraying the the author's keen sense of humor as they gossip on. Their talk is the language of a locality, but, thank Heaven, it is not a dialect as we generally understand the word. As the author says, the book "is of no value to a middle English scholar, and needs no glossary."

Seven "Tales of Fancy and Fact" (Harper's) have come to us from Brander Matthews, in a dull rose binding, worthy of special mention. They are picturesque and imaginative, and beautifully worded, though from the nature of them there is a certain lack of human interest. For those who love fairy tales and fantastic dreams, they are charming. "A Primer of Imaginary Geography" is a skimming review of all the famous traditions of land and sea, Bohemia and the Happy Valley, the upas tree and the winged Pegasus, in company with the Flying Dutchman. "The Kinetoscope of Time" shows in a dream the women who have won their way by dancing, from the daughter of Herodias to little black Topsy, and re-enacts memorable combats. "The Rival Ghosts" is nonsensical but amusing, and "The Twinkling of An Eye" introduces a novel idea in detective work.

In "From Whose Bourne" (Frederick A. Stokes Co.) Robert Barr has used the after life as the machinery for an ingenious detective story. A man dies and hovers around the earth as a spirit, invisible, of course, and unable to communicate with the living except in a very slight degree by hypnotism. His wife is accused of having poisoned him, and he and several spirit friends try to help the earthly detectives to find out the real criminal. It eventually proves a case of mixed prescriptions, the hero having received arsenic instead of quinine, and so unintentionally brought about his own death. At the end he has the pleasure of seeing his wife become engaged to another man, upon which he leaves the world for good, to seek his proper place in the world of departed spirits.

Robert Buchanan's new book, "A Marriage by Capture" (Lippincott Co.) is called a romance of today, but it might better have been dated a century or two ago. A woman inherits an Irish estate, and in consequence has several attempts made on her life by her cousin, the next heir. Then a bold lover picks her up bodily and carries her away to a lonely castle, a way of wooing that proves effective, for after she is freed, she comes back in disguise to nurse him through an illness, and at last consents to live happily ever after. (For sale by Joseph A. Hofman, 120 Sutter street.)

In "A Woman With a Future" (Frederick A. Stokes Co.), Mrs. Andrew Dean has given us very much the usual thing. There is the grave, virtuous Englishman, the silly, empty-headed wife, and the other man. A decadent author or two and a couple of contrasting mothers make up the setting, and the story winds up in an elopement. The people neither talk nor act like living beings, but they live in London, and that is enough for most publishers. Is it because they know the public? (For sale at the "Emporium".)

Under the name of "Where the Atlantic Meets the Land" (Roberts Brothers) Caldwell Lipsett has published a number of more or less painful stories of the Irish peasantry. He shows them for the most part inconceivably brutish and superstitious, capable of deeds more suitable to the Middle Ages than this civilized Nineteenth Century. One would like to think that stories like "More Cruel Than the Grave" could have no foundation in fact, but Irish history shows them to be only too possible.

If you want to get a story accepted by one of the magazines, there is only one thing you have to do,—buy a bucket of local color. Smear this carefully over every inch of the most rickety plot, and your contribution will stick firmly wherever it is aimed. If you want to write a love story, go down to San Lorenzo and catch a couple of Portuguese—Portegee, I mean, study their rounded, musical syllables, notice the lively pantomime of their gestures, catch the glinting light of their soulful, unspeculative, brown eyes, and you have a sure winner. The love and the story will make no difference whatever. So, if San Lorenzo is impracticable, take Chinatown, the Battery, the Darky Quarter, any place where English is mutilated and complexion a matter for description. The subtlest character study posssible will not help you unless your subject is a local character. Locality is what you want, and it is within everyone's reach. Burn your old manuscripts and go forth into the fields and slums. Then will your mail increase in value as it decreases in bulk, and the syndicates cry for your work.

Apropos merely of local color, Chester Bailey Fernald has a fascinating little Chinese story, "The Cruel Thousand Years," in the August Century, and Kate Chapin closes the number with one of her Creole sketches, "Ozeme's Holiday."

J. W. T.

MAGAZINE NOTES

The August "Atlantic" has an interesting and convincing article by Paul Shorey on "The Present Condition of Literary Productions." He claims that the present field has been exhausted, and has produced all the masterpieces it is capable of, and that literature will be more critical than creative until some great change opens to us a new arena, as the French Revolution did to our grandfathers. Mr. Shorey complains that the realism of today has become too photographic to have any lasting value, and laments our dread of anything really serious. The increase of graduate work done at the colleges ought to largely overcome this latter tendency, for with deeper and wider cultivation, the writer of the future will be able to offer the dry bones of knowledge and thought so delicately grilled as to tempt even the most frivolous.

"Wanted — A Critic," in the Editor's Drawer of the August "Harpers," bears on this same subject of literary production. Mr. Warner suggests that a little discouragement would not be bad for American literature, which stands sorely in need of cool, discriminating, relentless criticism. To praise an author for doing well as an American is like praising a poem as being really creditable for a woman. Our judgment must be cosmopolitan, based upon a comparative study of literatures. Mr. Warner claims that the lack of recognized standards is as bad for the young writers as it is for literature, and that honest, intelligent criticism is a higher duty than the consideration of any man's feelings.

The new "Ladies' Home Journal" is a fiction number, and contains stories by Bret Harte, Lilian Bell, and several others, as well as the usual miscellaneous information. Special directions are given for those who wish to remove grease spots, become social successes, or announce the arrival of a new baby.

The Oldest Shipping House

At Port St. Mary's, Spain, is the well-known one of Duff Gordon & Co., shippers of the Duff Gordon Sherries. Duff Gordon & Co.'s bodegas are reached through a charming garden court, bordered with handsome flowering shrubs, and with clusters of fine old trees towering in the center. Geraniums in all their splendor, with ivy and other climbing plants, are trained up the walls, hiding all but the entrances to the cellars. Of these, the spacious shipping bodega, remarkable for its wide passages between the several rows of casks—all in perfectly straight lines, and level one with another—contains 3000 butts (400,000 gallons) of various kinds of Sherries. Four other bodegas are devoted to Soleras, comprising some singularly delicate finas ten years old, with amantillades of decided yet refined flavors, and olotosos of subdued pungent taste and rich aroma. For one of these last named wines £400 per but had been offered and refused, it being considered much too valuable for blending purposes to be parted with even at this price. On the doors of the Duff Gordon sample-room projects the stuffed head of a wild-looking short-horn bull which at some corrida de toios at the Puerto had killed its eleven horses and remained master of the ring. — From Facts about Sherry by Vizettel.

MOORE'S POISON OAK REMEDY
Cures Poison Oak and all Skin Diseases. Sold by all druggists

Fall Style Neckwear and Hosiery at J. W. Carmany's, 25 Kearny Street.

MARK TWAIN'S
NEW STORY
TOM SAWYER, DETECTIVE
A startlingly dramatic story of the Middle West in the last generation, with drawings by A. B. Frost, begins in the AUGUST NUMBER
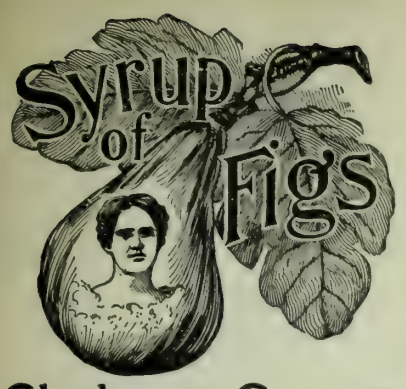
OF
Harper's Magazine

From "Tom Sawyer, Detective."

The White Mr. Longfellow, by William Dean Howells. Illustrated. Peeps into Barbary, by J. E. Budgett Meakin, formerly editor of the Times of Morocco. Illustrated by F. de Myrbach. The Strange Days that Came to Jimmy Friday, by Frederic Remington. Illustrated by the author. Doorstep Neighbors, by William Hamilton Gibson. The Silent Voice, a fine dramatic poem, by Laurence Alma-Tameda. Illustrated by Edwin A. Abbey. Etc., Etc.

5 SHORT STORIES

HARPER & BROTHERS, Publishers, New York.



Gladness Comes

With a better understanding of the transient nature of the many physical ills which vanish before proper efforts—gentle efforts—pleasant efforts—rightly directed. There is comfort in the knowledge that so many forms of sickness are not due to any actual disease, but simply to a constipated condition of the system, which the pleasant family laxative, Syrup of Figs, promptly removes. That is why it is the only remedy with millions of families, and is everywhere esteemed so highly by all who value good health. Its beneficial effects are due to the fact, that it is the one remedy which promotes internal cleanliness, without debilitating the organs on which it acts. It is therefore all important, in order to get its beneficial effects, to note when you purchase, that you have the genuine article, which is manufactured by the California Fig Syrup Co. only, and sold by all reputable druggists.

If in the enjoyment of good health, and the system is regular, then laxatives or other remedies are not needed. If afflicted with any actual disease, one may be commended to the most skillful physicians, but if in need of a laxative, then one should have the best, and with the well-informed everywhere, Syrup of Figs stands highest and is most largely used and gives most general satisfaction.

FOR GRIPPE
IT'S A DANDY

VINA BRANDY

AND

It's Pure! That's Sure!

VINA DISTILLERY CO.
819 Market St., S. F.

CHARLES S. WHEELER ERNST H. LUDWIG

Ernst H. Ludwig & Co.

THE MODEL AMERICAN CATERERS

Supply Wedding Breakfasts, Luncheons, Dinners, Matinee Teas and Receptions on shortest notice. Also Terrapin Entrees Luncheons and Dinners. Ice Cream, Cake, &c.

Telephone 2388 1206 SUTTER STREET

COMET OOLONG

The oldest and most reliable brand of Tea on the market. Sold only in ½ lb papers at 20 cts. per paper.

ALL GROCERS KEEP IT

S. F. CARPET BEATING AND RENOVATING WORKS
D. MACKINTOSH & CO.
Successors to S. S. Ferguson & Co.
Renovating, Laying and Refitting Carpets a Specialty
Telephone South 36 23 and 25 10th St., S. F.

NEW YORK TOPICS

No crown could cause such uneasiness as the Duke of York's head ought to be suffering from, for the straw Alpine is coming, and it's all his fault. He has worn it through the streets, he has lifted it to favored friends, he has hung it on the royal hat-rack, and so stamped it with his approval that no right-feeling man can withstand it, however much it goes against the grain. A straw Alpine on a girl is a very different matter, relieved by its two quills up the side. But on a man it is an abomination, for trimming is denied it—who ever heard of a man that would wear a quill any higher than the top of his right ear?—and the straw dome rises unbroken in all its hideousness. Town Topics has expressed the general sentiment in a reproachful little poem:

"The Duke of York has set the style
In Alpine hats of straw.
His taste is bad—the shape is vile,
But when his Grace has set the style,
What can we do but calmly smile,
And yield to fashion's law?
Oh, cruel Duke, to bring in style
Those Alpine crimes of straw."

Still there is no crime, of straw or any other material, that Newport wouldn't forgive just now if a man came with it. Here in town Newport is looked upon as a gay whirl, a mad round, but in actual fact nothing could be quieter and more sedate. From the 1st of August to the 10th of September there is a faint semblance of gaiety for an hour or so a day, when the carriages are out on Bellevue Avenue. One hears distant rumors of dinners, and occasional balls, but these make no brilliant showing, and "gay Newport" is largely a fiction of the Sunday papers. Bar Harbor and Narragansett Pier have twice the life and vivacity, though the list of visitors may be less imposing. As for men, there are a few old standbys, like James Otis, Gould Redmond, Roland King, etc., and a dozen or so of married men like Herman Oelrichs and Theodore Havemeyer, but of jolly young bachelors from whom fun is to be expected, only three are prominent, Perry Belmont, Thomas McCaleb and Lispenard Stewart. And all the while, down here in New York, there are dozens of charming men, who have not yet discovered that Newport would be not only within their means, but a positive economy. A nice man will be lunched and dined and driven and entertained as much as he will let himself be, his presence being return enough for the hospitalities of the residents. Surely he could manage lodgings and breakfasts.

When you see what abominable marriages the sons of millionaires can make, you wonder that Cornelius Vanderbilt is not more than satisfied with his son's choice. Miss Wilson may be a few years older than Cornelius Jr., but surely that is no sign that she is marrying him for anything but himself. She has money on her side, and family, and any number of attractive qualities, but the old plutocrat is just as bitterly opposed to the match as if she were a third-rate soubrette with half a dozen pasts. Young Vanderbilt has held pluckily (or obstinately, according to the point of view) to his choice, but a new and original difficulty prevented the marriage from coming off a week ago, according to the first plan. It was to be the quietest kind of a little ceremony, without caterers or invitations or any kind of pomp, but they did count on having a clergyman, and not one could be found! Some were ill——any number, in fact—some had gone post haste to the Adirondacks, some were called out of town, some were up to their eyes with funerals and christenings; in short, nobody seemed ready to file the bonds of holy matrimony. If Cornelius Sr. had given his sanction, do you suppose the clerical elite would have shown the same hesitation? Might not the scrambling have been in the other direction?

Recalled Stormy Times.

"Well, that looks natural!" said the old soldier looking at a can of condensed milk on the breakfast table in place of ordinary milk that failed on account of the storm. "It's the Gail Borden Eagle Brand we used during the war."

The Maison Riche serves the best lunch in the city for 75 cents.

Chew Adams' Pepsin Tutti-Frutti. It is sovereign for indigestion and agreeable to the taste

NEW VERSE

A Strange Elopement.

I saw them meet on Sutter street—
She didn't want to go,
But he was plainly stuck on her
Because he loved her so.
His arm was linked around her neck,
Her head was on his breast,
But yet she struggled to be free;
She didn't see the jest.
The jeering passers followed them
As closely as they could,
But still he firmly led her on
To where his carriage stood.
He opened wide the gaping door,
And flung her in amain;
She vanished from the sight of men,
She'll ne'er be seen again.
Three dollars will he coldly claim,
Ere he will give her up,
Naught else can loose the bonds that bind
The Poundman to the Pup.

The Man From Nebraska.

Oh, have you heard of the famous Boy
From the far Nebraska lea,
Whose tongue is poised on a silver point
And wags right merrily.
When he mounts his long-eared hobby horse,
Free coinage, and all that,
Great Scott! but oh, how the numbers flow,
While he whoops it through his hat—
This Orator of the Platte.

From the stricken land of "waving corn"
The Boy and his boomlet comes,
To the City of Wind where Altgeld reigns,
And the streets are paved with bombs.
One magic swoop of his silvery voice
Lays Bland and Unc' Hod flat;
Alas! what show has a hayseed now
With a Boy that talks through his hat—
This Orator of the Platte.

He gives them the silver-cure all straight,
And his voice takes a mournful tone,
While he pictures the new Helena's isle
And the "little Na-pol-e-on."
The audience howl till their throttles crack
At comparisons so pat,
And the Dedham "pop" makes a wonderful flop,
While the Boy talks through his hat—
This Orator of the Platte.

They hail him a sunflower from the plains
By the cyclone of fortune blown,
But the "goldbugs" will teach him a trick or two
Ere his panties are outgrown.
November days will prove long and drear
To many a Democrat,
But especially so to this crude Cicero
Who is blustering through his hat—
This Orator of the Platte.
—Ware River News.

My Lady Litrachure.

A hollow laugh, a hollow eye,
A tangled tuft of tow-hued hair,
A garish mantle, all awry,
And marred with patches here and there,
A shameless shoulder gleaming bare,
A step erratic and unsure,
A brazen would-be-luring stare—
Such is My Lady Litrachure.

Ofttimes in yellow she will ply
Her arts beneath the gas-lamp's flare
And mock at all who murmur "Fie!"
And shudder at her wanton air.
Anon a red rose she will wear
With red cockade, so plainly pure
Her very dullness makes her fair—
Such is My Lady Litrachure!

Now, robed as priestess, she will cry
In tones that ape intense despair,
And pose before the passers-by
As dying-duck-like doctrinaire;
Now she will tramp in Tartan where
The mist makes moist the manse and moor,
And frame a speech as rude, as rare—
Such is My Lady Litrachure.

ENVOY.

Ye Muses, grant unto our pray'r
A day when letters stand secure
From lips that mockingly declare,
"Such is My Lady Litrachure!"
—London World.

A Chicago Damsel.

As the twilight was creeping across the sky
From the east to the west, where the crimson dye
Of a gorgeous sunset was growing wan
In the shadows that rise when the sun is gone,
In a sumptuous languor of dreamy ease
And a wrapper resplendent with spots of grease,
On the little back porch of an upper flat
The imperial Ethel McFadden sat.

In her beautiful eyes was a look demure
And the hint of a soul that was sweetly pure
As the morning dew in the pouting buds
Or a cake of soap in a tub of suds;
And the beautiful face of this west side queen
Was suffused with a saintly, angelic mien.

"How I long, how I long," she soliloquized,
In a voice a chorus girl would have prized,
"To be able to do, to achieve some deed
For the suffering victims of sordid greed."
"Are you going to wash up the dishes, my dear?"
Came a voice from the kitchen, invitingly clear.
But a lofty fire in her soul was lit
And her red lips unclasped in a clear-cut "Nit."
—W. G. Jackson in the Chicago News.

Kelly's Corn Cure never fails. 25 cents
102 Eddy Street

Argonaut OK WHISKEY

IS FIVE YEARS IN WOOD BEFORE BOTTLING

E. MARTIN —AND— CO.

411 MARKET ST.
SAN FRANCISCO

Good Appetite

Is restored and the disordered Stomach and Liver invigorated by taking a small wineglassful, before meals, of the celebrated . . . . . .

Peruvian Bitters

THE CALIFORNIA STATE FAIR AT SACRAMENTO
THREE WEEKS.
SEPT. 1ST TO 19TH
GRAND PAVILION DISPLAY.
ELECTRIC MOTIVE POWER TRANSMITTED FROM FOLSOM
SEVENTEEN DAYS RACING
CASSASA'S EXPOSITION BAND.
DON'T FAIL TO EXHIBIT TO ATTEND
EXCURSION RATES.

RENTS BALDWIN & HAMMOND

COLLECTED AND INSURED

10 Montgomery St.

Wedding Invitations are properly engraved and in correct form, at ROBERTSON'S

CRECIENTE
"THE FAD"
SOLD BY DRUGGISTS AND GROCERS

BAY STATE OYSTER HOUSE AND GRILL ROOM
15 Stockton Street
Oysters served in all styles given special attention. Orders for Theatre Parties
M. M. ADLER, Prop.

"Standard" Time

The time to wear "Standard Shirts" is ALL the time. A home industry—made here in San Francisco. Ask your dealer . . . . . .

White Percale Outing

NEUSTADTER BROS., Mfrs.

MENNEN'S BORATED TALCUM

TOILET POWDER

Approved by Highest Medical Authorities as a Perfect Sanitary Toilet Preparation

For infants and adults

Delightful after shaving

Positively relieves Prickley Heat, Nettle Rash, Chafed Skin, Sunburn etc. Removes Blotches, Pimples; makes the skin smooth and healthy.

Take No Substitutes. Sold by druggists or mailed for 25 cts.

SAMPLE MAILED (Name this paper) FREE

GERHARD MENNEN CO., Newark, N. J.

We Have Appointed

Coburn, Tevis & Co.

OUR AGENTS FOR

CHOCOLATE MENIER

MENIER & CO

COTTON SAIL DUCKS

22-inch, in all numbers. Medium, Soft and Hard

ALSO

Heavy Naught, Wagon and Draper Ducks

From 30 to 120 inches wide

Monumental and Imperial Ounce Ducks

Manufactured by Mount Vernon Company Baltimore

Murphy, Grant & Co. Pacific Coast Sole Agents

Merchant Tailor MARSHAL F. JONES

ROOM 115 PHELAN BUILDING

S N FRANCISCO, CALIFORNIA

Charles Lyons London Tailor

Business Suits from $15.50

Fine Dress Suits from $19.50

1212-1218 Market Street 302 Kearny Street

906 Market Street, San Francisco

Canadian Vegetable Tonic

Will make the hair grow when all else fails

Dandruff removed. Terms moderate.

Highest references

MRS. E. E. McLEAN Physician for the Hair

Office Hours

ST. ANN'S BUILDING, SAN FRANCISCO

SCOTT & McCORD

HAY AND GRAIN MERCHANTS

OFFICE, 615 SIXTH ST.

HER POINT OF VIEW

They weren't related and they weren't engaged; they hadn't even the refusal of each other; yet they had unmistakably been taking luncheon together. Not at the club or the grill room, but at a little Italian place beloved of Bohemians, where the waiters spoke French, and filet of sole with sauce tartar was twelve and a half cents. I was not sure whether this choice of place made it better or worse. I didn't tell anyone about it except a young married woman who could be trusted.

"Well, why not?" she answered coolly. "Twenty years from now any nice girl will go to luncheon with any nice man at any nice place. Why should we wait for everybody to catch up?"

"But they hadn't a sign of a chaperon," I persisted.

"Why should there be one with well-conducted people at a public cafe?" she returned. "It isn't as if she were a jeune fille and didn't know her way. She has been out several years, and he is a man she wouldn't hesitate to go to a football game with. Why not luncheon?"

I hadn't any answer ready, though the traditions of my bringing up were vaguely asserting themselves. "You girls don't get half the fun you should out of life," she went on. "Your relations with men aren't half so interesting as they might be. Most of you can't do a thing out of the conventional line without being self-conscious and depressed, and so utterly spoiling it. This ought to be an age of frank, natural relations with men. The athletics have made it possible, but half the time you girls don't know how to avail yourselves of it."

"But don't you hate a girl who is fly?" I protested.

"Yes, worse than a prig," she answered decidedly. "You don't have to be either. But do go ahead and have all the happiness you can. Your own refinement and good breeding will tell you where to stop, and if you haven't those qualities, a chaperon wouldn't do you much good. We are coming to an age of sensible freedom, I believe."

"Yes," I said, "and we'll go on and on, and get freer and freer, till finally we reach such an extreme that the world will rise up in revolt, and then we will swing back into prunes and prisms again, worse ones than ever. That's the way the world wags,—like a pendulum."

"Of course, but you'll be beyond the reach of chaperons by that time," she answered. "You're lucky enough to be a girl at the nicest part of the wag. See that you make the most of it."

I went away pondering, and the more I thought, the more her philosophy appealed to me. And so today I am going to take luncheon with a very nice man at a perfectly respectable cafe, kept by an Italian.

* * *

One of the most pathetic problems we have to face is brought out in a recent story. A girl is given advantages above those of her class, and finally is sent away to college for five years, where she is thrown with refined, cultured people, and gains far more than the mere A. B. Then she goes back to the sordid little Western home and the vulgar neighbors and the kindly, shirt-sleeved, grimy-handed father. She loves him dearly and remorsefully, for she cannot help seeing how hopelessly ignorant and vulgar he is, yet knows that her own rise is all due to his self-denial and labor. He is so delighted to have her back that she hasn't the heart to leave him, yet every day is anguish. There is a young man in the case, who comes out to see her, stays a miserable half hour, and goes away without saying what he came for. He is not a snob, but her surroundings are too appalling, and he knows she would be too loyal to put them entirely away from her. One of his class cannot marry her, and she will not marry one of her own class. Has the education she so longed for spoiled her life?

As we leave her choking back her tears over the kitchen sink, it seems so. Yet to call education a mistake, self-improvement a disadvantage, goes contrary to all our creeds and to the true American spirit. As a nation, contented ignorance has no attraction for us, and we "want to know," even at the cost of unlimited suffering. If this girl had stayed in the station she was born to, her innate power of rising would have been handed down to her children, and the struggle would have come then. It is inevitable in a race with an upward tendency. There will be a step between every two generations, and it is the first great one that hurts the most. In this case the girl was noble enough to keep the suffering all to herself, but generally it is just as bad for those who have stayed behind. This girl's life is spoiled for the time being, but after a while the mental life she has created will assert itself as a resource and a consolation. Then, if she marries, she has nothing to dread with her children. The great step is taken, and love and gratitude can make the little steps easy.

* * *

When an Englishman comes over to this country with the fascinating little prefix of "Sir," introducing his name, and "Bart." following it, the average American citizen looks at him with a thrill of awe, and thanks heaven that he has been permitted to see a real nobleman before he dies. But it is a sad fact that baronets do not belong to the nobility at all, being merely commoners with handles. They are almost always from the middle or lower classes, rich manufacturers and men who have contributed to the political fortunes of one party or another, successful doctors and newspaper proprietors, brewers and now and then artists or scientists. A member of a county family seldom accepts a baronetcy, and civil servants of the crown and distinguished members of the army and navy, if called upon to choose, will always prefer the minor honor of the Order of the Bath or St. Michael and St. George, to the title of baronet, with its suggestion of parvenuism. Its very origin is ignoble, for the order was founded by James I., as a means of revenue, and sold at $5000 a head. Indeed, baronetcies are still on sale, though the price is no longer openly fixed, and the money now slips unobtrusively into the exchequer and campaign fund of some political party. Under Charles I., a number of baronetcies were sold in Nova Scotia, of which the records were afterwards lost, so anyone who wishes the title has only to announce that his name was on those lost records. A peer has to prove his right to a title, but anyone is free to call himself a baronet, and in consequence there are nearly a hundred at this present time who are credited with titles to which they have shown no right, and which are known either never to have existed or to have died out long ago. While these pseudo-baronets are yearly increasing, those whose titles are of ancient creation are gradually diminishing, or becoming too poor to keep up their titles. Sir Thomas Echlin, whose title was one of the first James created, is serving on the Dublin police force at $6 a week, while one of his brothers is a footman in a London family. Sir Richard Moore, after losing his position as a third-class warden in a penitentiary, died a few years ago as a street beggar. Many have drifted to the stage, more to the poorhouse. On the whole, a baronetcy is a poor and empty thing, conferring but two perquisites—a place in the scale of precedence next to the younger sons of peers, and the veneration of all good Americans.

CENTEMERI KID GLOVES.
Removed to 128 Post street.

For health and strength: Damiana Bitters.

DR. H. G. YOUNG—Bridges and teeth without plates a specialty. 1841 Polk street.

Maison Tortoni French Rotisserie, 111 O'Farrell street. Private dining rooms, banquet hall. S. Constantini, proprietor.

If you wish to look neat have your suits cleaned and pressed for $1.00. Bay City Clothing Renovatory, 221½ Geary, rooms 19, 20, 21. 'Phone Main 5859.

THE OVERLAND LIMITED

"The Overland Limited," via Union Pacific, takes only three and a half days to Chicago, and only four and a half days to New York.

The Union Pacific is the only line running Pullman double drawing-room sleepers and dining cars, San Francisco to Chicago, daily, without change, and composite buffet smoking and library cars between Salt Lake City, Ogden and Chicago. Only one change of sleepers to New York; dining car service the entire distance.

Upholstered Pullman tourist sleepers San Francisco to Chicago daily without change. Personally conducted tourist excursions to St. Paul and Chicago every Friday.

Tickets and sleeping car reservations at general office, No. 1 Montgomery street, San Francisco. Reservations secured in advance by all Trans-Atlantic steamship lines. Tickets on sale to and from all points in Europe. D. W. HITCHCOCK, General Agent, San Francisco.

Use only Richardson & Robbin's Canned Meats at picnics

FINEST ON THE MARKET

BEWARE OF IMITATIONS

EEL RIVER CREAMERY

SEE THAT THIS STAMP IS ON EACH END OF SQUARE

A FINE GRAIN DELICIOUS FLAVORED BUTTER

If you appreciate a DELICACY Ask your Dealer for the BRAND

BALDWIN THEATRE AL HAYMAN AND CO. INCORP'D PROPS.

Beginning Next Monday, August 10th, 1896

Third and Last Week of Chas. Frohman's

EMPIRE THEATRE COMPANY

Exquisite Production of the Intensely Interesting Drama

The Masqueraders

By Henry Arthur Jones, author of The Dancing Girl, Judah, The Case of Rebellious Susan, Saints and Sinners, etc.

Monday, August 17th THE GAY PARISIANS

CALIFORNIA THEATRE AL HAYMAN & CO. INCORP'D PROPS

Next Monday, August 10th, Second Week of the Sweet Singer

CHAUNCEY OLCOTT

Under the management of Augustus Pitou, in the Successful Comedy-Drama

THE IRISH ARTIST

By Augustus Pitou and George H. Jessop

Hear Olcott sing My Beautiful Irish Maid; Katy Mahone; Olcott's Irish Serenade; Look in My Heart; and Tom Moore's beautiful lyric, Believe Me If All Those Endearing Young Charms.

Monday, August 17th: The Minstrel of Clare

Columbia Theatre.

FRIEDLANDER, GOTTLOB & Co. LESSEES AND MANAGERS

Monday Next, August 10th

One of Augustin Daly's Great Climaxes

A Real Sensation!

THE GREAT UNKNOWN

By the only FRAWLEY COMPANY

INCLUDING

Wilton Lackaye and Mrs. Thorndyke-Boucicault

August 17th: The Social Trust. First Time on any stage

Orpheum

O'FARRELL STREET, BETWEEN STOCKTON AND POWELL

Week commencing Monday, Aug. 10

A BILL OF MANY STRONG SPECIALTIES

Prof. T. A. Kennedy

The King Laugh-Maker, a recognized exponent of the science of Hypnotism, in a seance of fun-making with subjects selected from the audience

The Four Nelson Sisters, Herr Techow's Performing Cats, Black Patti, Drummond Staley, etc.

Reserved seats 25c.; balcony 10c.; opera chairs and box seats 50c. Secure seats in advance

Tivoli Opera House

MRS. ERNESTINE KRELING : : Proprietor and Manager

Commencing Monday, Aug. 10th

Sixth Week of the Season of Italian and English Grand Opera under the Direction of Mr. Gustav Hinrichs

Monday, Wednesday, Friday, Sunday Evenings, Meyerbeer's Tragic Opera, THE HUGUENOTS

Natali, Bertini Humphreys, Holmes, Michelena, DeVries, Abramoff, Karl, Pache, Boyce, Tooker, Perron, Napoleoni, etc., in the cast

Tuesday, Thursday and Saturday, Balfe's Ballad Opera THE BOHEMIAN GIRL

In preparation: Aida, Il Trovatore, La Traviata

Popular Prices : : : 25 and 50 Cents

MISS HAMLIN'S SCHOOL

AND

VAN NESS SEMINARY

1849 Jackson Street

San Francisco, Cal.

BOARDING AND DAY SCHOOL FOR GIRLS, under the joint direction of Miss Sarah D. Hamlin and Mrs. Edna Snell Poulson.

The fall term will open Wednesday, August 5, 1896.

It is intended to bring the College Preparatory Course into the Accredited System of the University of California. The study of Natural Sciences will be a special feature of the school work.

Ziska Institute : 1606 Van Ness Ave.

School for Girls. English, French, German. Thirtieth year begins August 3d.

MME. B. ZISKA, A.M., Principal.

JOHN HARADEN PRATT

TEACHER OF PIANO

SONGS ARRANGED

3021 Buchanan Street

Orders left with Sherman, Clay & Co.

Miss Adie's Boarding and Day School

(KINDERGARTEN)

2117 California St., bet. Buchanan and Laguna

English, French, German Reopens August 3d

New Nob Hill Flat opposite the Flood Mansion

1011 CALIFORNIA STREET

Just finished. Thirteen rooms, two bath rooms, superb view, front and rear. All modern improvements. Rent $100. Apply to

G. A. BERTON

323 MONTGOMERY STREET

CHAUNCEY M. DEPEW, the famous orator, statesman, railroad president and millionaire, in an interview said of his recent visit to Del Monte: "I visited Monterey, and I call it the most beautiful place in the world. Monte Carlo cannot compare with it. Its seventeen-mile drive is unparalleled for fineness."

When Mr. Depew says it is the most beautiful place in the world he knows what he is saying, and means it, for he has seen pretty much all the beautiful and interesting places in the world many times over . . . . .

The Tavern of Castle Crag, the most beautiful, attractive and accessible of all mountain resorts, will open for the reception of guests June 1, and will close October 1, 1896.

GEORGE SCHONEWALD, MANAGER

CAMPING

Season 1896

Reduced Rates for Campers' Excursion Tickets

To the following Resorts, situated on the lines of the Southern Pacific Co.

Santa Cruz Mountains

ALMA, LAUREL, FELTON
BEN LOMOND, WRIGHTS, GLENWOOD
BOULDER CREEK

Shasta Region

SWEET BRIAR CAMP
SHASTA SPRINGS SHASTA RETREAT
MT. SHASTA CAMP

For information as to Ticket Rates, Routes of Travel, etc., address or call at any Ticket Office of Southern Pacific Company, or at

General Passenger Office
No. 4 Montgomery Street, Second Floor

Or at City Ticket Office
613 Market Street, Grand Hotel, San Francisco

ILLUSTRATED FOLDER MAILED FREE ON APPLICATION

WM. H. MENTON
Excursion Passenger Agent

RICHARD GRAY
General Traffic Manager

T. H. GOODMAN
General Passenger Agent

Pacific Coast Steamship Co.

Dispatch steamers from San Francisco for ports in Alaska 9 a.m. July 3, 13, 18, 28, August 2, 12, 27.
For British Columbia and Puget Sound Ports, July 3, 8, 13, 18, 23, 28 and every fifth day thereafter.
For Eureka, Humboldt Bay, S. S. Pomona, 2 p.m. July 5, 8, 12, 16, 20, 24, 28 and every fourth day thereafter.
For Newport, Los Angeles and Way Ports, 9 a.m. July 2, 6, 10, 14, 18, 22, 26, 30 and every fourth day thereafter.
For San Diego, stopping at Port Hartford, Santa Barbara, Port Los Angeles, Redondo -- Los Angeles -- and Newport, 11 a.m. July 5, 8, 12, 16, 20, 24, 28 and every fourth day thereafter.
For Ensenada, San Jose del Cabo, Mazatlan, La Paz, Altata and Guaymas, Mex., S.S. Orizaba, July 3 and 25th of each month thereafter.
Ticket Office: Palace Hotel, 4 New Montgomery St.

GOODALL, PERKINS & CO.
General Agents
No. 10 Market Street, San Francisco, Cal.

A. K. DAGGETT

Drawing of Deeds and all Legal Papers a specialty

NOTARY PUBLIC
14 Montgomery St., S. F.
Telephone 305

Coolgardie Gold Fields

FREMANTLE, AUSTRALIA
First Class $220 Steerage $110
Lowest Rates to CAPE TOWN
S. S. "Australia," Honolulu only, Saturday, Aug. 29, 1896, at 10 a.m.
S. S. "Monowai," via Honolulu and Auckland, Thursday, August 23, 1896 at 2 p.m.
Ticket Office 114 Montgomery St.
Freight Office 327 Market St.
J. D. SPRECKELS & BROS. CO., General Agents

The German Savings and Loan Society

526 California St., S. F.

Capital actually paid up in cash	$1,000,000 00
Deposits December 31, 1895	30,727,586 59
Reserve Fund	750,000 00
Guaranteed Capital	1,200,000 00

OFFICERS
President, B. A. BECKER
First Vice-President, EDWARD KRUSE
Second Vice-President, A. C. HEINEKER
Cashier, A. H. R. SCHMIDT
Assistant Cashier, WM. HERRMANN
Secretary, GEORGE TOURNY
Assistant Secretary, A. H. MULLER

DIRECTORS
B. A. Becker, Edward Kruse, A. C. Heineker, O. Shoemann, H. Horstmann, Ign. Steinhart, Dan'l Meyer Nic. Van Bergen, Emil Rohte
Attorney, W. S. Goodfellow

San Francisco Savings Union

532 CALIFORNIA ST

Deposits June 30, 1896 - $23,657,219
Paid Up Capital and Surplus - 1,594,085

ALBERT MILLER, Pres. E. B. POND, Vice-Pres.
LOVELL WHITE, Cashier

DIRECTORS
GEORGE W. BEAVER ROBERT WATT
THOMAS MAGEE GEO. C. BOARDMAN
W. C. B. DE FREMERY DANIEL E. MARTIN
ALBERT MILLER PHILIP BARTH
E. B. POND

Loans upon San Francisco and Oakland Real Estate, and Farms and Farming Lands in the country.
No charge is made for pass book or entrance fee.

Mutual Savings Bank of San Francisco

33 Post Street, below Kearny, Mechanics' Institute Building
Guaranteed Capital, $1,000,000
JAS. D. PHELAN, Pres. GEO. A. STORY, Cashier
S. G. MURPHY, JOHN A. HOOPER, Vice-Pres.
DIRECTORS—Jas. D. Phelan, S. G. Murphy, John A. Hooper, James Moffitt, C. G. Hooker, Frank J. Sullivan, L. P. Drexler, Robt. McElroy, Jos. D. Grant.
Interest paid on term and ordinary deposits.
Loans on approved securities. Deposits may be sent by Postal Order, Wells, Fargo & Co., or Exchange on City Banks.
When opening accounts, send signature.

ROYAL EXCHANGE ASSURANCE

OF LONDON
Incorporated by Royal Charter A. D. 1726
Capital Paid Up, $3,406,100 Assets, $21,534,413
Surplus to Policy Holders, $8,980,251
ROBERT DICKSON, Manager
NATHAN & KINGSTON, San Francisco Agents
501 MONTGOMERY ST.

Aachen and Munich Fire Insurance Co.

of Aix La Chapelle, Germany
Capital, $2,250,000.00
Total Assets, $6,854,683.05
United States Department 204 Sansome Street
VOSS, CONRAD & CO., General Managers

When You Leave Town

place your valuables in the

SAFE DEPOSIT VAULTS
OF THE
FIRST NATIONAL BANK
CORNER OF BUSH AND SANSOME STREETS
Office Hours, 8 a. m. to 6 p. m.

ASSESSMENT NOTICE.

Best and Belcher Mining Co.

Location of principal place of business—San Francisco, California. Location of works—Virginia District, Storey Co., Nevada.

Notice is hereby given that at a meeting of the Board of Directors held on the 2d day of July, 1896, an assessment (No. 60), of Twenty-five cents per share was levied upon the capital stock of the corporation, payable immediately in United States gold coin to the Secretary, at the office of the company, room 33, Nevada Block, 309 Montgomery St., San Francisco, California.

Any stock upon which this assessment shall remain unpaid on the

6TH DAY OF AUGUST, 1896,

Will be delinquent, and advertised for sale at public auction, and unless payment is made before will be sold on Thursday, the 27th day of August, 1896, to pay the delinquent assessment, together with costs of advertising and expenses of sale. By order of the Board of Directors.

M. JAFFE, Secretary.

Office—Room 33, Nevada Block, 309 Montgomery St., San Francisco, Cal.

BAJA CALIFORNIA

DAMIANA BITTERS

"Damiana" is a powerful aphrodisiac and special tonic for the sexual and urinary organs of both sexes and a great remedy for diseases of the kidneys and bladder. For weak nerves these bitters are invaluable, and leading physicians recommend them as the greatest invigorator known. Long-winded testimonials are not necessary. "Damiana" Bitters are known on their merits. (Send for Circular)

NABER, ALES & BRUNE, Agents
323-325 Market St., S. F.

REMOVAL

Rountrees English Chocolate, Kohlers Swiss Chocolates, and all brands of Foreign and Eastern Confectionery, imported by . . . .

W. L. GREENBAUM,

of 205 SUTTER ST., will, after December 1st, be found in large and commodious quarters at

128 POST ST., Bohemian Club Bldg.

ORDER YOUR CARRIAGES AND COUPES OF THE

PACIFIC CARRIAGE CO.

At Baldwin Hotel
200 Sutter Street, corner Kearny
48 Eighth Street, or
St. Nicholas Hotel, Market and Ninth Streets
Steamer and Train Service a specialty 'Phone 1950

CRESTA BLANCA WINES

AWARDED
THREE HIGHEST AWARDS
AT

THE ATLANTA EXPOSITION

OF SIX MEDALS
AWARDED TO CALIFORNIA

Cresta Blanca Wines

OBTAINED THREE

WETMORE-BOWEN CO.

140 Montgomery Street
Under Occidental Hotel

HIRSCH-KAHN & CO.

MANUFACTURING OPTICIANS
IMPORTERS OF OPTICAL GOODS
PHOTOGRAPHIC APPARATUS & SUPPLIES ETC.
333 KEARNY STREET
SAN FRANCISCO CAL.

BONESTELL & CO.

Dealers in PAPER

Fine Coated Papers a Specialty

401-403 SANSOME ST.,
San Francisco, Cal.

Brushes For barbers, bakers, bootblacks, bathhouses, billiard tables, brewers, bookbinders, candymakers, canners, dyers, flour mills, foundries, laundries, paperhangers, printers, painters, shoe factories, stablemen, tar roofers, tanners, tailors, etc.

BUCHANAN BROS.

TEL. 5610 609 SACRAMENTO ST.
BRUSH MANUFACTURERS

THE PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU

510 MONTGOMERY ST., S. F.,

Reads all papers on the Pacific Coast, and supplies clippings on all topics, business and personal.

Pacific Towel Co.

Telephone 1780 No. 9 Lick Place, San Francisco

GEO. E. MOORE, Proprietor

PERRIER-JOUET CHAMPAGNE EXTRA DRY "SPECIAL"

Also specially selected stock of Clarets and White Wines on hand.

W. B. CHAPMAN, Sole Agent Pacific Coast
123 California Street

THE WAVE CLUBBING LIST

FOR 1896

By special arrangement with the Publishers, THE WAVE is prepared to offer the following list

SUBSCRIPTIONS MUST BE PAID IN ADVANCE

THE WAVE and	CENTURY	$6 00
" "	ARENA	5 00
" "	LITTELL'S LIVING AGE	7 75
" "	ART AMATEUR	5 75
" "	LIPPINCOTT'S MAGAZINE	4 50
" "	MUNSEY'S	3 50
" "	ATLANTIC MONTHLY	5 75
" "	YOUTH'S COMPANION	3 75
" "	NEW ENGLAND MAGAZINE	5 00
" "	HARPER'S MAGAZINE	5 50
" "	HARPER'S WEEKLY	5 70
" "	HARPER'S BAZAAR	5 70
" "	HARPER'S ROUND TABLE	4 00
" "	SCRIBNER'S MAGAZINE	5 00
" "	REVIEW OF REVIEWS	4 50
" "	ST. NICHOLAS	5 00
" "	OVERLAND	4 75
" "	COSMOPOLITAN	3 50
" "	FRANK LESLIE'S MAGAZINE	4 90
" "	PUCK	6 50
" "	JUDGE	6 50
" "	LIFE	7 00
" "	LIFE'S COMEDY	3 50
" "	LESLIE'S WEEKLY	5 70
" "	DEMOREST MAGAZINE	4 00
" "	SCIENTIFIC AMERICAN	5 00
" "	SCIENTIFIC AMERICAN SUPPLEM'T	6 50
" "	N. Y. DAILY SUN	8 00
" "	" SUNDAY "	4 50
" "	CASSELL MAGAZINE	3 75
" "	ARGOSY	3 50
" "	PUBLIC OPINION	4 50
" "	SUNDAY WORLD	4 75
" "	CRITIC	5 50
" "	FORUM	5 00
"	NORTH AMERICAN REVIEW	6 50
" "	TABLE TALK	3 25
" "	NINETEENTH CENTURY	6 25
" "	CONTEMPORARY REVIEW	6 25
" "	FORTNIGHTLY REVIEW	6 25
" "	BLACKWOODS MAGAZINE	6 25
" "	TRUTH	6 25
" "	DELINEATOR	3 50
" "	VOGUE	5 50
" "	TOWN TOPICS	7 50
" "	DAILY JOURNAL	5 00
" "	SUNDAY JOURNAL	3 75
" "	ILLUS. AMERICAN	5 75

STORIES FROM THE MAGAZINES

Once, on winning an important suit for a railroad, Lincoln sent in a bill for $2,000 for his services. "Why," said the officer to whom he applied, "this is as much as a first-class lawyer would have charged." Stung by the ungrateful speech, Lincoln withdrew the bill, left the office, and at the first opportunity submitted the matter to his friends. Five thousand dollars, they all agreed, was a moderate fee, considering what he had done for the road, and six leading lawyers signed a paper declaring such a charge not "unreasonable." Lincoln sued the road for that amount and won his case. This was the one exception to his rule of never suing for a fee. If it was not paid he believed in letting it go.

* * *

Lincoln was a man to whom others instinctively appealed when troubled or in doubt. Mr. Ralph Emerson, a young lawyer who was worried by the discrepancies between his profession and his ideals, once came to him. "Mr. Lincoln, I want to ask you a question," he said. "Is it possible for a man to practice law and always do by others as he would be done by?" Lincoln's head dropped on his breast and he walked in silence for a long way; then he heaved a heavy sigh. When he finally spoke, it was of a foreign matter. "I had my answer," said Mr. Emerson, "and that walk turned the course of my life."

* * *

After attending a case in Cincinnati, where the summing up was particularly fine, Lincoln walked away in deep dejection. Turning to a friend, he said solemnly: "I am going home to study law." "Why, Mr. Lincoln, you stand at the head of the bar in Illinois now," was the answer. "What are you talking about?" "Ah, yes," he said, "I do occupy a good position there, and I think I can get along with the way things are down there now. But these college-trained men, who have devoted their whole lives to study, are coming West, don't you see? And they study their cases as we never do. They've got as far as Cincinnati now. They will soon be in Illinois." There was a long pause. Then, with a look of strong determination, he exclaimed, "I am going home to study law! I am as good as any of them, and when they get out to Illinois I will be ready for them."

* * *

Mrs. Stowe once went with some friends into the rooms of the brothers Castellani, Rome's famous workers in gold. Among the beautiful things shown her, she was much impressed by the head of an Egyptian slave carved in black onyx. "Madam," said one of the brothers, "we know what you have been to the poor slaves. We are ourselves but poor slaves still in Italy; you feel for us; will you keep this gem as a slight recognition of what you have done?" She took the jewel, but her eyes were so full of tears that she could make no response.

* * *

On hearing of the death of Lord Byron, Mrs. Stowe, then a mere child, went out into the fields weeping and flung herself on a mound of hay, to pray for his forgiveness and salvation. The same event brought great sorrow to Tennyson, then at the age of fifteen. "I thought everything was over and finished for everyone," he said, years later; "that nothing else mattered. I remember that I went out alone and carved 'Byron is dead' into the sandstone."

* * *

The following anecdote, of which the Russian General Dragomiroff is the hero, is going the round of the salons. It appears that at one of the later banquets of the Coronation festivities at Moscow, in returning thanks for a toast proposed in his honor by General de Boisdeffre, the French Envoy, he said: "We must love one another, for if we don't, who the devil in Europe will?"

* * *

Mr. John Burns, a very serious member of the House of Commons, was speaking in a pessimistic strain about what he felt to be a great falling off in the character and standing of that august body. "Since I came into this house, four years ago," he said, "the confidence of the public in it has much diminished." And he is still wondering why everybody laughed.

* * *

Some Americans were dining with a Frenchman at a cafe in Paris, when a stranger, in trying to take some wraps down from a hook, knocked a large Derby hat into the middle of their table. The Frenchman sprang up in a fury and whirled around at the stranger; then, with only a slight shrug, sat down again perfectly calm and serene. "It vas a Cherman" he explained blandly.

A SAVING OF ONE-HALF

Baggage transferred to trains or steamers and return. Trunks, 50c each for the round trip. Morton Special Delivery, 650 Market street and 408 Taylor street.

Hotel St. Nicholas, corner Market, Hayes, Larkin and Ninth. American or European plan. Ira R. and James H. Doolittle.

Among the many great Financial Corporations on the Pacific Coast, none rank higher than the

FIREMAN'S FUND INSURANCE CO.

Its Agents are found throughout America, and its Record for Prompt and Equitable Settlement of All Honest Losses is Firmly Established

D. J. STAPLES, President — WM. J. DUTTON, Vice-President — B. FAYMONVILLE, 2d V.-Pres., Sec'y
J. B. LEVISON, Marine Sec'y — LOUIS WEINMANN, Asst. Sec'y — STEPHEN D. IVES, General Agent

SEA BEACH HOTEL SANTA CRUZ CAL.

August and September

For these two most delightful months by the seashore SPECIAL RATES WILL BE GIVEN, ranging from $10 to $17.50 per week. New management! Excellent table. For further information, address

JOHN R. CHACE, Prop.

The Club Hotel — 5 Bund, Yokohama

Hotel Metropole — 1 Tsukiji, Tokyo

First-class Hotels, centrally situated, well furnished. ENTIRE FOREIGN MANAGEMENT. Experienced English Matron in attendance. Excellent table under the superintendence of qualified foreign Chef.

The Hotel steam-launch attends steamers arriving and departing. Passengers are met at the Railway Station. Visitors have the option of messing either in Tokyo or Yokohama, without extra charge—The only Hotels offering such an advantage. Certified Guides are in attendance at both Hotels. European Hair-Dresser on the premises.

THE CLUB HOTEL COMPANY, Limited, Proprietors

E. C. SIOEN, Manager YOKOHAMA — E. DEWETTE, Manager TOKYO

THE GRILL ROOM SERVICE OF THE PALACE HOTEL

Has been extended to what was formerly the City Restaurant. This immense room, which has a direct entrance from Market Street is known as - - - -

"THE LADIES' GRILL ROOM"

NEW DEPARTURE—CHARACTERIZED BY PROMPT SERVICE—MODERATE CHARGES

BRIGHT'S

A cure for Bright's Disease can be found at Byron. Bright's—that dread disease, is supposed to be incurable, but the Black Sulphur Spring has cured many stubborn cases of this disease. Byron's fall weather is neither warm nor windy—just the place for invalids.

Byron Hot Springs
Contra Costa Co., Cal.

THE LICK HOUSE

Occupies the block bounded by Montgomery, Post and Sutter Streets

IT IS
——scrupulously clean;
——accessible to all street car lines and places of amusement;
——conveniently situated for business men;
——a quiet, model place for a family to spend the winter;
——moderate in price, yet first-class in every particular.

AMERICAN OR EUROPEAN PLAN

K. B. SOULÉ, Manager

For those who appreciate Comfort and Attention

A QUIET HOME CENTRALLY LOCATED — OCCIDENTAL HOTEL — SAN FRANCISCO

WM. B. HOOPER, MANAGER

GEO. GOODMAN

Patentee and Manufacturer of — Artificial Stone

Schillinger's Patent — In all its branches

SIDE WALK and GARDEN WALK A Specialty

Office, 307 MONTGOMERY ST. Nevada Block, SAN FRANCISCO

Ask your Blacksmith to shoe your horse with

PHŒNIX HORSE SHOES

GIVE THEM A TRIAL

H. S. BRIDGE & CO.

Merchant Tailors

Many Novelties in Imported Wear. Shirts to Order a Specialty.

622 Market Street, San Francisco
(Up-stairs, opposite Palace Hotel)

ABRAMSON-HEUNISCH CO. (Incorporated)

IMPORTERS AND JOBBERS OF

Brewers' and Bottlers' Supplies, Corks, Druggists' Glassware, Etc.

26-28 Main St. San Francisco

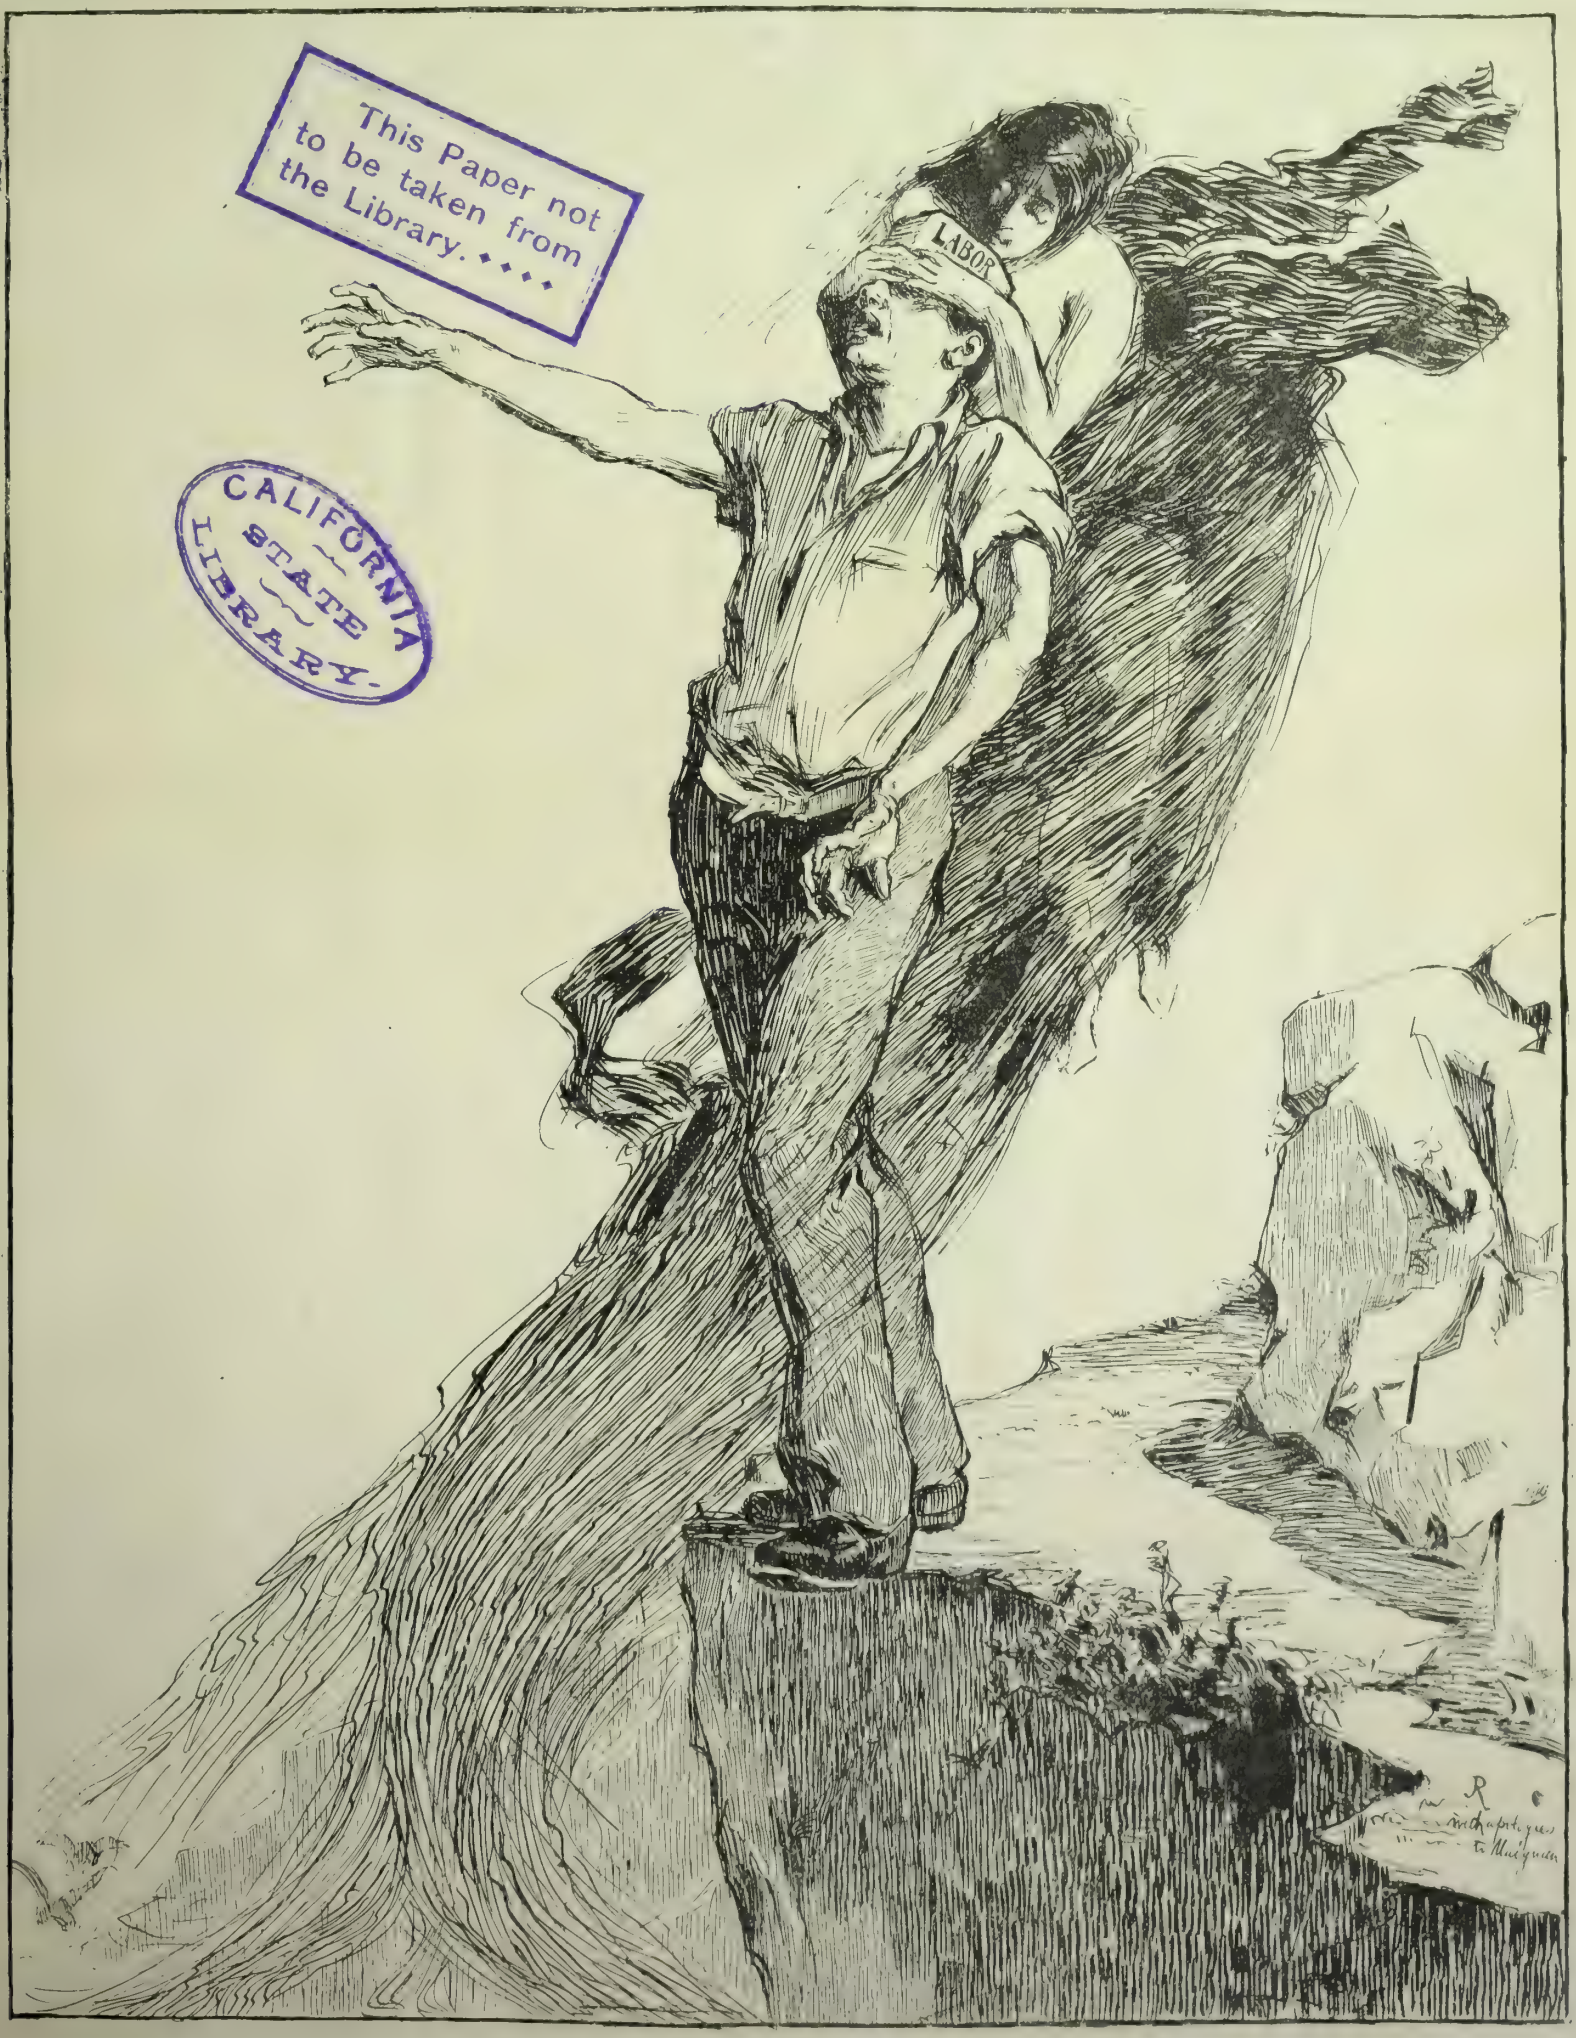
TERRA COTTA PRESSED BRICK FIRE PROOFING — GLADDING, McBEAN & CO. 1358-1360 MARKET ST. WORKS, LINCOLN CAL.

THE WAVE

VOL XV. No. 33 SAN FRANCISCO, AUGUST 15, 1896 PRICE 10 CTS.

This Paper not to be taken from the Library. ****

CALIFORNIA STATE LIBRARY



THE SILVER MUSE LURING HIM TO DESTRUCTION

THE WAVE

Is published every Saturday, at THE WAVE Building, No. 24 Montgomery Street, San Francisco.

Subscription, $3.00 per year, $1.50 six months, 75 cts. three months. Foreign subscriptions—countries in postal union—$5 per year. Sample copies free on application. The trade is supplied by the San Francisco News Co., 210 Post Street; east of the Rocky Mountains by the American News Co., New York.

THE WAVE is kept on file and is for sale at Brentano's, 17 Avenue de l'Opera, Paris, France; 31 Union Square, New York City; 1015 Pennsylvania Avenue, Washington, D. C.; and 206 Wabash Avenue, Chicago.

Advertising rates and all other matters pertaining to the business of the paper, address THE WAVE, 24 Montgomery Street. Eastern Agent, E. Katz, 230-235 Temple Court, New York.

HARRISON M. PARKER, Business Manager

Entered at the San Francisco Post Office as second-class matter

THE WAVE PUBLISHING COMPANY

SAN FRANCISCO, AUGUST 15, 1896

CONTENTS

Editorials	2-3	The Matabili War	9
A California Artist	4	Trolling for Salmon	9
The Kiss of Death	4	Political Personages	9
The Wreck of the "St. Paul"	5	In Society, by The Gossip	10
Dr. Jordan's Philosophy	5	The Theatres; by Peg Woffington	11
Things and People	6	"Without Sin": a Review	12
Mesmerism	7	Ripples; by Bruno	13
Some Feats of Prof. Kennedy	7	A New Lender	13
A Pink Tea; by Juliet Wilbor Tompkins	8	Her Point of View	14
He Found His Flavia	8	New Stories Re-told	15

MR. BRYAN'S PITTSBURG SPEECH.

The first utterances of any consequence coming from Mr. Bryan since his nomination are contained in his Pittsburg speech of Monday last. It is true he disclaimed any intention of discussing campaign issues prior to receiving the customary formal notification of his nomination; still what he had to say upon the financial subject, the views to which he then gave voice, unquestionably represent his firm convictions just as completely as will any subsequent and more formal declaration that may be made by him. His speech at Pittsburg simply offers us, in advance of scheduled time, the outline of his proposed plan of campaign, which is a something we have awaited with anxiety.

There is to his words, we must confess, an unsatisfactory and a false ring of jingoism that is disappointing and disheartening to the man who cares for the welfare of his country, and is anxious for its future. There are tens upon tens of thousands of voters, both Democratic and Republican, who have been listening and waiting, anxiously and hopefully, but thus far vainly, for some word, some thought, some single ringing utterance, that would modify the overshadowing fear which abides within them. Honest men have vainly hoped this Boy Orator would have the power to dispel, or to mitigate at least, the fearful dread of financial disaster they are led to believe will follow the monetary revolution proposed by Democracy. Mr. Bryan signally fails to furnish it, and we, as well as this world of thinking men, are most sadly disappointed in him. There is a hollow ring to what he says, an emptiness to his sentences that leaves an appetite for true, substantial knowledge of this subject, unsatisfied, and still hungry for the food of information that he denies to it. Not only does he fail to gratify this great craving, but the flippant and gilded phrases with which he bolsters up his most unhappy cause gives birth to the fear that he may be something even more dreadful than a misguided man.

Here is a passage taken from his Pittsburg speech, which his local newspaper adherent regards as being of enough importance to merit a place in black-faced type:

"My friends, in this campaign there is only one great issue. If that is settled it will not give us a Government perfect in all its details, but that one question must be settled before other questions can be settled. A Nation that is not able to adopt its own financial policy is too impotent to legislate on any question where the people are concerned."

Think of these utterances coming from the lips of a man who proposes to become the President of this Nation! This is not the language of a thoughtful statesman, but it does bear rather hard upon the method of a thoughtless and ambitious demagogue. There is no question up before the American people as to our "ability" to adopt our own financial policy. To pretend that there is, is most preposterous, and is deliberately misleading, as well. Mexico, weak, and far down in the scale of Nations, has "adopted her own financial policy." China, the big, inert, ignorant mass, that was incapable of withstanding the assaults of diminutive Japan, has "adopted her own financial policy." Every trifling South American Republic, the wealth of any one of which would not compare with that of any one of our States, has "adopted" each its own financial policy. In every case where these weak and impoverished Nations have "adopted their own financial policy," regardless of the remainder of the world, they have pursued the same policy and embraced the same theories that Mr. Bryan is advocating, and which he now proposes to inflict upon this enlightened people. As a consequence of "adopting their own financial policy, wretchedness and poverty is their lot. They may proudly assert their "ability" to "adopt" their own financial policies, but the empty boast comes from the hungry lips of the beggar, who has just solicited alms. The people giving voice to the boast, are in all the rags and tatters of poverty and beggary. Their money is a debased and cripple money. The meaningless emblems of their Nation so proudly emblazoned upon their coins do not raise its character the fraction of a farthing, but lower and degrade the credit and the standing of their Government. Their money is simply decorated bullion. The hand that stamps its fictitious value upon its face is impotent to give it value. The very figures setting forth its worth are a lie. The coin of these Nations is repudiated by every other Nation of the world. Even the hapless countries that have joined in this most unhappy plan of "adopting their own financial policy" refuse the money of their brothers in misery at the value so uselessly stamped upon it. It is not a question as to whether this Nation is able to "adopt its own financial policy" that is now before the people; but it is a question, a grave and serious question, whether this Nation is able to adopt and shoulder the silver of the whole world. It is a question whether or not we are to become a dumping ground for a metal fast diminishing in value. It is a serious financial question, and a question, too, which Mr. Bryan will have to meet somewhere in this campaign with something more substantial and convincing than garlands of rhetoric and flowers of speech. It is a question whether the best money in the world is too good for our own people. It is a question, and one that strikes not only at the individual prosperity of our citizens, but at the national honor, at our public credit, and at the very glory and integrity of this proud Nation. It is a question whether we are to go stumbling headlong down in blind and willful ignorance to the financial level of Mexico, China, and the lesser South American Republics. When Mr. Bryan puts the question to the American people as one that appeals alone to bravery, to independence and to national individuality, he approaches dangerously near to absolute falsehood, toys with the truth as though it were the merest bauble, and sickens the heart of his honest opponents, who at least have attributed to him the quality of honesty.

Again, Mr. Bryan says, and he says it in the same unhappy, most disappointing strain, says it in language calculated to attract and amuse men who think with the tips of their tongues and who find logic in meaningless and jingling phrases:

"The Republican party at St. Louis was not willing to meet the great issues of the day. (Applause.) The people were suffering from the gold standard, and the leaders of that party knew it. In their platform they declared that the gold standard was a bad thing, because they said they wanted to get rid of it as soon as they could. If any Republican tells you the gold standard is a good thing, tell him to look at his platform. His platform says the Republican party will substitute bimetallism for gold monometallism whenever some other Nation will help us to do it." (Applause and great laughter.)

Mr. Bryan admits the Republican platform is not a gold platform. We are glad he crams this lie down the throats of the bolting Republicans, who have been noisily abusing their party as the gold party, and accusing it of having sold itself to plutocracy. For this much at least we should be grateful. Continuing, the speaker attempts to twist and turn the Republican financial plank in this manner:

"I have said, and I expect to keep on saying it, that there are two questions that will drive the Republican party from the field. The first is, 'If the gold standard is a good thing, why not keep it? If it is a bad tning, why should we keep it?' (Applause.) If it is a good thing, why try to get other Nations to help us to deny to our people the benefit of it? (Applause.) If it is a bad thing, who dares to say that the people of this country shall suffer from a bad thing?" (Applause.)

If this gentleman keeps on giving voice to this statement, which he seems to regard with so much favor, he will be doing the Republican party an inestimable service. He has already narrowed the discussion of the financial differences between the parties down to the single point where we placed it last week. He has shown that it is simply a question of policy, not one of principle. He places the two parties in open hostility to gold monometallism, and admits that both are anxious for bimetallism. He gives it out with the authority that must go with his utterances that they only disagree as to the method of attaining this end.

So much, then, is behind us in this campaign. The only question remaining for discussion is the wisdom or unwisdom of the methods proposed by each party to attain practically the same end. Mr. Bryan will not deny that his ultimate hope is to "force" the European countries to a bimetallic standard, nor will he claim that silver can ever be restored to its old ratio until international bimetallism is accomplished. Scratch a silver man and you will find an international bimetallist. It is the theory of the silver man that by going to a bimetallic basis the United States will so cripple the trade of Europe with the other silver countries of the world that Germany, France, and the Latin Union, will be forced in self-defense to reinstate the white metal or suffer the loss of an immense and profitable trade. The silver man will also tell you that our remonetization of silver will bring the two metals nearer to the old ratio of 16 to 1, and that his metal will no longer be a drug upon the market at the ratio of 32 to 1. If he is honest and well informed, he will admit that he has no hope of restoring the ratio of the two metals to their old parity of 16 to 1 by our solitary action. All his hopes in that connection are based upon the belief that Europe will be forced to international agreement. Meanwhile, the silver man must also admit that he has made no provision for maintaining our coin and paper money at the present standard, and that he does not and cannot hope with his system of finance in force to preserve the present value of our currency.

The Republican party, on the other hand, pledges itself to promote international agreement, but at the same time promises to maintain unimpaired the credit of the country and the value of our money at its present standard.

That party points with apprehensive finger to the mischievous results that must inevitably follow Bryanism and the consequent silver monometallism. Its leaders demonstrate that financial disorder, debased currency, suspension of trade and commerce, bankruptcy and foreclosure will inevitably follow this reckless policy. If any man, be he Democrat or Republican, takes up the words which Mr. Bryan proposes to have stereotyped in his speeches during the coming campaign, and asks you the questions which he there asks, tell him this: Tell him that the Republican party is anxious to have this Nation maintain its present financial standard rather than fly to silver monometallism; tell him the United States is not on a gold monometallic basis; tell him that the American silver dollar is to-day full legal tender for all debts, public and private, unless, of course, an individual has contracted to pay in gold; tell him that we have more silver in circulation in America than has any free silver country in the world, unless it be China or India. If he tells you that silver is not legal tender (and he may affect to believe that it is not, quoting to you the Act of 1873), then show him that silver was reinstated in the Act of 1878, and that when the Sherman law was repealed only the purchasing clause of that law was affected; that notwithstanding the declaration and the Act of 1873 that silver should be legal tender only up to the sum of five dollars, it is at present legal tender for all public and private debts. He may ask you why you favor the present standard, if it is not a good thing, as Mr. Bryan proposes to ask; tell him that your party is pledged to maintain the present monetary standard and to preserve the value of our coin and paper money, so as to avoid the inevitable complications that would follow the Democratic policy; tell him that Bryan's policy means silver monometallism. No man of any prominence dare deny this. Point out that under the Gresham law of finance our gold will go out of circulation immediately after free coinage of silver is adopted; tell him that the circulating medium of the country will immediately be reduced six hundred millions of dollars by the withdrawal of gold; point out that there are millions of dollars of principal and interest which are made payable in gold, and ask him where that gold is to come from. It must be purchased at a premium to avoid foreclosure; point out that the standard American dollar will not be worth one hundred cents, should his policy prevail; point out that in consequence of the depreciated value of our money, the value of every commodity must be increased so that the merchant may still obtain the same value for his goods; point out that persons receiving stated incomes will suffer thereby, and that unending struggles will follow between the laborer and the employer in an effort to adjust wages to the new scale of money values. Point out all of these things. The Republican party points them out and much more. These serious charges are met with no word of argument.

Mr. Bryan thus far has not attempted to refute these statements. He has not even contradicted them, but simply sneers and empties a string of meaningless jingoism into our ears.

A YEAR'S CHANGE.

A year ago Cecil Rhodes was in control of British South Africa, the master of the Colony, and the uncrowned king of Rhodesia. To-day he stands condemned by the Colonial legislature as a traitor to the Colony, his premiership is gone, his friends are in jail and he must submit the affairs of his great company to the scrutiny of parliamentary inquisitors, under charge of dishonest dealing with trust funds and the fostering of a conspiracy to establish an independent empire. So great a change does a single twelvemonth work! And the man himself is out in the bush fighting savages, in the hope that he will either die and become one of England's heroes, or live to win sympathy by his splendid courage..

It is not long since William T. Stead of the Review of Reviews said that Cecil Rhodes was the only man in the West with ideas that can be compared for a moment with those of the Pope of Rome for comprehensive scope and breadth of purpose. And this while Gladstone and Bismarck are yet alive! Soon the world will see Joseph Cbamberlain probing into the mind of this latter day Napoleon that he may discover how comprehensive the scope of his mind and how broad his purpose may have been. It may not be proved that it was Rhodes' intention to make a new empire at the Cape, but enough is known already to bring moral conviction to most minds that this was his purpose.

It is only eighteen years since Rhodes first saw South Africa. He was then a sickly young student fresh from Oxford, which he had been compelled to forsake because of pulmonary trouble. A notable incident in Rhodes' career was that after making a great fortune he returned to Oxford and took his degree. From the day of his landing at the Cape, Rhodes' career reads like the story of another Monte Cristo. It was the era of diamond speculation, and the little Kimberly Stock Exchange saw great fortunes lost and won in a day. The craze seized the young Englishman, and he became a plunger—the most daring and reckless South Africa had seen. Within four years Cecil Rhodes found himself worth nearly five million dollars, and with this wealth came the suggestion of great mining combinations, and later of vast political power. He first organized a powerful gold-mining and diamond syndicate, which soon assumed the proportions of a colossal monopoly. Then he arranged to stand for Kimberly in the Cape Parliament, and was triumphantly elected. From this point his career began to map itself out along broad lines. Day by day he gained a more commanding influence among the members of the Parliament. There is not an English statesman now living, nor has there been one, who steered a more diplomatic course between contending parties. The Cape Parliament had its Afrikander faction which was opposed to the British home domination, and the progressive English clique. Cecil Rhodes made himself hand and glove to both of these. His election as Premier was unanimous, and at once he gave to Cape Colony and British South African affairs an importance in the world such as had never been dreamed of by the quiet colonists of the Cape. His political and speculative schemes went hand in hand. His great plan for the unification of South Africa was made necessary by the vast business schemes which were in his head. He was the one man who knew the value of this new continent, and to him it meant great wealth, great power, and, he hoped, an everlasting name as one of the up-builders of the British Empire, or the founder of a new empire. His career has been meteoric, as brilliant in its way as that of any of the world's young men. His trial will prove that he is neither so great a brute as Warren Hastings, nor so much of a dreamer as Aaron Burr. He will not be discovered as a traitor, for whatever his plans were, they were in his head when the Jameson fiasco spoiled his chances of becoming the ruler, absolute in name, as he was in fact, of South Africa.

THE LEGISLATURE OF DOUBT.

If the next legislature is to be Republican, it is evident that a much more determined and aggressive fight must be made by that party to carry the House and Senate than appears now to be their purpose.

The legislature which meets next January is of importance because it is to elect for a term of six years the successor to Senator Perkins. No one thing that this State could do would redound more to its credit in the East and take from it that unfortunate reputation which it has gained through Kearneyism and the frequency of awful murders, than the choosing of Senator Perkins as his own successor; or the selection of another who is in sympathy with the Republican national platform upon the money question. If capital is to be brought to California it is necessary to gain the confidence of capital. At present many millions of New England and New York money are being placed in southern States, where there is no prospect of large return, but where it is thought that the money is safe. This money could just as well be brought to the coast, could we but give to those who own it the assurance that we were, and would continue to be, a law-abiding and trustworthy people. The only foreign capital which we now receive is that which comes for investment in mines and which is largely speculative. There is no other Western State which has received so little support from the millionaires of the East as California, and this, not because such capital could not be used here, but because of the feeling of distrust which has obtained among conservative men regarding us.

At the last session of the United States Senate, a combination was formed between Democratic Senators and a block of Republican Senators from the West, to hold-up the industries of the country and all legislation until the demands of the free coinage men were fully acceded to. These men placed the selfish interest of their section before the interests of the country. They prophesied that thoes Republicans from the West who refused to join them would be cast adrift by their States as unworthy of the trust reposed in them. Senator Perkins was one of those who refused to join this little band of senatorial highwaymen; and taking that stand he attracted to himself national attention as a man who, though coming from a far-west and supposedly silver State, was yet governed by sober sense, and so became distinguished among his fellows. Looking toward the establishment of California in the confidence of those whom we wish to attract here, and whose capital we wish to engage to build up the State, it is safe to say that no other thing which we could do would so serve our purpose as the returning of Senator Perkins to the Senate at this time. But with the strong silver movement working here, the complexion of the legislature, even though McKinley carries the State, is in doubt, unless a very serious effort is made, that our next Senator shall be representative of the best sense and the highest moral and intellectual character which the State produces. There is danger that together the Democrats and the Populists will have a majority, and it appears by no means unlikely at the present time that the Populists will control the situation, a condition that every self-respecting and patriotic Californian would have good reason to deplore.

THE CASE OF MR. WINTHROP.

If Oliver W. Winthrop was innocent of the death of Mrs. Matthews, and is innocent of the abduction and attempted robbery of James Campbell, he is certainly one of the most unfortunate of men. His luck must be extraordinarily bad, and his fate of a most unusually vicious character to surround him, when he is innocent, with circumstances that to most intelligent men bring conviction of guilt. The story which James Campbell, the Hawaiian planter, tells is of so unusual a character as to cause one to hesitate before accepting it; yet it is out of just such real things in life that the great story-tellers have made those plots which have seemed the very height of the unreal. Campbell's story is that he was induced by a stranger on a slight pretext to visit a house on one of the fashionable residence thoroughfares of the city, and there was shot at, beaten into insensibility, tied by chains to the floor, and held in captivity for two days, eating nothing, drinking nothing, enduring intense pain, and expecting each hour to be murdered. At length, finding he would not sign a check for a large amount, his captors released him and put him on board a car which carried him to his hotel, where he told his extraordinary story. By means of a photograph he recognized the man who had induced him to go to the house, and had chained him to the floor, as Oliver W. Winthrop, who but a few weeks ago escaped the gallows through the inability of the police force to find sufficient evidence to convict him of the murder of Mrs. Matthews. It was found on investigation that Winthrop had left his home, and could not be located; that he had been to San Jose, where he had met Campbell; that he had rented the house to which Campbell was taken; that he was last seen in this city shortly after Campbell's disappearance. A few days later he was discovered attempting to escape from Oakland in disguise. Mr. Winthrop now enjoys himself telling the reporters each day that as soon as he goes into the witness box he will prove an alibi, and tell so complete a story that he will be exonerated by both judge and jury. Incidentally, it may not be forgotten that when Theodore Durrant was arrested, he promised just such an interesting denouement.

It has been developed during the investigation by the police that Mr. Campbell has the gift of dealing in a certain high character of mystic fiction, an old friend of his having confided to the public that when in certain conditions physical and spiritual, Mr. Campbell is much given to drawing the long bow and imagining himself in serious predicaments, which only occur to the heroes of comic opera. Then, too, Mr. Winthrop has matter for defense in the general incredulity as to the possibility of such a crime being committed in a city of dense population. But these are general theories, which in no way avoid the substantial facts casting suspicion against Wintnrop. If this were the first charge made against the accused the public would be more apt to be incredulous as to Mr. Campbell's startling tale, but when the little seven-year-old girl, the daughter of Mrs. Matthews, told in lisping words the story of her mother's death, she brought to thousands the conviction that her story was more worthy of belief than any that would have been told by an older person. Winthrop may not have been guilty of Mrs. Matthew's death, and he may have gone to San Jose on political business, and had nothing whatever to do with Campbell's disappearance, but if so, he should move to some country where the Nemesis of circumstancial evidence will not follow him.

SHORT-SIGHTED TORY LANDLORDS.

By the defeat of the Irish Land Bill the British House of Lords has dealt itself a more severe blow than any other it has ever received. The Bill was a Government measure, drafted by the leaders of the Conservatives in the House of Commons, and supportd by every member of the Cabinet; it passed the House by over two hundred and fifty majority, while the Unionist majority is less than one hundred and fifty. The landlords leagued together in the House of Lords to destroy this Bill, because it seemed to them too lenient toward the Irish tenantry. They were nerved to this course by the success which they had met in defeating the Home Rule Bill. Finding that the House of Lords was not abolished, not even seriously threatened with abolition, when it made so bold as to defeat the measure passed by the lower House, the landlords and the clergy evidently concluded that it was the desire of the British people that they should still continue to be a part of the real legislative—a position which for half a century they had hardly dared to assume.

It may have been no serious thing in the eyes of the British Tories to defeat a Liberal measure—the Home Rule Bill—but when the measure defeated is the pet plan of the Unionist government the shoe is on the other foot, and there is certain to be trouble. The Lords have made enemies of the Liberals, the Home Rulers, and their own partisans, the Conservatives. Against these it is not possible for them long to prevail, and we may expect to see renewed and more serious agitation for the abolition of the House of Lords. It has become evident that no measure touching seriously the interest of these idle aristocrats can become a law. The English people are not in a spirit to allow the veto power to this upper House, made up, as it is, of those whose interests are most inimical to the country.

A POLITICAL ACROBAT.

It requires a wonderfully quick mind to follow the gyrations of that political acrobat, Senator Stewart. His political career has no parallel in history. He was elected to a seat in the United States Senate by a Republican legislature in the State of Nevada, a commonwealth wherein he had not resided in years before his election. He went to the Senate a Republican. Something over a year ago he publicly announced his withdrawal from his party, still retaining in his clutch, however, his Republican senatorship. He then joins the Silver party, and now has somersaulted over into the Democratic party. To-day he is a Republican U. S. Senator, repudiating the platform of his party and supporting the Democratic ticket, which never before in all its mad career came so near to espousing anarchy and madness.

But this is not all, this good man is also busily engaged denouncing the action of Congress with respect to silver as "the crime of 1873." Yet, we are told, the Senator was a member of the U. S. Senate in 1873, and not only voted to commit the "crime," but made an admirable speech in support of the very measure he is now busily denouncing as a crime. Truly the whirligig of time and politics brings about strange things.

It may not be inappropriate to know that when Senator Stewart sold his large holdings of real estate in Alameda County, every mortgage for balance of payment due to the Silver Senator obligated the debtor to pay "both principal and interest in gold coin of the United States." Yet the Senator loves silver!

BRYAN'S DEFINITION.

Our friend who said to us some time ago that he favored free silver because he believed that "16 to 1" meant that the Government should coin sixteen silver dollars every time it coined one gold dollar, should read what Mr. Bryan had to say upon this subject at Pittsburg. Some one in the audience requested that he tell them about "16 to 1." This is his reply:

"There are several definitions of 16 to 1. I will give you some of them. Some think that 16 to 1 means that the Government will coin sixteen silver dollars every time it coins one gold dollar. (Laughter.) Some think that it means that the Government will give sixteen silver dollars for every gold dollar. (Laughter.) It does not mean that. Some think that it means that under free coinage it would be as easy to get sixteen dollars as it is to get one dollar under the gold standard. (Laughter.) That may approach the truth. (Laughter and applause.) Sixteen to one simply means that according to law the debt-paying power of one ounce of gold, when coined, shall be equal to the debt-paying power of sixteen ounces of silver, when coined. It simply means that the silver dollar is sixteen times as large as the gold dollar. That is what 16 to 1 means. When we say that we are in favor of the present ratio of 16 to 1, we simply say that we are in favor of having the silver dollar remain in the size it is now and having the gold dollar remain in the size it is now. That is what we mean." (Applause.)

Mr. Bryan might have added also that they mean to remove the golden supports that hold silver coin up to a value double that of its actual bullion value. But he did not explain this, nor did he prophesy what the results would be.

A CALIFORNIA ARTIST

William H. Keith Tells Why He Prefers This City to European Art Centers.

The universal complaint that California's native talent has to go East or abroad to find recognition is abundantly refuted in the case of Mr. William Keith, the artist. For over thirty years he has been reflecting our creeks and live oaks and sunsets as no other artist ever could, and he is now as well known in Paris and New York as here. Many prominent judges have placed him first among the landscape painters of to-day, and after a visit to his studio, it is hard to believe that he could take any other place. The three large rooms of his studio are lined from top to bottom with canvases of every size and shape, nearly all picturing woods and water, but each having a different suggestion. In one a strange white moon looks between great oaks, mysteriously dark, as though elves were under them, waiting for you to go that they might dance in the strip of moonlight. Another shows a creek shaded by alders, and you feel at once the chill of the rounded gray rocks. In a third, vivid patches of yellow sunlight give a weird suggestion of days you have seen in dreams. The most striking of the portraits is one painted in a single day. The face has so strong an individuality that it stays in the mind like that of a friend, and tells unmistakably of unconscious good breeding. It is that of a young girl with glorious red hair, set off by a background of dull reds and a black frame. A beautiful girl in a mist of pale golden hair represents the artist's idea of an angel, and held my eyes irresistably as we talked.

KEITH IN HIS STUDIO

Mr. Keith was somewhat reluctant to give an account of his life, protesting that that could not interest people.

"But it is just what does interest them," I said firmly. "Were you born in this country?"

"No, in Scotland, but I came to America when I was a child," he answered. "I was doing engraving on wood for Harper's in '59, when I broke down, and was advised to take a trip to California for my health."

"And you've lived here ever since?" I added.

"I wouldn't live anywhere else. Lord, it's a great country!" exclaimed Mr. Keith, with a patriotic wave of his corncob pipe.

"You mean climatically?" I asked, dodging a shower of ashes.

"Every way," he returned. "Why, I was converted to California the minute I got here. I've been a Native Son ever since."

"And hasn't Paris ever tempted you?"

"Not a bit. I like to go over there now and then and see what those fellows are doing, but do you know what would happen if I lived there?" seizing one of my revers between his finger and thumb, and fixing me with a menacing stare. "I'd be influenced by them, first by one, then by another; I'd get to studying form till I was all form and nothing else; I'd lose my individuality. Here I can be myself."

"But fame travels so much better from East to West than from West to East," I returned. "I should think Paris would have been irresistable to you before you had made your name."

"But fame has never meant anything to me. I've never wanted it," he said earnestly. "I never was ambitious that way. I paint because I love it, because it's my greatest pleasure, because—shucks, I can't talk about it!" And Mr. Keith strode vigorously about the room.

"Don't you ever miss the stimulation there must be in a community of artists?" I asked.

"Stim-u-la-tion! Why, I've got nervous prostration now," he exclaimed, flinging up both arms in protest. "My work itself gives me all the stimulation I need, and often a good deal more. Why, often now I can't stand the physical excitement of it. I come away as stimulated and happy as if I'd been taking champagne, only more so. What could I do with more stimulation?"

He smoked in silence for a few minutes, while I stole covert glances at the great, shadowy, sunlit landscapes that glorified the room.

"When I began painting," he went on, presently, "I used to study every little detail of my subject. I'd spend hours over the very minutest particulars. That was the process of learning my alphabet. Now I think no more of these than you do of your lettters when you write. I don't have to imitate nature any more. I express myself through the language of color. A picture represents my thought, my mood, and though ninety and nine may see only a landscape, the hundredth recognizes it at once. If you want to paint innocence, for instance, it isn't necessary for you to have lambs."

"Or a girl in a white frock," I added.

"Just so. You put the spirit of innocence into it, and the person with eyes will recognize it at once. Emotion isn't expressed by the form of the picture, but by the quality of the color. It is myself, my idea that I paint, with trees and brooks for interpreters."

"Can you carry that out in portraiture?"

"Ah, that is why I am not fond of doing portraits. We all look at a person from a different point of view. I paint him from mine and it does not quite fit anybody's idea. I do not like any work where I am not free to use entirely my own interpretation. Take Holbein, for instance. You know him?"

I was fortunately able to nod.

"Well, he painted the aristocracy of his day, and what were they? Dull, commonplace, bourgeois. Fifty years later, Van Dyke painted the aristocracy, and they are all high-bred, aristocratic — swells! Do you suppose the the difference was in the subjects? Not a bit of it. The difference was in the artists themselves. One was bourgeois, the other aristocratic."

"But which most truly interpreted the people? Were they as Holbein saw them, or as Van Dyke?"

"There is no absolution in art. To see truly for yourself is not to see truly for someone else," said Mr. Keith, vehemently. "There is no fixed standard of truth, no universal law. Look at this picture from here and it is the truth. Ten feet nearer, and the proportions are different—it is not the same truth. So it is a lie? Ah, but don't mind all this," he added, as I rose to go. "Just say a little word about me—not much. Sometimes, you know, I get talking!"

THE KISS OF DEATH

Otto Dobberton's Conception of an Ancient Myth.

Otto Dobberton, sculptor, is a native of Hamburg, and until the last five or six years made that city his home, although he has worked and studied extensively in Munich, Dresden and Italy. His work partakes of no special school of technique, but is broad and cosmopolitan. In Munich his life-size bronze of "Boy and Snake" gained him a gold medal, while the city of his birth honored him with a first prize and also purchased his large group of statuary, representing Honoria, the patron saint of Hamburg, protecting Labor. Mr. Dobberton came to San Francisco at the time of the Midwinter Fair, and has opened a studio on Pine street.

As a portrait sculptor he has been best known to the art-loving public of this city, but he is now at work on an ideal subject that bids fair to be his masterpiece.

THE KISS OF DEATH

"The Kiss of Death," which we reproduce, is unfinished, but enough has been done to show its great strength and beauty. The clay study is half life-size; the finished work in marble will be life-size. The group represents a sphinx with body of a lioness and head and breast of a lovely but sensual woman, grasping in her claws a young and beautiful Apollo. The lyre of the god is dropping from his hand, while his laurel wreath lies bruised and broken on the ground. Reluctantly the youth yields, and his lips meet those of the sphinx. It is the death of the ideal—the birth of the material, and the triumph of the sensual. In antithesis to this fine creation we re-produce elsewhere a bas relief, which Mr. Dobberton has named "Degeneration," and although this head might well serve as a frontispiece to Max Nordau's book, the sculptor used the title in absolute ignorance of the author and his work.

LANDSCAPE BY KEITH, PROPERTY OF UNIVERSITY CLUB, SAN FRANCISCO

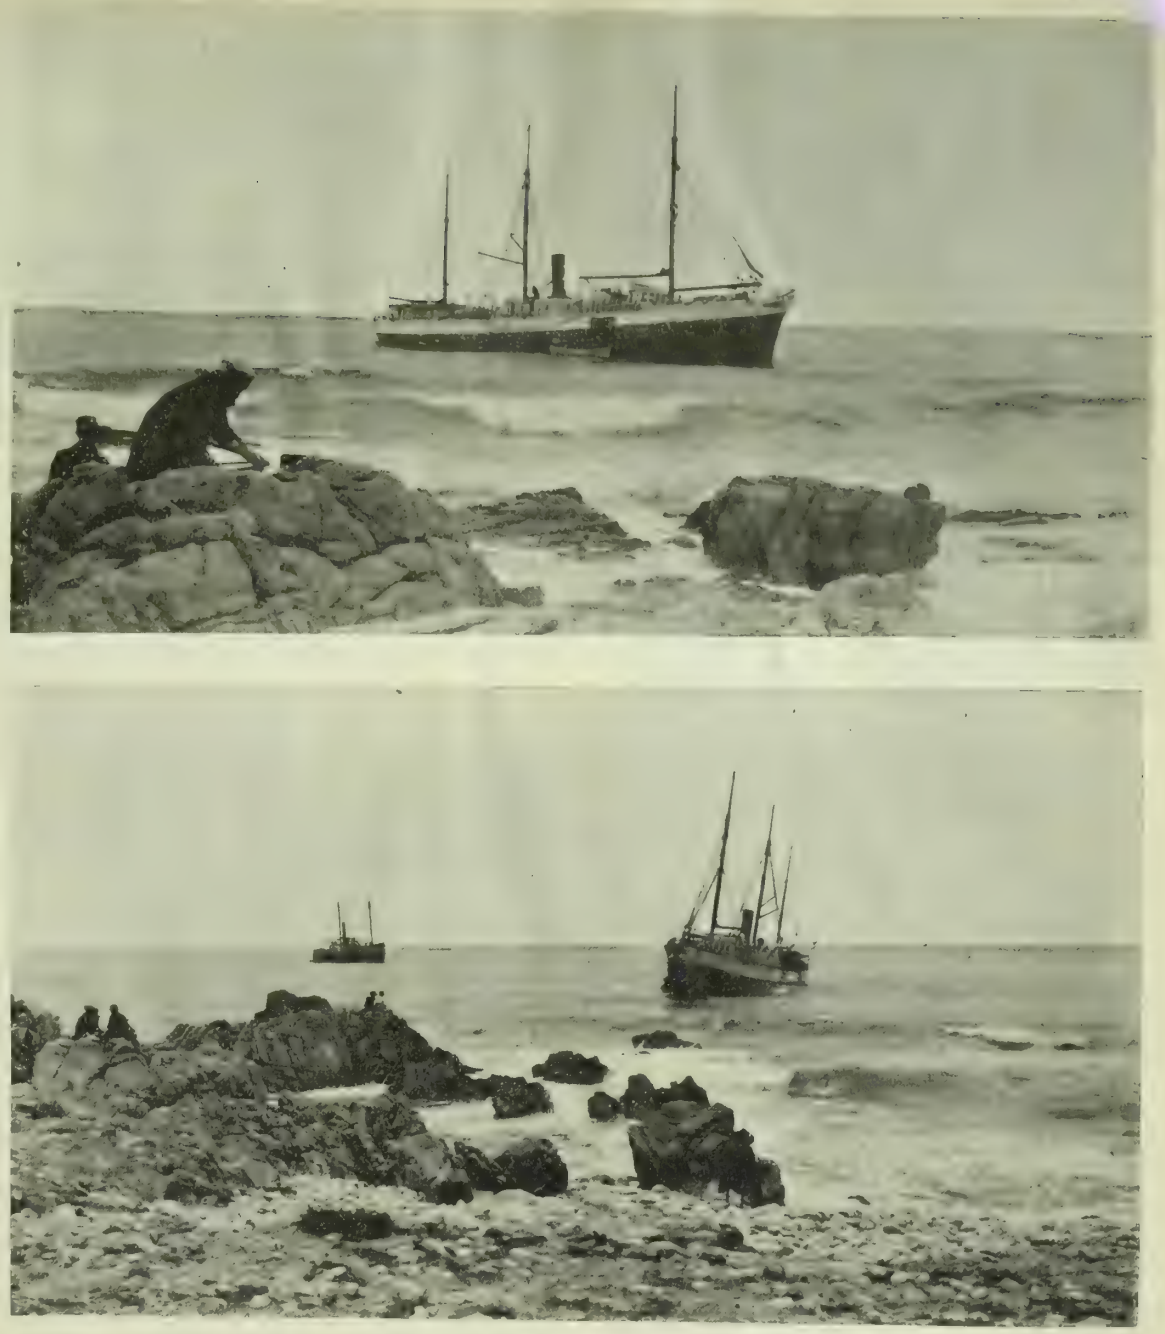
AN EPIDEMIC OF WRECKS

The Loss of the "St. Paul" and the Narrow Escape of the "Point Arena."

Within the brief space of a month three passenger steamers have gone ashore on the California coast. The loss of the Pacific Mail steamer "Colombia" off Pigeon Point is followed by the wreck of the Pacific Coast steamship "St. Paul," near Point Pinos, one of the horns of the crescent which is called Monterey Bay. The third unfortunate is the steamer "Point Arena," which collided with the headlands of Point Reyes, and nearly came to grief on the rocks below the lighthouse there. Her lot was not as bad as the rest, as the captain reversed the engines and backed her off the reef in time. A big hole was cut in the steamer's bottom, so he turned her back to San Francisco, where she is now in dock.

The thick sea fogs which obscure the coast line in summer are doubtless responsible for these casualties, but as this misty darkness is a condition to be depended upon, it might seem possible to take precautions to avoid disasters. The California coast is bleak and rocky and the fogs add to the dangers of navigation. However, there is nothing to prevent captains steering far enough out to sea to preclude all possibility of colliding with the serried line of the land. It is fortunate that these recent wrecks have not been attended with the terrible loss of life which intensified the horror of the "Colima" disaster last year. The "St. Paul," however, is a total loss. She is a small, well-built steamer of some 960 tons, until recently employed on the line between San Francisco and Alaskan ports. She was on the way north from San Diego; there was a thick fog; Captain Downing miscalculated his position, failed to see the glow of Point Pinos lighthouse, headed into Monterey Bay and landed on the shore at a point near the Seal Rocks, which all visitors to Pacific Grove will remember. The sea was smooth, fortunately, and the passengers were landed without much trouble, though it was a long pull to the Monterey wharf, for which they headed.

The apportionment of responsibility for these marine casualities is in the hands of Captain Birmingham, United States Inspector of Hulls and Boilers. Captain Downing claims to have taken every care that prudence could suggest. He and his first officer were on the bridge, the "St. Paul" was under a slow bell, but they were on the breakers before they realized their whereabouts. The steamer struck so heavily that the passengers were precipitated from their berths. (It was 11:15 P. M., Saturday night, August 8th.) Orders were given to reverse engines, but the steamer held fast, and her stern swinging round threw her on a second reef. That the officers did not know their whereabouts is undeniable, and that is a condition the obscurity does not justify. There is no reason why the "St. Paul" should have been so close to land. Common prudence demanded that her course be out to sea, rather than towards the shore. However, it is fortunate she struck where she did, as all around are sharp promontories and broken masses of rock over which the surf boils tumultuously. Indeed, a landing would have been impossible and the steamer would have been dashed to pieces had she found bottom nearer Cypress Point.



THE "ST. PAUL" ON THE ROCKS AT POINT PINOS

DR. JORDAN'S PHILOSOPHY

Opinions on the Education and Training of Men.

"The Care and Culture of Men," by Dr. David Starr Jordan, consists of seventeen short addresses or essay sketches and a concluding sonnet, not a page of which is heavy reading, though treating of high and serious topics. The sentences are short and terse, full of strong figures and apt quotations; the style is easy and cheerful; the tone throughout is eminently wholesome and refreshing.

While all the topics discussed relate to higher education they are treated in a markedly practical way, and nothing is left unapplied. In such chapters as those on "The Nation's Need of Men," "The Scholar in the Community," "The Social Order," Dr. Jordan charges the educated man with a high degree of responsibility, especially in such forms of government as ours. The people have a right to expect from him pure, unselfish and patriotic action and a strong influence in the direction of the ideal government, namely, the republic in which government by the people shall be good government as well; from which none shall be excluded, and in which no man or woman shall be ignorant, or venal, or corrupt. "There is no virtue in Democracy as such, nothing in Americanism as such, that will save us, if we are a nation of weaklings and fools, with an aristocracy of knaves as our masters. * * * If this generation should leave as its legacy to the next, the real education, training in individual power and skill, breadth of outlook on the world and on life, the problems of the next century would take care of themselves. There can be no collective industrial problem where each man is capable of solving his own individual problem for himself." The author is not so short-sighted as to believe that mere technical education or culture will suffice. If our training end in the production merely of sharper manipulators than those we had before, if it has simply "sharpened our claws and whetted our tusks" that we may the more readily prey upon our unenlightened neighbors, then the sooner we bar our windows and don our striped uniforms the better for the country. The duty of higher training toward lofty ideas is forever upon the educated men and women, and the schools, colleges and the universities of our country. Such duty must not be shirked and cannot be delegated. The author mourns the fact that we no longer choose rulers for our law-makers, but merely representatives. We do not ask for wisdom, he says, but simply for watchfulness of our personal interests. The corporations likewise, and as the latter can command the ablest servants they often send more capable men than the public can secure. Those whose interest lies in the direction of good government alone are too often unrepresented. It is the province of higher education and the individual duty of every enlightened man and woman to change and improve this, and, he believes, it is slowly being done. What we need in the state is manhood, unselfish, patriotic and enlightened. Quoting Emerson, he repeats: "The best political economy is the care and culture of men." The essence of manhood lies in the growth of the power of choice, and the power to choose includes the duty of choosing right. To choose right one must have wisdom. The problem of human development, the author says, is to bring men into the right path by their own realization that it is good to walk therein.

No law student or lawyer should be ignorant of the salient truths contained in the dozen pages devoted to "Law Schools and Lawyers," and no one contemplating the study of medicine and who is capable of enlightenment can read the chapter on "The Training of Physicians" without profit. Dr. Jordan gives an interesting account of the evolution of the general college curriculum, with special reference to the introduction of science into our higher institutions of learning. It was an uphill fight against the old classical course, and he himself experienced many of the sorrows and enjoyed keenly the victory in that contest. The elective system in colleges and universities is of very recent origin, and is, in the estimation of the author, of inestimable value when properly guarded. It opens the way for specialists, cultivates independence in the man, and affords each one an opportunity to attain the training peculiarly appropriate to his special need. He prophesies that the traditional four years of college training will disappear, and with it the sharp lines that have so long set apart the Freshmen, Sophomores, Juniors and Seniors; that early in the next century the Bachelor's degree will cease to be regarded. The latter's kindred, the Master's degree, is dying already, and, the author says, the degree of Doctor, the worthiest of all, has no elements of immortality. He continues: "The American college of the future will be a place for self-culture. The chief need of a college organization is to bring great teachers together, that their combined influence may effect results which cannot be reached in isolation. In other words, the use of a college is to produce a college atmosphere—such an atmosphere as forms itself around all great teachers everywhere. * * * The idea of "Lehrfreinheit" and "Lehrnfreiheit"—freedom of teaching and freedom of study—on which the German university is based, will become a central feature of the American college system. * * * The most striking feature of recent educational history has been the growth of the State universities, the consummate flower of the public school system. It needs no prophet to see that the ultimate growth of these into real universities, worthy of our country and worthy of the coming twentieth century, is inevitable."

As might perhaps be expected, Dr. Jordan is partial to science and to scientific treatment of all subjects whatsoever. He seems to fall into the error almost universal in this century of regarding metaphysics as being capable of reduction to strictly scientific treatment, and, indeed, of being itself a kind or variety of science. But he is not contending so vigorously for any system or idea that he forgets the main object of his solicitude, namely, the man. It is the man and the essence of his manhood, his higher self, to which he constantly appeals, all else is subsidiary.

The book is not open to the charge of being "theoretical." It is lofty, but practical; it is brave and critical, but abundantly hopeful and full of faith. The subjects being various and very briefly treated cannot become tiresome, yet each is complete in itself. We all need vigorous, inspiring words. They are especially welcome to the young man or woman just entered upon life's duties, and whose ideals are liable to fall before hard realities and the sight of common greed. It is to be hoped that the little volume will find its way into every educated household. (Published by the Whitaker & Ray Co., San Francisco.)

In New York, says the "Sun," the consumption of California wines at the wein stubes is enormous. They commonly sell at five cents the half schoppen, which is about one-third the price by the glass of moderately good German wines. The California wines are, on the whole, the cheapest wines offered in New York. Cheap labor, low freights, and a very large business enable the California houses to sell cheap, and the cheapness of these wines has made them popular. Singularly enough the largest consumers of California wines in New York are persons of foreign birth or parentage, workingmen of German birth and origin, and the people from Central Europe. Native workingmen still stick to beer or whisky, and the Italians also have adopted beer because of its cheapness. It is a rare thing to see an American workingman seated in a wine stube and drinking wine.

A London servant appeared in a hat which was an exact imitation of her mistress's, and was at once dismissed. She brought suit for a week's wages instead of notice and won the suit. Judge Lushington held that a mistress had a right to object to a servant's apparel if she chose, but she was not justified in dismissing her without notice merely because two hats were very much alike.

Crucifixion seems to be the order of the day. The Khalifa crucified the messenger that brought the news of the dervishes' defeat at Firket, and gave notice that the same fate awaited any one who mentioned that place.

Only four white hats were seen at the Queen's Garden party. They were worn by the Prince of Wales, Prince Christian of Schleswig-Holstein, Lord Egerton of Tatton and the Earl of Denbigh.

"DEGENERATION"
A BAS RELIEF, BY MR. OTTO DOBBERTON

THINGS AND PEOPLE

Some people say that Gertrude Atherton didn't do it at all, but the majority sadly believe she did. American men may not be perfect, but surely it isn't necessary to deny them souls too, and in the columns of a British newspaper at that! A cutting tirade against them has appeared in the London "Daily Chronicle," signed "An American Woman," and the finger of suspicion points indignantly at Mrs. Atherton. The author of "A Whirl Asunder" has known numberless American men, and among them some of our brightest lights, whom we innocently thought she admired, too. It is hard to find out all at once that she has never found one whose soul has "passed the embryonic stage." What a long way her own soul must have gone, if these men whom the world has called great still seem to her mere protolapsm! It must give her American friends an uncomfortable sense of being found out when they read her general conclusion that "the American never lived that a clever woman could not read from the inside out, backward and forward, after a brief friendship." For Mrs. Atherton is a clever woman. She says so herself.

***

"The Englishman is the superior being, of active brain, much travel, experience with women, and a certain desire to please," she goes on. "American men are an eccentric growth, hodge-podge, flung together in galloping, money-grabbing civilization, not fully known to themselves." There is a grain or two of truth in that, but the offensive manner spoils its force. Why not abuse people courteously? It is twenty times as effective. Surely that "certain desire to please" is as manifest on this side of the water as the other; and if we were'nt money-grabbing, what would John Bull do for a wife?

***

What a commentary on financial conditions in San Francisco is the sale of the Black Point property of the Pioneer Woolen Mills! Here was a block and three-quarters of land on the water's edge, an immense four-story brick building, and two or three smaller structures utilized in the process of manufacturing flannels, tweeds, and other woolen products, in the golden days when California blankets were the standard of excellence throughout the country. Times and conditions have sadly changed since those days. Some years back the woolen mills closed down. Since then the directors, comprising certain of the richest of San Franciscans, have held the property, hoping in vain for a recurrence of favorable conditions. In despair, they finally offered the property for sale, but prior to disposing of it at auction refused several offers as inadequate. It was chosen by the trustees of the Wilmerding Manual School as an ideal site for the institution, and there was some talk of paying $100,000 for land and buildings. But this plan the Governor, who desires that the institution be located in Stockton, forestalled, by refusing to consent to its adoption. However, a few days ago the land and structures were put up at auction. Stockholders, including the richest men in San Francisco, representing capital to the extent of $120,000,000, were in the auction room, and yet they allowed this valuable property to be sold for $34,750. The purchaser is William Fries of Fontana & Co., a well-known fruit canning firm, who desire to utilize the big mill for the purposes of their industry. It seems that each one of the millionaires present expected the others to intervene in the financial controversy, but in the absence of an agreement the bargain was obtained. A minute afterwards the lucky bidder was offered $10,000 up on his purchase, and three days later another firm offered for four of the fifty vara lots, not including the mill, $56,000, allowing an immense profit on the original investment. The old saying about the timidity of capital surely has few better illustrations than this episode. It was the ambition of Senator Fair to possess this property, which he needed to round out his immense water front holdings.

***

Some curious theories of suicide were presented in the "Call" last Sunday. Certain gentlemen of light and leading announced self-destruction a "good thing." Dr. Eisen, curator of the Academy of Science, believes that it should be encouraged. Dr. Morse of the California Psychical Society, says it requires more courage to die than to live. Captain Lees thinks it excusable, in case of illness and pain, when the condition is hopeless, for a man to end his troubles, but condemns suicide as contrary to the dictates of religion. A. S. Hallidie believes no sane man commits suicide. Dr. N. S. Ravlin, a spiritualist, says his philosophy does not countenance suicide, because we carry into the other existence ourselves and our troubles. Dr. Jerome Anderson pronounces the suicide a rebel against infinity, one who is trying to evade the consequences of his own act. Adolph Sutro thinks people who commit suicide are laboring under a species of temporary insanity, but that it is excusable in certain rare cases. Harbor Commissioner Colnon believes with Ingersoll that a man should be permitted to go out of this world whenever he thinks fit. Dr. Joseph Worcester, pastor of the Swedenborgian Church, one of the most spiritual and intellectual men in San Francisco, believes that suicide is present in all idling and trifling with the gifts of God of all kinds, and that if we could but see in the light of Heaven the act or neglect of act of many of us every day of our lives that is suicidal in its essence, it would be more shocking than the most revolting suicide. Professor Howison, who occupies the chair of philosophy at the University of California, believes that no man can really commit suicide. He may escape from the environments which he thinks have caused him to be miserable, but he cannot escape his own way of regarding his environments, which is really the cause of his unhappiness.

***

So at last the estate of the late Mervyn Donahue has been wound up, and the fortune distributed to its natural heirs, attorneys and charities. Attorney Hanlon for his services receives a fortune, eighty thousand dollars, by no means a poor return for the labor of two and a half years. Mrs. Richard Sprague and her little daughter Isabel have some four hundred thousand between them, which, together with the quarter of a million that lady received at the time of her separation from the late Mervyn Donahue, endows her with a comfortable fortune. The public, however, is most interested in the allowance of twenty-five thousand dollars for the fountain monument, which is to be erected at the intersection of Battery, Bush and Market streets. The selection of an appropriate design is in the hands of Messrs. Bergin and McGlynn, who, being gentlemen of intelligence with no pretensions to artistic authority, will undoubtedly summon to their assistance a committee of artists whose trained tastes will assist the determination. It is very important that nothing like the Lotta monstrosity be again permitted to mar our main thoroughfare. The time has come for concerted effort at creating an artistic feeling in San Francisco, and it can only be done by preventing the perpetration of further architectural and artistic monstrosities through the education of the public and the free criticism of such ideas as are advanced.

***

Dismal reports are coming back from the explorers who went to pick up gold in Alaska, and have found nothing but ice and snow. Sunrise City, on Turn Again Bay, is said to be in a state of anarchy, and the would-be miners are strangely inclined to lynch the men whose golden promises brought them there. The threats are especially directed against Frank Dusey of Fresno, who induced a hundred men to go up there in the Abion last April, each with a dazzling future held up before him. The season was so unusually late that nothing could be done before July or August, so the gambling houses and saloons of Sunrise City did a thriving business, and the men who had put up and lost money, outfits and provisions, became more and more discontented with Alaska. A belief became general that there was no chance for placer mining, which was what most of the men came expecting to find, and for which they came prepared. Everybody who can get away is leaving, but many who have squandered their means are unable to depart. Provisions and supplies are both plentiful and cheap, because many are endeavoring by the sale of whatever they have, provisions, supplies, guns and mining tools, to get enough money to pay their passage back.

***

Harvey Wiley Corbett, the son of Dr. Elizabeth Corbett, has been covering himself with glory at the Beaux Arts in Paris, and is fast becoming one of the most prominent of the American students there. He entered the architectural course last September, and after working as a preparatory student until March, he passed his examinations with flying colors, and entered the Beaux Arts. The men who had already been there a year had just had a most difficult examination, which a number had not passed, and it was proposed to give these another chance. Those who had seen Mr. Corbett's work advised that he should be allowed to enter this second examination, though it was for students a year ahead of him, and he had not heard a single lecture of the course. This was granted—with a shrug and a smile. Out of the sixty-five competitors forty passed, and five received medals, the second of which fell to Mr. Corbett. What makes this more unusual is that he is only twenty-three, being four years younger than any of the others. He is a native son of whom San Francisco has a right to be proud.

***

C. D. Lane of the Utica mine has put an end to the happy aspirations of certain prominent politicians who saw in him a fitting candidate for the U. S. Senate. The assumption of the Bryanites that the State will return a Democratic legislature seems well founded; there is good ground for believing that some member of that political faith will be chosen to succeed Senator Perkins. The kindling of political ambition in the breast of a millionaire inevitably provides his party with funds for its fight, and in the poverty-stricken condition of the local Democracy there is dire need for some man with spare dollars. Unfortunately it seems the political desires of Mr. Lane have already been sated by the prominence he obtained in St. Louis as Chairman of the Bimetallic convention. For that honor he paid handsomely, contributing to the expense of the gathering, besides paying the fares of a score of delegates who were unprovided with transportation. Subsequently he made a tour among the silver mine owners, and was reported to have gathered large sums for the good of that cause. He returns, however, makes all his moneys over to the Bimetallic organization in San Francisco, which is quite out of sympathy with Chairman Alford's organization, and now suggests that funds for the campaign be contributed by the miners at the rate of a day's pay every month. Of course, his friends may rekindle the aspirations which undoubtedly blazed in the breast of the superintendent of the Utica mine, but in the meantime there is a vacancy in the Democracy for an angel.

PROFESSOR KENNEDY, THE HYPNOTIST
Photo by Marceau

***

That hardy citizen, John T. Doyle, arrogates to himself a rare capacity of financial foresight, and expresses it by turning up his nose at the coin of this country. As agent for Mrs. Annie Donahue, it was his duty to prepare leases to bind tenants in the Columbian Building. Instead of the phraseology prescribing that rent payments be made in U. S. gold coin, he substituted a corresponding weight of bullion of appropriate fineness. This was before the breaking out of the silver agitation. Now Mr. Doyle, to make assurance doubly sure, makes the English sovereign the San Francisco standard of value and prescribes that on demand rents be payable in the coinage of Her Majesty of the British Isles. This patriotic device to protect the pockets of his clients is a credit to Mr. Doyle's astuteness, though it suggests he has little faith in the integrity of his country. Is it not a sad reflection that Americans dealing among themselves should resort to an English standard as the proper measure of value? I can understand an American company, transacting business with English capitalists, agreeing to make their payments in English sovereigns, but not John T. Doyle, agent for a California fortune. There is no necessity for such a precaution, as Mr. Doyle is well aware, but it suggests a tremendous regard for the interests of his clients—a characteristic for which he doubtless exacts due interest.

***

London society is very much wrought up over the rumor that William Waldorf Astor is aspiring to marry the daughter of the Prince of Wales. The grandson of a German fur peddler to marry the granddaughter of a British queen—no wonder there is consternation. The chief foundation of this rumor seems to be the fact that Mr. Astor gave the Princess Maud a very magnificent diamond as a wedding present, and it was not returned with sovereign haughtiness. This is undeniably a recognition of social equality between the American plutocrat and the British aristocrat, and entirely accords with the Prince of Wales' policy toward Americans, but that it is an indication of anything more than a friendly and social alliance cannot be seriously believed. Mr. Astor has evidently had all along some definite object towards which he has been quietly and skillfully working, and once this object was announced to be Lady Randolph Churchill, but now the world declares that nothing less than the Princess Victoria will satisfy him. Improbable as such an alliance seems, there is nothing in the English Constitution or law to prevent it. Princess Louise married a commoner, Lord Larne's title being merely a courtesy affair. Mr. Astor would undoubtedly receive some title on his wedding day, and might become an important factor in the history of Great Britain.

***

Ever since the latter part of May of this year telegraphic dispatches from the East have been burdened with records of death from flood, from tornado, from lightning and from heat. The terrible disaster at St. Louis alone carried away more human lives than have ever been lost in the State of California from earthquake, flood and lightning combined. The record of Monday's victims from the fierce heat of the sun was two hundred and two. On Tuesday two hundred and seventy unfortunates made up the list of dead. At 7 A. M. on Monday, in New York, the thermometer registered 85 degrees, in San Francisco it was but 67. At 12 M. in New York it marked 99, while in San Francisco it was but 64. At 4 P. M. in New York the thermometer was sizzling at 102, while in San Francisco it marked 72. At 7 P. M. in New York it was 90, while in San Francisco it was 20 degrees cooler. At Fresno, but a few hours' ride from San Francisco, the thermometer stood at 102 in the shade at 4 P. M. Monday, but not a single case of sunstroke was reported. The humidity of the atmosphere of the East is responsible for its fatal effects, while the dryness of our atmosphere makes comfort possible where death is probable at the same temperature in New York. Not until we read such grewsome accounts of death from climatic causes can we begin to appreciate to its full extent the favors which Nature has bestowed upon us.

The Subjects

In Hell

At the Circus

An Enemy Appears

WHAT MESMERISM IS

What is mesmerism, anyway?

I asked my companion, a physician of some prominence, whose attention has been given to the curiosities of hypnotism these many months. We sat together at the Orpheum watching the strange contortions which Professor Kennedy, at the snap of a finger evoked in his subjects.

Is it a fake? Are these men hired accomplices, instructed beforehand in their roles? Or are we witnessing genuine manifestations of mesmeric power?" I continued. "Anyway, how is it done?"

"That sounds like an invitation to lecture you on hypnotism," answered the Doctor, "but to reply to your original query—no one has yet discovered what mesmeric force is any more than the superintendent of the Electric Light Company can explain electricity. He has not seen it, but he knows more about its laws and possibilities than the best of us do of mesmerism. A few years hence," he continued, waving his hand at the stage, "the law will make all such performances as this impossible.

At this moment three of the Professor's patients had been told that the Devil stood before them, and their faces were contorted with expressions of such desperate terror and horror that one recalled the memory of Dore's pictures in Dante's "Inferno."

"An admirable illustration of the power of suggestion," interpreted the Doctor, deeply interested in the spectacle. Hypnotic subjects are constantly amenable to suggestion; it is the all-potent factor in the production of such phenomena. I have accepted as the only reasonable basis of psychic phenomena the theory of Hudson concerning the dual character of man's mental organization," he continued. "We have two minds—endowed with separate attributes and powers, each capable under certain conditions of independent action. The objective mind takes cognizance of the objective world through the media of the five senses, and its highest function is that of reasoning. The subjective mind perceives by intuition, is the seat of the emotions and the storehouse of the memory. It is dreamland, the intelligence which guides the somnambulist; it sees without eyes and in advanced conditions of the mesmeric sleep performs the strange feats of clairvoyance."

"Do you believe in clairvoyance and all that?" I asked incredulously.

"I've experimented with it," continued the Doctor, unmoved by my incredulity. "What you see on the stage is the result of the subjective mind's control. By the ordinary process of hypnotism the seat of consciousness is overthrown, and it is characteristic of this new mental condition that while in it the patient accepts without hesitation every statement made to him. If Mr. Kennedy there tells any of those fellow he has in hand that they are dogs, they accept the suggestion, and to the limit of physical possibility act the part.

"You use mesmerism and hypnotism as synonymous terms; is that correct?" I asked.

"Hardly. Mesmerism is really the proper term. The word hypnotism is the creation of a Dr. Braid, who discovered that a subject could be made to sleep by placing before his eyes a bright object and causing him to gaze on it with persistent attention. This pointed to a physiological explanation of the phenomena and seemed to show that the animal magnetism of which Mesmer spoke had little to do with the condition. So he called the state hypnotism, as opposed to mesmerism, the professors of which believe their subjects are controlled by a magnetic fluid which flowed from their finger tips. Now, Mr. Kennedy there uses suggestion as well as the mesmeric passes, and also, I believe, controls his subjects by flashing a bright object before their eyes. However the really interesting phenomena of the condition can only be evoked by the mesmeric method—passes and concentrated attention. Only in that way can the operator get into telepathic connection with his subject."

"Is it not curious that we know so little of mesmerism, since it has been so long the subject of experiment?" I commented.

"Not extraordinary, considering the amount of faking and fooling committed in its name," the Doctor replied. "Admitting Mr. Kennedy here to be a remarkably potent operator, such performances as you are witnessing have retarded serious scientific investigation. But the work of the French physicians, who discovered the principles of suggestion, and the experiments conducted in psychological laboratories all the world over have illuminated the subject materially. The force of mesmerism as a therapeutic agent is being recognized. It is really the only cure for drunkenness and for physical indulgences of all kinds. The subjective mind is the seat of habit, and by means of impressions set by the operator on a patient under his influence, it is possible to change the attitude of his mind, and make repugnant the pleasures or vices he has indulged to excess.

"Is there any relation between the miracles of the Christian Scientists and the feats of the mesmerist?" I asked.

"Both are founded on faith," the Doctor stated. "Mr. Kennedy, as you see, has perfect belief in his own powers. He is strong and determined and possesses tremendous will power. That self-confidence is essential to achieve control. The Christian Scientist demand that you believe you are cured, asks that you hypnotize yourself by frequent reiteration of a condition that may or may not exist. The fact seems to be that this subjective mind of which we have spoken, has absolute control of the functions, conditions and sensations of the body. For instance, perfect anesthesia can be produced at the will of the operator simply by suggestion. It is also true that symptoms of almost any disease can be induced by the same agency—paralysis, fever, chills. Bernheim, an able investigator, has produced a blister on the back of a patient by applying a postage stamp and suggesting it to be a fly-plaster. Innumerable instances to illustrate this remarkable power might be adduced if I had time."

"About crime, Doctor. Can hypnotism be used as an agency to induce or compel crime?" I asked.

"There the doctors differ," he replied. "Some say, yes, and others, no. Hudson declares that the life-habit of the individual acts as an auto-suggestion to protect the subject against injurious or dangerous commands. There are many instances of patients of temperance habit refusing to drink wine at the behest of the operator. Yet, given a subject under perfect contro., and set an impression deep in his mind, that at a certain time he must commit an action—wrong or otherwise,the chances are he will do it, automatically, instinctively, and will return in perfect ignorance of all wrongdoing. That is as reasonable a conclusion as the generally accepted proposition which dictates that a cigarette shall provoke nausea, or a mouthful of whiskey produce illness."

"Yes," he continues, "it is indeed a power that needs its limitations defined by legislation. In the words of Dr. Shrady of New York, 'No person except a regularly accredited physician should experiment in hypnotism, and not even a physician unless he has made a special study of the subject. It is too dangerous a power to be carelessly tampered with.'"

THE MESMERIST INTERVIEWED

Professor Kennedy's personality, like his figure, is robust. His is a strong, powerful, yet genial, individuality—proud of his achievements and of the public recognition accorded them, but all in a simple, unpretentious way. He is by no means a superior being possessed of mysterious power, but suggests by his style, build and manner the superintendent of some great factory accustomed to handle thousands of employes.

It was after the performance, and I cut the introductory greeting short as possible.

"How do you do it?" I asked.

"Don't know, but I do it," was the answer. "It's all suggestion. As to process, oftentimes I require none. I control intuitively, with but a touch of the hand to establish connection

"Could you select from an array of faces the men or women susceptible to mesmeric influence?" the interviewer asked.

"No, sir. Never can tell till I try—there are no general rules. I cannot say if it is weakness of will that renders an individual amenable, for I have hypnotized dozens of strong-minded gentlemen, citizens of prominence. It is often a matter of catching them off their guard, before they have the opportunity of erecting their wills against mine."

"Now, for your opinion about regulation of this force. It's a dangerous power for a man to gain over another, is it not?" I said.

"Not a doubt of it," returned Mr. Kennedy frankly. "When I have a man thoroughly under control I can put an impression on him that he obeys automatically, cannot resist it. Of course I can suggest to a man that he commit a crime, and he'll do it. As for regulating it, ask someone else. I only use my power for these performances, and for doing good, curing people of drunkenness and smoking. In that direction I'm not without credit, as you know, perhaps."

"Certain of the writers on hypnotism say it is impossible to compel a man to commit a crime—that his better nature overcomes the malign suggestion," commented the interviewer.

"Nonsense," said Kennedy. "In the way of experiment I've made men do what I pleased. However, there are limitations. The subject is only amenable to my influence as long as I refrain from injuring him. Suppose I tell one of my boys there that the piano is a fellow who has injured him, and he sails in to beat it, and knocks his hands and the box to pieces. When I waken him and he sees what has happened my power is gone. He regards me as an enemy, and the confidence he has reposed in my good faith departs. That is a fact borne out by me in many experiments."

Mr. Kennedy is a Canadian by birth; he saw light in the town of Dundas, but when he was about four years of age the family moved to Jackson, Mich., where he grew up. Kennedy pere was a physician and given to hypnotic experiments, and his boys—he had two—were much interested. When the future Professor was twelve there came to the town a mesmerist, who did many smart things, but in the minds of the two young Kennedys did not compare with their father. However, he hypnotized many of the boys and girls, and had a great deal of fun, so much so that the youngsters got their unsuspecting parent to describe the process, and they set about practicing it themselves. They soon had half their schoolmates under control, and, of course, there came an explosion which resulted in their expulsion.

"Since then," Mr. Kennedy concluded, "I've been a mesmerist—north, south and otherwise, and I'm not sorry, either."

A Stump Speech

Catalepsy

A Human Bridge

An Impossible Posture

THE POWER OF SUGGESTION

Subjects under mesmeric control reproducing emotions at Professor Kennedy's dictation. Photographed by Marceau

A PINK TEA

By JULIET WILBOR TOMPKINS

Mrs. Lake stood near the door in the prettiest of Dresden silk gowns, smiling, bowing and shaking hands with the expansive cordiality of a woman who knows she is looking her best. She thought her new gown was in honor of her tea, but her husband would have said the tea was given for the benefit of the gown, if he had known anything about either. Mrs. Lake had explained to herself a great many times why he did not know, as she arranged flowers and straightened the pink candle shades. Theo had grown so grumpy lately, there was no living with him,—that was always the starting point of the argument. He was forever talking about hard times and business worries, and making her needlessly uncomfortable,—for as long as she couldn't help him about investments and things, what was the good of bothering her with them? She didn't understand business, and didn't want to, and it was only lately that he had taken to forever dragging it in on every occasion. When she protested, or pointedly changed the subject, he felt it his duty to sulk the rest of the day. He had made such a fuss over the expense of that modest little dinner the week before that she had resolved to say nothing about the tea till it was over. It would teach him a lesson. She had sacrificed enough to his eternal plea of poverty by consenting to live in a flat. To be sure, it was a pretty flat, quite large enough for small receptions like this, and she had nothing to do with the people above, but still—a flat!

The buzz of talk steadily increased into a low roar, and began to be punctuated by the little clanking sounds of silver and china. Mrs. Lake's spirits rose with every fresh voice that joined the tumult, and Theo's opinion diminished in importance. A stray sentence pierced the din behind her.

"Isn't that the dearest gown Mrs. Lake has on."

Half involuntarily she drew a step nearer the speaker, smiling to herself.

"I don't see how she affords it all," answered another voice. "Willie says her husband is in dreadful financial—"

Mrs. Lake turned abruptly away and joined a small group. This everlasting question of money! How it did spoil everything.

"Let's see what she says," exclaimed a pretty, somewhat dolly, little woman. "Mrs. Lake, don't you think that in a real emergency, women have more courage than men?"

"I'm afraid I don't," she answered with a laugh. "I'm a dreadful coward, myself."

"About mice and things, of course. That's traditional," answered the other. "But, suppose you had murdered a man and tucked him under the divan just before we came,—why, you'd rub your cheeks to get the color back and straighten your hair and meet us just as if nothing had happened. A man can't rise above himself. If he has the least little thing the matter with him it never occurs to him to try and hide it."

"I know it," said a young married woman. "I must tell you the best story on George. It's mean of me to tell it, of course—"

A servant whispered to Mrs. Lake that a man wished to see her in the hall. His business was important and could not wait.

"Don't tell it till I come back," she begged.

A roughly-dressed man stood in the corner of the hall, some papers in his hand. He looked decidedly uncomfortable, as Mrs. Lake rustled up to him, still half smiling.

"You wanted to see me?" she began, wondering a little.

"Yes, ma'am. I'm very sorry, but it is my duty as a sheriff to attach your furniture," he said, turning over his papers to avoid looking at her. "I have here an injunction served by Bernstein and—"

"What do you mean? I don't understand," exclaimed Mrs. Lake, petulantly. "If my husband owes anybody any money, of course he will pay it. He must have overlooked it."

"I'm afraid he can't pay it, ma'am," answered the sheriff, looking up in wonder. "Do you mean to say you don't know he is on the edge of bankruptcy?"

Mrs. Lake put her hand against the wall, turning her back to the crowded room. Her lips moved, but a burst of laughter a few feet away drowned her words.

"I'm very sorry, ma'am," said the sheriff, helplessly.

"Do you mean that some people are going to take our furniture because my husband can't pay them?" she asked, after a pause, speaking quietly and distinctly. "Have I understood it right."

"That's what it is. Here are the papers, if you—"

She shook her head, impatiently.

"I don't want to see them. May I ask you as a great favor not to do anything till these people go and my husband comes home. It won't be more than an hour."

She was very white, and her voice shook a little. The sheriff consented with a foolish attempt at gruffness, and took a seat in a dark corner of the hall, swearing softly to himself to relieve the situation. Mrs. Lake stood for a moment looking fixedly into space, then turned and went back into the noisy room.

"Now, I want to hear that story, Louise," she said, joining the group she had left a few minutes before.

At last they began to go, one by one at first, then all in a body, leaving the rooms strangely empty and silent. Mrs. Lake smiled and bowed and shook hands up to the very last, then looked around her, half dazed.

"I suppose the chairs and tables will all have to come up, and tell me how much they've enjoyed being here, too," she thought, with a miserable little laugh, that ended as she knew it would, in a burst of tears.

When she had cried away some of her fright and distress, it began to dawn on Mrs. Lake that she had every right to be extremely angry. The idea of Theo's putting her in a situation like this! He might at least have come home and told her himself. If he had gone to her and sand, "My dear, I'm surely ruined, and we shall have to begin the world over again," of course she'd have given up everything without a word of reproach (she really believed she would), and lived in a nasty little room somewhere, and taken in washing, if necessary. But to let it come this way, without a word of warning, was enough to make anyone furious.

Dinner time came and went, and still Mr. Lake did not come home. His wife watched the clock more and more impatiently, for warmed-over wrath is as unsatisfactory as warmed-over dinner, and a little underlying pang of anxiety was making it harder every minute to keep angry. People who were ruined often commit—did terrible things to themselves. Why didn't Theo come?

She telephoned down to his office, but could get no answer. And, perhaps, all the time not a dozen feet away from that shrill bell was lying a—

Mrs. Lake jumped up with a little gasp of horror, and flinging on some wraps, hurried out and took the first car for down town.

"I'll give 'em half an hour more," thought the sheriff, comparing his watch with the hall clock.

Just half an hour later the click of a latch-key sounded in the front door, and someone entered with the unmistakable air of the man of the house. The sheriff approached him silently with an ominous-looking paper.

"What's all this?" demanded Mr. Lake, going over to the light.

"Bernstein and Bernstein have served an attachment on your household effects,' answered the sheriff, thanking heaven that he now had a man to deal with.

"But I don't owe them a cent," protested Mr. Lake. "Why, man, this isn't for me. This name is Blake."

"And what's yours?' demanded the sheriff, turning very red. "The address is the same, and your servant said "

"Lake, of course," he interrupted with a laugh. "That must be for the man in the flat above us. His name is Blake, and I know he is more or less slippery."

The sheriff went slowly out, to ring the next door bell.

"I'm afraid I've mussed things up a good deal in your house," he said regretfully to Mr. Lake, who had

MISS EVELYN MILLARD
WHO ENACTED PRINCESS FLAVIA IN "THE PRISONER OF ZENDA" AND WON THE HEART OF ITS AUTHOR followed him. "Your wife was sort of cut up. She streaked out not long ago, but I don't know where."

"Went out!" exclaimed Mr. Lake, going down the steps to look anxiously up and down the street. A forlorn figure wearing a rustling silk gown under her dark wrap, and a sailor hat at a reckless angle, turned the nearest corner and came wearily towards him.

"Why, Bess!" he exclaimed.

"O, Theo, it's all been my fault, and I'll never spend another cent," she cried, clinging to him. "I ought to have listened, and I've had a tea, and I'm so ashamed. Oh, what if you'd never come back!"

"But it's all a mistake," he explained, eagerly, leading her into the house. "The summons wasn't for us at all. And I didn't come home because I was finishing up a transaction that is going to settle all our worries and make us better off than ever. Is there any dinner left?"

Mrs. Lake passed around the drawing-room, patting the tables and giving the arms of the chairs little affectionate pinches.

"I don't care, I'm ashamed of myself just the same," she broke out, a few minutes later. "I can't throw away all those resolutions I've been making. I've got to reform whether it's necessary or not. Just you wait and see!"

Just before the Czar's coronation the French papers assured the world, with their usual vainglorious flourish, that even the horse which His Majesty would ride on his triumphal entry into Moscow had been imported from France, having been bred and trained in La Vendee. It now turns out that the steed to which Nicholas II. intrusted himself on that memorable occasion was an English mare, named Norma, about thirteen years old, and frequently ridden by the young Emperor when he was Czarewitch. She is a handsome, well-mannered creature, almost white, and she was shod with burnished silver to figure in the pageant, which will be positively her last appearance either in public or private. After discharging so sacred a duty, she will, in accordance with Imperial etiquette, pass the rest of her days in the seclusion of the splendid new stables adjoining the Michaelovsky palace in St. Petersburg.

HE FOUND HIS FLAVIA

The Engagement of Anthony Hope to Miss Evelyn Millard.

There has seldom been a more interesting engagement announced than that of Mr. Anthony Hope (Hawkins) to Miss Evelyn Millard, who plays the leading part in "The Prisoner of Zenda." Of all Mr. Hope's women characters, the Princess Flavia is the most carefully and earnestly drawn. The others are charming, but more or less flighty, and often not a little unscrupulous, heroines of farce-comedy rather than living women. But Flavia is deep and earnest and high-souled, loving her honor even more than she does the counterfeit king. As she herself says, when he is urging her to join his flight: "Honor binds a woman, too, Rudolf. My honor lies in being true to my country and my House. I don't know why God has let me love you, but I know that I must stay!"

Is it Miss Millard, the actress, that the author has fallen in love with, or is it this ideal woman of his own creation? Is Mr. Hope like the girl in the old fairy story, who made a man out of sugar paste and almonds, and then fell in love with him? Of course this is all very impertinent, but when a man becomes a public character he cannot have even his love affairs to himself. When "Zenda" was produced in London, Mr. Hope attended faithfully every night, at first to see the play, but eventually to gaze at "the face of a girl, pale and lovely, surmounted by a crown of the glorious Ephberg hair." And so he fell in love with—the Princess Flavia. But it is Miss Millard that he is going to marry!

The beautiful young actress undoubtedly has just as many charming virtues as the Princess she represents, but it is not likely that they are identically the same ones, and Mr. Hope may find himself frequently surprised. If you had a preconceived idea that your wife was always ready on time, for instance, her failure in this respect would not be made any less disappointing by the fact that she never passed bad nickels. But after all, most men are in love with an idea when marrying something quite different, and yet marriage is not always a failure. Perhaps Mr. Hope has decided that his Princess was nowhere beside the actual woman she led him to. Let us hope so, with a hearty blessing. That he knows what love itself is, nobody can doubt who has read the last words of "The Prisoner of Zenda": "Shall I see her face again—the pale face and the glorious hair? Of that I know nothing: Fate has no hint, my heart no presentiment. I do not know. In this world, perhaps—nay, it is likely—never. And can it be that somewhere, in a manner whereof our flesh-bound minds have no apprehension, she and I will be together again, with nothing to come between us, nothing to forbid our love? That I know not, nor wiser heads than mine. But if it be never—if I can never hold sweet converse again with her, or look upon her face, or know from her her love, why, then this side the grave I will live as becomes the man she loves; and for the other side I must pray a dreamless sleep."

A NOTABLE POEM

The following poem by Mrs. Meynell came out in a newspaper not long ago and fell under the eye of Mr. Coventry Patmore, who has held it up to the world with generous and enthusiastic praise. "How incomparably noble, strong, passionate and pure," he says, "those words of consolation to the one lover who was come so near as to be denied!" He compares its quiet debut to that of Keats' "Bell Dame Sans Merci," adding: "Here is Mrs. Meynell's 'Belle Dame Sans Merci,' which I venture to prophesy will some day rank not far below that of Keats:

" 'Why wilt thou chide,
Who hast attained to be denied?
Oh learn, above
All price is my refusal, Love.
My sacred Nay
Was never cheapened by the way.
Thy single sorrow crowns the lord
Of an unpurchasable word.

" 'Oh strong, oh pure!
As Yea makes happier loves secure,
I vow thee this
Unique rejection of a kiss.
I guard for thee
This jealous sad monopoly.
I seal this honor thine; none dare
Hope for a part in thy despair.' "

Almost every one has at some time in his life been confronted with a scene, or participated in some occurrence, that seemed at the moment the repetition of a dream or a half forgotten happening of long ago. The sensation is most queer, and Elizabeth Bisland in a recent article, "Dreams and Their Mysteries," attempts to explain the phenomena in this way.

"A visitor for the first time to a tropical country was charmed with the excessive novelty of everything about him; but suddenly one evening, being carried home in his chair by the coolie bearers, a flood of recognition poured over him like the waves of the sea, and for a few moments the illusion was so strong as to leave him breathless with astonishment. He had the sense of having often done this before. The warm night, the paddling of the bare feet in the dusk, the hot smell of leaves, were all an old trite experience. For days he struggled with that tormenting sense, with which we are all familiar, of being unable to recall a something, a name, that is perfectly well known—is 'on the tip of the tongue,' as one says—but all in vain; and in time the recognition grew fainter and more elusive with each effort to grasp it, until it slipped forever away into darkness. If such things are not inherited memories, what are they?"

Miss Bisland goes almost to the extent of charging some of our dreams to our ancestors, which, considering the long line of shortcomings already attributed to our maternal and paternal predecessors, is somewhat rough on our forefathers.

THE MATABILI WAR

Native Women Who Incite the Warriors to Battle.

The Matabile-Mashona war has certainly reached a critical stage. We have been reading from time to time telegrams from South Africa describing the situation in Buluwayo. The small force of British holding the fort against hordes of Matabili who are pouring over their borders determined to reconquer the territory Cecil Rhodes subjugated some years ago. Soon after the Napoleon of South Africa had formed his Chartered Company, and obtained from the Government the right to extend its territory, he equipped a force of 600 men and pushed them north into Bechuanaland, and thence into the country of the Mashona, as far as the Valley of the Zambesi. The motive of this expedition was the search after gold, and at first a treaty with Lobengula, King of the Matabili, enabled the company's employees to prospect for the precious metal without molestation. But the Kaffirs of the tribe are hard to hold in hand, and before long there was an outbreak, which Rhodes promptly and cleverly suppressed, and then coolly proceeded to annex both countries, and succeeded at the cost of a little bloodshed and considerable diplomacy.

Determined then to secure what he had acquired for the South African Company, Rhodes proceeded with the construction of a railway to Buluwayo, the terminus of which is now at Mafeking, some distance beyond Johannesburg. A good idea of the extent of the British possessions in South Africa may be gained from the fact that the northern border touches Lake Tanganyika and Lake Nyasa forms its western border. For the recent rising, which has precipitated so many pitched battles between the natives and the English various causes are assigned. The authorities attribute it to the enforcement by Rhodes of the Cattle tax—a species of war indemnity. By men who have lived among the Matabili, however, it is said to arise from the war customs of the tribe. The Matabili is the ideal native of Southern Africa—a superior specimen of the Kaffir race—tall, erect, finely modeled, handsome of his type, with a corresponding array of physical and mental qualities, a great sportsman, fond of athletic pastimes, reckless of life and limb in pursuit of fighting—his chief passion—and ready to kill as to be slain. Courage and skill at arms are the qualities most highly prized by this race. The question of matrimony is determined by the exploits of the individual warrior; indeed, the Matabili girls refuse to marry unless their suitors show the blood-stained assegai. Courtships are conducted at the periodical feasts, which are given at every full moon, when the several impis of the race return from a marauding expedition, in which they have plundered and slain to their heart's content. The home-coming of the victorious braves laden with cattle and attended by delegations of slaves is a matter of great rejoicing. Feasting and drinking are followed by a war dance wherein each brave recites his deeds of valor and exhibits his blood-stained assegai in proof of his feats of daring,—emphasizing by darts of that formidable weapon the number of his victims. Round the panting warriors gather the wives and young maidens decked out in festive array, in head trimming and feather adornments, oiled and painted according to the fashion of the land. The feast is followed by a general marrying off, when the youngest and prettiest of the maidens fall to the lot of the most bloodthirsty of the warriors.

FORT CHARTER, THREATENED BY THE REBELS, BUT RELIEVED BY CAPTAIN BRABANT AND HIS FORCE JULY 1.

Besides courage, however, there is also the necessity of purchase, as it is customary in Matabeleland for the amorous swain to contribute to the father of the loved one, cattle and goats in exchange, though she has the option of rejecting a suitor if he is not agreeable to her. This is the most highly prized of the Matabili maiden's privileges, and the recent attacks on Buluwayo are attributed to the resolve of the women to marry only those of their suitors who have won renown in battle. Since Lobengula's defeat, two years ago, there has been little fighting among the Matabili, much to the discomfort of the witch doctors and headmen, who sigh for the broad lands of Rhodesia and the sacred Kraal Buluwayo, which the English have captured. Slowly they have instilled the poison of hatred for the white man, or "Mlungoo," into their women, inciting them to resist the entreaties of their would-be husbands, until the men, driven to desperation, were inspired to rise against the British.

VIEW OF A KRAAL

The defenses of Buluwayo are remarkably strong, consisting of several protected belts, together with trenches, barbed wire fences and sand-bags. The small corps of British in charge of the Kraal when the rising was announced has since been reinforced and the garrison is now strong enough to sally out with its machine guns to attack the enemy. They are natural fighters, these Kaffirs, and the entire tribe is assembled round the town. In the pitched battles that have ensued since the British troops were strengthened, victory has not always been with the invaders. Indeed, the Matabili have destroyed many settlements throughout Rhodesia, and at the end of the war, which is necessarily one of extermination on both sides, victory will be found an expensive purchase.

IN A CORNER OF THE LAAGER

TROLLING FOR SALMON

There are two ways of fishing. One involves a complete and expensive outfit, many miles of tramping, two or three tumbles into the creek, and a reward of perhaps a dozen small trout to make up for aching bones and sapping exhaustion. The other way is to go down to Santa Cruz when the salmon are running, with from three to five dollars in your pocket. For this you can hire a man, tackle of every kind, and a good seaworthy boat.

You start from the pier in front of the Sea Beach Hotel, with nothing to do but take care of your line and the fresh sardine on the end of it. After running half a mile or so, there comes the ominous jerk, the singing of the reel, and the mad excitement of landing your catch, all of which Mr. William Black describes much better than any one else could, in any one of his novels. If the salmon is a thirty or forty pounder, you will do well if you land him within half an hour of that first thrilling pull.

This year the largest salmon of the season weighed fifty-four pounds, while the greatest number caught by one boatman in a day was sixty-seven, weighing in all nearly nine hundred pounds. It is thought that the salmon of the North feed here during the winter, as some of the largest catches have been made in December and January. Their presence has been known of for a long time, though it is only in the last five years that people have trolled for them. Now, however, it is one of the most popular sports on the coast, and hundreds of fishermen sail out into the West every year when the salmon are running.

SANTA CRUZ FISHERY

POLITICAL PERSONAGES

John D. Rockefeller utilizes his wealth to take the sting out of the Standard Oil Company's accumulations. The latest evidence of his generosity is the gift to the people of Cleveland, Ohio, of two hundred and seventy-six acres of land, valued at $600,000, for the purpose of a public park.

Mark Hanna lives at the Waldorf while he is in New York. He has simple habits; rises at seven A. M., retires punctually to his room every night at ten, devotes an hour to writing letters, and goes to bed exactly at eleven. He does not drink wine, and limits himself to three cigars per day.

Sister Marie Chantal, Superior of the Hospice-General of Tours, has been appointed a member of the Legion of Honor, a distinction she shares with Rosa Bonheur, who has long had the honor of being the only lady member of the order. Sister Chantal accompanied the French troops through the disasters of the Franco-Prussian war, and it is said of her that she saved more lives than did half the medical men in the army.

Mgr. Benedict Lorenzelli is to succeed Mgr. Satolli as papal delegate to the Roman Catholic Church of the United States. He is a native of Bolonga, forty-two years old, a brilliant student, and a friend of the Pope's elder brother, Cardinal Joseph Pecci. On taking holy orders he was made a Professor of the Propaganda, was subsequently rector of the Bohemian College, and retired from the post of Internuncio to the court of Holland to come to America.

It is said that Candidate Bryan is a disappointment to the managers of the Democratic campaign. Nor has he thus far delivered a single speech half as good as the oration which won him nomination. He has a certain manly charm, but he lacks the endowment of political intuition which a successful leader requires. It is interesting to learn that Bryan does not regard Sewall as an aid to the ticket. His preference for the Vice Presidency was Matthews of Indiana.

Frank Frankfort Moore, the successful novelist, is a big handsome man who has made enough out of his books to wear in all his photographs a fur coat. He learned the art of construction by writing books of adventure for boys. This is admirable practice, he says, for boys want a strong incident in every chapter, and stronger incidents as the chapters proceed, winding up with a display of fireworks. His finest success was, "I Forbid the Bans." Last year he wrote 482,000 words and finished "The Sale of a Soul" in eight days.

Henry E. Abbey, the well known impressario, is fifty years of age. He commenced life as a jeweler in his father's store in a small Ohio town. His chance came when the owner of the local theatre asked him in a time of emergency to assume the management. Mr. Abbey says that Sarah Bernhardt had only fulfilled one engagement outside Paris which had not been under his direction. He had paid her over £200,000, and as much as £3,800 in a single week. Mme. Patti received over £200,000 from Mr. Abbey.

Prince Lobanoff, to whom is attributed the aggressive foreign policy which Russia has recently pursued, has been divested of his unlimited power, and the way is now open for a very effective pro-Christian policy in the Levant. Credit for this defeat is given to the Czar's mother, who proposes that Russia shall no longer play the part of the Sultan's supporter in the crime against civilization. Emperor Nicholas is devoid of military ambition, has no friends among the soldiers, and is averse to the martial element in the ceremonies of court life.

Sir Edward Clarke, who defended Dr. Jameson, the famous raider, argued with great force and in the olden days of strict technicality, would undoubtedly have cleared his client. Lord Chief Justice Russell laughed his fine points to scorn, and announced, in a decision which brushed away libraries of recorded cases—"Many of the points of counsel belong to a time when the right and the justice and the substance of the thing were sacrificed to the science of artificial statement. This is regarded by the English bar as the announcement of a new and sensational principle of jurisprudence.

The failure of Secretary Balfour as leader of the House of Commons, is generally ascribed to his inability to endure the fatigue and discomforts of the campaign with those whom he leads. Mr. Gladstone, when over eighty, never left his place during the long debates on the Home Rule Bill, and listened to both orators and bores with deference. The late W. H. Smith, when tortured with various physical ailments, remained patiently in the box and saw that his colleagues sat there also. But when Mr. Balfour is bored he saunters off to his room and allows his colleagues to shirk the drudgery also.

Hon. Joseph Cook, the Postmaster-General of New South Wales, was born only thirty-five years ago in the coal mining district of Staffordshire, and was set to work in the mines in his ninth year. After fifteen years of labor as a collier, he married and set out for New South Wales, where he soon became a leader among the miners of Lithgow. He had practiced speaking on his Primitive Methodist circuit in the Black Country, and when there was an election in Lithgow, and the miners' candidate fell ill, Mr. Cook was chosen to fill his place. He took to Parliamentary debating in Sydney like a duck to water, and two years ago, when only thirty-three years of age, the ex-Staffordshire pit lad became a member of the Government.

Highest of all in Leavening Power.—Latest U. S. Gov't Report

Royal Baking Powder

ABSOLUTELY PURE

IN SOCIETY

How the Smart Set Has Amused Itself This Week.

It has been asserted so often that the entertainments of society lack originality and interest that further reiteration of the fact amounts to mere triteness. Neither the law nor the doctors are so careful of precedent as those whose purses enable indulgence in pleasure. Their round of enjoyment is merely a little treadmill of dinners and teas and polo, relieved by occasional theatres, suppers and excursions. All those, of course, are differentiated from ordinary teas and dinners, by the distinguished company on the treadmill, by the salary of the cook and the expense of the china. But there is never an appeal to the eye, to the intellect, to the sense of beauty, color and harmony. Ballrooms are decorated with flags and banners in specific notes whose familiarity is as vulgar as the carte de jour of a second-rate lodging house. A cotillion supper differs from its predecessor in the manner of its menu cards, rather than in the matter of viands. All are costly but commonplace—like a new parlor set in pink satin or a Book of Beauty with steel engravings and an embossed cover.

There is the general rule—here the exception. It was the Fete Champetre which Mr. and Mrs. Will Crocker gave at Burlingame, on Wednesday night last. Perhaps one might more appropriately term it a Midsummer Night's Dream, for the beauty, and color, and variety of the spectacle lingers in the memory like the impression of a delicate delicious vision. No conception which involves dancing, and music, and colored lights can be strictly original—for these are the alphabet of entertainment, but there is chance for originality in its execution. A week ago the idea of the fete had not been conceived. Yet in the space of a few days there had arisen on the lawn, under the spread oaks, a temple built in the form of a hemicycle, Grecian in style, but conforming in character with the architecture of the villa. The large pedestals supporting the columns were similar to the pilasters of the terrace. In the midst of this—the Temple of Hypnos—a fountain played, the effect of the structure being light, graceful and harmonious. This was the scene of the spectacle. The setting was charming—a background of sloping lawn set off the dazzling white of the hemicycle; the dark green of the oaks furnished contrast. Opposite were the low lines of the villa, with its broad terraces and graceful balustrades.

The fall of night set the signal for the illumination of the grounds. Thousands of Japanese lanterns slung from the trees diffused a gentle radiance; electric lights in delicate tones of color beamed from the capitals and outlines of the Temple. The guests arrived about 9 o'clock, were welcomed by the host and hostess, assisted by Prince and Princess Poniatowski, and danced until eleven. Then the party assembled on the terrace, and the rendering of the Pastoral, of which the Temple was the scene, began. It was the story of a shepherd, journeying from Parnassus to Pelion, who came upon the Garden of Hypnos, and, stopping to rest, fell asleep upon the steps of a fountain. In a dream, naiads, representing the four seasons, came dancing out of the wood, each in turn, bestowing upon the shepherd, out of her bounty, the good gifts of Nature. Pallas Athene, appearing then, assumed the form of a bird, awakened the shepherd and bade him continue his journey under her kindly guidance.

The classic conception was most cleverly executed. Through the Temple the dancers swayed like nymphs of the wood, graceful as fawns, evincing in motion, however, none of the stilted conventionality which characterizes the ballet dancer in action. The culmination of the spectacle was the appearance of Pallas Athene, a tall and beautiful maiden, garbed in a green robe, who posed in an aureole of red glory ere awakening the shepherd.

The calcium effects—flooding the Temple with shifting shades of color, and bathing the dancers in their pale pink, grey, heliotrope and golden robes, in its vivid radiance, were delicious. Indeed, the spirit of the classic was preserved throughout with no marring touch of fin de siecle conventionality.

Supper followed, the tables spread out on the terraces. In a rustic and vine-covered arbor at the head of the garden steps, a troupe of Spanish musicians were seated, rendering on mandolins and guitars quaint Iberian melodies. Then followed a characteristic Spanish dance, done with inimitable grace by a dark-eyed damsel, whose seductive motions recalled the triumphs of Carmencita. A Polish dance, in compliment to Prince and Princess Poniatowski terminated this phase of the entertainment—which really rivalled the charm of the Pastoral. More dancing then and at 2 A. M. the guests departed by special train for San Francisco.

The credit for the artistic beauty and success of the fete belongs and is fully accorded by Mr. and Mrs. Crocker, to Bruce Porter, the well-known artist, and Willis Polk, the architect, both of "Les Jennes," who contribute to "The Lark." Conception and execution were alike their own. The Temple of Hypnos was planned Friday night and begun on Saturday last. The dancers were drilled and dressed in four days. So the beauty achieved is the more notable when one remembers the rapidity of execution.

* * *

The pony racing meeting at Del Monte is the event to which society looks forward. My strictures on the disinclination of the Country Club proper to participate are declared by competent authorities to be undeserved, inasmuch as the gathering of Pacific-Union men will be as great and as enthusiastic as last year's. This is not surprising, indeed, when one considers the membership of the Burlingame institution and its northern rival are practically the same. So they will all join in a festivity which has become the great annual outing of Californian society. An entertainment of great interest is promised—a coaching parade in which Mr. and Mrs. Walter Hobart, together with the Baldwins, Tobins, Newhalls, and other owners of drags, have promised to join—a paper chase, two polo games, bathing of course, and last and above all, the races. Captain Wainwright has the affair in hand, and the entries, thus far, promise a variety of exciting contests. Walter Hobart is to ride, I am told, and there will be the active participation of a number of the dintinguished hares and hounds from San Rafael. Preparations proceed at a great rate; quarters at the Del Monte are in positive demand, and whoever intends going had better command a room in time.

Another interesting piece of news is the leasing of the Hotel Rafael to General Warfield of the California. This is really important, inasmuch as the General's supervision means much to the institution. First it will be kept open the year round; then it insures good and unvarying management and proper attention to details. The succession of hotelmanagers who have tried guiding the destinies of the institution have never had fair play before, but this time General Warfied is absolute and responsible. If there be aught wrong he'll have the credit, just as he is also to pocket the profits of success. Of course he retains the California Hotel.

Only the relatives and a limited number of intimate friends were present at the nuptials of Miss Virginia Aldrich and Dr. William Stewart Beede, which was solemnized on Monday afternoon at the residence of Mrs. Rounseville Wildman, a sister of the bride. Rev. Shaw of the Church of St. Mary the Virgin, united the happy young couple. Dr. Beede is a nephew of Senator Stewart of Nevada.

The latest engagement of interest to Jewish social circles is that of Miss Helen Bastheim and J. Lubin, a young merchant of Los Angeles. Miss Bastheim has but recently returned from a Southern visit, and it was while sojourning with relatives in Los Angeles that she met her fate.

Mr. and Mrs. George Crocker are occupying the California street mansion. They are only to be in town for a limited period, but it is more than probable that their stay will be emphasized by more than one dinner party, an entertainment in which Mrs. Crocker especially shines. Miss Alice Rutherford is the guest of Miss Catherwood at the Catherwood ranch in Napa, where she expects to remain until they all leave for Del Monte.

Dr. C. W. Decker, Dentist, 806 Market Street

THE CROCKER VILLA AT BURLINGAME, SCENE OF THE FETE CHAMPETRE

LOLA
... LED DANCE AT THE POLISH DANCES AT THE FETE CHAMPETRE

The Original Swain's Bakery, 213 Sutter St., stands without a rival and has stood the test for years. The most delicious meals are served by gentlemanly attendants, and the management takes pride in having everything orderly. It is just the place for business men and ladies out shopping to lunch.

For Restoring Lost Vitality, Curing Nervousness, and for Purifying and Enriching the Blood Vintine stands without a peer. Not a patent medicine. Sold by Brooks' Homeopathic Pharmacy, 119 Powell st. Order from your druggist

And still another to add to the chapter of recent accidents. This time it is Percy Moore, who unfortunately is threatened with the loss of his eyesight. Dr. Voorhies, the physician in charge, however, gives some little hope of the young man's ultimate recovery.

The rush to Del Monte is only just beginning, for a great many people don't know how delightful it is down there in June and July. For those who love the place only for the fun and excitement of it, August is, of course, the best time, but those who want a quiet rest in a beautiful place should choose any other month. Political conventions and financial uncertainties have so far kept a good many away, but now the hotel is rapidly filling. Bicycles scorch along every path, and both girls and men have taken eagerly to fishing. The surf has been unusually warm, and has quite eclipsed the tanks in favor this last week. Among the best swimmers are the Misses Alice and Ethel Hager, Louis Bruguiere, Captain A. H. Payson, E. A. Bruguiere, Mr. and Mrs. A. W. Scholle, Walter L. Dean, Mrs. Harry Jerome, Mr. Onatavia, Walter and Andrew Martin, W. Mayo Newhall and Joe Grant. On Wednesday Walter Dean and several others swam from the pier at Del Monte to the pier at Old Monterey and back. Tennis no longer holds its own as a popular sport, though there are a large number of entries for the ladies' doubles match, which will take place here on the ninth of September, and decide the Coast championship. Bowling is still popular, and, of course, dancing.

Wednesday night being one of the regular dance nights at the Del Monte, the usual number of people were present and made a goodly crowd. The music is excellent this summer, and dancing was kept up until a late hour. Among the recent arrivals are Walter and Andrew Martin and John Lawson, who came down to study up the polo situation. Mr. and Mrs. Charles B. Alexander have arrived from New York and are expected here for a long stay, and Mrs. Henry Schmiedell and Mrs. George H. Howard will arrive on the seventeenth. Mr. and Mrs. Henry Scott and a party of friends are expected daily, and Mr. and Mrs. Charles Baldwin early next week, and Mr. and Mrs. Walter S. Hobart, Miss Juliette Williams and her pretty cousin, Miss Rodgers, the week following. Mr. and Mrs. Austin C. Stubbs will be joined later in the season by Mr. and Mrs. Alfred S. Tubbs and Colonel George Hagar of Colusa.

San Rafael, too, is beginning to awaken, and promises to be unusually jolly this August. There will be races and paper chases and outdoor sports of every kind, besides the usual luncheons and dinners. Quite a number of entertainments have taken place already, one of the prettiest being a luncheon at Fairfax Villa, given by Mrs. Crooks for a number of her friends. The Folgers gave a picnic on Friday, followed by a dinner of twelve at the Hotel Rafael.

The picture "Morning Prayer at Santa Cruz," published in last week's issue of this journal, was reproduced from a clever print by McKean & Ort, photographers, of that city Removal Notice.

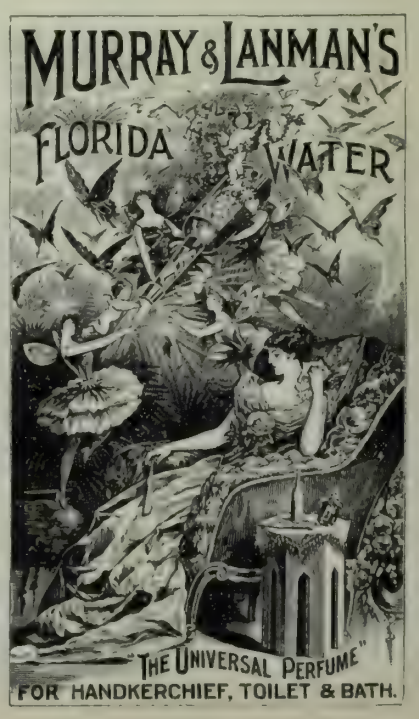
A. Hirschman, gold and silversmith, for many years at 113 Sutter street, has removed to 10 Post street, under Masonic Temple.

Poodle Dog Restaurant, S. E. corner Grant Avenue and Bush street. Private dining and banquet rooms. Telephone 429. Blanco & Bruno, proprietors.

Use only Richardson & Robbins' Devlied Meats for picnics



THE THEATERS

Viola Allen Shows Her Ability—The Frawley Company at Its Best.

In spite of its occasional bits of tinsel, its melodramatic touches and its fourth act, "The Masqueraders" is the best play the Empire Company has given. It is better than "Bohemia," of course, for "Bohemia" is mere fluff, and it is even better than "The Benefit of the Doubt," for this reason—and this alone—it stirs the blood, while "The Benefit of the Doubt" didn't and couldn't and shouldn't. One sat through the latter play without a throb of emotion or a single sympathetic leap of the pulse, without feeling anything except a pleasing curiosity as to what quirk affairs would take next, a comfortable contempt for the principal dramatis personae and a warm admiration for Pinero's deft manipulation of his scenes. This is a good deal, infinitely more than usual, but it is not quite enough; we want a little excitement, and in "The Masqueraders" we get it, though we don't get some of those things which make the excellence of the Pinero play.

However, putting aside all question of the comparative excellence of the two plays, this week's performance would still be better than that of last week, for the single prominent female role is in Viola Allen's capable, careful hands, and Annie Irish is retired to the background, where she belongs—and should stay until she gives up her affected precision and spurious saintliness of accent, and learns to talk like a gentlewoman.

For the first time during this engagement Miss Allen has an opportunity to show her ability. The role of "Dulcie Larondie" suits her much better than that of "Mimi" or "Theo"—she fills it admirably. In the much-talked-of third act she is a bit volcanic, but she touches your very heart. The moment she comes on the stage, with that still, tense atmosphere about her, your sympathy is enlisted; when she laughs that dreadful little hysterical laugh, something in you wakes and murmurs; when she throws her arms over her head—with such abandon, such despair—and sobs out her misery, you draw a deep breath and look the other way; you feel you have no business there watching that shaking figure which turns its back towards you and leans so hopelessly on the door.

The play should end with this act, though it would not be wise to send people away with Faversham's febrile shrieks of "She is mine, mine, mine," ringing in their ears. Still it would not be so bad as that clammy fourth act, that weary sea of Faversham and Irish, with its small, small oases of Allen and Gottschalk. Twice or thrice during the play Faversham threw some faint sounds of genuineness into his voice; twice or thrice he did the right thing, for instance, when he held the poor little wife closer to him when her husband entered and glared threateningly at them; but for the most part I failed to find either him or his astronomical love-making convincing, though he seemed to receive the unmitigated approval of his audience. Robert Edeson, who did not please so well, was to me much more satisfactory. He did not over-act or under-act the part of Sir Brice Skene; he was the surly drunkard and debauchee to the life, and if any one can surpass the repressed but savage brutality of his "my dear," "my love," or, indeed, any of his remarks to his wife, I don't want to hear him. Gottschalk struggled manfully with his Sunday-school story book lines in the first act, created a laugh in the second, captivated us in the third and played the mentor very well in the last act.

Dodson was, as always, capital as "Montague Lushington"; worldliness, and pessimism fairly exuded from him, together with much cynical cackle. Mrs. Whiffen and May Robson were entirely satisfactory, Crompton good as "Jemmy Jimmy Stokes," but not quite so good as when he played the Bishop in "The Benefit of the Doubt." Ida Conquest looked delightfully pretty in a pinky purplish setting which gave a velvety softness to her languid, sensuous face. It would be just as well, though, if she got a new lot of mannerisms—not that I object to her present ones, far from it, but I don't like to see them grafted on such widely different roles. On the whole, it is a very good show, but I've been wondering why Lady Clarice, her mamma, and the rest of the womenkind haunted the bar. Their presence was neither necessary nor congruous.

* * *

The new combination is doing capitally at the Columbia this week. I have never seen a better amused or more Baldwin-esque crowd in the theatre than was there last Tuesday night. The play is farcical in the extreme, as might be expected when a woman with "two strong points, an iron resolution and hysterics" and Harry Corson Clarke come together.

Still, there is much love-making of quite a serious and realistic order, too, if one may judge from sounds. The truth is I don't like stage love-making (the better it is done the less I like it), so tried to look somewhere else whenever I could. It makes me feel "de trop" and I don't like to hear a girl telling a crowd just how she feels when the man she loves kisses her.

We were told on the programme that "The Great Unknown" is a comedy from the German of somebody or other, by Augustin Daly. It was quite unnecessary; its humor is distinctly Teutonic and nobody but Daly would ever have thought of adapting it. Here is a sample of its wit. Mr. Jarraway imagines he is adored by that ancient angel "Aunt Penelope." "Take her, my boy," he implores Cousin Ned Worthing. "Take her for a week or two, until I've weaned her." Brilliant, isn't it? After that Aunt Penelope tried her hand. "You famous," she said to Mrs. Jarraway, who thinks she has made a reputation by her pen. "You famous! I'll tell you who was a famous woman—she was a cobbler's wife, she had ten boys, and would have had eleven if the last one hadn't turned out a girl." There is an unlimited supply of this sort of badinage in "The Great Unknown," and several fragmentary slices of real fun; the rest of the time the dramatis personae wobble uncertainly between sentiment and absurdity.

Worthing was quite unimpeachable except when he felt he had something particularly fine to say, then he would draw himself up and jerk each word out of his mouth as abruptly as a loosened cork leaves a bottle of champagne. Wilton Lackaye furnished the best sport of the evening. His Irishman was very funny and his proverbs never failed to produce a laugh.

Miss McAllister was better than I've seen her in a long time. She seldom has so pleasing a part; generally her role is either hopelessly idiotic or obnoxious. Alice Pixley made rather a pleasing maid. Blanche Bates was quite in her element as Etna, and little Hope Ross was really comical when she tamed the Tartar.

There is a marked improvement in the company's co-operation, so the general effect was much more artistic than usual.

PEG WOFFINGTON.

Adams' Tutti-Frutti Chewing Gum for Indigestion

The Maison Riche serves an elegant dinner at popular prices.

DRAMATIC NOTES

The famous Steve Brodie of bridge fame, in his play, "On the Bowery," will appear at the California a few weeks hence.

SADIE MARTINOT
WHO PLAYS THE LEADING ROLE IN THE "GAY PARISIANS"
Photo by Thors

It is good to know that we are to see Beerbohm Tree here. He is one of the Baldwin's fall entries, and among other plays will give us a version of Gilbert Parker's "Seats of the Mighty."

Anna Held, the Parisian music hall singer, has been engaged by Evans and Hoey for "A Parlor Match" revival. It is said that her salary is $1,500 per week. This is a Columbia combination.

The Mapleson Opera Company is billed to appear in New York very shortly. The cast includes many well-known European stars, who will make their initial appearance in America, subsequently coming on to San Francisco.

We are to have "The Gay Parisians" at the Baldwin next Monday night. Sadie Martinot, W. J. Ferguson and a number of other clever people are in the cast. Judging by the success the play met with in the East, it should prove a winner in San Francisco.

Mr. Chauncey Olcott will close a very successful engagement at the California next week in "The Minstrel of Clare." Mr. Olcott impersonates Larry O'Lynn, a rollicking Irish-American, with a sweet voice and a fund of humor. Being an Irish-American himself, Mr. Olcott should be quite at home in this role.

The "Great Unknown" has been the success of the season at the Columbia Theater. It excited much laughter Monday night, and certainly displayed the company to the best advantage. It will be continued another week, and will be followed by "A Social Trust," to which the town and the profession look forward with great interest.

The Macdonough Theater reopens for the season under the management of Friedlander, Gottlob & Co. on Monday evening, with the Empire Theater Stock Company. The repertoire will be: Monday, "The Masqueraders," Tuesday, "Bohemia," and Wednesday evening, "The Masqueraders," and at the special Wednesday matinee, the only performance of "The Benefit of the Doubt."

The latest acquisition to the Tivoli's company is Miss Flora Finlayson, who will be remembered here through her connection with the Bostonians some years ago. Miss Finlayson, who has a beautiful contralto voice, of rare power and sweetness, will sing the role of Agucera the Gypsy in the opera "Il Trovatore," which will be the attraction all next week. Sig. Michelene and Martin Pache will alternate in the role of Manrico, the Troubadour, and Sig. Maurice De Vries and John J. Raffael in that of the Count De Luna.

In addition to the repainting and reburnishing of the Auditorium of the Orpheum, the boxes have been enlarged and refitted and the location changed to some extent, making their seats the most desirable in the house. The new "Wien Stube" will be ready to open in another week, and it promises to become a popular adjunct. At the close of every performance a concert will be given there. The star features of next week's performance promise to be Mildred Howard and Sydney DeGray, the popular sketch artists. Miss Howard will appear in her sensational bare-footed Trilby dance. Kennedy has been retained, and the people by this time know that he is giving by far the funniest entertainment ever witnessed in the Orpheum. Biondi has been retained another week. He will put on a new series of surprises in the way of character changes. The Nelson Sisters have new acrobatic feats to perform.

False Economy

Is practiced by people who buy inferior articles of food. The Gail Borden Eagle Brand Condensed Milk is the best infant food. "Infant Health" is the title of a valuable pamphlet for mothers. Sent free by New York Condensed Milk Company, New York.

Occidental Restaurant, 337 Bush street. Headquarters for tourists. Separate rooms for families. Meals a la carte. Lunch 50c. Best French Dinner in the city, 75c. Joseph Munier, proprietor.

The Mira Valle Wines are always reliable. The most noted connoisseurs are unanimous in pronouncing them a superior home production. Depot, 604½ Geary street.

Tea-nations roast their tea every day just before drinking it?

What do you think? Do they do it for fun? Is there any sense in it? Do they know anything about tea?

Your money back if you don't like Schilling's Best — fresh-roasted tea.

QUEEN LILY SOAP

BEST ON EARTH
FOR LAUNDRY USE

Patronize Home Industry

"WITHOUT SIN"

The Daring Idea of a New Novelist.

One of the most talked-of books in London just at present is "Without Sin," by Martin J. Pritchard (H. S. Stone & Co.), a novel so startling in its conception that in clumsy hands it would have become both vulgar and blasphemous. A nervous, sensitive young girl, the grandaughter of a Jewish picture-dealer in London, broods over a painting of the Madonna, to which she bears an extraordinary resemblance, until she gets the idea that she is to be a second Madonna, the virgin mother of a new Messiah. This takes entire possession of her imagination, and when she is asked to pose to an artist, Eliot Mayne, in a picture of the Madonna, she consents with rapture, thrilled by an "ineffable joy that she was deemed worthy to pose as a model for her ideal." What sort of a man Mayne is, we are shown by a scene in the studio just before Mary comes:

The model's throne was drawn into the very heart of the flood of sharp white light that flowed like an unrelenting sea through the great north window. Behind it was slung from the ceiling a curtain of canvas, quaintly colored in faded distemper work. It looked like dull shot velvet in the morning radiance, and its dim shadows threw up in crude contrast the intense fairness of the model who, with airy pose and alluring gesture, represented the very crown of man's temptation—young and exquisitely beautiful womanhood. Scarcely draped by the cloud-like gauze scarf that lost its substance against the nacreous gleam of her flawless skin, the girl stood all unabashed by the exposed perfection of line and limb in the pitiless glare of the cold reflected light. Airly poised on one slender foot, she held out a beckoning hand.

"There," said Mayne, suddenly rising, "that pose is perfect, but it's a strain, I know. Now you may rest."

The naked girl stepped from the throne and stretched her stiffened muscles before dropping into a deep carved chair, over which a black bearskin was flung.

"Yes; it is a bit of a twister, that attitude, but you know I always like to go one better than the others, and this beats the Solomon girl."

"You mean 'Salome,' Rosie."

"Perhaps I do, but anyway they'll all know who sat for the temptress party at the first glance. Rosie Graves all over! they'll say, and won't I have a crow over the other models at the Academy private view?"

"Well, they won't be far out, will they?" said Mayne, with a light laugh at the girl's social ambition, glancing from the figure on the canvas to the form of the girl in the chair. With a tardy sense that she was not at work Rosie drew the folds of the fur about her."

Mayne with light touches worked on the dark background as she sat and chattered.

Then, glancing at the clock, he hurried the model in her preparations for departure, for he did not wish Mary and Lady St. Cyprien to find her there. He moved about slowly rearranging the white lilies which stood erect in vases of Japanese bronze in every corner of the studio. From among the dim shadows cast all about the wide fireplace by a baldachino of early Italian inlay work, the flowers gleamed out like great shining stars, while beneath the big north window they had been arranged, with mediæval stiffness, in a long row of mediæval blossoms, that looked creamily transparent against the brilliant light.

Rosie has hardly received her good-bye kiss and whisked out when Mary is announced. Through some mischance, she has been obliged to come by herself.

Mary, in a cool white linen gown and simple, broad-leaved hat, entered alone, bringing into the bizarre affectations and false art of the studio, now heavy with the mingling odors of lillies and the aromatic vapor of the burning incense, a delicious atmosphere of pure morning freshness.

A little later she came out of the dressing-room transformed from the young lady of today into a mediæval maiden. Her unbound hair hung like a curtain of spun gold about the bare shoulders and open throat, where it made corn-colored shadows. She wore a straight gown of soft white woolen material that fell in simple pleats from the low-cut round neck-band to her sandalled feet. A high-backed chair was her seat upon the artist's throne. Across her knees, so deliciously outlined by the drapery, Mayne laid a great sheaf of heavy scented lilies, and around her feet they were clustered with such art that she herself seemed to be one of them, growing upward in a very cloud of perfume. In her right hand she held sceptre-wise a tall green rod crowned with one blossom. It gleamed against the pale gold threads of her hair like frosted silver, and the petals brushed the pure outline of her cheek.

Being singularly free from vanity, as well as absorbed in religious fervor, she is utterly unconscious of her beauty, or of the artist himself except as the medium through which this great honor has come to her.

Her silence annoyed Mayne singularly. That a pretty woman should flout one of his compliments he was neither fool nor coxcomb enough to mind as a rule. But today he was nervous and vaguely irritable. The heavy perfume of flowers, the sickly odor of the incense, and the sweet Spring, all of which made the birds build, and the leaves and blossoms break, warmed the blood in his veins, till his hand grew restless and his brain fantastic. The charm of the temptress he had been painting was over him, and between the virgin on which he worked and the sitter there floated the large, luscious red lips of the Lisa of long ago, and the smooth, warm pink skin and ideal outlines of Rose. A hundred times he only cleared his throbbing brain by resting his burning eyes on the incarnation of young girlhood before him, but a hundred times Lisa and Rose mocked at him from the picture.

Again he looked at his sitter. She was still enwrapped in her own thoughts and so immovable that the drapery over her bosom did not stir. How sweet in expression she was, how plaintive, and how like a child's was the sad droop of her mouth; and yet how exquisitely womanly, how desirable was that full line of her throat and the nascent curve of her bosom! How false, he thought, was his art compared to nature, as he realized that it is purity that is the tempter.

Half curious, half frightened, he advanced and touched her shoulder gently, as though to waken her, but she did not move. He raised her soft fingers, but no pulse answered to his own. He laid one hand above her heart, almost fearful that it had ceased to beat, but it throbbed feebly under his lingering touch, and he knew then that she had swooned. The cloying sweetness of her much-loved flowers had strangled her and blanched her lips and cheeks to their own stainless pallor. He raised her in his arms and carried her to the couch in the alcove. As he laid her down her gold hair made an aureole of faint light about the whiteness of her face. A spray of lilies he had caught up with her fell crushed and dying to the ground.

She did not move, and scarcely seemed to breathe. He went hastily to the door, intent on summoning aid. He hesitated. "Would there be gossip and talk if he called?" he asked himself. His fingers, made nerveless by indecision, fell upon the key instead of the handle he had sought. Once again he paused, then slowly turned the key and went back on tiptoe to where she lay, white among the cushions as a drift of pure snow in the purple hollows of the hills.

During this fainting fit, while she is at the artist's mercy, a wonderful vision comes to her, and when her child is born, she firmly and devoutly believes him to be the new Christ. Her faith carries her through the talk and wonder so securely that she hardly feels it as an ordeal, and even convinces a few of the titled, decadent set in which she moves. When the child dies, her faith is terribly shaken for a short while. Then she conceives the idea that God is merely testing her by an appearance of death. She finds Lady Theo praying by the crib:

"What are you doing there?"

"Praying, dearest Mary, for the dead!"

"For the dead! There is no dead here!"

Lady Theo dropped her rosary with a clatter, and Lady St. Cyprien stretched out supplicating hands to the girl, who, with flashing eyes and quivering body, stood by the bedside.

"Mary, my poor darling child!" she cried, plucking at Mary's gown.

But Mary, with deaf ears and eyes that saw nothing, let the stemmed passion of Belief creep through heart and brain, body and soul.

"Dead! You think the child is dead?" she cried aloud. "How dare you so mock at God—and at me?"

She stooped over Lady Theo, who crouched half frightened on her knees, and taking her by the shoulder, dragged her to her feet and thrust her back from the bed.

"Where is your boasted trust? Where is your vaunted faith? You who for so long have professed belief in the great miracle that has been, and the grand mercy of forgiveness and redemption that is to be; you who have prayed to be among those who shall in the course of years hear and learn the divine truth; you who have been witness to the manifestation of which I have been the poor medium; are you so little worthy to be tried, so blind, so stubborn, that you cannot—will not—see?"

Lady Theo, her eyes wide with terror, clung to Lady St. Cyprien, whose pale face was bathed in tears of pity and grief.

But Mary, straight and tall, with her arms, from which the full silken sleeves had rustled to the shoulder, raised above her head, stood like a prophetess of old. The fire of the future burnt in her half-closed eyes, and from her mouth, which scarcely moved, she spoke in trumpet tones.

"Do you not know, O you of coward belief and weakest confidence, that the child is not dead? He was not born into the world to die, but to live—live for ever! Do you not understand that it is my faith and the faith of those who are strong enough to believe with me that is being tried? God has sent this great temptation to strengthen and confirm, not to kill, our poor mortal hopes. Have not the prophets said that he who should be born of a pure virgin shall never die, but shall live—to redeem his people?"

Her voice rose higher, and she shook like one in whom an inward spirit stirs.

"The ordeal of my soul, the proof of the prophecy lies here before me and before you, who have been chosen as witnesses of the truth. My son is not dead, for the attribute of immortality is his. He is for a brief space in Heaven, but he shall come again—on the Third Day!"

For three days Mary waits and watches by the crib, serene in her faith in the coming miracle. Her friends humor her as long as they can, but on the evening of the third day a sad little procession files up the stairs and into the silent nursery. Mary watches them uncomprehendingly.

"Who are you? What have you come for?" she said in a low voice, laying her hand on the edge of the frilled pillow, and firmly facing the little crowd, which surged through the doorway and seemed to fill the room.

For a moment no one answered. The hired servants of death were there merely to perform their duty, not to explain their presence. The others, her friends, those who knew the dear faiths and the fond beliefs which were rooted in the very foundations of her being, hesitated among themselves as to who should strike the blow which was to shatter the fabric of her life.

"Tell her, Noel," whispered Lady St. Cyprien, among her sobs. "It will be less hard for you."

"They have come for the child. It is time."

"Come for the child! Time!" she repeated, in a vacant manner, and staring in his face, where something in his sympathetic eyes seemed to rouse a faint fear in her own. Then, with a courage born of a sickening despair, she passed one hand across her damp forehead, and cried, in louder tones: "Time! Yes! it is time! Time for the great God to show His unbelieving people that He still loves them—and will forgive. It is time for the saviour of the world to manifest the truth, and to justify his mother. Behold! The golden throne is set for my son and for me. You who are here shall see the miracle! Believe—and adore!"

She turned, and before Marrable could catch her white hands, she had torn the merciful veil from the bed.

The cry of gladness with which she stooped over the pillows changed to a moan of horror as she gazed, for the fingers of corruption had already marked the little one for its own, and the fading lily was fairer to see than the dead child.

She stood alone—in the center of the room where the glory of her maidenhood had passed three happy years of life—in the room whence the shame of her womanhood had just been carried in all the corruption of death.

Amid infinite agony, the scales of innocence and ignorance were falling from her eyes, the veil of purity was being torn from her soul. The cruel light of a never-dying day of dishonor was breaking slowly but ruthlessly in upon her; for the child who had come to her out of immortality was mortal, and, oh, God! the Son of Man!

He who had been her crown of honor among all women was but the brand of her shame. The boast of her immaculate virginity had been the defilement of her sex.

Her child, born to redeem, and to immortality, had been conceived in shame, had died in sin!

We leave Mary crushed and unconscious, and cross an interval of years, to find her the peaceful Mother Superior of a convent. The struggle she has passed through has destroyed the visionary romantic girl, but left a strong, calm woman, religious in another and deeper way.

J. W. T.

NEW BOOKS

"Green Gates" (Appleton & Co.) is an odd, flighty, rattle-headed little book, American in setting and French in tone. It is just what Miss Meredith calls it, "An Analysis of Foolishness," and deals with a poor little rebellious, foolish cripple, and a staid, middle-aged, foolish bachelor who can't help falling in love with her. Miss Meredith evidently has a great weakness for Tony herself, and fondly calls her "a little naughty angel wistfully wanting to find Heaven," comparing her to a "statue of an infant Christ with a tawdry, soiled paper crown." Her descriptive expressions are quaint and original, but one has a resentful consciousness that she has made a fad of them. We are called on to imagine a brown moth of a heroine who grows pale like "a very young and dear, not to say precious, little winter moon," and whose laughter persistently suggests Turkish music. Indeed, the whole book poses so oviously as clever that that one's appreciation is somewhat marred. Yet, in spite of affectation, it has a certain charm. There is something original, nonchalent, daring about it—a hint of power not yet used. Miss Meredith's fate as an author is still in her own hands. (For sale by William Doxey.)

"In the Valley of Tophet," by Henry W. Nevinson, (Henry Hart & Co.) contains some of the best short stories that have appeared in a long time. They are not unlike those in "In Homespun," noticed last week, though stronger, more intense, of a higher class. Without a glance at the names on the covers, they suggest a masculine author, while those of "In Homespun" suggest a feminine one. "The Valley of Tophet" is a picturesque name for a mining district in a part of England not distinctly specified. The characters are individual, well-drawn and give a decided impression of novelty. The stories are all interesting, but, perhaps, the three beginning with Miss Rachel are the most so. A connecting thread runs through these. Miss Rachel is a middle-aged woman who has lived in the little village of Kinestead for many years, respected and honored by her neighbors. An attractive young man comes to visit her from America, and pride in him proves so much stronger than shame that, without the slightest occasion, she lets out to her neighbors her carefully-kept secret and acknowledges him her son. The other two stories deal with his fortunes.

"The Madonna of a Day" (D. Appleton & Co.) is a flaring melodrama—as stirring as danger and disguise and T. Dougall can make it. It tells the adventures of a new woman in the shape of a sporty English journalist who, while traveling on a sleeping-car out west, takes a sonambulistic walk. The result is that she wakes to find herself in a snow-bank, alone in a strange country, with the train hopelessly gone. With great difficulty she makes her way to the hut of some rough, disreputable men, who, as it is Christmas night, take her for the Madonna in person. She is clever enough to work on their awe, and goes through enough horrors to upset an average woman's reason for life. At last all the men find her out except one, a low dwarf, who clings to his illusion and saves her from the others. Whe she is finally out of danger, she shows herself as she really is, and the dwarf, in his disappointment, sinks back lower than ever. (For sale by William Doxey.)

The latest of the "Freak Magazines" comes from New York—a thin, wan booklet hight "John-a-Dreams," with pulp board cover, announcing itself as "a magazine for the conservative iconclast and the practical dreamer; devoted to mere literature and to classical typography." John-a-Dreams' "mere literature" contains among other inoffensive articles a story by Edmund Yarrow, which was much better written by Carolyn Wells for a recent number of "Lippincot's," under the title of "A Vivisectionist." In a monologue entitled "The Print Shop," John-a-Dreams describes the pleasures of possessing a private printing-press. John's father was too generous to John upon his last birthday, and the dozen inharmonius type-faces which John exploits in twenty pages, makes his idea of "classical typography" add a new horror to decadent literature.

Verestchagin is about to publish a book called "Autobiographies of Unimportant People"—a series of realistic portraits of beggars, soldiers, priests and other common Russian types.

It is said that more than four thousand people have visited Carlyle's house in Chelsea, since it was turned into a Carlyle museum less than a year ago.

Books Received.

Without Sin. A novel by Martin J. Pritchard. Published by Herbert S. Stone & Co.

Venus and Cupid; A Trip from Mount Olympus to London, by the author of "The Fight at Dame Europa's School." J. B. Lippincott Co. For sale by Joseph A. Hoffmann, 120 Sutter street.

A Modern Argonaut, by Tecla B. Davis. Published by The Whitaker & Ray Co., San Francisco.

A Master of Fortune, by Julian Sturgis. Frederick A. Stokes Co., publishers.

MOORE'S POISON OAK REMEDY
Cures Poison Oak and all Skin Diseases. Sold by all druggists

Chew Adams' Pepsin Tutti-Frutti. It is sovereign for indigestion and agreeable to the taste

Fall Style Neckwear and Hosiery at J. W. Carmany's, 25 Kearny Street.

Kelly's Corn Cure never fails. 25 cents
102 Eddy Street

Among the many great Financial Corporations on the Pacific Coast, none rank higher than the

FIREMAN'S FUND INSURANCE CO.

Its Agents are found throughout America, and its Record for Prompt and Equitable Settlement of All Honest Losses is Firmly Established

D. J. STAPLES, President — WM. J. DUTTON, Vice-President — B. FAYMONVILLE, 2d V.-Pres., Sec'y
J. B. LEVISON, Marine Sec'y — LOUIS WEINMANN, Asst. Sec'y — STEPHEN D. IVES, General Agent

Gladness Comes

With a better understanding of the transient nature of the many physical ills which vanish before proper efforts—gentle efforts—pleasant efforts—rightly directed. There is comfort in the knowledge that so many forms of sickness are not due to any actual disease, but simply to a constipated condition of the system, which the pleasant family laxative, Syrup of Figs, promptly removes. That is why it is the only remedy with millions of families, and is everywhere esteemed so highly by all who value good health. Its beneficial effects are due to the fact, that it is the one remedy which promotes internal cleanliness, without debilitating the organs on which it acts. It is therefore all important, in order to get its beneficial effects, to note when you purchase, that you have the genuine article, which is manufactured by the California Fig Syrup Co. only, and sold by all reputable druggists.

If in the enjoyment of good health, and the system is regular, then laxatives or other remedies are not needed. If afflicted with any actual disease, one may be commended to the most skillful physicians, but if in need of a laxative, then one should have the best, and with the well-informed everywhere, Syrup of Figs stands highest and is most largely used and gives most general satisfaction.

Its Purity A Surety Of Its Excellence

Accept No Substitute None So Good None So Pure

Vina Brandy

Vina Distillery Co.

819 Market St., S. F.

Wedding Invitations are properly engraved and in correct form, at ROBERTSON'S

ABRAMSON-HEUNISCH CO. (Incorporated)

IMPORTERS AND JOBBERS OF

Brewers' and Bottlers' Supplies, Corks, Druggists' Glassware, Etc.

26-28 Main St. San Francisco

COMET OOLONG

The oldest and most reliable brand of Tea on the market. Sold only in ¼ lb papers at 20 cts. per paper.

ALL GROCERS KEEP IT

S. F. CARPET BEATING AND RENOVATING WORKS

D. MACKINTOSH & CO.
Successors to S. S. Ferguson & Co.

Renovating, Laying and Refitting Carpets a Specialty

Telephone South 36 23 and 25 10th St., S. F.

RIPPLES

Presumably Humorous and Otherwise

On the Ferry.

They were mother and son. She, a womanly little woman about twenty-seven years of age, while he, the spoiled and only child, aged about six. As they seated themselves in the cabin, one could easily observe that the mother's thoughts were not of her surroundings but elsewhere, while the child, probably its first trip on a ferry boat, was restless and most observing.

The child said nothing, but did considerable squirming in his seat until the gong rang in the engine room for the boat to start, when, with awe in his voice, and his large brown eyes opened to their full extent, he said, in a stage whisper that could be heard by everyone within the cabin:

"What's that?"

"That's the gong for the boat to start."

"Who makes the gong go?"

"The captain."

"What does he make the gong go for?"

"So the engineer can start the boat."

"What does he want to start the boat for?"

"So we can go to the other side."

"What do we want to go to the other side for?"

"Oh, don't ask so many questions. Look out of the window and see all the water."

"Is that water, ma?"

"Yes, dear."

"Golly, what a big drink!"

(After a silence)—Ma?

"Yes, dear."

"How did all the water get there?"

"God placed it there, my dear."

"What did He put it there for? Didn't He have any other place to put it?"

"I'm sure I don't know."

(After a moment's thought)—Oh, I know why He put it there!

"Yes?"

"Yes, so the boats could could run across."

(After a long silence, looking intently at his mother's hat)—Ma?

"Well, dear."

"You trimmed that hat, didn't you?"

"Sh-sh-sh."

"Well, you did."

"Keep still, and don't bother me, or I shall be compelled to whip you."

"But you did trim it, 'cause I seed you."

(As she jerks his arm)—Keep still.

"But you did trim it, just the same, and you know it."

"Will you keep still?"

(Between his sobs)—Well, didn't you trim it?

"I'll whip you good, if you don't keep still."

"Well, you trimmed it just the same."

As the mother boxed the child's ears and dragged him on to the deck, we could hear through his boo-hoos, "Well, you did trim it, and you know you did, 'cause I seed you."

The Reason.

A prominent attorney, whose chirography is on a par with that of the late Horace Greeley, recently found it necessary to send his porter, an Irishman, to the office of a brother attorney for a work not contained in his own library.

That there might be no mistake, the attorney not only mentioned the name of the work desired to the porter, but also hurriedly wrote the same on a slip of paper.

Just before the porter took his departure, to make positive that there was no misunderstanding in the name of the work, the attorney said:

"Pat, I wish you would read what I have written on the piece of paper."

"Sure, it do not be necessary, sur; Oi do be knowin' what Oi be goin' afther, sur."

"But I wish you would read it, that there may be no mistake."

Pat gazed blankly at the slip of paper for a moment and uneasily shifted his weight from one foot to another.

"What!" fairly yelled the attorney, "can you not read?"

"Oh, yis, sur."

"Then, why in the devil don't you read it?"

"Because Oi can't, sur."

"Damme, you just told me that you could."

"Oi did, sur, and so Oi can; but Oi'm dommed if Oi can read that, sur; nor do Oi belave iny one outside o' yourself can, sur, wid all due respect to you, sur."

Of Course.

Physician at Receiving Hospital (to driver of ambulance)—Where are you going now?

Driver (who has just brought in injured citizen)—I'm going back to pick up the three people I run over while coming here with the patient.

Proof of It.

Benson—Is Jenkins still practicing dentistry?

Blossom (opening his mouth and pointing to where a tooth was missing)—Doesn't that look as if he were still practicing dentistry? The chump broke it off at the root.

Had Only Commenced.

Editor (to reporter)—Did you get all of Bryan's speech last night?

Reporter—I think so. I got to where he said, "One word more and I am finished," when I fell asleep.

Editor—Great guns, man, you didn't get one-fifth of it!

BRUNO.

A NEW FENDER

The Latest Contrivance Interposed Between the Public and the Street Car.

Owing to a new combination of black iron pipe and galvanized wire netting, the trolley is in a fair way to lose the larger part of its victims. This invention is called the Jones Automatic Car Fender, and does not look unlike the Kalamazoo baby carrier one occasionally sees on the front of paternal bicycles. Not only will it save people from being run over, but a stern lesson will be taught to those who try to cut across disrespectfully near the car, for the fender projects two and a half feet and will scoop up the unwary like a galvanized butterfly net. It can be placed under the car, but, as the inventor himself points out, a man would then have to be knocked down and thrown under before it could do him any good, and a great many might object to assistance on those terms.

This fender is automatic by the simple device of a weight-clutch which catches over the top end of the rods. These rods, which project in front of the scoop until they are within five inches of the track, work through hinges at the ends of the curving arms. The weight at the top so overbalances them that the force of ten pounds is required to lower the front end to the track, and as anyone old enough to be struck by the fender is pretty sure to weigh more than ten pounds, there is evidently no danger of being crushed beneath it. Once safely in the fender, and no one can get hurt—or, indeed, get out—before the car is stopped.

The simplicity of the Jones fender makes it a very effective one, for there are no springs to be out of order at the fatal moment. Perhaps in time it will become as popular as the box seat of a coach, and the correct girl, on returning from a shopping expedition or theater party, will settle herself in its hammock-like curve.

A PRACTICAL TEST

J. F. Cutter

EXTRA

Old Bourbon

has been a staple family and medicinal whiskey for a quarter-century

E. MARTIN

—AND—

CO.

411 MARKET ST.

SAN FRANCISCO

CHARLES S. WHEELER ERNST H. LUDWIG

Ernst H. Ludwig & Co.

THE MODEL AMERICAN CATERERS

IN HOC SIGNO VINCES

Supply Wedding Breakfasts, Luncheons, Dinners, Matinee Teas and Receptions on shortest notice. Also Terrapin Entrees Luncheons and Dinners. Ice Cream, Cake, &c.

Telephone 2388 1206 SUTTER STREET

Good Appetite

Is restored and the disordered Stomach and Liver invigorated by taking a small wineglassful, before meals, of the celebrated . . . . . .

Peruvian Bitters

We Have Appointed

Coburn, Tevis & Co.

OUR AGENTS FOR

CHOCOLATE MENIER

MENIER & CO

MISS HAMLIN'S SCHOOL

AND

VAN NESS SEMINARY

1849 Jackson Street
San Francisco, Cal.

BOARDING AND DAY SCHOOL FOR GIRLS, under the joint direction of Miss Sarah D. Hamlin and Mrs. Edna Snell Poulson.

The fall term will open Wednesday, August 5, 1896.

It is intended to bring the College Preparatory Course into the Accredited System of the University of California. The study of Natural Sciences will be a special feature of the school work.

Ziska Institute : 1606 Van Ness Ave.

School for Girls. English, French, German.
Thirtieth year begins August 3d.
MME. B. ZISKA, A.M., Principal.

JOHN HARADEN PRATT

TEACHER OF PIANO
SONGS ARRANGED

3021 Buchanan Street
Orders left with Sherman, Clay & Co.

Miss Adie's Boarding and Day School

(KINDERGARTEN)

2117 California St., bet. Buchanan and Laguna
English, French, German Reopens August 3d

SCOTT & McCORD

HAY AND GRAIN MERCHANTS

OFFICE, 615 SIXTH ST.

Standard Time

The time to wear "Standard Shirts" is ALL the time. A home industry—made here in San Francisco. Ask your dealer . . . . . .

White Percale Outing

NEUSTADTER BROS., Mfrs.

MENNEN'S BORATED TALCUM

TOILET POWDER

Approved by Highest Medical Authorities as a Perfect Sanitary Toilet Preparation

For infants and adults

Delightful after shaving

Positively relieves Prickley Heat, Nettle Rash, Chafed Skin, Sunburn, etc. Removes Blotches, Pimples; makes the skin smooth and healthy.

Take No Substitutes. Sold by druggists or mailed for 25 cts.

SAMPLE MAILED (Name this paper) FREE

GERHARD MENNEN CO., Newark, N. J.

NOTICE TO CREDITORS

ESTATE OF OSCAR J. PETERSON, DECEASED

Notice is hereby given by the undersigned, A. C. Freese, Administrator of the Estate of Oscar J. Peterson, deceased, to the creditors of and all persons having claims against the said deceased, to exhibit them with the necessary vouchers, within four months after the first publication of this notice, to the said Administrator, at room 35, Chronicle Building, the same being his place for the transaction of the business of the said estate in the City and County of San Francisco, State of Califofnia.

A. C. FREESE,
Adm'r of the Estate of Oscar Peterson, deceased.

J. D. SULLIVAN, Attorney for the Administrator.
Dated at San Francisco, August 12, 1896.

HEALTHFUL! INVIGORATING!

CRECIENTE

Imported Sea Salt for Bathing

SOLD BY DRUGGISTS AND GROCERS

It Makes the Hair Grow

Canadian Vegetable Tonic

MRS. E. E. MCLEAN, Physician for the Hair

Hours 10 to 12; 1 to 6

St. Ann's Building, San Francisco

Marshall F. Jones

Merchant Tailor

Room 15, Phelan Building

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.

Charles Lyons London Tailor

Business Suits from $15.50
Fine Dress Suits from $19.50

1212-1218 Market Street 302 Kearny Street
006 Market Street, San Francisco

COTTON SAIL DUCKS

22-inch, in all numbers. Medium, Soft and Hard

ALSO

Heavy Naught, Wagon and Draper Ducks
From 30 to 120 inches wide

Monumental and Imperial Ounce Ducks

Manufactured by Murphy, Grant & Co.
Mount Vernon Company Pacific Coast
Baltimore Sole Agents

HER POINT OF VIEW

I protested volubly, but he stepped aside with a frown, so there was nothing to do but to take his seat. My fervent thanks got no further recognition than a faint jerk of his hat, as he stood with his back to me, every line of his figure protesting against the absurd superstition that women can't stand as well as men. A grudging regard for appearances had dragged him up, and the same power forced me down, for I do despise an altercation in a crowded car. Personally, I should have preferred to stand indefinitely. I knew just what was running through this man's head,—"If women are going to get their rights, they've got to give up their privileges, by Jove!" In other words, if women can vote, they can stand up just as well as men. Are we to infer that bodily strength is coming with the franchise? If so, let us all take up the banner of the New Woman and camp on the steps of the Capitol until the polls are opened to us. We may claim mental equality, some of us, but not one feminine voice has been raised to declare a physical equality as well. I had always considered the little chivalric helps and favors a kindly recognition of the fact that woman had less bodily strength than men, but these Rights vs. Privileges declaimers seem to interpret them as a tribute to our mental and political disabilities. Seen from that standpoint, not many of us would appreciate these pleasing little acts of chivalry as we now do.

And, as a rule, we do appreciate them most thoroughly in spite of ill-bred exceptions who insolently seize as a right what is offered as a favor. One hears a good deal of sarcastic comment about women who take a proffered seat without a word of recognition, but I have watched for this in many cars, and seen comparatively little of it. Of course there will be an occasional misunderstanding. The other day, after I had stood several blocks, the man in the corner folded his paper, rose and started down the car, which had just stopped. I naturally thought he was going to get off, and had comfortably settled myself before I discovered that he was standing up at the other end, where he stayed for half a dozen blocks more. Then he probably went home and told his wife just what he thought of those women who planked themselves down in your seat without so much as a thank you.

When a seat is given pleasantly and willingly—and in my experience it generally is—it is a favor a woman gladly accepts. But if any man grudges it and cannot see the sense of it, then, for pity's sake, let him give up the custom and keep his seat.

* * *

Speaking of cars, it would be a great blessing if some woman would start a Dutch treat crusade in the matter of paying fares. When two women meet accidentally and board the same car, why should not each put up her own nickel? I don't urge this on the ground of expense—which would be picayunish—or because of the slight obligation involved, but because there is always a momentary awkwardness as to which shall have the privilege of paying. Could anything be more ridiculous than the way two women wrangle on this point? Each waves a fifty-cent piece and grasps the other's wrist, with animated exclamations of "Now, this is my affair!" "No, let me!" "I won't have you," until the bored conductor settles the matter, and the two beam around at the rest of the car for approval. If they are too well-bred for this sort of an exhibition, still each must fish up her purse from its subterranean retreat and hold the money in readiness, and lose the thread of the conversation in her anxiety to circumvent the other. A growing absent-mindedness as the conductor approaches, a darting out of well-gloved fingers, a smile of relief and a look of reproach, and the suspense is over. Of course, the matter might be regulated by some system, such as letting the payment devolve on the oldest, or the richest, or the handsomest, but that again might produce discussion, not to mention hard feelings, and the unhappy conductor would often be obliged to play the part of Paris. Surely the most sensible way is for each to provide her own nickel and so settle the dispute forever.

We hear with dismay the rumor that London is trying to deprive us of our Mr. Bok. What could we do, we who go into society and make over dresses and bring up daughters, without the "Ladies Home Journal,"—and what can it do without Mr. Bok? Though born a Dutchman, he understands us like a native. He knows we will read the things we make fun of even more readily that the things we admire; so, with a gravity unpierced by a single twinkle, he gives us those absurd, humorless, convulsing back pages of his, the delight and quotation-field of witty contemporaries. The paper might go on without him, but it would be Hamlet without Booth. How do we know that Mr. Bok himself isn't Ruth Ashmore and Elizabeth Robinson Scovil and any number of others? He might keep those up from the other hemisphere, but Side Talks with an English accent would be a mockery.

* * *

Mr. Bok came to America when he was six years old, and began his career as an editor almost immediately. Before he was twenty-five he became the literary director of the "Ladies' Home Journal," and during the seven years he has held that position he has made the periodical one of the best known and most profitable in the country. He is a partner in the concern, and that makes it seem as if he would hesitate to desert it, though the editorship of the "Pall Mall Magazine," with an enormous salary and a house in Grosvenor Square must be very tempting. Rumor, which is responsible for this report, also whispers something about twenty-five thousand dollars as the bait held out, but Rumor very often doesn't know what she is talking about.

While in London, Mr. Bok was endlessly dined and feted. Lady Morell Mackenzie, Sir Douglas Straight, Mrs. C. D. Gibson, Sir Arthur Sullivan and Jerome K. Jerome are a few of the great people who have entertained him, and he is reported to have led the Portland House cotillion with the young Duchess of Marlborough. Their conversation must have been fascinating. Do you suppose he began with, "No, Consuelo, not more than three diamond belts are worn to the same ball, unless one of them be paste," or, "I am sorry to hear one of my Duchesses"—but enough. That department has furnished sufficient fun already. Mr. Bok is a clever, able man, who can talk to a girl as well as edit a paper, and who would be a decided loss to our journalistic world. May the British fail to annex him.

CENTEMERI KID GLOVES.
Removed to 128 Post street.

For health and strength: Damiana Bitters.

DR. H. G. YOUNG—Bridges and teeth without plates a specialty. 1841 Polk street.

Maison Tortoni French Rotisserie, 111 O'Farrell street. Private dining rooms, banquet hall. S. Constantini, proprietor.

If you wish to look neat have your suits cleaned and pressed for $1.00. Bay City Clothing Renovatory, 221½ Geary, rooms 19, 20, 21. 'Phone Main 5859.

THE OVERLAND LIMITED

"The Overland Limited," via Union Pacific, takes only three and a half days to Chicago, and only four and a half days to New York.

The Union Pacific is the only line running Pullman double drawing-room sleepers and dining cars, San Francisco to Chicago, daily, without change, and composite buffet smoking and library cars between Salt Lake City, Ogden and Chicago. Only one change of sleepers to New York; dining car service the entire distance.

Upholstered Pullman tourist sleepers San Francisco to Chicago daily without change. Personally conducted tourist excursions to St. Paul and Chicago every Friday.

Tickets and sleeping car reservations at general office, No. 1 Montgomery street, San Francisco. Reservations secured in advance by all Trans-Atlantic steamship lines. Tickets on sale to and from all points in Europe. D. W. HITCHCOCK, General Agent, San Francisco.

BIDS

FOR

Concessions and Privileges in Yosemite Valley

OFFICE OF THE YOSEMITE COMMISSIONERS,
San Francisco, August 11, 1896.

In accordance with Rule XXXIV of the Rules and Regulations governing Yosemite Valley and Mariposa Big Tree Grove, adopted July 13, 1896, sealed bids are hereby invited for the for the following concessions and privileges in the Yosemite Grant for the year beginning November 1, 1896, and ending October 1, 1897, viz.:

First—For keeping a livery stable and conducting a general livery business in the Valley, and also for the rental of the Royal Arch Farm and Stables.

Second—For rental of stable and coach house on Georgia Avenue for stage headquarters.

Third—For rental of hotel, outbuildings and grounds at Glacier Point and privilege of conducting a hotel business at that point.

Fourth—For rental of store building and privilege of conducting a general merchandise business in the Valley.

Bids must be presented to the Secretary on or before

Monday, October 12, 1896

at 12 o'clock M., at office of Commissioners, San Francisco.

Bids must be accompanied by sufficient guarantee that contract shall be carried out by bidders to the satisfaction of the Commissioners. The Commissioners reserve the right to reject any and all bids.

JOHN F. SHEEHAN,
Secretary and Treasurer,

Room 25, Tenth Floor, Mills Building, S. F.

New Nob Hill Flat opposite the Flood Mansion

1011 CALIFORNIA STREET

Just finished. Thirteen rooms, two bath rooms, superb view, front and rear. All modern improvements. Rent $100. Apply to

G. A. BERTON
323 MONTGOMERY STREET

BAY STATE OYSTER HOUSE AND GRILL ROOM

15 Stockton Street

Oysters served in all styles. Orders for Theatre Parties given special attention M. M. ADLER, Prop.

Use only Richardson & Robbin's Canned Meats at picnics

FINEST ON THE MARKET

BEWARE OF IMITATIONS

EEL RIVER CREAMERY

SEE THAT THIS STAMP IS ON END OF SQUARE

A FINE GRAIN DELICIOUS FLAVORED BUTTER

If you appreciate a DELICACY
Ask your Dealer for the BRAND

THE CALIFORNIA STATE FAIR AT SACRAMENTO

THREE WEEKS.

SEPT. 1ST TO 19TH

GRAND PAVILION DISPLAY.

ELECTRIC MOTIVE POWER TRANSMITTED FROM FOLSOM

SEVENTEEN DAYS RACING

CASSASA'S EXPOSITION BAND.

DON'T FAIL TO EXHIBIT TO ATTEND

EXCURSION RATES.

BALDWIN THEATRE Al Hayman and Co. Incorp'd Props.

Beginning Monday, August 17th

The Enormous Laughing Hit—the New York, London and Paris Comedy Success

The Gay Parisians!

Management Charles Frohman

Now running at the Vaudeville Theatre, London. To be presented here with the original American cast, as seen two hundred nights at Hoyt's Theatre, New York, and during the extended runs in New York and Chicago. A great cast, headed by W. J. Ferguson and Sadie Martinot.

Pre-eminently the Best of Frohman Comedies!

CALIFORNIA THEATRE Al Hayman & Co. Incorp'd Props

MONDAY NEXT, Third and Last Week of the Distinguished Irish Comedian

CHAUNCEY OLCOTT

In the Picturesque Irish Play

The Minstrel of Clare!

By Fred Marsden

During the performance Mr. Olcott will sing: Olcott's Home Song; Love Remains the Same; Rory Darling; The Minstrel Boy; The Young Rose

Next attraction: ON THE BOWERY

Columbia Theatre.

BELASCO, FRIEDLANDER, GOTTLOB & CO. LESSEES AND MANAGERS

NOTICE! Owing to the tremendous success of

THE GREAT UNKNOWN

So delightfully presented by

THE FRAWLEY COMPANY

This charming and excruciatingly funny comedy will be continued for the week of Monday, Aug. 17th

SPECIAL! August 25th, first performance of

THE SOCIAL TRUST

By Hillary Bell and Ramsay Morris

Orpheum

O'FARRELL STREET, BETWEEN STOCKTON AND POWELL

Week commencing Monday, Aug. 17

NOTE THE MANY STRONG FEATURES

Mildred Howard and Sydney Degray
Comedy Sketch Artists, Miss Howard appearing in her Sensational Trilby Dance

Favor and Sinclair, Travesty Stars of the East

T. A. Kennedy, in a Seance of Fun and Merriment with Hypnotic Subjects. Biondi, the Nelson Sisters, Black Patti, Herr Techow's Trained Cats and a Great Vaudeville Company

Reserved seats 25c.; balcony 10c.; opera chairs and box seats 50c. Secure seats in advance

Tivoli Opera House

MRS. ERNESTINE KRELING : : Proprietor and Manager

Seventh Week of the Season of Italian and English Grand Opera under the Direction of Mr. Gustav Hinrichs

Week of Monday, Aug. 17th

Every Evening, Verdi's Ever-popular Opera

IL TROVATORE

Madame Natali, Nina Bertini Humphreys, Flora Finlayson Bernice Holmes, Richard Karl, Sig. Michelena, Sig. M. DeVries, Sig. Abramoff, John J. Raffael, Martin Pache

Enlarged Chorus! Augmented Orchestra!

In preparation: Aida, La Sonnambula, Hansel and Gretel

Popular Prices : : : 25 and 50 Cents

CHAUNCEY M. DEPEW, the famous orator, statesman, railroad president and millionaire, in an interview said of his recent visit to Del Monte: "I visited Monterey, and I call it the most beautiful place in the world. Monte Carlo cannot compare with it. Its seventeen-mile drive is unparalleled for fineness."

When Mr. Depew says it is the most beautiful place in the world he knows what he is saying, and means it, for he has seen pretty much all the beautiful and interesting places in the world many times over . . . . .

The Tavern of Castle Crag, the most beautiful, attractive and accessible of all mountain resorts, will open for the reception of guests June 1, and will close October 1, 1896.

GEORGE SCHONEWALD, MANAGER

CAMPING

Season 1896

Reduced Rates for Campers' Excursion Tickets

To the following Resorts, situated on the lines of the Southern Pacific Co.

Santa Cruz Mountains

ALMA, LAUREL, FELTON
BEN LOMOND, WRIGHTS, GLENWOOD
BOULDER CREEK

Shasta Region

SWEET BRIAR CAMP
SHASTA SPRINGS SHASTA RETREAT
MT. SHASTA CAMP

For information as to Ticket Rates, Routes of Travel, etc., address or call at any Ticket Office of Southern Pacific Company, or at

General Passenger Office
No. 4 Montgomery Street, Second Floor

Or at City Ticket Office
613 Market Street, Grand Hotel, San Francisco

ILLUSTRATED FOLDER MAILED FREE ON APPLICATION

WM. H. MENTON
Excursion Passenger Agent

RICHARD GRAY
General Traffic Manager

T. H. GOODMAN
General Passenger Agent

Pacific Coast Steamship Co.

Dispatch steamers from San Francisco for ports in Alaska 9 a.m. July 3, 13, 18, 28, August 2, 12, 27.
For British Columbia and Puget Sound Ports, July 3, 8, 13, 18, 23, 28 and every fifth day thereafter.
For Eureka, Humboldt Bay, S. S. Pomona, 2 p.m. July 5, 8, 12, 16, 20, 24, 28 and every fourth day thereafter.
For Newport, Los Angeles and Way Ports, 9 a.m. July 2, 6, 10, 14, 18, 22, 26, 30 and every fourth day thereafter.
For San Diego, stopping at Port Hartford, Santa Barbara, Port Los Angeles, Redondo -- Los Angeles -- and Newport, 11 a.m. July 5, 8, 12, 16, 20, 24, 28 and every fourth day thereafter.
For Ensenada, San Jose del Cabo, Mazatlan, La Paz, Altata and Guaymas, Mex., S.S. Orizaba, July 3 and 25th of each month thereafter.
Ticket Office: Palace Hotel, 4 New Montgomery St.

GOODALL, PERKINS & CO.
General Agents
No. 10 Market Street, San Francisco, Cal.

A. K. DAGGETT

Drawing of Deeds and all Legal Papers a specialty

NOTARY PUBLIC
14 Montgomery St., S. F.
Telephone 305

Coolgardie Gold Fields

FREMANTLE, AUSTRALIA
First Class $220 Steerage $110
Lowest Rates to CAPE TOWN
S. S. "Australia," Honolulu only, Saturday, Aug. 29, 1896, at 10 a.m.
S. S. "Monowai," via Honolulu and Auckland, Thursday, August 23, 1896 at 2 p.m.
Ticket Office 114 Montgomery St.
Freight Office 327 Market St.
J. D. SPRECKELS & BROS. CO., General Agents

The German Savings and Loan Society

526 California St., S. F.

Capital actually paid up in cash	$1,000,000 00
Deposits December 31, 1895	30,727,586 59
Reserve Fund	750,000 00
Guaranteed Capital	1,200,000 00

OFFICERS
President, B. A. BECKER
First Vice-President, EDWARD KRUSE
Second Vice-President, A. C. HEINEKER
Cashier, A. H. R. SCHMIDT
Assistant Cashier, WM. HERRMANN
Secretary, GEORGE TOURNY
Assistant Secretary, A. H. MULLER

DIRECTORS
B. A. Becker, Edward Kruse, A. C. Heineker, O. Shoemann, H. Horstmann, Ign. Steinhart, Dan'l Meyer Nic. Van Bergen, Emil Rohte
Attorney, W. S. Goodfellow

San Francisco Savings Union

532 CALIFORNIA ST

Deposits June 30, 1896	$23,657,219
Paid Up Capital and Surplus	1,594,085

ALBERT MILLER, Pres. E. B. POND, Vice-Pres.
LOVELL WHITE, Cashier

DIRECTORS
GEORGE W. BEAVER ROBERT WATT
THOMAS MAGEE GEO. C. BOARDMAN
W. C. B. DE FREMERY DANIEL E. MARTIN
ALBERT MILLER PHILIP BARTH
E. B. POND

Loans upon San Francisco and Oakland Real Estate, and Farms and Farming Lands in the country.
No charge is made for pass book or entrance fee.

Mutual Savings Bank of San Francisco

33 Post Street, below Kearny, Mechanics' Institute Building
Guaranteed Capital, $1,000,000
JAS. D. PHELAN, Pres. GEO. A. STORY, Cashier
S. G. MURPHY, JOHN A. HOOPER, Vice-Pres.

DIRECTORS—Jas. D. Phelan, S. G. Murphy, John A. Hooper, James Moffitt, C. G. Hooker, Frank J. Sullivan, L. F. Drexler, Robt. McElroy, Jos. D. Grant.

Interest paid on term and ordinary deposits.
Loans on approved securities. Deposits may be sent by Postal Order, Wells, Fargo & Co., or Exchange on City Banks.
When opening accounts, send signature.

ROYAL EXCHANGE ASSURANCE

OF LONDON
Incorporated by Royal Charter A. D. 1726
Capital Paid Up, $3,446,100 Assets, $21,584,413
Surplus to Policy Holders, $8,980,251
ROBERT DICKSON, Manager
NATHAN & KINGSTON, San Francisco Agents
501 MONTGOMERY ST.

Aachen and Munich Fire Insurance Co.

of Aix La Chapelle, Germany
Capital, $2,250,000.00
Total Assets, $6,854,68[illegible].05
United States Department
204 Sansome Street
VOSS, CONRAD & CO., General Managers

When You Leave Town

place your valuables in the

SAFE DEPOSIT VAULTS
OF THE
FIRST NATIONAL BANK
CORNER OF BUSH AND SANSOME STREETS
Office Hours, 8 a. m. to 6 p. m.

ASSESSMENT NOTICE
Best and Belcher Mining Co.

Location of principal place of business—San Francisco, California. Location of works—Virginia District, Storey Co., Nevada.
Notice is hereby given that at a meeting of the Board of Directors held on the 2d day of July, 1896, an assessment (No. 60), of Twenty-five cents per share was levied upon the capital stock of the corporation, payable immediately in United States gold coin to the Secretary, at the office of the company, room 33, Nevada Block, 309 Montgomery St., San Francisco, California.
Any stock upon which this assessment shall remain unpaid on the 6TH DAY OF AUGUST, 1896,
Will be delinquent, and advertised for sale at public auction, and unless payment is made before will be sold on Thursday, the 27th day of August, 1896, to pay the delinquent assessment, together with costs of advertising and expenses of sale. By order of the Board of Directors.
M. JAFFE, Secretary.
Office—Room 33, Nevada Block, 309 Montgomery St., San Francisco, Cal.

BAJA CALIFORNIA
DAMIANA BITTERS

"Damiana" is a powerful aphrodisiac and special tonic for the sexual and urinary organs of both sexes and a great remedy for diseases of the kidneys and bladder. For weak nerves these bitters are invaluable, and leading physicians recommend them as the greatest invigorator known. Long-winded testimonials are not necessary. "Damiana" Bitters are known on their merits. (Send for Circular.)
NABER, ALFS & BRUNE, Agents
323-325 Market St., S. F.

REMOVAL

Rountrees English Chocolate, Kohlers Swiss Chocolates, and all brands of Foreign and Eastern Confectionery, imported by . . . .

W. L. GREENBAUM,
of 205 SUTTER ST., will, after December 1st, be found in large and commodious quarters at
128 POST ST., Bohemian Club Bldg.

ORDER YOUR CARRIAGES AND COUPES OF THE
PACIFIC CARRIAGE CO.

At Baldwin Hotel
200 Sutter Street, corner Kearny
48 Eighth Street, or
St. Nicholas Hotel, Market and Ninth Streets
Steamer and Train Service a specialty 'Phone 1950

CRESTA BLANCA WINES

AWARDED
THREE HIGHEST AWARDS
AT
THE ATLANTA EXPOSITION
OF SIX MEDALS
AWARDED TO CALIFORNIA
Cresta Blanca Wines
OBTAINED THREE
WETMORE-BOWEN CO.
140 Montgomery Street
Under Occidental Hotel

HIRSCH-KAHN & Co.

MANUFACTURING OPTICIANS
IMPORTERS OF OPTICAL GOODS
PHOTOGRAPHIC APPARATUS & SUPPLIES ETC
333 KEARNY STREET
SAN FRANCISCO CAL.

BONESTELL & CO.

Dealers in PAPER
Fine Coated Papers a Specialty
401-403 SANSOME ST.,
San Francisco, Cal.

Brushes For barbers, bakers, bootblacks, bathhouses, billiard tables, brewers, bookbinders, candymakers, canners, dyers, flour mills, foundries, laundries, paperhangers, printers, painters, shoe factories, stablemen, tar roofers, tanners, tailors, etc.
BUCHANAN BROS.
TEL. 5610 609 SACRAMENTO ST.
BRUSH MANUFACTURERS

THE PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU

510 MONTGOMERY ST., S. F.,
Reads all papers on the Pacific Coast, and supplies clippings on all topics, business and personal.

Pacific Towel Co.

Telephone 1780 No. 9 Lick Place, San Francisco
GEO. E. MOORE, Proprietor

RENTS BALDWIN & HAMMOND

COLLECTED AND INSURED

10 Montgomery St.

BRIGHT'S

A cure for Bright's Disease can be found at Byron. Bright's—that dread disease, is supposed to be incurable, but the Black Sulphur Spring has cured many stubborn cases of this disease. Byron's fall weather is neither warm nor windy—just the place for invalids.

Byron Hot Springs

Contra Costa Co., Cal.

THE LICK HOUSE

Occupies the block bounded by Montgomery, Post and Sutter Streets

IT IS——

——scrupulously clean;
——accessible to all street car lines and places of amusement;
——conveniently situated for business men;
——a quiet, model place for a family to spend the winter;
——moderate in price, yet first-class in every particular.

AMERICAN OR EUROPEAN PLAN

K. B. SOULÉ, Manager

For those who appreciate Comfort and Attention

A QUIET HOME CENTRALLY LOCATED

OCCIDENTAL HOTEL

SAN FRANCISCO

WM. B. HOOPER, MANAGER

GEO. GOODMAN

Patentee and Manufacturer of—Artificial Stone

Schillinger's Patent In all its branches

SIDE WALK and GARDEN WALK A Specialty

Office, 307 MONTGOMERY ST. Nevada Block, SAN FRANCISCO

Ask your Blacksmith to shoe your horse with

PHŒNIX HORSE SHOES

——GIVE THEM A TRIAL

H. S. BRIDGE & CO.

Merchant Tailors

Many Novelties in Imported Wear. Shirts to Order a Specialty.

622 Market Street, San Francisco (Up-stairs, opposite Palace Hotel)

NEW STORIES RE-TOLD

Standing bare-headed in a London hatter's one day, Whistler was approached by a Willie-boy, who, mistaking the artist for a salesman, remarked, in a rough voice: "Demmit, this blasted 'at don't fit." Whistler eyed the youth for a few seconds, and then, in a tone loud enough to be heard all over the shop, said: "Demmit, no, nor your coat, either."

* * *

They tell a funny story of Dr. Mott, chairman of the Silver party in North Carolina. It is related that on one occasion, in a lonely field in his native State, he met a bull of the most ferocious kind, a bull with a record of casualties as long as a "Pop" platform. The bull charged at once, and in deadly style. Dr. Mott gazed into those inflamed taurine orbs with his own ineffably sad and gentle eyes. "Friend," he said to the bull, "before you go any further I wish to give you my views on the crime of 1873." Scarcely had the doctor uttered the words when the bull, with a bellow of anguish, reeled, tottered and fell heavily on the ground. Mott rushed to the poor animal's assistance, but it was too late. Turning to his late foe, the beast gave a low moan, and, reaching for the doctor's hand with his tongue, licked it gently and died.

* * *

The widowed Crown Princess Stephanie and her twelve-year-old daughter, Elizabeth, had undertaken a mountain excursion together, and had become separated from the gentlemen and ladies in attendance. Hungry and thirsty, they stopped at a small inn and asked for refreshments, when suddenly the Crown Princess remembered that she had nothing in her pocket wherewith to pay. Accordingly she took the landlady into her confidence, informed her who she was, and asked her whether she would trust her. It is to be regretted that the landlady declined to believe them. Crown Princess Stephaniee took the matter quietly enough, sensible of its ludicrous side, but the little Archduchess was infuriated, and protested with flashing eyes to the landlady, "Aber wir sind doch ehrliche leute" (But I assure you we are honest people.)

* * *

As a wit John Van Buren was unrivaled at the bar or on the stump. Shortly after he commenced practicing law in New York he was engaged in a case before the General Term of the Supreme Court. Unfortunately, his side was deplorably lacking in legal merit, but, nothing daunted, he commenced arguing his first point in a very intelligent manner until interrupted by the presiding judge, who cut him short by saying: "Mr. Van Buren, we cannot see that there is anything in your first point." "Very well, then," answered Prince John, "I will go on with my second." He was interrupted again by the Judge, who even failed to see as much in the second point as he had in the first, and Van Buren commenced with his third. He came to grief with that as well as with the rest of his points, the Judge stopping him in the middle of each by merely stating there was nothing in it. At the close of the argument Judge Edmonds consulted his associates, and then, turning to the plucky lawyer, said: "Mr. Van Buren, after consultation, we all agree that we cannot perceive that there is anything in any of your points." Van Buren folded his arms, looked the Judge squarely in the eyes and replied: "I never could see anything in any of them; but, as your Honors are so much better lawyers than I am, I did not know but you might."

* * *

During the late Justice Lamar's incumbency as Secretary of the Interior he was often annoyed by a buxom female who paid him daily visits to get his opinion on matters of no importance to him whatever. Finally, becoming exasperated at the woman, he gave his doorkeeper orders not to admit her under any circumstances. However, not a day passed that she did not make an effort to gain a hearing, and on an unusually late visit happened to meet the Secretary just as he was about to enter his carriage. "Mr. Lamar," said she, breathlessly, "I must see you on a most important subject, and at once." "Very well, madam," said the urbane Secretary, holding open the door of the vehicle for her, "I beg of you to get in." Delighted to be invited to drive with so important a personage, the jabbering creature jumped into the carriage, Lamar violently slamming the door on her, and before she could expostulate, heard him saying to the coachman: "Take the lady wherever she wishes to go, James, and then to the stable." Looking out of the window, the now irate occupant saw her late victim boarding a car.

A SAVING OF ONE-HALF

Baggage transferred to trains or steamers and return. Trunks, 50c each for the round trip. Morton Special Delivery, 650 Market street and 408 Taylor street.

Hotel St. Nicholas, corner Market, Hayes, Larkin and Ninth. American or European plan. Ira R. and James H. Doolittle.

WHICH?

SEA BEACH HOTEL SANTA CRUZ CAL.

August and September

For these two most delightful months by the seashore SPECIAL RATES WILL BE GIVEN, ranging from $10 to $17.50 per week. New management! Excellent table. For further information, address

JOHN R. CHACE, Prop.

The Club Hotel
5 Bund, Yokohama

Hotel Metropole
1 Tsukiji, Tokyo

First-class Hotels, centrally situated, well furnished. ENTIRE FOREIGN MANAGEMENT. Experienced English Matron in attendance. Excellent table under the superintendence of qualified foreign Chef.

The Hotel steam-launch attends steamers arriving and departing. Passengers are met at the Railway Station. Visitors have the option of messing either in Tokyo or Yokohama, without extra charge—The only Hotels offering such an advantage. Certified Guides are in attendance at both Hotels. European Hair-Dresser on the premises.

THE CLUB HOTEL COMPANY, Limited, Proprietors

E. C. SIOEN, Manager YOKOHAMA

E. DEWETTE, Manager TOKYO

THE GRILL ROOM SERVICE —OF THE PALACE HOTEL

Has been extended to what was formerly the City Restaurant. This immense room, which has a direct entrance from Market Street is known as - - - -

"THE LADIES' GRILL ROOM"

NEW DEPARTURE—CHARACTERIZED BY PROMPT SERVICE—MODERATE CHARGES

TERRA COTTA PRESSED BRICK FIRE PROOFING

GLADDING, McBEAN & CO. 1358-1360 MARKET ST. WORKS, LINCOLN CAL.

GRAY HAIR RESTORED

to its natural color by LEES HAIR MEDICANT, no dye, harmless, pleasant odor, $1.00 a bottle. LEE'S HAIR TONIC removes dandruff, stops hair from falling out and promotes growth $1.00 a bottle. LEE MEDICANT CO 108 Fulton st., N.Y. Illustrated Treatise on Hair on application FREE

This Paper not to be taken from the Library.

CALIFORNIA STATE LIBRARY

THE WAVE

VOL XV. No. 34 SAN FRANCISCO, AUGUST 22, 1896 PRICE 10 CTS.

ON THE RIALTO

EDDY AND MARKET STREETS, SAN FRANCISCO

THE WAVE

Is published every Saturday, at THE WAVE Building, No. 24 Montgomery Street, San Francisco.

Subscription, $3.00 per year, $1.50 six months, 75 cts. three months. Foreign subscriptions—countries in postal union—$5 per year. Sample copies free on application. The trade is supplied by the San Francisco News Co., 210 Post Street; east of the Rocky Mountains by the American News Co., New York.

THE WAVE is kept on file and is for sale at Brentano's, 17 Avenue de l'Opera, Paris, France; 31 Union Square, New York City; 1015 Pennsylvania Avenue, Washington, D. C.; and 206 Wabash Avenue, Chicago.

Advertising rates and all other matters pertaining to the business of the paper, address THE WAVE, 24 Montgomery Street. Eastern Agent, E. Katz, 230-235 Temple Court, New York.

HARRISON M. PARKER, Business Manager

Entered at the San Francisco Post Office as second-class matter
THE WAVE PUBLISHING COMPANY

SAN FRANCISCO, AUGUST 22, 1896

CONTENTS

Editorials	2-3	In Society; by The Gossip	10
An Almond Harvest	4-5	The Theatres	12
Halibut Fishing	5	"Episcopo & Co."; by J. W. T.	12
About Personages	5	A Dinner with Zangwill	12
Things and People	6	A Note from Newport	13
The Career of Millais	8	Late Verse	13
Love Finds the Way; by Juliet Wilbor Tompkins	9	Her Point of View	14
		Stage Stories	10
Developing the Mother Lode	9

THE JUMP IN SILVER.

It is a debatable question whether Mr. Bryan is more amusing as a Boy Orator or as a Boy Statesman. Up to the time of his New York speech, he was oratorical rather than argumentative; he gave us figures of speech rather than figures of statistics, and painted his periods in all the glowing reds of rhetoric rather than in the sombre greys of thoughtful analysis. The New York speech is his masterpiece. By that effort he desires the thoughtful men of America to measure his ability, and judge of the justice and integrity of his cause. All the thumb-marks of care and study, so necessary to bolster up an untenable position, are evident throughout its length. It is meant to be the best possible production of his brain upon the financial issue, and so will it be accepted by the world.

The speech contains some lines, by the way, that should be printed in black-faced type in every Republican journal in the country from now until election day. Mr. Bryan concedes that the Republican party does not stand for gold monometallism; he admits that it has denounced the gold monometallic policy, and asserts that between the financial declarations of the Republican platform and gold monometallism there is an impassable gulf. He does question the sincerity of the party's friendship toward silver, but history flatly and completely contradicts him. Henceforth, on the authority of Mr. Bryan himself, you may deny in toto the charge that Mr. McKinley stands pledged to gold monometallism.

Leaving to other hands the justification of the Republican party as the consistent and continued friend of silver, by a review of its record, we turn to a consideration of Mr. Bryan's theories of finance.

The pivotal question, the one upon which everything depends in this controversy, as Mr. Bryan's speech discloses, may be briefly stated in this way:

Silver is to-day worth 69 cents an ounce as bullion. Will free and unlimited coinage, by the United States, raise that bullion value to $1.29 per ounce?

If it does, then Bryanism will be vindicated. If it does not, then, manifestly, our dollar will not be worth 100 cents. Bullion value remaining unchanged, our dollar will be a 53-cent dollar, and all of the untoward consequences and unmitigated evils prophesied by the Republican party will follow as a natural and logical sequence. Indicate to a silver man the terrible consequences that will come out of a debased (a 50-cent) dollar, and he will reply, "No longer will there be a 50-cent dollar, for silver will go up to $1.29 with free coinage." That is the stereotyped answer; the solitary, unfailing and monotonous statement with which he will meet your unhappy but well-founded prophesies. He will not compromise. He does not picture any half-way course. He does not pretend that things governmental or individual will go jogging along, with Prosperity driving the coach, if silver should fail to go up to the exact figure on $1.29. He does not tell you what will happen if it only goes to $1.20 or to $1.00, or to 90 cents per ounce. He simply repeats with dogmatic persistence that it will go to $1.29.

Mr. Bryan, the leader and apostle of this kind of financial policy, answers the charges in the same way. He who is so prolific in resources and so wedded to his cause, he who has all the artifices of a lawyer at his command, and should, if anyone, be equipped with a wide variety of plausible answers to your indictment, hides behind the same stale and threadbare statement. He says:

"Perhaps the most persistent misrepresentation that we have to answer is the charge that we are advocating the payment of debts with 50-cent dollars. At the present time and under present laws, a silver dollar, when melted, loses nearly half its value, but that will not be true when we again establish a mint price (?) for silver and leave no surplus silver upon the market to drag down the price of bullion. Under bimetallism, silver bullion will be worth as much as gold coin, and we believe that a silver dollar will be worth as much as a gold dollar."

"We believe," is the answer, the only answer he puts forth. Poor indeed is the cause that depends upon "because" to sustain the fabric of its superstructure.

Strip away every side issue as useless to this discussion, and the controversy dwindles down to the probable increase in the price of silver. The writer may only hope that the reader understands clearly that everything hinges upon this one proposition. All of Mr. Bryan's hopes of prosperity depend upon the increase to $1.29; all of our prophesies of evil, upon the impossibility of such a miracle.

What, then, is this most potent thing that will cause this astonishing increase, make silver double its value, and accomplish an unparallelled financial upheaval? Let us examine it together, feel it, analyize it, and discover for ourselves the scope and source of its power, together with the possibilities lying on the other side of its adoption. Mr. Bryan says:

"We contend that free and unlimited coinage by the United States alone will raise the bullion value of silver to its coinage value, and that it will make silver worth $1.29 per ounce throughout the world."

Again he says:

"The one thing necessary in order to maintain the parity is to furnish a demand great enough to utilize all the silver which will come to our mints. That Mexico has failed to do this is no proof that the United States would also fail."

These extracts are worth reading over and over until you have the idea thoroughly grounded in your mind. Then, when we come to analyize them, you will marvel that anyone should put such a ridiculous proposition before an intelligent people. You have heard it repeated and repeated that free coinage on our part will create an unlimited demand for silver at $1.29. Let us examine this "unlimited demand," or "unlimited coinage," as Mr. Bryan calls it, and ascertain what it all amounts to.

The Government does not intend to purchase the metal. Everyone understands that. There is no "mint price," as Mr. Bryan adroitly but erroneously puts it. No demand is to be created by the Government. The United States is not to purchase a single ounce of the white metal. The demand is not to come from it or from Europe. To think so would be ridiculous and absurd. It must come from some other quarter. Mr. Bryan says:

"Free and unlimited coinage by the United States alone will raise the bullion value to $1.29."

Certainly, free and unlimited coinage will not create the "demand." In point of fact, the people, having the knowledge there is only 53 cents worth of silver in a silver dollar, will more than likely avoid rather than court such a dollar when its coinage becomes free and unlimited. Where, then, is the "unlimited demand" to come from? "Unlimited opportunity to have silver coined" we grant, but we do protest against using "unlimited quantity" and "unlimited demand" as synonymous terms.

Simply stated, free and unlimited coinage means that Bill Jones, Manuel Mexicana, John Bull and Li Hung Chang may bring their bullion to our Government mints and have the Government employees melt it, separate it into circular discs of equal weight, and then decorate the discs with the Goddess of Liberty, the eagle, the inscriptions "E pluribus unum" and "In God we trust," and affix a date which will serve to keep in mind the epoch of idiocy during which the transaction took place. After these decorations have been formally placed upon the discs of silver, Bill Jones and his friends must take it away. That is all there is to it. The transaction is ended so far as the Government is concerned. No "mint price" is discoverable in this operation. The owner of bullion has simply been licensed to have "one dollar" stamped upon a given quantity of silver, regardless of its intrinsic value. It was bullion when it entered the mint, and its value was measured by the market price of bullion. When Jones carts it away from the mint, it will still be bullion, decorated, stamped and embellished, to be sure, but still bullion. It cannot be this labor bestowed upon the silver has increased its value.

But the bullion so decorated is invested with certain qualities not accorded to unembellished bullion, and these are what they are:

First, We shall know that each disc contains 371.25 grains of pure silver and 41.25 grains of copper alloy, now worth, silver and copper, about 53 cents.

Second, We shall know that whatever its intrinsic value may be, we must receive it from Jones and his Mexican and Chinese friends for 100 cents.

Third, We shall know that the United States Government must take it, no matter what its intrinsic value may be, for 100 cents, in payment of all debts, customs and taxes due to it.

We stand dumfounded that a thing so simple should accomplish such magnificent results. This is the process by which sixteen ounces of silver are to be made equal in purchasing power to thirty-two ounces of silver or to one ounce of gold. This is the process by which silver is to be made to jump from 69 cents per ounce to $1.29 per ounce. Where is the "demand" to be found in this proceeding? You are not going to accept sixteen ounces of this decorated silver bullion for an article for which you can now obtain thirty-two ounces of the some metal. The lady and the eagle, the inscriptions and the date, so ostentatiously stamped upon it, are not going to dazzle your eyes and blind you to its real intrinsic worth, as beads and mirrors do the naked savage. There is no Government obligation behind its value. It is supported by no prop or promise of the Nation, as it is at present. True, you will have to take it for a dollar, for the law will compel you; but, as it is only worth half a dollar, you therefore will demand two of them for a thing you are now willing to part with for one. So the commodity you now sell for a dollar worth 100 cents, you will then sell for two dollars that are worth but 50 cents apiece.

"So," says Mr. Bryan in triumph, "prices will go up."

What a simple and charming way of growing rich! We get two dollars for one. This is a most engaging kind of financial logic. It apears to us, however, that in this case prices will remain stationary and money will depreciate. It will not be a case of prices going up, but of money coming down.

Why not call a half dollar a dollar? Why not call a quarter a half, and so on? Prices would then go up. And if we persevered in this kind of advancement, we might reach that beatific state of civilization where a nickel would be called a dollar, and "The Wave" would then sell for two dollars on the street. Is it not patent that what they call "unlimited demand" is the creature of disordered dreams? Is it not clear that when the farmer is told prices will go up, the truth is he will not receive a cent more for his products, but the Government will simply change the standard of our dollars? The farmer's wheat will remain at the same standard. His bushel or his cental will remain upchanged at its present standard, but the dollar he receives will not be of the same standard; it will simply be so much decorated bullion. If bullion goes down, he will receive more dollars for his wheat, and if it goes up he will receive less. The very word "dollar" will lose its significance. A dollar to-day is 100 cents and 100 cents is a dollar. A dollar under Mr. Bryan's sad system will be 371.25 grains of silver; that is all it will be, and its value will be problematical, fixed by prevailing bullion rates. There will be nothing fixed about it except the quantity of silver and copper alloy.

Where is the basis—no, not the basis—where is there to be found the slightest excuse, in all of this most marvellous performance, for hoping, much less declaring, that silver will advance? Who will demand this dollar at the value of the mint stamp? There is but one avenue to get rid of the dollar at its fictitious value—the Government will take the money at 100 cents. The merchant and the farmer must do so, too; but they may more readily adjust the prices of their commodities to the fluctuations of silver bullion. But how is the Government to do this? If the Government is to pay out silver at bullion values, and collect its dues at the coin or fictitious value, there will be but one result—deficit. We must, as a Government, go hopelessly bankrupt, or increase our duties and taxes to the bullion value. When this is done, and it must be done, there will not be a single refuge for the dollar at any valuation but its actual intrinsic worth.

Will some friend of silver, some one whose enthusiasm is keyed up to the "1.29" notch, tell us where the "unlimited demand" comes from in all of this performance which Mr. Bryan proposes to the American people? Doubtless, many will "demand" that we accept this silver; doubtless, such "demands" will be "unlimited"; but the desire to take it will diminish in an inverse ratio. It is folly to suppose the people of America will create an "unlimited demand." The Englishman who buys our wheat now pays for it with a gold dollar; the Chinese who consume large quantities of our flour now pay us with a gold dollar; these, and the people of every other country, who are consuming a dollar's worth of our products and paying us in gold, will therefore take advantage of our situation and their opportunity, and compel us, under the Democratic platform and Mr. Bryan's legal tender plans, to take our own depreciated silver in place of the standard gold dollar we have been accustomed to. And this is not all. While our legal tender laws will compel us to receive this money, the gold countries of the world will not receive our silver upon any terms other than their bullion value.

The reader, we trust, understands that the value of the present American dollar is held up by the willingness of the Government to redeem silver with gold, and by its exercising extreme care to keep the metals at a fixed parity. You will also understand that free coinage contemplates neither caution nor governmental guarantee in this respect, and that the silver dollars and the silver certificates now in circulation will drop to the value of the silver dollar emitted under free coinage. The silver dollar in your hand, worth 100 cents in gold, will shrink in value nearly fifty per cent. By this process, the silver and silver certificates now in circulation will lose in value tens of millions of dollars.

KILLING NO MURDER IN OAKLAND.

In a recent sermon the Rev. Dr. Wendte raised a question that is not new, but always startling. Coming from the pulpit, it has aroused a deep and earnest discussion among both clergy and laity. Dr. Wendte says: "We mercifully end the life of a suffering horse or dog whose restoration is impossible. Shall we be less merciful to our human kind than to the brute creation?" Dr. Wendte is a man whose ability and breadth of view are widely recognized, and his conclusion is evidently the result of serious study. He believes that a committee should be appointed to investigate cases of hopeless suffering, and, at the expressed desire of the sufferer and his family, mercifully end them. He claims that we justify the taking of life by war and capital punishment; and if it is the divine intention to discipline and purify by pain, the use of chloroform and ether must be highly impious. The same mercy is owed to human beings as to dumb brutes. Of course this theory has raised vehement opposition, on both ethical and religious grounds. The Rev. John Hemphill objects on the ground that, while life lasts, there is always chance of some spiritual change, and that we have no right to cut it off. He even goes to the length of saying that if in a railroad accident his "best beloved were pinned down beyond all hope of help," with rivers of flaming oil running towards her, he would "leave her to the will of God." One cannot help hoping that Mr. Hemphill's best beloved will carefully avoid train accidents, or that on such an occasion the crowd will contain some one less spiritual and more humane.

The Rev. E. R. Dille considers that the acceptance of Dr. Wendte's theory would be a logical encouragement of suicide; that human life must be looked on as very sacred, and the taking of it as murder, if we would check the terrible tendency to self-destruction. Dr. R. F. Coyle considers that such a proposition is a return to the ethics of heathenism, and that the saving of life should be our constant study. Nearly all raise the practical objection that physicians are not infallible, and that many a hopeless case has lived to a ripe old age.

There is another side that sounds cold-blooded in the individual case, but is nevertheless broadly humane—the loss that would follow to science. Every patient is a scientific study, every new phase of a disease may solve some secret of the human body. Out of one man's hopeless suffering may come knowledge that will bring relief to thousands. By faithfully prolonging life in desperate diseases, men have learned how to meet and conquer them. If the world is to advance, science must have every opportunity. Moreover, Dr. Wendte's theory would seem to open a new way for crime to slip in. Even select committees can become corrupt, and mortal disease can be fostered and encouraged in inconvenient members of the household. It is an interesting idea, and plausible, but it does not seem expedient.

SEAWARD COMMERCE.

For a long time The Wave has with vigor and persistence urged our merchants to look seaward for the development of new, rich and neglected markets. Indeed, we went to some pains to secure data so that we might in detail present the profitable and promising side of the proposition. Action in this direction has been taken at last. A Bureau of Foreign Commerce has just been appointed from among the members of the Manufacturers' and Producers' Association, the Chamber of Commerce and several kindred organizations, for the purpose of securing by subscription the sum of $15,000, to be used in exploiting new fields of foreign commerce. This is right. No one may measure the infinite amount of good that will come out of this departure. The movement is alive with possibilities. It is of the highest importance to the whole community. If successful, as it must be under intelligent management, it will breathe new life under the ribs of a commerce that is nearly dead. It will develope manufacturing, which means employment to labor. It will revive shipping and will touch with a magic hand every line of industry and trade, going even so far as to put fresh vigor into property values. It means that we are to send into far-off lands skilled men, as advance agents for our mutual welfare, to persuade trade to our merchants, commerce to our port, and strangers to our city. They will lay before the consuming multitudes living in States bordering along the Pacific, the products of our soil, the output of our factories and the handiwork of our craftsmen. It is a most promising and praiseworthy undertaking. Financial support to such a proposition should come with willing grace. We have before now freely subscribed tens of thousands for conventions and other contrivances of inferior importance to this. But never before has a committee solicited financial aid for an undertaking that promised so much for the lasting benefit of the entire community.

PURIFICATION OF WATER.

United States Consul C. W. Chancellor, located at Havre, has forwarded an interesting report on the methods employed in Europe for the purification of drinking water. The information which this report contains is most valuable. The process which he explains is one that was suggested about ten years ago by Sir Frederick Abel, and it was first practically applied at Antwerp, where he declares foul water drawn from a source little better than a sewer has been converted into drinking water, bright, clear and wholesome. Antwerp, since the introduction of this plan of purifying its water, has been free from epidemics of cholera and other diseases. The method can no longer be considered an experiment, for Holland, France and India have in turn adopted this system. It is not claimed that the process gives a perfect water, but it has been demonstrated that it is capable of converting foul and unwholesome water into clear and potable. The process is very simple, and originally consisted in agitating the water with scraps of metallic iron before passing the same through sand filters. The chemical action of the iron upon the water is one of coagulation; a precipitate is formed which throws out of the solution dissolved organic substances and microbes. They become entangled with the gelatinous precipitate, and either subside with it to the bottom of the settling tank or remain behind on the surface of the sand filter through which the water passes. Dr. Dupre made a test of certain water that had been sand filtered, and discovered microbes to the extent of thirteen hundred to three thousand per cubic centimeter; but immediately the iron process was applied the number sank to a hundred. They very rarely exceeded that, and sometimes went as low as five. The effect of the filtration of water by this process is not so much to remove chemical substances as to remove microbes. Water may be foul and objectionable without containing microbes, but the chief advantage of the iron process is its effect upon the latter. The apparatus for purifying the water is a hollow cylinder either of cast-iron or built up of plates after the fashion of a boiler. It is supported horizontally upon hollow trunnions, through one of which the water to be purified enters. After traversing the cylinder, it leaves through the other trunnion. During the process the cylinder is caused to rotate. Fixed inside of it are six shelves, five of which are curved in the direction of the motion of the cylinder. This cylinder is charged with a certain quantity of metallic iron. A purifier capable of treating one million million gallons of water in twenty-four hours requires a charge of two tons or more. The water, on first entering the cylinder is directed toward the shell, and as the cylinder rotates the curved shelves scoop up the charge of iron and shower it down through the water. Mr. Anderson, who has thoroughly investigated this matter, declares that the effect of the agitation with iron upon the water is simply to cause a small quantity of iron to be held in solution in the form of ferris hydrate, which quickly changes under the influence of the air to ferric hydrate, which is precipitated in particles more or less coarse, according to the nature of the water to be treated. From the settler the water passes on to the filters, which are merely sand beds of ordinary construction. One of the chief merits of this plan for the purification of water is its cheapness and the comparatively low cost of its maintenance. The city of Sacramento might experiment with this device to its advantage.

GOLDWIN SMITH ON THE SITUATION.

Of all the strangers who have studied American social conditions, it is recognized that Mr. Bryce, author of "The American Commonwealth," and Mr. Goldwin Smith have most perfectly understood our institutions and our people. The latter is now a professor in the University of Toronto, and for thirty years has been one of the leading publicists, and the man who wielded most influence, outside of public life, in British public affairs. The impressions of such a distinguished foreigner concerning the present crisis in American politics must be of interest to a large number of our readers, so we append an extract from an article by Professor Smith which appeared in the London Saturday Review of August 1st. Many of his views are not our views, but it is interesting to look at the present problem from the standpoint of one across the border.

As the prospect opens in the United States the situation does not appear less grave, nor do the faces and language of my friends become less anxious. In the thirty years since the Civil War during which I have watched American politics there have been ominous symtoms, such as the riots at Pittsburgh, Cincinnati and Chicago; there have been terrible errors in legislation, such as the Pension Arrears Bill; there have been abundant proofs of the evils and dangers of party government; but I have never thought the Republic in serious peril as I do now, when I see the organization of the Democratic party captured by Anarchism and Repudiation. Bimetallism, you will understand, is the least part of the matter; even Repudiation is not the greatest. The greatest is the uprising of disorder, in all its forms and grades, against the institutions of the American Republic. There can be no mistake about the character of the Chicago platform, or about the character of the party from which it emanates. The platform condemns the Federal Government for putting down the labour rebellion at Chicago; and in the front of the party is the Governor of Illinois, who lent his moral countenance to riot and outrage. The attack on the Supreme Court of the United States is not the less expressive because it comes from such a quarter.

All the elements of the revolution or disturbance are combined under the Nebraskan candidate against the Republic. To what their united strength may amount is the critical question of the hour. There is a good deal of sheer distress blindly craving for a change. In a conversation which I had with the late Mr. Gresham, then Secretary of the Treasury, he spoke in a strain of the anxiety which at the time seemed to me excessive, but which I now believe to have been well warranted, of the growing danger from the number of the unemployed. Improvements in labour-saving machinery, as well as the increase of population, must add, for the time at least, to this unhappy element. The farmer in America, as well as in England, has been suffering severely of late years from competition with countries of cheap labour, and the grotesque form of agrarian agitation called Populism, with its wild demands for State intervention, is the result. Many of the Western farms are mortgaged to the capitalists of the East; the burden of the debt is enhanced by depression, and the temptation to pay it off with bad money is strong; while the debtor is not farsighted enough to perceive that he would be the sufferer in the end by a crash which, by breaking up the great lines of business, would ruin the market for his produce. In the Slave States the old families have been ruined, the negro is politically suppresssed, and power is for the time in the hands of the "mean white," barbarous, ignorant, ready for violence of any kind, and represented by men of corresponding character, in the Legislature of the United States. Of native Socialism there is in America not much; but some has been imported from European countries, where it is bred by oppressive taxation and the burden of the military system. Of class hatred and vague desire to strip the rich of their invidous possessions there is more. Theories of Mr. Bellamy and Mr. Henry George have not told much, but their appeals to social passion have been heard. So, perhaps, have those of Mr. William Stead, who fills, as he thinks, the part of Christ visiting Chicago, by telling the people that the edifice of wealth is reared upon heaps of human bones, and that the millionaires are in the habit of practicing secret assassination.

To the sources of danger must, in justice to the poor and misguided, be added the failure of too many of the rich to perform their social duty. America has, I believe, among her rich men more noble-minded, benevolent, and munificent citizens than any other country in the world. This her colleges, her hospitals, her charities, proclaim. But there are also large numbers of wealthy men who seem to think that they have only to enjoy their opulence and let the country take care of itself. At this moment, when the commonwealth is in manifest peril, the pleasure cities of Europe are full of Americans who have deserted their posts of social duty to spend in foreign lands the money made for them by the toilers of their own. Nor have the marriages of American heiresses and European titles, with the vulgar and offensive splendor of the nuptials, failed to impress the Republican mind.

And yet the Republic has great sources of strength. Ownership of property must still be far more diffused than it is in any country of Europe. This is the sheet anchor. There is also a high degree of popular intelligence, the offspring not only of the public schools, but of all the active influences which in the New World keep the minds of the people in constant play. There is a strong, almost a superstitious, attachment to the Constitution which Anarchism would overturn, and to the liberty which Socialism would destroy. There is among the people in general a pretty clear perception of the value of commercial credit to the nation, and of the consequences which Repudiation would entail. The public men trained in the perpetual conflict of parties are too often unscrupulous as well as factious; but they are strong, they thoroughly understand the management of the people, and they may be trusted, when they have recovered from the first shock, to meet the emergency with firmness, force and skill. Commence has been deeply and deservedly discredited by the exposures of the recent financial crisis, which was the liquidation not only of mismanagement, but of dishonesty; still, she is very strong, and in the coming struggle she will be fighting for her life. The leading politicians of both the regular parties are fast ranging themselves on the right side. So is the press, the influence of which happily is great; and it is a very encouraging sign that the German press of the United States, representing the powerful German vote, declares by an overwhelming majority against the Chicago platform. * * * * On the whole, I believe, as well as hope, though not without trembling, that the good genius of the American Republic will once more prevail, and that the motley host of Silver-State cupidity, repudiationism, Socialism, barbarism and blind distress which Mr. Bryan leads against her will in November meet its doom.

GOLDWIN SMITH.

The recent international socialistic congress in London has done more to discredit the cause of Socialism than any misfortune the cause has ever known. It was a belligerent gathering, and there were free fights at every session. Black eyes were numerous, and furniture smashing was the order of the day. The London police made it an opportunity for studying the physiognomies of all the eminent anarchists, and obtained a large collection of negatives for Scotland Yard.

AN ALMOND HARVEST

Gathering and shelling nuts on the Sierra Vista Ranch at Acampo, San Joaquin County, California

A CALIFORNIA NUT ORCHARD

Harvesting the Almond Crop on the Sierra Vista Ranch.

Ten years ago the land around Lodi and Acampo, in the San Joaquin Valley, was given over to the cultivation of hay and grain, and the farmer who raised a paying crop once in three years was considered lucky; to-day this same land is covered with fruit and nut orchards. The soil and climate of this portion of the San Joaquin Valley are especially suited to almond culture and many hundreds of acres of this nut are now in full bearing. Among the great properties which have transformed this section of the State, the most important, perhaps, is that of the Hatch-Armstrong Co., called the Sierra Vista Ranch. Its possession consists of 1015 acres, lying about four miles from Acampo. Of this great tract, 500 acres are devoted to almonds, and the picking and drying of the crop is now under way. P. B. Armstrong, the famous New York insurance man, so long connected with the Mutual Fire Insurance Company, is the chief owner and manager of this great property; and this management is no sinecure, considering that as many as five hundred men and women are sometimes employed. At present some two hundred are busily at work gathering the crop.

Out of this great force, seventy men devote themselves to gathering the almonds—one cannot say "picking," as the almonds are not picked but are knocked from the trees with long poles. The men are divided into gangs of four; two long pieces of canvas are laid beneath the branches, and in a very few minutes, under this rapid manipulation, the tree is bare and a mass of almonds, leaves and twigs lies heaped on the canvas. This mass of stuff is emptied into boxes which are packed on wagons and carted slowly along to the barn. There the boxes are thrown into hullers, machines which accomplish the separation of the nuts from the leaves and husks, or rather loosen them from the husks so that they may be readily separated by the nimble fingers of sixty girls, who are employed in this branch of the work. A quick worker can sort or separate about eight boxes a day, each box containing thirty-five pounds of almonds. Twelve and a half cents a box is paid these maidens, and each is ambitious to earn the even dollar. The work is easy and no trouble is experienced in obtaining all the hands required. In fact, this season there have been a dozen applications for every place in this department and in all the others. In many cases, whole families are employed, and these bring their tents, bedding, cooking stoves, etc., and camp out during the picking season.

The almonds, after leaving the girls' hands, are spread out to dry in the sun on huge wooden trays. In three or four days the hot sun burns the moisture out of them. Then they are dipped in water, carried to the sulphur house and subjected to the fumes of burning sulphur for three hours. This process whitens and brightens the shell of the nut, which is now ready to be sacked and shipped to market.

Almond trees are planted seventy to the acre, and there are 35,000 trees on the Sierra Vista Ranch. These trees will bear a good crop at three years of age, and perhaps another crop the next year, but then, for some reason or other, they stop bearing, and it is not until they reach the age of seven or eight years that they can be depended upon for regular and full crops. No irrigation is required and the trees are not subject to the parasites that have played such havoc in the past with our vines, orange trees and other fruit trees. The secret of success is in the careful selecting and mingling of varieties, and deep and constant cultivation. The principal varieties grown at Sierra Vista are the I. X. L., Nonpareil, La Prima and Ne Plus Ultra. Strange to say the I. X. L., as well as some other varieties, do not bear well when planted alone. Many orchardists have planted I. X. L. alone, that variety being considered the best all-round nut grown, and have found that the trees would bear no fruit. The fact of the matter is that some other variety must be also planted or grafted on to thoroughly pollenize the trees. Mr. Armstrong considers Sprague's seedling the best for this purpose.

One ton to the acre is a fair crop. The Sierra Vista, of which I write, has 120 acres which will average even better than this. As the nuts bring at least ten cents per pound it is evident a good orchard should bring in two hundred dollars per acre per year. These almonds are all of the soft or paper shell varieties, and for these there is always a good market. The orchard is carefully sprayed once every Spring with lime, sulphur and salt. Five or six tons of almonds a day are being picked, dried and prepared for market at Sierra Vista. The great advantage of a crop of nuts is that, unlike fruit, they will not rot on the trees, but will safely stay there until the last branch is emptied.

Outside of the large number of hands needed during the picking season, some twenty-five men are employed all the year round, for besides the almonds there are hundreds of acres planted in peaches, figs, apricots, prunes and other fruits. A carload of peaches a day (about twelve tons) is shipped to the canneries. In driving through the orchard we picked ten large peaches. These weighed nine pounds, while one peach weighed seventeen and one-half ounces. The climate of this portion of the San Joaquin Valley differs considerably from that of the upper valley. In fact the difference in temperature here from even Stockton is very noticeable. The thermometer rarely exceeds 85 degrees in summer, while there is always a cool breeze in the afternoons. An eight horse-power gasoline engine furnishes all the power required for pumping and for running the machinery. Altogether, the ranch is a model and is one of the most productive and attractive in the State.

W. B. TYLER.

HALIBUT FISHING

During the past week three small schooners arrived in San Francisco Bay, from the Northern Pacific, loaded down with fresh halibut, and two or three more are expected next week. The halibut fleet consists of some twelve schooners of from twenty to thirty tons burden, each with a crew of four or six men. These vessels fit out for their cruises at Seattle and are owned and manned almost exclusively by Swedes and Norwegians. They set out with from fifteen to twenty tons of ice and small herring bait and steer for the fishing grounds, through the straits of Juan de Fuca, and away out 200 miles northwest of Cape Flattery to the Scott Banks. Here they cruise around, anchoring in one place or another, until they have found the halibut. The two large dories are then got out and fishing commences. Five or six days are generally sufficient to catch the ten or fifteen tons of halibut that constitutes their cargo, and after that it is up anchor and all sail set for the best market. A hard and dangerous life is this of the halibut fisher, for the sea is rough in those northern waters, and the thick fog comes sweeping in without warning. The dories are perhaps miles away and the mist may continue a week. Many a story of hardship, starvation and death, the fishermen tell, but men must work—and the vacant places are soon filled.

"I don't think it generally pays to bring our catch to San Francisco," said the captain of the schooner Norman Sunde, lying at Green-street wharf with a cargo of fish. "You see, the local fishermen and the dealers are dead set against us. The wholesalers will only give us a cent and a half or two cents a pound for the fish, and there is no money in that—not enough to pay our expenses. We brought down ten tons of halibut and we have been trying to retail the fish from the vessel, but we are not doing very well. The Harbor Commissioners will only let us sell at Green-street wharf, and that is too far out of the way for people to come to buy fish. Sometimes the market is good and we do very well, but this time we shall only about pay expenses. It is a fair wind all the way down from the banks, but it is three weeks' hard sailing to get back to Seattle again."

THE SCHOONER "FREIA" OF THE HALIBUT FLEET

The halibut range from twenty to a hundred pounds each, and will keep longer and better after being taken from the water than any edible fish known. It seems a pity that arrangements have not been made whereby a supply of this fine fish could be easily and regularly furnished the consumer at a reasonable price. The fishing is good all the year round; the banks are well nigh inexhaustible, and so profitable has the industry been found in other places that two steamers are now engaged in the business, the fish being shipped in refrigerator cars overland to all parts of the Eastern States, where they bring the best prices.

The schooner Freia, shown in our illustration, is the smallest vessel of the fishing fleet to come to this port. She is only twelve tons burden, and made the trip from the banks in a little over six days. The fish are being retailed from the vessels at five cents per pound, while the price in the markets is ten cents.

Consul du Bellet directs attention to some practices going on in Europe which are of the utmost importance to American exporters of canned meats. It seems that a driver named Almond was arrested for cruel treatment of horses, and brought before the judge of the Police Court of the Thames. The employer of the accused gave evidence in his behalf, and testified to his kind disposition. He explained that Almond was daily entrusted with the care of driving to the docks and shipping horses bound for Rotterdam. The magistrate remarked that the horses were so old they could hardly stand, and demanded of the employer an explanation as to what use the Dutch put such animals. In the most unconcerned manner he stated that there existed in Rotterdam and Antwerp large and important factories where old and disabled omnibus horses from London were converted into excellent canned beef and retailed through Europe in sealed boxes with American labels. He further explained that the industry absorbed nearly twenty-six thousand horses a year.

A corner in coal, brought about by a combination of all the leading dealers who supply London, is within a few weeks of beginning operations. The capital syndicated is £3,000,000. As the existence of the combination cannot be concealed, its objects are to be excused and falsified. It will be described as economizing working expenses, and so keeping down prices, especially to large consumers.

ABOUT PERSONAGES

General Pettus of Alabama, who is expected to oppose the candidacy of Senator Pugh, the incumbent, is a giant in physique, and though eighty years of age enjoys undiminished vigor of mind and body.

Candidate Bryan when at Illinois College was famous as an all-round athlete, and was one of the best baseball players the college ever had. He holds to-day the record for the hop, skip and jump. Mrs. Bryan claims to be her husband's mascot. In every instance where she has attended assemblages in which he was interested he has won and in her absence he has lost.

Candidate Garret A. Hobart is of French ancestry on his mother's side and of Dutch descent by his paternal ancestry. He was educated at Marlboro, N. J., and after leaving school he entered the law office of Socrates Tuttle and subsequently married the latter's daughter.

Secretary Lamont is said to lean toward the support of Bryan, and proposes to announce himself, in opposition to Cleveland's wishes. His ambition is to have a try at the Governorship of New York. Hoke Smith is to pay for his desertion of the President by the loss of his secretaryship, and Secretary Herbert, to escape the issue, has ostensibly gone to Europe.

Maitre Pouillet, the president of the Order of Advocates of Paris, gave some good advice to lawyers the other day in an address. "Go out into the world," he said, "see all the new plays, read all the new novels, and then you will have some chance of not boring the judge when you come into court. Do not allow yourself to be hypnotised by the Civil Code."

Secretary Olney is said to be very anxious to return to his law work in Boston. His practice was one of the largest in Massachusetts, and now doubtless it will be increased by the opportunity he will have to accept retainers from foreign governments for State department cases. The fees in an international law suit are seldom less than $100,000.

Li Hung Chang is attended by a remarkably attentive servant, who lately was addressed by an English officer in public with "Good day, commander." "I am no longer commander," he replied. "I am Li Hung Chang's boy." He had been a Chinese naval commander, but, having lost his vessel in the war with Japan, had been degraded and condemned to death. His reprieve was conditional on his becoming the servant of some high State official. Li Hung Chang had taken him into his service.

Like Bulow, Rubenstein had a strong literary bent. Among his remains was found a voluminous diary containing opinions on various subjects, harmonie and otherwise, couched in aphoristic form. Among his comments on religion is this cynicism: "There are two kinds of priests — honest and dishonest. The honest deceive themselves; the dishonest deceive their fellow men."

The Moore Brothers, whose failure in Chicago nearly precipitated a panic, came to the front as promoters of the Frazer Axle Grease Co. Subsequently they took hold of the Diamond Match Co. to control the manufacture of matches, and in their operations increased its capital stock from six millions to eleven millions. Subsequently they organized the New York Biscuit Co., with a capital of nine millions, and the load finally proved more than they could carry.

Dr. Churchill Julius, Bishop of Christchurch, New Zealand, has appeared in public on a tricycle. He is very unconventional. Some time ago he insisted on laying the last brick on the restored spire of his cathedral, and was hoisted up in a chair at the end of a rope. He recently addressed a congregation he was visiting as follows: "I never saw so much bad coin in all my life. To offer to the church, the cause of God, money that the butcher or the baker would not accept shocks me. The man who would do that wants the grace of God very badly—or three months."

Candidate McKinley has exchanged his wide-brimmed, silver-colored felt hat for a round, black, hard hat of the type known as the pot, or the billycock iln England, where it was invented. Candidate Watson has cast aside his spreading black slouch combination hat and rainshedder and is wearing a huge soft straw brain-thatch invented especially for him by a New Jersey scientist. Candidate Bryan has discarded his gleaming statesman's tile and is now adorned with a small, brimless skull cap. It affords no more protection than would a couple of rooster plumes thrust into his hair at either ear.

Mrs. Minerva Roberts, who in the recent Populist convention seconded the nomination of Bryan on behalf of the Louisiana delegation, is the daughter of a weighman at the Chicago stockyards. She was unhappily married, and being deserted by her husband commenced life again as a hairdresser in Denver. She became active in Colorado politics during the Waite administration, but subsequently fell out with her friends, and is now an orator for the Populist party. She is quite a handsome and dashing woman, possessed of a clear ringing voice, a brilliant stage presence and much self-assurance.

Mr. Justin McCarthy is writing another volume of "A History of Our Own Times," which will embrace events of the last sixteen years. This may be published in the autumn, when the Queen completes the sixtieth year of her reign.

THE 'GAELIC' COALING AT NAGASAKI, ON THE WAY FROM HONGKONG

THE JAPANESE COAST NEAR WHERE THE "GAELIC" STRUCK

THINGS AND PEOPLE

The Gaelic is added to the long list of ships that have met with disaster within the last few months. She belongs to the Occidental and Oriental line, and was bound from Hong Kong to San Francisco, with a cargo of tea, when she was disabled off the coast of Japan. As yet the particulars are not fully known, though the cable informs us that the steamer struck a rock in the Shemonoseki Straits last Sunday morning, and stove a large hole in her bow. Water poured rapidly into the hold, until the lower cargo was submerged to a depth of twelve feet. At the time of the accident the Gaelic was in the hands of Captain Walker, who has established his ability by thirty years' service as a pilot on the inland sea. The day after, Captain Pearne, who commanded the vessel, succeeded in getting her afloat, and she was towed to Nagasaki for repairs. The cargo is undoubtedly more or less damaged, but no casualties are reported.

***

The absence of any organization in San Francisco approaching the Clover Club of Philadelphia has often been commented on, and is on the verge of remedy. At the Pacific-Union recently Adjutant-General O. D. Green, who has recently returned from Washington, was detailing an account of a dinner at which he assisted, and in the talk to which the subject gave rise, some one proposed the instituting here of a dining club, to meet twice or thrice a season, composed of the brightest talkers and wittiest men in town. The scheme met with a warm reception, and the nucleus of the membership was formed round the table. The new club is to be known as the "Extra Dry." Its gatherings will be held in the duck season; the menu is to be confined to oysters roasted in the shell, canvasback, and but one kind of wine—champagne or burgundy. No one who is not distinguished for an especial smartness, or an amusing accomplishment, will be eligible for membership, and at each dinner the aim of the presiding officer will be to have an original entertainment—papers, speeches or music. Whoever is called on must respond with a story, a song or a poem especially prepared for the occasion. The effort is open to criticism, of course, wherein the fun for the others comes in. The plan excludes dues, initiation fees and other charges—save only that the members pay for the wine and their dinners.

***

Fred Warde has found the legitimate drama a sorry mistress. After serving Tragedy these many moons he finds himself as poor as Job, and in that unhappy condition vulgularly termed "dead broke." Not being among the admirers of Mr. Warde's genius, I cannot express the regret this financial pinch should properly inspire. He is, in his way, a commendable person and of unimpeachable intentions, but his passion is inevitably tattered and his sighs a hullabaloo. The fact is, the man has really too much motive power for Shakspere, but a great future yawns for him in melo-drama. Considering how easily Warde could find a place at the head of a first class company, together with a salary of comfortable dimensions, is it not extraordinary he prefers to devote himself to lecturing? He has refused what the profession calls "flattering offers," and proposes now traveling the country over as a Shaksperean lecturer, veritably making himself a voice crying in the wilderness: "Make straight the way for Warde when next he appears before you!" Not only is he to describe and explain the immortal William, but in order that the recitals shall not lack realism, he proposes between prose passages, by way of illustration, to convert himself into Romeo or Juliet or Macbeth or Rosalind, as the subject requires, making in one night more changes than Biondi. The first lecture of this series was that delivered Thursday last in the Y. M. C. A. Hall under distinguished auspices. If Mr. Warde proposes going far into the wilds, I would suggest that he have an address on "Free Silver in Shakspere."

***

On the Rialto no other explanation of Nat Goodwin's divorce suit is offered than the little comedian's devotion to the lustrous Maxine Elliott. Gravitation accounts for this rapprochment—that magnetic force which large women inevitably exert over small men—the irresistible pull of the superior dimension for the inferior one. Of course, there is in this no reference to Miss Elliott's waist, which I am assured is quite correct, but rather to her imposing physique, which bears the same relation to Nat's as the earth to Jupiter, whose bulk a recent astronomer assures us plays harakiri with the orbits of meandering comets. Whether Maxine is as willing to envelope with her voluminous identity the clever little comedian is, of course, another question, but she might do worse. Goodwin is worth nearly a hundred thousand dollars, and to his nervous and excitable disposition her placid immobility will furnish a superb foil. It was because of this suddenly conceived attachment, of course, that Goodwin secured the services of Maxine and Little Sister, and in order to gather them unto himself he resigned to Frawley the right to "The Gold Mine," in which Wilton Lackaye so recently attempted Nat's role.

***

Walter Camp will not help Palo Alto score the customary tie with Berkeley in this year's football match, but, on his advice, H. P. Cross, Yale '96, has been secured as coach. Mr. Cross has played football ever since he could walk, but he did not make the 'Varsity Eleven until this last year. He put up a powerful game against Princeton, and it was his tremendous force in the wedge that broke up the Tiger's line, when Captain Thorne made his wonderful forty-yard run. He is not only a fine player, but a born coach, and goes in more for hard team work than for subtle strategies. Besides his football ability, he is a champion hammer-thrower, and has always stood very high in his classes. The Berkeley Eleven have again secured Butterworth as coach.

A BALOON ON FIRE

Emil Markeburg ascended from the Chutes Sunday the 16th in a hot air baloon clinging to a trapeze. He was six hundred feet up before discovering the baloon was on fire. The parachute worked, however, and he reached the ground without injury. Photo by Waters

The Templar function at Golden Gate Commandery the other night was a Masonic event of the first water. It was a banquet of the affiliated Commanderies celebrating an investment of the Red Cross. The Oakland and California Commanderies assisted, and Grand Master Ward presided in a uniform resplendent in gold lace and decorative effects. After the investment the company sat down to eat, drink and be merry, and incidentally to listen to some oratory from eminent hands. Reuben Lloyd was eloquent, Rev. Walk rose to an opportunity, nor was Samuel M. Shortridge on this particular occasion silent..

***

The State these days is full of mining stories. One yarn after another of abandoned properties suddenly developing into bonanzas comes to me. Among the old-time properties of the State is the Zancraft, which in olden days paid a handsome return to its owner, an obstinate Dutchman from whom the location took its name. It is on the American river, between El Dorado and Placer, and in bygone days was worked to a certain depth and then abandoned for lack of money to prosecute its further development. Instead of trying his luck elsewhere, the old miner hung on to his hole, contriving to make enough money to live on and educate his family. One happy day, however, young Mr. Ralston, passing by, took a fancy to examine the property, liked the look of it, obtained a bond, but was unfortunate enough to choose the wrong class of men to do business with. He found several men who were ready to put up money on the assurances of his experts, but after they had seen the property they determined to have it to themselves. So they postponed closing the transaction on one excuse or another until the bond ran out, and then Zancraft determined to retain the place himself, set his own family, consisting of some five boys, to work, and doubtless he would have taken out money enough in time to put up a mill if death had not claimed him. Soon afterwards, the boys quarreled among themselves; no work was done, several offers were made, and finally at the death of two of the brothers, E. W. Chapman, owner of the Taylor mine, made an offer of $80,000 cash, which was accepted. There is now a twenty-stamp mill banging away on the ore, which is yielding richly every month. This is about the fortune of these old mine-owners. Their instinct teaches them to cling to their properties, but too ignorant or too poor to work them, all sooner or later fall into the hands of capitalists—illustrating that to them that hath is given.

***

My impression that incendiaries are the only fire-fiends was dissipated by an introduction to a clever young minister named James Le Baron Johnson, whose personality recently became agreeably known around the Occidental Hotel. He is a bright, handsome man, of easy manners, the son of a New York Episcopal clergyman, and now a protege of Bishop Huntington of that metropolis. Nothing about his demeanor suggests a love of conflagrations, yet that is his eccentricity, and he carries it to the degree of residing in a Gotham engine house and turning out in paraphernalia — helmet, high boots and a flannel shirt, at the first clang of the alarm bell. This interesting habit he acquired while a resident of Tacoma. He presided there over a small Mission Church, and an abundance of leisure was devoted to society and the department. He was a favorite with the ladies, and his services were constantly in requisition at picnics, dinners and outings, but the firebells never failed to summon him, however attractive the maiden by whose side he lingered. There he lived in the Brigade headquarters, and regularly slid into high boots and helmet at the touch of the gong. Tiring of Tacoma, our young man turned his feet to the metropolis, contrived to interest Bishop Huntington in his personality, now makes his calls at Fifth-avenue mansions in a fire wagon, and is the pastor of the New York department, besides being an active factor at all conflagrations. The presence of Rev. Le Baron Johnson in California is explicable on the basis of personal curiosity. He wanted to see if San Francisco remained in the same location it had occupied the last time he was here.

***

The rise of Bourke Cochran exemplifies how easy it is for a man to become a plutocrat in this country. Fifteen years ago he was a young Irish lawyer, unknown and without practice. To-day, he is put forward as a representative of what the Populists call Snobocracy. Cochran's career is possible only in a democratic country. He became identified with Tammany Hall, having joined one of the Tammany ward clubs and made a few speeches. Richard Croker heard him, took him up, and at once his fortune was made. It was developed in the Ives Investigating Commission several years ago that Cochran, while attorney for the Sheriff of New York, was in receipt of an income of something like $50,000 a year. One of the rules of patronage was that Cochran should be employed as individual attorney by each Deputy, and a portion of his salary was diverted to the payment of the fee. Soon after coming into prominence as a lawyer and orator, Cochran married a rich widow in New York, who conveniently died a few years later, leaving him about $400,000. It was rumored at Washington during the discussion of the Wilson Bill that Cochran, then a Congressman, received $200,000 from a combination of the trusts for his work in the House; and the story developed later that Bourke Cochran retired from Tammany politics because Croker, being a business man, demanded that his $200,000 be paid into the Tammany fund. He was then given the choice of giving up the money or leaving politics, and he left politics, as most wise men would have done under the circumstances. Soon afterwards it was telegraphed across the country that he would stand for a seat in the English House of Commons, and, indeed, he did go across the water and interviewed Justin McCarthy, Mr. Blake and other leaders, looking to that end. The speech which gave him national renown was that in 1893, in opposition to Cleveland's nomination. It was a very fine, but vain, appeal to all the prejudices and passions of the anti-Cleveland element in the convention. He followed it with a speech on the tariff question which was a masterful exhibition of oratory. On these speeches and on certain law arguments his fame rests, for they are the only utterances of any note made during eight years of public life.

***

Every day one sees in the papers some mention of the splendid work being done for the cause of free silver by George B. Keeney, who is now national organizer for the Bimetallic League. For years Keeney drifted around San Francisco with a headful of schemes, but empty pockets. He was a leading member of the Theosophical Society, and was a sort of amateur expert in ordnance. He had invented some sort of a gun which he tried for years to have accepted by the Government, and in promoting which he was brought into intimate contact with a large number of army men to whom he is very well known. How he lived was always a mystery to his friends. He certainly spent very little on clothes, and it was the belief of many who knew him that he was a living manifestation of the ability of theosophical faith to support a man without material sustenance—a case of the superiority of mind over material needs. Keeney was one of the chief organizers of the non-partisan movement in this city. The free silver State convention, which was held over a year ago in Metropolitan Temple, was the result of his work, and his organizing ability shown in this State, brought him to the attention of Senators Jones and Stewart and the other Eastern leaders, who took him on there to institute bimetallic leagues. Of course, he has long hair and a loud voice.

***

Colonel Fred Crocker, who has just returned from Europe, tells me that international bimetallists in England and France do not regard the campaign in America as involving in any way the principles of bimetallism. The attitude of the men he talked with indicates their belief that a campaign of education cannot fail to banish the fallacies of free silver. The estimation of this country abroad is that of a great nation, populated by a shrewd and thoughtful people, who, if misguided for the moment by their leaders, are always open to illumination, and invariably respond to the dictates of sound sense. That the United States will ever attempt the repayment of its obligations in a debased currency is not held for a moment; still, the insecurity materially affects our credit. Men who have American stocks are disposing of them as rapidly as possible, and their action naturally tightens the pressure. Never has there been so much capital available as at the moment, but it is not for America. In the East, too, there are millions for investment to be had as soon as the coinage question is settled; but in the meantime it is locked up in banks and vaults, and is unavailable for use. Colonel Crocker commented further on the necessity for a campaign of education and expressed the belief strongly that the inherent sense of the community would grasp the situation and its consequences to the working man. The Colonel certainly looks in excellent health. He was accompanied home by Mrs. Easton and his children, who are all installed in the family residence on the corner of Pine and Leavenworth streets.

The new Fee Bill threatens to prove a costly luxury to the city. Already it has altered the jury situation so that citizens no longer avoid that unpleasant duty, but actually strive for impanelment. The law provides a payment of two dollars each time the name of a juryman is called in court. It is not necessary that he serve, but merely that he answers "here" to his name. The decision imposes a terrible tax on the city. There are now five departments trying criminal cases, and in each department some fifty jurymen are in attendance, whose names are called every morning. This makes an average of perhaps two hundred men receiving each two dollars a day—an expense of $2,000 a week, or $96,000 a year. The bill applies also to Grand Jurymen, who now obtain two dollars for each session. Two juries are selected every year, constituting another expense of about $4,000. Then, there are the miscellaneous costs—the secret fund of the Grand Jury of $1,500—the Sheriff's charges for taking jurymen to lunch and dinner, about $1,000 more, adding to the taxpayers' burdens some $102,000 per annum. This sum must be appropriated every year by the Supervisors, and in future will be levied in the tax estimate.

***

The State Militia, having adopted the regulation United States uniform, there is an impression among army men that the similarity of garb may give rise to confusion. I am told of a movement on foot to have Congress provide a distinctive costume for the army, plain in character, and protected by law from infringement by National Guards. The value of the idea is more appreciable at the Presidio than on Market street, though to the lay mind it is reasonable that where there is so much distinction there should also be a difference.

***

If ever controversy required explanation, it is the question of veracity that has arisen between John D. Spreckels and H. G. W. Dinkelspiel. Did the latter haunt the office of the former, as the former insists, or was Dinkelspiel the sought rather than the seeker? as he so strenuously declares. It is a delicate point, and obviously demands coffee and pistols. Briefly, this is the situation: Dinkelspiel is nominated for Congress in the Third District by the Spreckels interest, which in California is the recognized Republican organization. Against him is a Mr. O'Brien, whose nomination comes from the Spear-Kelly faction, whose claims the National Committee of the party affirmed at St. Louis by the seating of its delegates, Mr. Spear and Colonel Kowalsky, in the convention. The Democratic nominee is the incumbent, Congressman Maguire, a man of considerable force and popularity, who aspires to go for the third time to Washington. In the district the Democrats have a small majority, which, however, has been overcome on occasions. Therefore it is no prize that was offered Dinkelspiel, but rather a forlorn hope, the mild chance of victory made milder by the candidacy of O'Brien. Dinkelspiel states he was importuned by Spreckels himself and by his lieutenants to accept the thankless role of candidate, and finally, after much persuasion, consented, on being assured that ere two days had passed O'Brien would be retired. Next day, however, Mr. Spreckels went south; the statutatory time elapsed, O'Brien still made speeches, declaring with fervor "Those whom the gods wish to make mad they first kill." Then the Boss returned but failed to decapitate his candidate's rival. There were passages, challenges, and finally Dinkelspiel's retirement, declaring faith had not been kept with him. Next day Spreckels denounces the young man as a coward and predicts the termination of his political career. I cannot believe that Dinkelspiel would fly in the face of providence or Spreckels without exceeding provacation, and yet it is hard to assume Spreckels so unjust as to declare a condition which does not exist.

***

The friends and enemies of John P. Irish, Naval Officer and other things, will doubtless be interested to learn that his relations with President Cleveland are again of the most intimate character. He is in direct connection with Washington, and is distributing such patronage as is left in the executive portfolio. Quite a number of postmasterships throughout the State are still undisposed of, and it is presumed the Naval Officer will say who shall have them. It is not impossible, indeed, that Cleveland may find some post under the Civil Service for the Colonel, though, as his voice is now identified with the sound-money cause rather than with Democracy, it is not incredible that he may hold office longer than his rivals desire.

***

The announcement of M. F. Tarpey's candidacy for Congress in the Third District has created consternation among the fraternity of "Ole Bills." Warren English of that association, aspires to oppose Congressman Hilborn, but the Fitzgerald forces, seeing an opportunity of defeating the "Ole Bills," have cleverly put forth M. F. Tarpey, who, as one of that combination, cannot be antagonized by its forces, and yet will owe his nomination to Fitzgerald. Tarpey, with his bonhommie and energy, should cut a figure in Washington, where he has an immense acquaintance, and be as much of a success there as was Geary before him. There is an excellent chance of success this time, inasmuch as the Frick forces which compose most of the active politicians are strongly opposed to Hilborn's candidacy; and, besides, the free silver vote would all go to Tarpey also.

***

The announcement that Warren English aspires to another term in Congress may be a surprise to his friends. As Collector of the Port of Oakland he has a sinecure which brings him a revenue of $2,400 a year, and the office being under Civil Service rules is secured to him for life. It seems, however, that the post is so much of a sinecure that it is in danger of abolishment, inasmuch as in these hard times foreign traffic between Oakland and the rest of the world is next to nil. Being a sensitive soul, Warren feels the pangs of drawing a salary without some show of service, and thus far the only evidence of Custom House duties is the voucher he forwards for his salary. In order to break the monotony of this sad condition, certain of Warren's friends arranged to ship a schooner laden with coal from British Columbia to the port of Oakland. She sailed up the creek, deposited her cargo, paid the customary duties, and retired to San Francisco. And that entry is the sole record on the virgin pages of his administration.

CONCERT VALLEY ON SUNDAY AFTERNOON, GOLDEN GATE PARK, SAN FRANCISCO

Photo by Jensen

LILACS

THE PRINCES IN THE TOWER

FOR THE COURT

THE CAREER OF MILLAIS

His Work, Difficulties, Love, Marriage and Success.

Few men have had as much prosperity and romance in their lives as Sir John Millais, whose death has just left the Royal Academy without a president. He was born in 1829 in the Island of Jersey, where he was recognized as a coming artist while still a mere child. At nine he won the silver medal of the Society of Arts, the first of his long list of prizes. The first picture he exhibited, "The Capture of the Inca by Pizarro," was placed on a level with the best historic work of the year, though the artist was only seventeen. Still he has said himself that all his early work was done under a storm of discouragement and disapproval, which made his youth a very unhappy one. The critics, who were then a more powerful class than they are to-day, condemned his style so unmercifully that his father said again and again, "Give up painting, Jack, and take to something else." But Millais kept doggedly ahead, without even a consciousness of ultimate triumph to support him, and at twenty-two secured forever his fame as an artist by his picture, "The Huguenot."

Perhaps the reason that Millais' success did not come sooner, was his connection with the pre-Raphaelite Brotherhood, a strange coterie of artists and poets whose motive was Truth, or in modern language, Realism. Rosetti, Holman Hunt and Woolner belonged to this school, which had an important influence on the lifeless convention of the times, but led to aberrations and absurdities.

"The Huguenot," one of the loveliest and most famous of his pictures, is closely connected with the romance of Millais' life. Mrs. John Ruskin, the wife of the great art philosopher, was not the happiest of women. Affectionate, sympathetic, fond of companionship, she had married a gloomy, moody savant, absorbed and irresponsive, living the life of a hermit among his books. It was merely as a diversion that Mrs. Ruskin began to pose for the Roman Catholic maid in "The Huguenot," but long before the picture was finished, she and the fresh-faced clever young painter had fallen in love with one another. She would have gone quietly ahead and borne her life as best she could, had not Ruskin looked up from his books long enough to see what had happened. Without a moment's hesitation he offered to hand her over to his friend. "If you love her, she is yours," he is reported to have said, with unflattering generosity. A formal divorce was pushed through the courts as rapidly as possible, and as soon as it was granted Mrs. Ruskin became Mrs. John Millais, while the author of "Modern Painters" turned serenely back to his library. Whatever this step meant to him, whether it was a relief or a secret bitterness or a matter of absolute indifference, there is no doubt but that it brought lasting happiness to the two others. Millais has always attributed his success in life to this romance of his boyhood, and to the fact that his future wife was the inspiration of his most renowned picture. The size of "The Huguenot," which is now in a private gallery in Preston, England, is three feet two inches by two feet one inch, and the original price was only seven hundred and fifty dollars. To-day thousands could not buy it. Its pathos, its beauty as a lovely idyll, combined with the tragedy of its meaning, conquered painters, critics and public, and brought to a triumphant close Millais' struggle for recognition.

JOHN RUSKIN
FROM HIS LATEST PHOTOGRAPH, BY HOLLYER
COURTESY OF W. K. VICKERY

THE LATE SIR JOHN EVERETT MILLAIS

One of the pleasantest stories of his early work is told in connection with a painting of Ferdinand in the enchanted island of "The Tempest." A dealer promised the artist a hundred pounds for it if he liked it as well when finished as he did unfinished, and Millais rushed jubilantly home to his family with the news. Being very poor, and looking on the money as certain, they spent some of it in advance, but when the picture was finished, the dealer declared that he didn't like it, and that the bargain was off. The family were in great distress, and a forlorn little card hinting of "Furnished Apartments" was put up in the front parlor window. A week or so later another dealer dropped in, bringing with him an odd-looking old gentleman who seemed to know a good deal about pictures. He listened with interest to the story of "Ferdinand," and studied the picture closely, then took from his pocket a book which he advised the young painter to read. "Give me pen and ink," he added, "and I'll write your name in it, provided you promise to read it." When they had gone, Millais opened the book, to find that his visitor had been Mr. Richard Ellison, the famous patron of art. Between the covers was tucked a check for a hundred and fifty guineas and an order for the "Ferdinand." Needless to say, the "Furnished Apartments" sign was torn down that very day.

The next year, Millais painted on commisssion his "Christ in the Carpenter's Shop," a work which raised a storm of controversy. There were no halos, no nimbuses. Christ was represented as a little boy in a Jewish carpenter shop, running to his mother for sympathy with an injured hand, just as any child might, and all the narrow-minded Pharisees of Art and Religion rose up in wrath and branded it as irreverent and irreligious. The dealer had it left unsold on his hands for many years, and Millais' parents begged him to give up art forever, rather than run the chance of bringing another such hornets' nest about his ears.

In 1885 the title of Baronet was added to Millais' many honors. He was always especially kind to struggling young artists, being in this respect much like the late Lord Leighton, whom he succeeded as president of the Academy only a few months ago. Though his voice and hearing were then somewhat impaired, his health was still good, and his work as keen and delicate as ever.

In the eighteen years of Pope Leo XIII's reign the mortality among the members of the sacred college has been remarkable. One hundred and eleven cardinals died in that time, though only one hundred and twenty died in thirty-two years of the pontificate of Pius IX.

Inverness propriety has triumphed over the nude in art, the sculptor of the Flora Macdonald statue having agreed to put shoes and stockings on her, as the town council requested.

SIR ISUMBRAS AT THE FORD

LOVE FINDS THE WAY

AN OPERATIC FARCE

(An orchard of cherry trees. Enter Professor Fungus, Instructor of Geology at the Co-educational College of Frumpton, followed by students of both sexes in caps and gowns, carrying geological hammers, etc.)

All:
We're tapping at the stratas,
Exploring nature's stores,
All glad and happy martyrs
To geologic laws.

Students:
Professor, we are tortured
By such a hungry pang;
So let's explore the orchard—
Geology go hang!

Professor:
No, Alpha, Beta, Gamma,
Such language pains and shocks.
Take up your little hammer,
Our work to-day is rocks.

Students:
The program let us vary
On this one day alone;
For first we'll eat the cherry,
Then analyze the stone.

(They attack the cherry trees, which some of the students climb, others standing beneath to catch the fruit.)

The Professor:
As the head of a co-educational school,
I found I'd a difficult province to rule;
The students would flirt to a dreadful degree,
And all the elopements were blamed upon me.
But I hit on an excellent plan, which was this:
The ladies have Greek letter names, and no 'Miss.'
When a girl's capped and gowned and baptized on this plan,
There's naught to suggest that she isn't a man.

(He turns to the students, who have been flirting vigorously, but become suddenly demure.)

Alpha and Beta and Delta and Theta and Epsilon Omacron,
Fi Gamma Zeta and worthy Omega who used to be chaperon.
Our cares are demolished, for flirting's abolished,
There's nothing to worry or vex.
To avoid tribulation in co-education,
It's best to eliminate sex.

(The students demurely repeat the last two lines, and the Professor starts to eat a cherry, but draws back in some alarm.)

Professor—I think some one is coming. Poss.bly it would be as well if we passed on; we may be trespassing. Yes, there is a singular looking young person, and I think she carries firearms.

(All gather hastily around the Professor, except Fox Wylie, a Senior, who remains hidden in a tree.)

Professor:
Really, students, common prudence
Would suggest that we should run.
Here's a lady, rather shady,
And I think she's got a gun.

(All but Wylie leave in haste.)

Wylie—A girl, a real girl, a feminine girl! Perhaps she is even called by a girl's name. Oh, to hear the sweet sound of Jenny or Molly or Daisy! For that I would let her shoot at me with pleasure.

(Enter a girl in Norfolk jacket, short skirt, bloomers and leggings, carrying a shotgun.)

She sings:
The ignorant infant called man
Had better reform while he can;
For woman won't falter,
The world's going to alter,
And he'll get left out of the plan.
When trespassers come for my fruit,
I sally forth ready to shoot.
I'm a very new broom, an'
I'm called a New Woman,
And really, you know, I'm a beaut.
Each woman of spirit asserts
She's tired of trammeling skirts.
She'll cast off the shackle,
The world she will tackle,
And man's going to get his deserts.
I scour the land on my bike,
I always do just as I like,
I'm a very new broom, an'
I'm called a New Woman,
And really, you know, I'm a tyke.

Wylie—Is your name Daisy? Please say it is. Or Birdie.

She—Oh, my goodness! Hold up your hands, villain, I mean. What are you doing in my fruit tree?

Wylie—Tell me your name before you shoot. Grant the last request of the dying.

She—I shan't. It's a horrid, silly little name, quite unworthy of a New Woman. I was only a new baby when they gave it to me, so I couldn't protest.

Wylie—Answer me on your soul. Is—it—Dolly?

She—It is.

Wylie—Dolly, thank heaven! I have been living with the Greek alphabet till Dolly seems the sweetest name ever made. That's a stunning suit you have on. Is the skirt one of those umbrella things?

Dolly—Yes, nine gores; see!

(She drops her gun and spreads her skirt out to its full width. He jumps down from the tree, landing between her and the gun.)

Wylie—You're just the same as you were a hundred years ago.

Dolly—Sir! If you don't know seventeen from a hundred——

Wylie—Eighty-three, isn't it? Oh, I beg pardon, I misunderstood. I only meant that there was plenty of the Old Boy left in the New Woman. That's what you call yourself, isn't it, a New Woman?

Dolly—You call yourself a man, yet look at you shackled by that foolish gown when you might be free.

Wylie—But somebody has got to wear skirts, and if you girls won't——

Dolly—Some day you will look back on these blind prejudices with wonder, when the New Man arises. We have wound the alarm——

Wylie—He'll probably sleep through it.

Dolly—And soon the New Man will leap from the ashes of the old. Oh, if I could only be the one to find him and show him to the world!

Wylie—I will tell you a secret. I am the New Man!

Dolly—Oh, how perfectly lovely! But you must prove it.

Wylie—Ask anything you like.

Dolly—Can you cook?

Wylie—I ought to. I took the Chef course at Yale for three years before I came here.

Dolly—Good. Is there any dish you cannot make?

Wylie—I will be perfectly frank with you. It is a great mortification to me, but I cannot make a cheese omelet.

Dolly—Oh, I can. Cheese omelets are my speciality. I would always make those if you would do the rest of the cooking. I am perfectly ready to do my share, always. Can you cook meat nicely? I am very particular.

Wylie—I got up a roast for the Professor of Hebrew that was the talk of the college.

Dolly—And cake?

Wylie—Sponge and pound are my best, though my kisses are not to despised.

Dolly—This is glorious. I have found the treasure my sex is waiting for, and by right of discovery he is mine. How about sewing?

Wylie—I used to do a great deal of sowing a few years ago, but I rather gave it up. I found it bad for my head. I don't believe I have forgotten how, however. I was always good at—a'hem——

Dolly—That's nice. I hate to hem.

Wylie—We used to gather a good deal at the club, and I was pretty fair at basting and running, and after I broke my leg, I spent all my time knitting.

Dolly—This is too good to be true. And you haven't any old-fashioned notions, have you, such as have trammeled us in the past? You would not oppose the voting of women?

Wylie—Devoting always seemed to me what women were best fitted for.

Dolly (aside)—And yet he's handsome and attractive, too. Won't the girls be wild! Dear me, I did not know that a New Woman's heart could act like this.

Wylie (aside)—She is the sweetest little Dolly that ever had a bee in her bonnet, and I think I can settle that bee.

Wylie:
For you, sweet Dolly, my heart is athirst;
I'd fain in your smiles be basking.

Dolly:
I shouldn't allow him to get in first;
The woman should do the asking.

Wylie:
Now love has broken the bonds of years
And over my soul is rushing.

Dolly:
To think that a girl with advanced ideas
Should stoop to the act of blushing!

Wylie:
Come, say you love me as I love you!
Dear Dolly, don't stop to parry.

Dolly:
It's all so sudden—I'm 'fraid I do—

Wylie:
How sad we can never marry!
The New, who've mastered the world's new laws,
Must wed with the unenlightened.
Farewell! We part for a noble cause.

Dolly:
Oh, don't go away—I'm frightened.

Wylie:
Were you contented to bake and mend,
No loftier orbit knowing,
To clear your sight were a worthy end.

Dolly:
I really am fond of sewing.

Wylie:
If lifting others were not our lot,
How happily we'd be mated.
Were you still shackled!

Dolly:
I'm really not so very emancipated.
I've loved embroidery all my life,
I'm dying to do your cooking.

Wylie:
Why, then, you're just the suitable wife—

Dolly:
Oh, don't—there's somebody looking.

(Enter the Professor and Omega, followed by the other students in couples.)

The Professor:
As the head of a co-educational school,
I find I've been rather too strict in my rule.
Though flirting's a word I'm reluctant to name,
I find that it's really an innocent game.
For one of our party has given her day
To clearing my old-fashioned notions away;
And her studies won't lose in the slightest degree,
For she's gathered a very fine fossil—in me.
Let Beta be Betty and Epsilon Eppy,
No Greek letter names, I beg.
The one who was lately Omega the stately
Is known to myself as Meg.
A moment of blindness is often a kindness,
And ignorance sometimes is wise;
To avoid tribulation in co-education,
It's best not to open your eyes.

All:
We're tapping at the stratas,
Exploring nature's stores,
All glad and happy martyrs
To geologic laws.
We did not vainly linger,
New specimens we own;
For on a certain finger
Each girl brings back a stone.

Wylie:
I found a lovely woman
Whose heart was petrified;
I made it warm and human.
Allow me, sirs—my bride.

All:
We did not vainly linger, etc.

(Curtain.)

JULIET WILBOR TOMPKINS.

DEVELOPING THE MOTHER LODE

Prince Poniatowski's Big Mining Venture in Calaveras County.

This summer has seen the formation of an enterprise that will have a very important effect on the future of California as a mining State. Between the Mokelumne and the Stanislaus rivers in Calaveras county lies a portion of the mother lode that, owing to the scarcity of water, has never been developed beyond a slight depth. On either side of it lie such famous mines as the Argonaut, the Kennedy, the Utica, the Rawhide, all worked to vast depths, while this promising region has been merely scratched on the surface, the shafts in no case extending below two hundred feet. It is with the object of developing this lode by means of electric power that the California Exploration Company has been formed.

Prince Poniatowski is one of the originators of the scheme. He is somewhat of an authority on mining, having been one of the early pioneers in South Africa. After a thorough investigation of the ground and its prospects, seconded by several mining engineers, he concluded that the entire lode could be developed and worked by means of electric power, at one third of the present cost. He then set to work to interest foreign and local capital. James W. Sperry, of the Sperry Flour Company, W. N. Cowles, treasurer of the Alcatraz Asphalt Company, and Charles E. Green, have joined the enterprise, as well as a large syndicate of English capitalists and trusts, represented by Edmund Davis and Percy Tarbutt, who have made their names prominent in the mining history of South Africa.

The company has been formed with a capital stock of two million dollars, and a reserve of one million. The electric power will be furnished by the Blue Lakes Water Company (the largest water system in the State). At Big Bar Bridge, a plant is in course of construction that will supply the company with five thousand horsepower. Electricity will also be supplied to independent mines in the neighborhood at a rate of twenty-five cents a horsepower—a third of the actual cost.

The strip of territory now in the hands of the California Exploration Company is fifteen miles in length, extending from the Gwin mines to Altaville, and varies from half a mile to a mile in width. It includes forty-six mines—some bought outright by the company, some acquired on bonds running for two years. Among them are the Gottschalk and Holland mines near San Andreas, the Maloney near Mokelumne Hill, the Union and Bund near Fork Crossing, and the big Vair ranch between the Gwin and Middle Bar Bridge.

The Exploration Company is organized on a plan similar to that under which most of the South Airican mines were first developed and then floated successfully on the European markets. On eight of its best properties, shafts will be sunk to a depth of one thousand feet. The company will allow outsiders to come in and locate, furnishing them the power in order that they may sink to an equal depth. Those who wish to develop mines in the district will not be obliged to pay anything down for the purchase price. When the mine is defined, they can form a company and purchase the mine for twenty, thirty or forty per cent of the capital stock, as the circumstances may warrant. It is hoped that fifteen or twenty such affiliated companies will be formed within a year.

Besides the regular engineering staff, the California Exploration Company has secured the services of Richard Parker for the coming three years as head manager for its mining de... Parker is one of the most pro... fields, where... Jack," the la... who conceale... This caused t... fled to Austra... cial backing, ... pect increasir...

Breakfast, Ideal Blend.
A. Schilling & Company
San Francisco

Highest of all in Leavening Power.—Latest U...

Royal Ba... Po...
ABSOLUTELY P...

EN LILY SOAP
BEST ON EARTH
FOR LAUNDRY USE

tronize Home Industry

IN SOCIETY

Entertainments and Happenings In Town and Out.

Preparations for the Country Club meet at Del Monte are now finished. Everything is prepared for holiday week. Though the Shoot has been dropped from the programme, the polo ponies promise to furnish far more sport than the pigeons ever could. The race track and polo grounds are in splendid condition, and the stables are already filled to overflowing. Captain A. F. Wainwright, of the Burlingame Country Club, will have entire charge of the meet, and is desperately busy in consequence. The stewards this year are Major J. L. Rathbone, Walter S. Hobart, Captain Wainwright, Alec Hamilton and J. Lawson. Other officers are Thomas F. Meagher, clerk of scales; Captain A. F. Wainwright, clerk of course; James Carroll, timer; and Lee White, starter. The sports will last from the 25th to the 29th of August, beginning with the polo match on Tuesday. Wednesday will be devoted to a paper chase; races follow on Thursday; on Friday more polo, including the final game for the cup; and on Saturday races, ending with the Del Monte cup handicap. Polo teams from Santa Monica, Riverside and Burlingame are entered, including among their members R. M. Tobin, Joseph Tobin, W. S. Hobart, C. Waring, J. J. Morse, Captain Wainwright, Charles A. Baldwin, W. R. Whittier, Robert Bettner, Peter D. Martin and J. Lawson. Mr. Baldwin has with him fourteen horses and six rigs, and Lew White has brought twelve steeds, the celebrated Ketchum being one of them. One of the prettiest features of the meet will be the drag procession on race days, in which all the private turnouts will take part.

The most important event, in fact the only affair of social prominance of the past week, was the wedding of Miss Claire Ralston and Dr. Bullitt. As at the recent Gerstle-Levison nuptials, the effective combination of green and white struck the keynote of color, both for church decorations and bridesmaids' gowns.

All fashionable Oakland and many San Franciscans were present at the church ceremony, and a number of the 400 came up from Del Monte and over from San Rafael to attend. The bride looked lovely, as one might know she would. Her gown was a triumph, being elegant yet simple—not such an easy effect to accomplish as it may appear. And then Claire Ralston always had a way of carrying herself. The robing of the bridesmaids and maid of honor was Frenchy in the extreme, being white mull over a bright apple green. The apple green shows the artist's hand, for it is a color becoming alike to the blonde, and the brunette, and even to one who is neither.

The gowns were finished with stocks of green silk, and bows of the same were tucked under the big white tulle trimmed hats. The effect was summery and cool.

Dr. Bullitt has made himself widely popular in Oakland. He comes from the very best Louisville stock and holds an enviable position in Kentucky social circles. The young people, of course, will make their home in Louisville. The presents were unusually numerous and beautiful. Mr. and Mrs. Ralston have devoted their attention to the furnishing of their daughter's new home. Everything, including furniture, draperies, crockery, glassware, etc., was purchased here and is to be shipped East.

JOHN RUSKIN
FROM HIS LATEST PHOTOGRAPH, BY HC
COURTESY OF W. K. VICKERY

ous of his pictures, is closely connected w of Millais' life. Mrs. John Ruskin, the w art philosopher, was not the happiest of tionate, sympathetic, fond of companio married a gloomy, moody savant, absorbe

Enerney has so often been commented on that there are few of its details unknown to the public. He has certainly made enormous strides in his profession within the space of a very few years, and seems to be destined to figure eventually as the leader of the local bar. His is an impressive but unpretentious individuality. Mrs. McEnerney shares her husband's love of books, and is not herself undistinguished in the paths of literature.

In Clubdom attention is centered in the Bohemian high jinks to-night. It is said the programme is an excellent one, with much promise in the direction of illuminating effects. During the week the camp has been a popular gathering place for the members on vacation. There is a gay crowd gathered in the Redwoods, all enjoying themselves to the top of their bent, with stories, songs, and speeches, every night. In the low jinks, the talent, I am told, is to be professional, which, though a disadvantage, will prove an innovation, and innovations are by no means to be despised.

The McKenna-Martin wedding is beginning to assume a less indefinite aspect. The illness of Mrs. Donahue, which was the cause of the postponement, will soon be a thing of the past. She is improving slowly but steadily, and during the past week has been able to receive a few intimate friends. The new Donahue home on Broadway is rapidly nearing completion. The exterior is now finished and the workmen are giving the final touches to the interior decorations. It will probably be ready for occupancy the latter part of next month, and it is more than probable that the wedding reception Mrs. Donahue has decided upon giving her nephew and his bride will be held in the new house. There are several purchasers anxious to get possession of the Dimond house, so it is more than probable that the artistic home will be the scene of many brilliant entertainments this winter. The price asked for the place is $35,000.

It is certain that if Mrs. Crocker gives another of those picturesque fetes champetre the gowning of the women will not present such vastly different effects. I noticed decollete gowns, suitable for dinner and ball, elegant reception toilettes, calling gowns and fragile garden frocks with hats to match. In fact, every sort and condition was represented except the tailor made.

The Baldwins have come out from their retirement and are once again of the gay world at Del Monte. The Baldwin Mountain View ranch is an entrancing spot for a genuine old-fashioned honeymoon. Apropos of the Baldwins, by the way, it is en regle to offer congratulations to Mr. and Mrs. Winthrop E. Lester on the birth of a daughter on the 7th of August, at Santa Monica.

Mrs. Carolan has returned to town from her Eastern visit. The many friends of Mr. and Mrs. Oelrichs and Miss Fair confidently looked forward to their passing a few weeks on this coast, but there is now no probability of such a visit.

Miss Jennie Blair is the fortunate possessor of a great Dane, a magnificent animal, the gift of an admiring friend who has just returned from a trip abroad. Miss Blair is an enthusiastic dog fancier and will probably take the animal with her on her visit to Del Monte later in the month.

Oakland claims the next event of importance on the social calendar, which is also to be a wedding—that of Miss Amy Requa and Captain Long. No immediate date has yet been set for the wedding. It is expected to take place very soon, however, and will be a church affair. Army circles will be well represented, and the best man and the ushers will be in full uniform.

That the path of the elect is not altogether a passageway of roses, I gather from a little conversation overheard at that most annoying but necessary of mortals, the couturiere. It was an Oakland matron speaking, a leader of society across the bay, and one who had been formerly a popular belle in our own city. "Four hundred," plaintively murmured the matron, "400. By all the powers that be, why are we not 150?" And I heard the scissors snip and the mantua maker quickly coughed out the pin she so snugly held between her lips.

The attractions of Del Monte and the pony racing meet are gathering Society in that direction. Still, San Rafael has been sufficiently gay, and there is much to amuse the guests. Not to be outdone in the matter of races, a pony steeplechase is being arranged for September first, in the management of which Rudolph Spreckels, J. J. Crooks, and Jim Archibald are associated. There is a track some two miles down the broad-gauge road which will be the scene of the events. Among the householders nowadays are the Rudolph Spreckels, who have taken the Parrott villa, and have stopping with them the Misses Jolliffe, the younger of whom was one of the winners in the recent steeplechase. There have been some pretty girls at San Rafael recently, among them Miss Cora Smedburg, who has been a guest at the Thomas villa, and Miss Rogers, a cousin of Miss Juliet Williams, who has won many hearts. She is from Columbus, Ohio, is a blonde, round and plump of figure, bright and graceful. The third beauty is Miss Mabel Andrews of San Jose, who is stopping with Mrs. Tay. Miss May Belle Gwin, I regret to hear, has been suffering from a severe attack of poison oak. The announcement that the Hotel Rafael is to be kept open through the winter occasions considerable pleasure among its patrons. General Warfield has made arrangements to entertain the Raymond and Whitcomb parties, which guarantees the house a substantial patronage throughout the cold months. Among those who have announced their intention of remaining for some time to come are Mr. and Mrs. Umbsen and Miss Umbsen, Mr. and Mrs. J. J. Crooks, and quite a number of others. There is a general feeling that the hotel is now in good hands, and that the comforts of the guests will be properly looked after.

MR. AND MRS. GARRETT W. McENERNEY
WHO WERE MARRIED AT THE CATHEDRAL ON THURSDAY THE 20TH AUGUST

Catalina still retains its popularity, goats and fishing grounds, and if one wants to be in evidence at all nowadays he must be able to relate a brand new fish yarn or a thrilling goat adventure. The would-be trespassers that kept the island in a fever of excitement during the early part of the season have evidently concluded that it is cheaper to pay fare and land unostentatiously than to hire a yacht and prove unsuccessful in forcing themselves on private grounds. Still, the numerous attempts made occasioned lots of fun and excitement, and the inhabitants rather regret the shyness of the trespassers.

The chief attractions at Santa Monica are the bathing and Rustic Canon. Every morning a crowd gathers on the beach to watch the bathers, who gambol about the surf to their heart's content. Strange to say, too, there has been no remarkable swimming done there this year. Whether it is on account of the number of accidents at the different beaches during the last few years, or a preference for the surf, no one seems to know. The majority of the bathers content themselves with holding on to the rope or being rolled, though some attempt a few strokes now and then.

The lovely south, with its long, shining sands and deep blue sea, still draws crowds of fashionable people who either dream the day away in the sun or frolic in the cool surf or the shady nooks of Rustic Canyon. The nights are so lovely and clear that staying indoors is out of the question, so excursions are planned; the serenaders station themselves beneath the windows of their inamoratas, and the more daring ones engage boats and brave the swelling waters of the harbor.

Nowadays Blue Lakes has obtained quite a vogue as a summer resort. Among the guests there now is Mrs. Andrews, wife of the debonair Colonel, accompanied by a party of friends.

"Well," said Smith, as the discussion of the financial question by the group at the club was growing exhaustive, "you may contend for a five dollar gold piece, but I prefer a five dollar bill." "Why?" they asked. "Because," said Smith, "when you put the bill in your pocket you usually double it, you know, and then when you take it out again you see it in creases," and the drinks were on th other fellows.

Salvation Army Apostle—If you swear at those horses, my good man, you'll never go to heaven.

Teamster (humbly)—I know it, mum; but if I don't I'll never get to Tonawanda. —Buffalo Times.

"Scotch and Soda" is the fashionable drink in the East at present, and is fast becoming the fad out here. With a good quality of whisky, such as the "White Horse Cellar" Scotch whisky, it makes one of the most pleasant and cooling drinks we have tried, and is sure to make a hit.

The Hotel Rafael, at San Rafael, has been leased for a term of years to General R. H. Warfield, the present lessee of the California Hotel in this city. The hotel will be kept open hereafter the year round, and special reduced rates will be made for the winter season.

The Maison Riche serves the best lunch in the city for 75 cents.

Dr. C. W. Decker, Dentist, 806 Market Street

Fall Style Neckwear and Hosiery at J. W. Carmany's, 25 Kearny Street.

Chew Adams' Pepsin Tutti-Frutti. It is sovereign for indigestion and agreeable to the taste

Dainty and Refreshing
PAR EXCELLENCE
"THE UNIVERSAL PERFUME"
For the Handkerchief, the Dressing-table and the Bath.
Murray & Lanman's
FLORIDA WATER
Its fragrant, lasting sweetness exerts a subtile charm and never tires or cloys.
Ask your Druggist for the genuine Murray & Lanman's.

Miss Nini | Timotio | Pasquale | M. Enrico | Miss Elvira

BIONDI IN "THE DANCING SCHOOL"

THE THEATERS

The Laughter-provoking Qualities of "The Gay Parisians."

If uncontrollable shrieks of laughter coming from a Baldwin audience mean anything, the play "Gay Parisians," as presented by the Frohman company, is a complete and unmistakable success. Nothing so mirth-provoking has come to us in a long while. Critics may find fault, but after all, the demand for a wholesome laugh is greater than that for the more serious and finer productions. W. J. Ferguson, who graces the top of the programme, has a droll face to commence with, a face that rather appeals to you when in repose, and moves you to laughter when it begins to move. He reminds one somewhat of Sol Smith Russell, and his comedy work is of the Russell type. He draws out of the part something more than the author has given him in the lines; makes the most of every situation, and gives us a picture of a novice suffering from the agonizing effects of a strong cigar that is simply inimitable.

As for the plot, or rather action of the play, it defies description. We have an architect and a builder living as neighbors. The architect is hen-pecked, the builder rather the reverse. In a moment of confidence, the builder's wife relates her tale of woe to her husband's friend. He, somewhat smitten by her charms, suggests that she do something to make her husband jealous. This was an idea! He offers himself as an individual willing to play the part of lover. He will take her to theatres, to French restaurants, and to Heaven knows where. This is the germ of the plot. Around and about this little transaction cling ludicrous and laughable situations that continue through three acts, and unless the weight of business cares bears most heavily upon you, you will fall in line and laugh as heartily as I did over the whole absurd affair. There is an old judge who stutters when it rains, but talks as volubly as a phonograph when the weather is clear. He has the happy faculty of being de trop under all circumstances. One might imagine him in the way even at his own funeral. He contributes wonderfully to the fun-making. In the last act he is volubly explaining his experiences of the eventful night preceding, and is about to innocently expose all the deftly concealed escapades of the architect and the builder's wife, when a thunder storm providentially comes along.

The words die on his lips. The thunder roars, the rain patters down, and he stands just on the threshold of making an exposure, a stuttering, red-faced unfortunate, giving voice to unintelligible words. The scene cannot be described. I would strongly advise my frineds to see "Gay Parisians," perhaps because I run somewhat to comedy. It is not a naughty play—that is, not very naughty. It has none of the risque things of "Bohemia," and is easily the most laughable thing of the season.

Olcott has not been doing badly at the California. He is being put forth, of course, as the successor to the lamented Scanlan, he of the handsome teeth, engaging smile and pleasing voice. Scanlan was a rara avis in his way. He netted his managers a handsome sum, and for a while was "the" Irish comedian of the American stage. Not in the sense that Boucicault was, but in a lighter vein, and in sketchy plays where an engaging voice and person were the chief requisites to carry the show along. Olcott's teeth have the required standard of whiteness, his voice is pleasing, but he is not quite Scanlan.

Have you seen Biondi at the Orpheum? I ran in last week to see Kennedy, the mesmerist, and take a peep at the little Italian mimic. They say, and you know "they say" is responsible for many things, that Biondi—the girls call him "Bunnie"—is overloaded with letters from damsels who have gone daft on the agile little actor. The mischief of it is, he cannot read English and must submit these tender epistles to his secretary, who translates them for him, and takes all kinds of liberties in his translations.

THE PROLOGUE

DICK WHITTINGTON.

Adams' Tutti-Frutti Chewing Gum for Indigestion

DRAMATIC NOTES

"The Wife" will follow "The Social Trust" at the Columbia.

It is said that James O'Neill will play the late Frank Mayo's part in "Pudd'nhead Wilson."

Steve Brodie in his successful play "On the Bowery" is one of the early attractions at the California.

Miss Pauline French, a graduate from the Columbia Theater School of Dramatic Art, will join Augustin Daly's forces next season.

Joseph Grismer and Phoebe Davis are coming to California in November, bringing two new plays, "Humanity" and "The Cotton King."

The "Holland Brothers" begin their tour on September 14th at McVicker's theater in Chicago, presenting "The Social Highwayman."

On account of the success and extraordinary demand for seats, it has been decided to play "The Gay Parisians" on Sunday night at the Baldwin Theatre.

Chauncey Olcott will give the last two performances of his engagement at the California Theater to-night and Sunday. The bill will be "The Minstrel of Clare."

The California Theater will be closed for the next two weeks, reopening Monday evening, September 7th, with Steve Brodie in the melodrama, "On the Bowery."

The Alcazar Theatre is to be opened shortly with a stock company under the management of Frederic Belasco, Frank Doane, and J. B. Jordan. A number of Belasco's plays are to be produced.

The second and last week of "The Gay Parisians" at the Baldwin Theater commences next Monday night. "Madame Sans Gene" will be presented on August 31st, with Augustus Cook as Napoleon.

Thirteen members of the Columbia Theater School of Dramatic Art assisted in the performance of the "Masqueraders" last week with Mr. Charles Frohman's Empire Theater Stock Company. One of its graduates, Mr. James Keane, played a small part to advantage.

"Trilby" is booming in Australia. Thus far the Melbourne season resulted in a clear profit of over $25,000. Edith Crane, Reuben Fax, Jennie Reiffarth, E. W. Morrison, and the others who are familiar to the San Francisco theater-goers, have all made individual hits.

The great consolidated circus of Adam Forepaugh and the Sells Brothers is on its way here, and will open at San Francisco on the 3d of September. It promises four rings, and three hundred performers who will do new and wonderful acts twice a day during the ten days of their stay here. Reserved seats on sale at the Pacific Music Co., 816 Market street.

"The Social Trust," a new play written for the Frawley company by Mr. Hillary Bell and Mr. Ramsay Morris, will have its first production at the Columbia next Monday night. It is a comedy drama, the story of which is founded upon the incidents connected with the famous Cordage Trust. The leading parts will be taken by Wilton Lackaye and Mrs. Thorndyke Boucicault.

Charles Frohman reads 500 to 600 plays a year. The quickest record he has yet made of reading and accepting a play is in the case of "Bohemia," which was handed to him at 10 o'clock one morning and read that afternoon in his room at the Waldorf Hotel. That evening he wrote Clyde Fitch, its author, of its acceptance, and before 10 next morning the terms of the purchase were arranged. At noon it was practically in the hands of his stock company for rehearsal.

One of the attractions at the Orpheum next week will be the mimic Richard Pitrot, owner of four hundred rings, and wardrobes to correspond. Among others will be Albini the Magician, "Costermonger Sal," Miss Howard the Trilby dancer, etc. The new Wein-Stube which Gustav Walter has fitted up in imitation of the famous wine rooms to be found in sections of Germany, will next week be thrown open to the public.

The management of the Columbia Theater School of Dramatic Art will open next month a special department for the development of singers desiring an operatic career. In all probability Cantor Stark of the Temple Emanu-El, who has had a most thorough European training as a vocal instructor, will take charge aided by Professor Joseph Roeckel. Other teachers will be engaged who have been devoting their study to the methods of instructions in music and opera. Cantor Stark has a repertoire of over one hundred and fifty operas, and has had fifteen years of experience in symphony and operatic works.

The bright-eyed, clever little Italian, Biondi, has made a great record at the Orpheum. Such a success has his performance proved that he has been engaged for two extra weeks, and he promises us new surprises in the way of one-man Italian opera. It is really a spectacle to be behind the scenes at the Orpheum and see Biondi change from one costume to another. Four dressers are in constant attendance, one with a coat, and others with shoes, hats, trousers, and other paraphenalia of his disguises. Not a second is lost in placing the various articles where they belong. Every motion is regulated by system; every twist or turn is utilized. Personally, Biondi has made many friends. He is a gay, bright, debonaire young man, generous and hospitable, and is never happy save amid a crowd of his countrymen talking Italian at the top of his voice. This week, he performs an operetta called "The Dancing School," in one act of which he assumes seven different roles. He has had himself photographed in the various changes, and six of these are reproduced above, showing the variety and versatility of his expressions and poses.

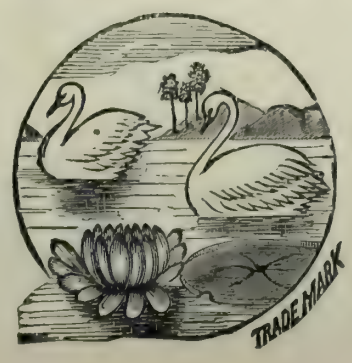
The Maison Riche serves an elegant dinner at popular prices.

You can pay anything you like for tea, but something will be missing unless it is fresh-roasted.

That something is very nice indeed, and Schilling's Best is full of it.

Oolong, Ceylon, Japan, English Breakfast, Ideal Blend.

A. Schilling & Company
San Francisco



QUEEN LILY SOAP

BEST ON EARTH
FOR LAUNDRY USE

Patronize Home Industry

"EPISCOPO & CO."

A Very Curious Study of Italian Life.

In her translation of "Episcopo & Company" (H. S. Stone & Co.) Myrta Leonara Jones has introduced us to an author still unknown on this side of the water, though famous in all the literary circles of Europe. Gabriele d'Annunzio is an Italian, whose writings are, perhaps, more widely read in France than in his own country. As Henry James once said of him, "He speaks so loud that one hears him well only from a distance." The translator's preface contains an interesting sketch of d'Annunzio's career. He had the good fortune to bring out his first book just when the world was getting tired of Tolstoi and Ibsen, and this fact, combined with his rare faculty of looking at life both from within and without, won him an unusually swift recognition. He is still under thirty years old, and has been before the literary world ever since the publication of a book of poems in 1883. Exquisite as this "Canto Nuovo, l'Inter-Mezzo di Rime" is, its erotic character caused a great deal of comment. These and later poems have placed him among the foremost Italian poets of to-day. He himself relates with naive frankness the effect upon himself of his sudden success: "Everyone sought me, burned incense before me, made a god of me. I appealed specially to women. In this lay a great danger for me. Praise intoxicated me. Eager for its pleasures, I threw myself desperately into life with all my youthful ardor. I committed fault after fault. I skirted a thousand precipices. A sort of aphrodisiacal madness took hold of me. I published a little book of poems entitled 'Intermezzo di Rime,' where in plastic verse of faultless prosody I sang of all the pleasures of the flesh, with a shamelessness which I have never seen except in the freest poets of the XVI and XVII centuries. As was just, I began to pay for my mistakes, my dissipations, my excesses. I began to suffer with the same intensity with which I had enjoyed. Suffering made a new man of me. The works of Tolstoi and of Dostvievsky helped to develop new feelings within me. And now that my art was ripe, I succeeded at once in expressing my new conception of life in a complete and organic whole, in my novel called 'L'Innocente.'"

It is through his novels that one gets the clearest idea of d'Annunzio's personality. He is revealed an interesting, beauty-adoring pagan, with no morals to speak of. As to his literary explicitness, the famous critic, M. de Vogue, claims that d'Annunzio is never vulgar—that his works are the result of spontaneous, literary temperament, and not of speculation; and that he has nothing in common with the literary tradesmen who cater to low tastes. His three most famous novels are his "Romances of the Rose," "Piacere," which appeared in 1889, "L'Innocente," in 1892, and "Trionfo della Morte," in 1894. These are accessible in French, but no one has been bold enough to put them into English. He is now beginning a new series on a higher moral plane, known as "Romances of the Lily." His writings show so strongly the influence of other writers that he has often been accused of plagiarism, and his extremely succeptible nature undoubtedly owes much to certain great authors. He is hard to classify, being now a realist, now a symbolist, but his books have power, and impel one to a second and even a third reading.

As for "Episcopo & Company," it is by turns exquisite and revolting. Once acquainted with Episcopo, one hates to remember the author's own statement that his neroes are largely portraits of himself. This one is the epitome of cowardice, a maudlin, feeble, bloodless creature, whose one redeeming point is his affection for his little son. He is a man to whom no one, not even he himself, gives respect—a cringing thing of tears and tremblings, whom the strong are irresistably impelled to kick. He is drawn with such relentless realism that one does not feel one pang of sympathy for his sufferings, except in the very first, when he tells about the little shoes. Yet, with that beautiful, simple language, only one little touch of idealization was needed to make us cry all the way through. One feels that the translator has caught the tone and spirit of the original to a wonderful degree—just as one often knows that a portrait is a good likeness without ever having seen the person portrayed. The story is hardly one to give a skeleton of, though as told by the garrulous, simple-minded Italian, it is harmless enough. He may say indecent things, but he never hints them—never explains a situation with a wink and a laugh,—and so the story is no more shocking to modesty than a plain talk with the family doctor. Episcopo is always the slave of some one—always as impotent as though hypnotized. First it is the brutal Manzer, then the even viler Genevra, who marries Episcopo and fills his house with her lovers. Among these Manzer finally takes his place, and maltreats everybody until he is stabbed in the back by the dishonored husband. Episcopo tells his story in prison, where he is evidently dying. It is when he is telling about his son that he comes nearest to being lovable:

Eleven years—think, sir—he was but eleven years old, and he argued like a man, he was sad like a man. It seemed as though he already knew life, all of life, and that he was suffering, always suffering. His lips were already familiar with bitter words—words which do much harm, and are never forgotten! * * *

He is dead. It is sixteen days since he died. And I—I am still living! But I ought to die; and soon I shall die; it will be better so. My child wants me join him. Every night he comes, sits down, looks at me. He is barefooted, poor Ciro! I have to strain my ears to distinguish his steps. As soon as night falls I am continually, continually, on the watch, and when he puts his foot on the sill, it is as though he put it on my heart; but softly, so softly, without hurting me, light as a feather—poor soul!

Every night now he is barefooted. But believe me, never while he was alive, never did he go barefooted—never, I swear it to you.

I am going to tell you something. Pay strict attention. If any one dear to you should die, take care that he wants for nothing in his coffin. Dress him with your own hands if you can. Dress him completely, carefully, as though he were to come back to life, to go forth. He who is about to leave this world should want for nothing, nothing. Remember that.

Well, look at these little shoes. Have you children? No? Then you cannot know, you cannot understand, what this poor little pair of shoes, which have held his feet, which keep the very form of his feet, are to me. I could never tell you, no father could ever tell you, none. * * *

When he died he had only one pair, the ones you see. And I took them from him. And they buried him like that, like a poor little boy. Did no one love him but his father?

And now every night I take these two shoes and put them, one beside the other, on the threshold for him. Does he see them as he passes? Perhaps he sees them, but he does not touch them. Perhaps he knows that I should lose my mind if I did not find them in their places in the morning, one beside the other.

Episcopo is terribly, almost insanely, emotional. Again, had a little glamour been thrown over him, had he been a shade less vividly real, we should have felt and suffered with him. But we see him so plainly that we realize how we should have despised him in life, we who scorn tears and deify self-control. In passages like the following, we have an uncomfortable sense that he is making himself ridiculous:

There are moments when, God pardon me, I feel something Christ-like within me. I have been the vilest and I have been the best of men. Come, let me weep a little. You see how my tears flow! Many years of martyrdom have taught me to weep like that, without sobs, without sighs, so that I might not be heard, might not give pain to the being who loved me, might not annoy the being who made me suffer. Very few know how to weep like that. Well, sir, that is at least one thing I beg you to remember and give me credit for. After my death you will tell them that all his life poor Giovanni Episcopo at least knew how to weep in silence.

The book as a whole is one not easily forgotten, but, Oh, so morbid, so unwholesome! Is strength to be obtained only by treating of the low deeds of low people? Is it incompatible with purity and saneness? Is no one great enough to bring sweetness and light into European literature?

J. W. T.

Occidental Restaurant, 337 Bush street. Headquarters for tourists. Separate rooms for families. Meals a la carte. Lunch 50c. Best French Dinner in the city, 75c. Joseph Munier, proprietor.

BOOK NOTES

"You are the first woman I ever knew who even knew what honor meant—just as a man is sometimes able to know it, I mean. Women have a kind of honesty, often, but of honor they know pitably little." There is a challenge with a vengeance. If Marie Louise Pool wished to get "Mrs. Gerald" (Harper's) vehemently wrangled over, she could not have chosen a better sentiment. One cannot read her books, however, without feeling that she is above trickery of any kind, and that her saying a thing like that meant that she found it sorrowfully true. And is it? We answer with a vigorous No! and a mental reservation. Judith Gerald, the honorable exception, is a strong, intense woman, to whom disloyalty would be utterly impossible. The story lies in the contest between her passionate nature, truthful and strong-willed, and an unlawful love, but there is never a second's doubt as to where the ultimate victory will be. It is not a problem story, but a history of human emotion, told with wonderful truth and vividness. If it were not so real, one might resent its painfulness, its unceasing strain and intensity. Miss Poole is not a writer who has to tell us minutely just what her characters are suffering to rouse our sympathies. She seems to bestow on us her own insight, so that we feel for them instinctively, and almost too poignantly. They live through their troubles right before our eyes. Miss Poole has already given us some charming work, but the dramatic force of "Mrs. Gerald," and its portrayal of human passion place it far ahead of anything she has done.

The French Academy at its last meeting received letters from Emile Zola and Jules Delafosse, each presenting his own name as candidate for the seat made vacant by the death of Jules Simon. In May Zola appeared as a candidate to take the place of Alexandre Dumas fils, at the same time that Gaston Paris was elected to succeed Dr. Pasteur. Eight ballots were cast. Zola led in nearly all of them. In the last two, however, he stood eight against sixteen cast for Barboux. No decision was reached. The next election will take place in October, and it is thought that the author of "Rome" stands the best chance of his life of having his name then placed among the "Forty Immortals."

L. McManus has made Cromwell's conquest of Ireland the basis of a stirring novel of adventure, "The Silk of the Kine." The heroine is the daughter of an Irish Earl, and is taken by slave-hunters. She goes through thrilling alternations of rescue and capture till an English officer, who has fallen in love with her, gets her into safe keeping by saying that she is his wife. To save him from the consequences of this lie, she marries him and they escape to Holland, where in time he wins her love and Cromwell's pardon. (Published by Harper & Brothers.)

"Tom Sawyer, Detective," Mark Twain's new story, begun in the August "Harper's," is a combination of the adventures of "Huck Finn" and his enterprising companion, told in "Huck's" picturesque language, and embellished with many illustrations by A. B. Frost.

Another new historical romance is "The Crimson Sign," by S. R. Knightly (Harper's) for which the siege of Londonderry furnishes a setting.

Books Received.

"The Vanished Emperor," by Percy Andreae. (Rand, McNally & Co.)

Feed Them Properly

and carefully; reduce the painfully large percentage of infant mortality. Take no chances and make no experiments on this very important matter. The Gail Borden Eagle Brand Condensed Milk has saved thousands of little lives.

A DINNER WITH ZANGWILL

The personality of I. Zangwill possesses general interest not only for his co-religionists, who love "Ghetto Stories," but for the public, which follows his witty "Without Prejudice," in the "Pall Mall Magazine," and finds the humor of "The King of Schnorrers" grateful. The Parisian correspondent of "The Tribune" contributes this witty impression of the novelist:

We had finished dinner, Mr. Zangwill and I, at the Cafe Luxembourg. The waiter brought coffee, liqueurs and cigarettes. Mr. Zangwill leaned across the table to relight his cigarette at mine.

"This is a man's equivalent for kissing," he said, handing back to me, with a smile, my lighted cigarette.

A pale, clever face (that is not unlike, in its expression, the late Lord Beaconfield's), crowned with an abundance of crisp, black hair. Eyes dark and piercing, a witty, passionate mouth. The nose strongly marked but sensitive; a nose that denotes force and success in life. A slight scholarly stoop to the shoulders, hands firm and white.

"I must go back to my hotel presently," he said, "and finish a story I have promised of ghetto life in Rome in the fifteenth century. But I would much rather stay here and flaner all the evening. I understand now why Nero played the fiddle while Rome was burning. He had just dined at the Cafe Luxembourg." And indeed the good bourgeois cooking had been very acceptable. What a pity the Cafe Luxembourg exists no longer! That dinner was a feast of wit for me. I remember asking Mr. Zangwill what his political opinions were.

"I am a Radical," he replied, "with a profound suspicion of the people." We spoke of America, where Mr. Zangwill was contemplating a lecturing tour.

"Ah, America," he said, and an indescribable twinkle came into his eye. "What a great country! Columbus discovered America, but America has discovered me.

"I said to Kipling," he observed, "'I wish you would write more poetry.' 'Why should I?' answered Mr. Kipling. 'Because I want to read it,' I said."

"Speaking of a certain London club noted for its interesting meetings," he remarked, "I never put my foot in it but I open my mouth." He also told me of how he had been taken over a well-known ladies' club of London by a very charming woman, who had presented him to all the notabilities present; then, turning to him, she asked: "Is there anybody else here, Mr. Zangwill, "that you would like to meet?"

"Yes," answered Mr. Zangwill, "I would like to be introduced to you now."

A friend had written to invite him to dinner to meet Selous, the celebrated lion tamer, who had recently returned from the Cape. Mr. Zangwill wrote back: "I very much regret not being able to accept your kind invitation to dine with you and meet Mr. Selous, but, by the way, you are a greater lion tamer even than he is."

Once, at a theatrical fund dinner, Sir Henry Irving, who at that time had not made Mr. Zangwill's acquaintance, saluted him on entering the dining hall with a slap on the back. He afterward came to him and apologized for the liberty he had taken. "But your back looked so familiar, Mr. Zangwill," said Sir Henry, "I could not resist slapping it. The fact is, I have been puzzling all through dinner to think whom it reminded me of. At last I know. It looked like my own back in 'The Bells.'"

He related how he had been to supper with Mrs. Patrick Campbell and her husband one night after the theater. She was acting at that time the leading role in a piece, the great situation of which was when the husband and the lover sit down to play a game of cards, where the heroine is to be given to whoever wins the game.

"Mr. Zangwill," exclaimed Mrs. Patrick Campbell, "I cannot sufficiently express to you my admiration for your beautiful books."

"Waiter," said Mr. Zangwill, gravely turning to the man who had been serving them, "a pack of cards, please."

I was bemoaning my fate, how Mr. John Lane, the publisher, had kept a MS. of my poems for two years before bringing it out.

"Be patient," replied Mr. Zangwill, "it's a long lane that has no turning."

MOORE'S POISON OAK REMEDY
Cures Poison Oak and all Skin Diseases. Sold by all druggists

Of exceptional purity and excellence.--London Lancet. Johannis is unrivaled.--London Medical Adviser. No menu is considered en regale without Johannis.--Epicure

Holds a Higher Award for Merit Than Any Other Natural Table Water!

Bottled at the "Johannis" Spring, Zollhaus, Germany, with ITS OWN NATURAL GAS

Johannis.

Johannis, Limited, London, Purveyors by Royal Warrant to Her Majesty the Queen

WILLIAM WOLFF & CO., Pacific Coast Agents, 327 Market St., San Francisco

Notice of Removal

JNO. N. PHILAN

Bookseller

Stationer and Newsdealer

Has removed from 211 Sutter Street to

No. 240 Sutter Street

On the north side of the street in the block where he established his business in 1879

MENNEN'S BORATED TALCUM

TOILET POWDER

Approved by Highest Medical Authorities as a Perfect Sanitary Toilet Preparation

For infants and adults

Delightful after shaving

Positively relieves Prickley Heat, Nettle Rash, Chafed Skin, Sunburn, etc. Removes Blotches, Pimples; makes the skin smooth and healthy.

Take No Substitutes. Sold by druggists or mailed for 25 cts.

SAMPLE MAILED (Name this paper) FREE

GERHARD MENNEN CO., Newark, N. J.

Notice of Removal

We take pleasure in informing our friends and patrons that upon August Fifteenth we shall remove from our present quarters to

409 Market Street

Bet. Fremont and First

where, on account of our more central location and more commodious quarters, we shall be better able to look after the interests of our customers.

CALIFORNIA
ELECTRICAL WORKS

F. A. GREENWOOD, Secretary

Removal Sale The whole of my stock at 1212-18 Market Street is now for sale at an immense reduction from the usual prices, before removal to

New Store, 721 Market Street
in the Bancroft Building

Suits to Order from $10 Trousers to Order from $3

CHAS. LYONS, London Tailor

We Have Appointed

Coburn, Tevis & Co.

OUR AGENTS FOR

CHOCOLATE MENIER

MENIER & CO

Wedding Invitations are properly engraved and in correct form, at ROBERTSON'S

H. B. PASMORE

William Shakespeare, London, Conservatory, Leipsic

Teacher of Singing and Theory of Music

Will resume teaching August 4th. Classes in Harmony now organizing. For terms address,

1424 Washington Street

Reception hour, Tuesdays at 1:30

Ziska Institute : 1606 Van Ness Ave.

School for Girls. English, French, German.
Thirtieth year begins August 3d.
MME. B. ZISKA, A.M., Principal.

JOHN HARADEN PRATT

TEACHER OF PIANO
SONGS ARRANGED

3021 Buchanan Street
Orders left with Sherman, Clay & Co.

Miss Adie's Boarding and Day School

(KINDERGARTEN)

2117 California St., bet. Buchanan and Laguna

English, French, German Reopens August 3d

A NOTE FROM NEWPORT

NEWPORT, Aug. 10th.—A whisper, or more properly a shout, is going around to the effect that we may before long have another American Duchess. When the Duchess of Manchester proposed coming over this summer with her son Willian Angus Drogo Montagu, the present Duke, it was an open secret that some lucky American girl and her dowry might go back with them. In a wealthy, high-class way, the Manchesters are as poor as cats. The family estates are not remunerative, and though the young Duke went through Eton, Oxford was denied him. His mother is an American, a member of the Yznega family, and it was for her that the young Duchess of Marlborough was named. According to report, the lucky girl has already been found in Miss May Van Alen, daughter of James J. Van Alen, and niece of John Jacob Astor. She is only nineteen, which is fortunate, as the Duke is barely twenty, and she has not yet come out, though that is to be remedied by a big reception at the Newport house of the Van Alens. This will be the most magnificent kind of an affair, for Mr. Van Alen is a second Ward McAllister in the matter of entertaining, and the Duchess and her son will be the special guests of honor. The friendly feeling between the two families is so marked that some say that the future father- and mother-in-law may complete matters by getting married themselves, but this is hardly probable. Miss Van Alen was born and brought up in Paris, thanks to a family feud. William Astor, her grandfather, bitterly opposed his daughter's marriage with Mr. Van Alen, and did his best to prevent it. Failing in that, he settled ten thousand dollars a year on his daughter, on condition that she should live abroad. When Mrs. Van Alen died, her husband came back to this country with his daughter, the feud having ended with the death of William Astor several years before, and since then he has taken a permanent place in society. His daughter is not what you would call a pretty girl, but she is thoroughly attractive, and will have a tremendously good time in society, whether she enters it as an English Duchess or an American girl.

So much for gossip. As for events, it has been yachting week, but the weather has been so abominably hot that the prevailing language was more naughty than nautical. No wind to speak of, and a grilling sun to spoil tempers and complexions. Really and truly, for unmitigated, unadulterated, inconsiderate and persistent heat, this week has broken the record of any previous August. If it does not cool off a little before next Saturday, when the great Futurity Stakes are to be run for at Sheepshead Bay, the feminine half of the Meadowbrook colony will hardly appear at the club-house, though the Bound Brook, Blemton and Keene stables will all be well represented. Speaking of racing, Pierre Lorillard scored honors and prizes at Newmarket, where two of his horses came in winners and a third got second place. They say Lord William Beresford is going to join him in his racing ventures.

As everyone knows, young Cornelius Vanderbilt and Miss Wilson did finally get married. It was the quietest kind of an affair, and the New York house looked so shut up and innocent that no one but a small boy would have dreamed that there was a wedding going on inside. One saw the young bridegroom going up the steps, however, and planted himself firmly before the door-bell. His appearance there gathered the nucleus of a crowd which grew as the day proceeded, and cheered Mrs. Vanderbilt very cordially when she came out. Gertrude Vanderbilt's wedding to Harry Payne Whitney will probably take place at the Breakers this month, if Mr. Vanderbilt is well enough. But the wedding of the Newport season will be that of Edith Bishop and Moses Taylor on the nineteenth, for which they say two thousand invitations have been sent out.

If you are thinking of fall clothes, remember that red is the coming color. Any shade from palest cerise to darkest wine, so long as it be red. The prettiest hats combine the tints of autumn leaves with pale or grass green, set off by a black tip. No more mad mingling of violet and blue and green and pink and red and purple in a clashing discord to disfigure one poor head. With the subdual of sleeves has come a decorous regard for color harmony, and Fashion's mad aberrations seem over.

SALLY ANDREWS.

Maison Tortoni French Rotisserie, 111 O'Farrell street. Private dining rooms, banquet hall. S. Constantini, proprietor.

LATE VERSE

Retribution.

Virtue and truth were thine—long, long ago;
But from the first thy girlish steps did walk;
The last, they say, who saw thee upward grow,
Fled when thy lisping lips began to talk.

And thou wert wondrous fair, as many know,
But now, though plastered paint and powdered chalk
Strive hard to hide the footprints of the crow,
Time is one suitor whom thou canst not mock.

Yea, thou didst triumph then, and rigid dames
With plainer features, but with cleaner names,
Hated the baleful beauty of thy face.

Now, in the limbo of a hell whose blaze
Leaps to infold thee, thou wouldst mend thy ways,
And try thy zig-zag footsteps to retrace.

—LOUIS A. ROBERTSON.

Book versus Bike.

On the other side of the Atlantic an English poet has commemorated the conflict between bookdom and wheeldom in the following touching lines:

The Novel came down like a wolf on the fold,
And its binding was beaming with letters of gold,
And the screech of its voice was like geese on the green
When the sky shines the bluer for Jude the Obs—cure.

Like the hairs of his head when great Bodley was young,
That host in the evening its paean had sung;
Like the hairs of his head when great Bodley was old,
That host on the morrow you could not behold.

For the Bicycle swooped most amazingly fast,
And frightened the life out of all whom it passed;
And each masterpiece lost what it thought was its sense,
And it puffed one poor puff, then it scuttled off hence.

And there lay the screed with its pages uncut,
And gone was its proud and ineffable strut,
The Kailyard had given its very last kick,
And Hope, now deferred, felt his heart very sick.

And there lay the Pseudonym, tattered and torn,
Its moral unprized, its emotions forlorn;
And the Hill-top is silent and sulking alone,
Its problem neglected, its trumpet unblown.

And Marie Corelli is loud in her wail,
For stopped is her wholly phenomenal sale;
And the might of the Novelist, just like an ike,*
Has melted away in the scorch of the Bike.

Brought Good News.

(By a Twentieth Century Browning.)

I sprang to the seat with a dexterous bound,
And I put down my foot as the pedal came round.
"Good-bye," cried our hostess; "Good-bye," cried the wits,
"We will follow to-morrow to pick up the bits."
The door closed behind us; the lights sank to rest,
And into the midnight we wobbled abreast.

Then we raced down the road at the fiercest of rates,
And the cows came to peer at us over the gates;
Up hill and down dale; on the slope, on the flat,
My brave little bicycle flew like a bat,
And I would have stroked and caressed it, you know,
Like the man in the poem, but I dare not let go.

The gleam of our lamps danced about on the way,
And their fragrance uprose with the scent of the hay;
And the rustic historian with trembling tells
How he listened that night to the ting of our bells,
While the moon hanging over the poplar trees shone
With a critical gaze at us wobbling on.

But a dismal adventure remains to be said,
For I rashly attempted to turn round my head;
And my bicycle, wroth at such empty pretense,
Bore me in an instant full tilt at the fence.
They gathered us up: I was sound and entire,
But my gallant pneumatic had punctured a tire.

Then the people to whom the good news had been brought,
When we came to the place gathered round as they ought;
And they fetched a solution of rubber beside,
With a patent hand pump, which they vigorously plied.
For the burgesses said they could scarcely refuse
To pump up the machine that had brought the good news.

—Pall Mall Gazette.

*This is presumably modern English for "icicle."

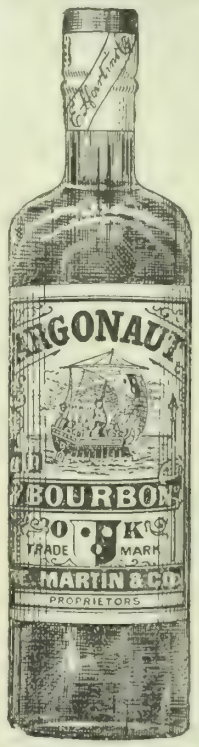
Its Purity A Surety Of Its Excellence

Vina Brandy

Accept No Substitute None So Good None So Pure

Vina Distillery Co.

819 Market St., S. F.



Argonaut OK WHISKEY

IS FIVE YEARS IN WOOD BEFORE BOTTLING

E. MARTIN —AND— CO.

411 MARKET ST.

SAN FRANCISCO

CHARLES S. WHEELER ERNST H. LUDWIG

Ernst H. Ludwig & Co.

THE MODEL AMERICAN CATERERS

Supply Wedding Breakfasts, Luncheons, Dinners, Matinee Teas and Receptions on shortest notice. Also Terrapin Entrees Luncheons and Dinners. Ice Cream, Cake, &c.

Telephone 2388 1206 SUTTER STREET

Good Appetite

Is restored and the disordered Stomach and Liver invigorated by taking a small wineglassful, before meals, of the celebrated . . . . . .

Peruvian Bitters

HEALTHFUL INVIGORATING!

CRECIENTE

Imported Sea Salt for Bathing

SOLD BY DRUGGISTS AND GROCERS

COMET OOLONG

The oldest and most reliable brand of Tea on the market. Sold only in ½ lb papers at 20 cts. per paper.

ALL GROCERS KEEP IT

Gladness Comes

With a better understanding of the transient nature of the many physical ills which vanish before proper efforts—gentle efforts—pleasant efforts—rightly directed. There is comfort in the knowledge that so many forms of sickness are not due to any actual disease, but simply to a constipated condition of the system, which the pleasant family laxative, Syrup of Figs, promptly removes. That is why it is the only remedy with millions of families, and is everywhere esteemed so highly by all who value good health. Its beneficial effects are due to the fact, that it is the one remedy which promotes internal cleanliness, without debilitating the organs on which it acts. It is therefore all important, in order to get its beneficial effects, to note when you purchase, that you have the genuine article, which is manufactured by the California Fig Syrup Co. only, and sold by all reputable druggists.

If in the enjoyment of good health, and the system is regular, then laxatives or other remedies are not needed. If afflicted with any actual disease, one may be commended to the most skillful physicians, but if in need of a laxative, then one should have the best, and with the well-informed everywhere, Syrup of Figs stands highest and is most largely used and gives most general satisfaction.

FINEST ON THE MARKET

BEWARE OF IMITATIONS — EEL RIVER CREAMERY — SEE THAT THIS STAMP IS ON END OF SQUARE

A FINE GRAIN DELICIOUS FLAVORED BUTTER

If you appreciate a DELICACY Ask your Dealer for the BRAND

BALDWIN THEATRE AL MAYMAN AND CO. INCORP'D PROPS.

MONDAY NEXT, the Second and Last Week

Crowded at Every Performance!

Pre-eminently the Best of Frohman's Comedies

THE GAY PARISIANS

With the Greatest Comedy Cast Ever Brought Out

Regular Performance Sunday Night

Monday, August 31, 1896: MADAME SANS GENE

Columbia Theatre.

FRIEDLANDER, GOTTLOB & Co. LESSEES AND MANAGERS

AT LAST!

Monday Evening, August 24th, first presentation upon any stage of

THE SOCIAL TRUST

A Comedy-Drama, by Hillary Bell and Ramsay Morris

The Great Play of the Century!

To be given a magnificent production by

THE FRAWLEY COMPANY

Orpheum

O'FARRELL STREET, BETWEEN ST. ...KTON AND POWELL

Week Commencing Monday, Aug. 24

MANY NEW AND PLEASING FEATURES

Richard Pitrot, America's Greatest Mimic

Albini, King of Cards and Magic; Nellie Maguire, Character Songstress; last week of the only Biondi;

Herr Techow's Performing Cats.

A Vaudeville Company of Stars

Reserved seats 25c.; balcony 10c.; opera chairs and box seats 50c. NOTE—The Wein-Stube opens Monday night

ORDER YOUR CARRIAGES AND COUPES OF THE

PACIFIC CARRIAGE CO.

At Baldwin Hotel

200 Sutter Street, corner Kearny

48 Eighth Street, or

St. Nicholas Hotel, Market and Ninth Streets

Steamer and Train Service a specialty 'Phone 1950

HER POINT OF VIEW

For generations we have comfortably accepted the idea that man's love was of his life a thing apart—'twas a woman's whole existence, as an indisputable law of nature. Love was a thing that a woman spent the day with and a man came home to at night. He was the mind with the thousand eyes, she the heart with but one. Was that because she had been so constituted by nature, or because the other nine hundred and ninety-nine eyes had not yet been opened? Given a man's varied interests, and would love become of her life, too, a thing apart? It is a question that comes up irresistably as education widens her horizon and progress throws open to her, one by one, the doors of the world.

It seems very cold-blooded to consider the greatness of a woman's love as largely due to the fact that she hadn't anything else to interest her, and every sentimental and traditional feeling resents the idea, but after all, it isn't a question of what we want or don't want to believe—it is a question of abstract fact to be established or disproved. Given a strong mental interest, and it is appalling how emotion of every sort slips into the background. If women are to have careers and play important roles in the world, it seems inevitable that love should become for them, too, a background, a delightful, but none the less a subdued, accompaniment. Whether it is well for woman to have careers or not is quite another question, and however it may be decided theoretically, it is quite evident woman intends to. Personally, I believe she should have wider interests and more opportunity for mental development, though not necessarily through the medium of bloomers and politics. Of course, as far as voting goes, taxation without representation has always proved irritating. It is not wholly flattering to be classed with children and idiots, but if we quietly and without clamoring show that we are neither, that will adjust itself in time. It certainly seems inexpedient to open the polls to women until they are better trained in the matters of reason and logic, and until the personal equation plays a less prominent part in their judgments. Not that the average masculine voter has attained to this—far from it. For the very reason that there are so many incompetent voters now, it would seem wiser not to add to their number. The enlightened remnant would as yet be too small to leaven the vast, incompetent, feminine lump.

* * *

But this is politics, and we started out with love. How is it going to be with woman? Will her love cease to be her career, and become merely its running mate? Or is it even possible that her passions, always less ardent than man's, will often become crowded out by the throng of new interests? The question can only be asked, not answered.

Human relations are so dull, compared to what they might be. The other day I tried to implant a noble discontent with them in a masculine mind.

"If you'd just think about it a little, you could get so much more out of your relations with people," I began. "Now if I say to you, for instance, 'My idea of desolation is bright moonlight with the wind blowing,' you answer, 'Um hum, it was awfully cold last night; I had to get an extra blanket.'"

"Well, what's wrong with that?"

"It isn't responding to the idea. It cuts the subject right off. You might have said, 'Yes, but I'll tell you what is more desolate than that to me—hot sun on brown, treeless hills.' To recognize the feeling meant and to match the thought the other person has worked out with one you have come to yourself on the same line—that is to be really responsive You can't have an interesting time with any one without responsiveness."

"But I always have lots of fun with girls."

"Of course you do. 'Lots of fun' exactly describes it. And when you want to make love to a girl, you give her a college pin and squeeze her hand as often as practicable and tell her she is looking stunning every time she puts on a different gown. Your idea of a tete-a-tete is to sit in a corner and tell her how you missed the car and were late to the office, and about the man you saw arrested the day before, and how you nearly got fired from college, with occasional interruptions to the effect that you'd rather be with her than with any girl you know."

"But, hang it all, I seem to get on all right with girls," he said a little crossly.

"Naturally. You wear trousers."

"Well, you girls can't monopolize them."

"The truth is," I went on, "you are so really attractive, it's a pity you shouldn't be really interesting as well. You have a soul, I know, and when you find it, you will have doubled the pleasure of living. It's merely asleep."

"How shall I wake it?" he asked, looking impressed.

"I don't know. It may take the traditional fairy princess with the traditional kiss."

"She'll need an alarm clock, too, that princess," he said with a yawn. "Don't you want to go bicycling?"

I went and got ready without a word. It is just as well to recognize when you are beaten.

* * *

So much stress has been laid on the charm of a dimple that it has become an article of commerce, sold by all dermatologists. Any woman who thinks she will be more winning with a hole in her face can have it. All she needs is courage to face three diminutive instruments, a knife, a scoop and a needle.. A small, straight incision is made in the cheek or chin of the ambitious patient, representing the diameter of the proposed improvement. With the little scoop a small portion of the fat underlying the skin is removed; the delicate needle sews the edges of the cut together again and the operation is completed. In two or three days the stitches are removed, and within the week the wound is entirely healed, leaving the slight depression in the surface of the skin which poets call a dimple. It is a very simple operation, but a certain amount of delicacy and skill are necessary, to prevent a scar. No woman who had a dimple ever wanted to get rid of it, but now and then some man who resents the effeminancy has it removed by a little matter of cutting and sewing. The artificial dimple, however, has its drawbacks. It is too permanent. No matter whether the owner be plunged into the depths of grief, whether her face be darkened by anger, or distorted by jealousy, the dimple smiles on. The novelty soon wears off, but the dimple does not, and becomes a mockery. It is as tiresome as an enamelled smile, and equally inappropriate at funerals and solemn moments.

Guest (whom the waiter has brought an extremely dirty bill of fare)—By Jove, that's an excellent idea—samples of the different dishes glued on to the menu.—Tit-Bits.

When you are selecting a wedding or a birthday present, go to S. & G. Gump's, 113 Geary street. They have a magnificent variety, just arrived from Europe, from which to select.

Hotel St. Nicholas, corner Market, Hayes, Larkin and Ninth. American or European plan. Ira R. and James H. Doolittle.

For health and strength: Damiana Bitters.

Poodle Dog Restaurant, S. E. corner Grant Avenue and Bush street. Private dining and banquet rooms. Telephone 429. Blanco & Bruno, proprietors.

If you wish to look neat have your suits cleaned and pressed for $1.00. Bay City Clothing Renovatory, 221½ Geary, rooms 19, 20, 21. 'Phone Main 5859.

THE OVERLAND LIMITED

"The Overland Limited," via Union Pacific, takes only three and a half days to Chicago, and only four and a half days to New York.

The Union Pacific is the only line running Pullman double drawing-room sleepers and dining cars, San Francisco to Chicago, daily, without change, and composite buffet smoking and library cars between Salt Lake City, Ogden and Chicago. Only one change of sleepers to New York; dining car service the entire distance.

Upholstered Pullman tourist sleepers San Francisco to Chicago daily without change. Personally conducted tourist excursions to St. Paul and Chicago every Friday.

Tickets and sleeping car reservations at general office, No. 1 Montgomery street, San Francisco. Reservations secured in advance by all Trans-Atlantic steamship lines. Tickets on sale to and from all points in Europe. D. W. HITCHCOCK, General Agent, San Francisco.

TERRA COTTA PRESSED BRICK FIRE PROOFING — GLADDING, McBEAN & CO. 1358-1360 MARKET ST. WORKS, LINCOLN CAL.

The first washing takes the store gloss off and reveals the shirt as it is. That's the time to compare

"STANDARD" SHIRTS

with those made East.

NEUSTADTER BROS.

MANUFACTURERS

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.

THE CALIFORNIA STATE FAIR AT SACRAMENTO THREE WEEKS. SEPT. 1ST TO 19TH GRAND PAVILION DISPLAY. ELECTRIC MOTIVE POWER TRANSMITTED FROM FOLSOM SEVENTEEN DAYS RACING CASSASA'S EXPOSITION BAND. DON'T FAIL TO EXHIBIT TO ATTEND EXCURSION RATES.

The California Hotel

SAN FRANCISCO

ABSOLUTELY FIREPROOF

HOTEL RAFAEL

SAN RAFAEL

Open All the Year Round

Fifty Minutes from San Francisco

Average winter temperature 64 degrees. Both hotels strictly first-class. Modern, Exquisite and Home-like. Both under the personal supervision of General Warfield.

R. H. WARFIELD & CO. Proprietors.

New Nob Hill Flat opposite the Flood Mansion

1011 CALIFORNIA STREET

Just finished. Thirteen rooms, two bath rooms, superb view, front and rear. All modern improvements. Rent $100. Apply to

G. A. BERTON

323 MONTGOMERY STREET

FRANK K. LANE — G. WHITFIELD LANE

LANE & LANE

Attorneys and Counselors

Room 202

Crocker Building, San Francisco

CHAUNCEY M. DEPEW, the famous orator, statesman, railroad president and millionaire, in an interview said of his recent visit to Del Monte: "I visited Monterey, and I call it the most beautiful place in the world. Monte Carlo cannot compare with it. Its seventeen-mile drive is unparalleled for fineness."

When Mr. Depew says it is the most beautiful place in the world he knows what he is saying, and means it, for he has seen pretty much all the beautiful and interesting places in the world many times over . . . . .

The Tavern of Castle Crag, the most beautiful, attractive and accessible of all mountain resorts, will open for the reception of guests June 1, and will close October 1, 1896.

GEORGE SCHONEWALD, MANAGER

CAMPING

Season 1896

Reduced Rates for Campers' Excursion Tickets

To the following Resorts, situated on the lines of the Southern Pacific Co.

Santa Cruz Mountains

ALMA, LAUREL, FELTON
BEN LOMOND, WRIGHTS, GLENWOOD
BOULDER CREEK

Shasta Region

SWEET BRIAR CAMP
SHASTA SPRINGS SHASTA RETREAT
MT. SHASTA CAMP

For information as to Ticket Rates, Routes of Travel, etc., address or call at any Ticket Office of Southern Pacific Company, or at

General Passenger Office
No. 4 Montgomery Street, Second Floor

Or at City Ticket Office
613 Market Street, Grand Hotel, San Francisco

ILLUSTRATED FOLDER MAILED FREE ON APPLICATION

WM. H. MENTON
Excursion Passenger Agent

RICHARD GRAY
General Traffic Manager

T. H. GOODMAN
General Passenger Agent

Pacific Coast Steamship Co.

Dispatch steamers from San Francisco for ports in Alaska 9 a.m. July 3, 13, 18, 28, August 2, 12, 27.

For British Columbia and Puget Sound Ports, July 3, 8, 13, 18, 23, 28 and every fifth day thereafter.

For Eureka, Humboldt Bay, S. S. Pomona, 2 p.m. July 5, 8, 12, 16, 20, 24, 28 and every fourth day thereafter.

For Newport, Los Angeles and Way Ports, 9 a.m. July 2, 6, 10, 14, 18, 22, 26, 30 and every fourth day thereafter.

For San Diego, stopping at Port Hartford, Santa Barbara, Port Los Angeles, Redondo -- Los Angeles -- and Newport, 11 a.m. July 5, 8, 12, 16, 20, 24, 28 and every fourth day thereafter.

For Ensenada, San Jose del Cabo, Mazatlan, La Paz, Altata and Guaymas, Mex., S.S. Orizaba, July 3 and 25th of each month thereafter.

Ticket Office: Palace Hotel, 4 New Montgomery St.

GOODALL, PERKINS & CO.
General Agents
No. 10 Market Street, San Francisco, Cal.

A. K. DAGGETT

Drawing of Deeds and all Legal Papers a specialty

NOTARY PUBLIC
14 Montgomery St., S. F.
Telephone 305

Coolgardie Gold Fields

FREMANTLE, AUSTRALIA
First Class $220 Steerage $110
Lowest Rates to CAPE TOWN

S. S. "Australia," Honolulu only, Saturday, Aug. 29, 1896, at 10 a.m.

S. S. "Monowai," via Honolulu and Auckland, Thursday, August 23, 1896 at 2 p.m.

Ticket Office 114 Montgomery St.
Freight Office 327 Market St.

J. D. SPRECKELS & BROS. CO., General Agents

The German Savings and Loan Society

526 California St., S. F.

Capital actually paid up in cash - - -	$1,000,000 00
Deposits December 31, 1895 - -	30,727,586 59
Reserve Fund - - - - - - -	750,000 00
Guaranteed Capital - - - - -	1,200,000 00

OFFICERS

President, B. A. BECKER
First Vice-President, EDWARD KRUSE
Second Vice-President, A. C. HEINEKER
Cashier, A. H. R. SCHMIDT
Assistant Cashier, WM. HERRMANN
Secretary, GEORGE TOURNY
Assistant Secretary, A. H. MULLER

DIRECTORS

B. A. Becker, Edward Kruse, A. C. Heineker,
O. Shoemann, H. Horstmann, Ign. Steinhart, Dan'l Meyer
Nic. Van Bergen, Emil Rohte
Attorney, W. S. Goodfellow

San Francisco Savings Union

532 CALIFORNIA ST

Deposits June 30, 1896 -	$23,657,219
Paid Up Capital and Surplus -	1,594,085

ALBERT MILLER, Pres. E. B. POND, Vice-Pres.
LOVELL WHITE, Cashier

DIRECTORS

GEORGE W. BEAVER ROBERT WATT
THOMAS MAGEE GEO. C. BOARDMAN
W. C. B. DE FREMERY DANIEL E. MARTIN
ALBERT MILLER PHILIP BARTH
E. B. POND

Loans upon San Francisco and Oakland Real Estate, and Farms and Farming Lands in the country.
No charge is made for pass book or entrance fee.

Mutual Savings Bank of San Francisco

33 Post Street, below Kearny, Mechanics' Institute Building

Guaranteed Capital, $1,000,000

JAS. D. PHELAN, Pres. GEO. A. STORY, Cashier
S. G. MURPHY, JOHN A. HOOPER, Vice-Pres.

DIRECTORS—Jas. D. Phelan, S. G. Murphy, John A. Hooper, James Moffitt, C. G. Hooker, Frank J. Sullivan, L. P. Drexler, Robt. McElroy, Jos. D. Grant.

Interest paid on term and ordinary deposits.
Loans on approved securities. Deposits may be sent by Postal Order, Wells, Fargo & Co., or Exchange on City Banks.
When opening accounts, send signature.

ROYAL EXCHANGE ASSURANCE

OF LONDON
Incorporated by Royal Charter A. D. 1726

Capital Paid Up, $3,416,100 Assets, $21,584,413
Surplus to Policy Holders, $8,980,251

ROBERT DICKSON, Manager
NATHAN & KINGSTON, San Francisco Agents
501 MONTGOMERY ST.

Aachen and Munich Fire Insurance Co.

of Aix La Chapelle, Germany
Capital, $2,250,000.00
Total Assets, $6,854,683.65

United States Department
204 Sansome Street

VOSS, CONRAD & CO., General Managers

When You Leave Town

place your valuables in the

SAFE DEPOSIT VAULTS
OF THE
FIRST NATIONAL BANK
CORNER OF BUSH AND SANSOME STREETS
Office Hours, 8 a. m. to 6 p. m.

BIDS

FOR

Concessions and Privileges in Yosemite Valley

OFFICE OF THE YOSEMITE COMMISSIONERS,
San Francisco, August 11, 1896.

In accordance with Rule XXXIV of the Rules and Regulations governing Yosemite Valley and Mariposa Big Tree Grove, adopted July 13, 1896, sealed bids are hereby invited for the for the following concessions and privileges in the Yosemite Grant for the year beginning November 1, 1896, and ending October 1, 1897, viz.:

First—For keeping a livery stable and conducting a general livery business in the Valley, and also for the rental of the Royal Arch Farm and Stables.

Second—For rental of stable and coach house on Georgia Avenue for stage headquarters.

Third—For rental of hotel, outbuildings and grounds at Glacier Point and privilege of conducting a hotel business at that point.

Fourth—For rental of store building and privilege of conducting a general merchandise business in the Valley.

Bids must be presented to the Secretary on or before

Monday, October 12, 1896

at 12 o'clock M., at office of Commissioners, San Francisco.

Bids must be accompanied by sufficient guarantee that contract shall be carried out by bidders to the satisfaction of the Commissioners. The Commissioners reserve the right to reject any and all bids.

JOHN F. SHEEHAN,
Secretary and Treasurer,
Room 25, Tenth Floor, Mills Building, S. F.

NOTICE TO CREDITORS

ESTATE OF OSCAR J. PETERSON, DECEASED

Notice is hereby given by the undersigned, A. C. Freese, Administrator of the Estate of Oscar J. Peterson, deceased, to the creditors of and all persons having claims against the said deceased, to exhibit them with the necessary vouchers, within four months after the first publication of this notice, to the said Administrator, at room 35, Chronicle Building, the same being his place for the transaction of the business of the said estate in the City and County of San Francisco, State of Califofnia.

A. C. FREESE,
Adm'r of the Estate of Oscar Peterson, deceased.

J. D. SULLIVAN, Attorney for the Administrator.
Dated at San Francisco, August 12, 1896.

NOTICE OF ASSESSMENT. — BULLION Mining Company. Location of principal place of business, San Francisco, California. Location of works, Virginia Mining District, Storey County, Nevada.

Notice is hereby given that at a meeting of the Board of Directors, held on the 14th day of August, 1896, an assessment (No. 12) of ten cents per share was levied upon the capital stock of the Corporation, payable immediately in United States gold coin to the Secretary, at the office of the Company, room 20, 331 Pine street, San Francisco, California.

Any stock upon which this assessment shall remain unpaid on the 15th day of September, 1896, will be delinquent and advertised for sale at public auction, and unless payment is made before, will be sold on THURSDAY, the 8th day of October, 1896, to pay the delinquent assessment, together with the costs of advertising and expenses of sale.

By order of the Board of Directors.
R. R. GRAYSON, Secretary.
Office—Room 20, No. 331 Pine street, San Francisco, California.

HIRSCH-KAHN & Co.

MANUFACTURING OPTICIANS
IMPORTERS OF OPTICAL GOODS
PHOTOGRAPHIC APPARATUS & SUPPLIES ETC.
333 KEARNY STREET
SAN FRANCISCO CAL.

BAJA CALIFORNIA

DAMIANA BITTERS

"Damiana" is a powerful aphrodisiac and special tonic for the sexual and urinary organs of both sexes and a great remedy for diseases of the kidneys and bladder. For weak nerves these bitters are invaluable, and leading physicians recommend them as the greatest invigorator known. Long-winded testimonials are not necessary. "Damiana" Bitters are known on their merits. (Send for Circular.)

NABER, ALFS & BRUNE, Agents
323-325 Market St., S. F.

BONESTELL & CO.

Dealers in PAPER

Fine Coated Papers a Specialty

401-403 SANSOME ST.,
San Francisco, Cal.

THE PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU

510 MONTGOMERY ST., S. F.,

Reads all papers on the Pacific Coast, and supplies clippings on all topics, business and personal.

Pacific Towel Co.

Telephone 1780 No. 9 Lick Place, San Francisco

GEO. E. MOORE, Proprietor

RENTS BALDWIN & HAMMOND

COLLECTED AND INSURED

10 Montgomery St.

COTTON SAIL DUCKS
22-inch, in all numbers. Medium, Soft and Hard
ALSO
Heavy Naught, Wagon and Draper Ducks
From 30 to 120 inches wide
Monumental and Imperial Ounce Ducks
Manufactured by Mount Vernon Company Baltimore
Murphy, Grant & Co. Pacific Coast Sole Agents

It Makes the Hair Grow
Canadian Vegetable Tonic
MRS. E. E. MCLEAN, Physician for the Hair
Hours: 10 to 12, 1 to 6
St. Ann's Building, San Francisco

Marshall F. Jones
Merchant Tailor
Room 15, Phelan Building
SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.

GEO. GOODMAN
Patentee and Manufacturer of—Artificial Stone
Schillinger's Patent In all its branches
SIDE WALK and GARDEN WALK A Specialty
Office, 307 MONTGOMERY ST. Nevada Block, SAN FRANCISCO

Ask your Blacksmith to shoe your horse with
PHŒNIX HORSE SHOES
GIVE THEM A TRIAL

H. S. BRIDGE & CO.
Merchant Tailors
Many Novelties in Imported Wear. Shirts to Order a Specialty.
622 Market Street, San Francisco
(Up Stairs, Opposite Palace Hotel)

Brushes For barbers, bakers, bootblacks, bathhouses, billiard tables, brewers, bookbinders, candymakers, canners, dyers, flour mills, foundries, laundries, paperhangers, printers, painters, soap factories, stablemen, tar roofers, tanners, tailors, etc.
BUCHANAN BROS.
TEL. 5610 609 SACRAMENTO ST
BRUSH MANUFACTURERS

S. F. CARPET BEATING AND RENOVATING WORKS
D. MACKINTOSH & CO.
Successors to S. S. Ferguson & Co.
Renovating, Laying and Refitting Carpets a Specialty
Telephone South 36 23 and 25 10th St., S. F.

BAY STATE OYSTER HOUSE AND GRILL ROOM
15 Stockton Street
Oysters served in all styles. Orders for Theatre Parties given special attention M. M. ADLER, Prop

SCOTT & McCORD
HAY AND GRAIN MERCHANTS
OFFICE, 615 SIXTH ST.

STAGE STORIES

Frank Mayo gives an amusing account of the trouble that arose between him and Junius Brutus Booth in the play of "Pizarro." The supers were to shout with great vigor when the cue, "No such change," was given. The sentence read, "Tell them we ask no such change, at least no such change as they can give us," but unfortunately Mayo did not understand that the phrase occurred twice. Being ambitious of success and quite unaware of being ahead of time, he set up a wild hurrah as Rolla delivered the word "change." This lonely cheer set the rest of the supers and the audience in a roar. The curtain was lowered and Booth booted the aspiring youth all the way from the prompt box to the back door for having spoiled his scene. Soon after a friend, Ben Baker, came out to sympathize with Mayo, who sat disconsolately outside the stage door. Baker informed him that Booth declared he would leave the company if Mayo did not. The unfortunate then regained his spirits, saying it was funny there should be a matter of choice between the leading man and a super.

* * *

Richard Mansfield has been trying to introduce a rule into the theaters where he plays to prevent people from coming in and taking their seats while he is speaking—or, indeed, while he is on the stage at all. "Not a soul shall disturb me. Make no distinction. Even if it be President Cleveland, have him wait until I have finished," he commanded the usher. The following evening Mansfield was giving an imitation of a cello and the auditors were unusually quiet. Presently an usher came tramping down to the second row and handed a coupon to a stout man, who made so much noise that the actor was barely able to hear himself. When he came off the stage the usher was summoned to the star's dressing room and words flew thick and fast, so the story goes. "But," said the usher, "you told——" "No excuse," broke in Mr. Mansfield, and he went on talking. "But you only mentioned such men as President Cleveland." "Well, who was this fellow?" "A deputy sheriff." "Ah, that's different. Go out and give the gentleman a box."

* * *

It is said that Irving and Dixey are not the best of friends, thanks to the comedian's outrageously funny burlesque of the tragedian's Hamlet in "Adonis." As Dixey puts it, "Irving wouldn't wait three hours at a depot to see me, you know." Being placed next to each other at a dinner in London, they made the best of it, and talked with all outward friendliness on every topic but the stage for a couple of hours. As they rose at the end, Mr. Irving turned with a look of courteous inquiry. "Ah, Mr. Dixey," he said in his hollow-chested, far-reaching tones, "do let me ask you—are you an actor?"

* * *

A most atrocious painting of "Summer" was presented to the Lamb's Club, and was temporarily hung in one of the rooms, the members not knowing how to refuse it. The subject was even more unfortunate than the execution, considering that it must always remind the members of the detested season when engagements are scarce and salaries suspended. Barrymore dropped in a day or so later, and the picture at once caught his eye. He examined it dejectedly. "Well, anyway," he volunteered after a pause, "Summer isn't so bad as she is painted."

* * *

Maurice Barrymore's reputation for repartee is almost as great as his fame as an actor. Once when he was acting with Mrs. Langtry, the Jersey Lily saw fit to resent the marked applause he was winning, and violently attacked his conduct as a gentleman. "Did you never meet a lady?" she demanded at the end of her tirade. "Two, madam; I was born and am married," said Barrymore courteously as he passed on.

* * *

Henry Hamilton was dozing in a corner of the Green Room Club in London one day when Charles Wyndham, who was then playing the title role in "David Garrick," strode into the room and flung himself complacently into the Garrick chair. "Ah, I feel more and more like Garrick every day," he exclaimed. Hamilton looked up with a yawn. "Yes," he said coolly, "and you act less and less like him every night."

* * *

It was Beerbohm Tree's first attempt at Hamlet, and the house was showing marked approval. As the tragedy neared its climax, W. S. Gilbert came behind the scenes, and found the Prince of Denmark in his dressing room. "How is it going?" asked the actor breathlessly. "Splendidly, my dear boy, splendidly," answered Gilbert. "So funny without being a bit vulgar."

A SAVING OF ONE-HALF
Baggage transferred to trains or steamers and return. Trunks, 50c each for the round trip. Morton Special Delivery, 650 Market street and 408 Taylor street.

DR. H. G. YOUNG—Bridges and teeth without plates a specialty. 1841 Polk street.

Among the many great Financial Corporations on the Pacific Coast, none rank higher than the
FIREMAN'S FUND INSURANCE CO.
Its Agents are found throughout America, and its Record for Prompt and Equitable Settlement of All Honest Losses is Firmly Established
D. J. STAPLES, President WM. J. DUTTON, Vice-President E. FAYMONVILLE, 2d V.-Pres., Sec'y
J. B. LEVISON, Marine Sec'y LOUIS WEINMANN, Asst. Sec'y STEPHEN D. IVES, General Agent

SEA BEACH HOTEL SANTA CRUZ CAL.
August and September
For these two most delightful months by the seashore SPECIAL RATES WILL BE GIVEN, ranging from $10 to $17.50 per week. New management! Excellent table. For further information, address
JOHN R. CHACE, Prop.

The Club Hotel
5 Bund, Yokohama
Hotel Metropole
1 Tsukiji, Tokyo
First-class Hotels, centrally situated, well furnished. ENTIRE FOREIGN MANAGEMENT. Experienced English Matron in attendance. Excellent table under the superintendence of qualified foreign Chef.
The Hotel steam-launch attends steamers arriving and departing. Passengers are met at the Railway Station. Visitors have the option of messing either in Tokyo or Yokohama, without extra charge—The only Hotels offering such an advantage. Certified Guides are in attendance at both Hotels. European Hair-Dresser on the premises.
THE CLUB HOTEL COMPANY, Limited, Proprietors
E. C. SIOEN, Manager YOKOHAMA
E. DEWETTE, Manager TOKYO

THE GRILL ROOM SERVICE
—OF THE—
PALACE HOTEL
Has been extended to what was formerly the City Restaurant. This immense room, which has a direct entrance from Market Street is known as - - - - -
"THE LADIES' GRILL ROOM"
NEW DEPARTURE—CHARACTERIZED BY PROMPT SERVICE—MODERATE CHARGES

Drown your Malaria
in Byron's wonderful curative waters. These seven famous mineral springs and baths have cured many of the very worst cases. As a sanitarium, Byron leads California. Write for particulars.
Byron Hot Springs
Contra Costa Co., Cal.

THE LICK HOUSE
Occupies the block bounded by Montgomery, Post and Sutter Streets
IT IS——
——scrupulously clean;
——accessible to all street car lines and places of amusement;
——conveniently situated for business men;
——a quiet, model place for a family to spend the winter;
——moderate in price, yet first-class in every particular.
AMERICAN OR EUROPEAN PLAN
K. B. SOULÉ, Manager

CRESTA BLANCA WINES
AWARDED THREE HIGHEST AWARDS AT
THE ATLANTA EXPOSITION
OF SIX MEDALS AWARDED TO CALIFORNIA
Cresta Blanca Wines
OBTAINED THREE
WETMORE-BOWEN CO.
140 Montgomery Street
Under Occidental Hotel

For those who appreciate Comfort and Attention
A QUIET HOME CENTRALLY LOCATED
OCCIDENTAL HOTEL
SAN FRANCISCO
WM. B. HOOPER, MANAGER

REMOVAL
Rountrees English Chocolate, Kohlers Swiss Chocolates, and all brands of Foreign and Eastern Confectionery, imported by . . . .
W. L. GREENBAUM,
of 205 SUTTER ST., will, after December 1st, be found in large and commodious quarters at
128 POST ST., Bohemian Club Bldg.

This Paper not to be taken from the Library.
CALIFORNIA STATE LIBRARY

THE WAVE

VOL XV. No. 35 SAN FRANCISCO, AUGUST 29, 1896 PRICE 10 CTS.

ON THE PIAZZA AT DEL MONTE

THE WAVE

Is published every Saturday, at THE WAVE Building, No. 24 Montgomery Street, San Francisco.

Subscription, $3.00 per year, $1.50 six months, 75 cts. three months. Foreign subscriptions—countries in postal union—$5 per year. Sample copies free on application. The trade is supplied by the San Francisco News Co., 210 Post Street; east of the Rocky Mountains by the American News Co., New York.

THE WAVE is kept on file and is for sale at Brentano's, 17 Avenue de l'Opera, Paris, France; 31 Union Square, New York City; 1015 Pennsylvania Avenue, Washington, D. C.; and 206 Wabash Avenue, Chicago.

Advertising rates and all other matters pertaining to the business of the paper, address THE WAVE, 24 Montgomery Street. Eastern Agent, E. Katz, 230-235 Temple Court, New York.

HARRISON M. PARKER, Business Manager

Entered at the San Francisco Post Office as second-class matter

THE WAVE PUBLISHING COMPANY

SAN FRANCISCO, AUGUST 29, 1896

CONTENTS

Editorials	2-3	About Personages	9
Bohemia in the Redwoods	4-5	Things and People	10
Earl Li Hung Chang	5	The Theatres; by Peg Woffington	11
Society at Monterey	6-7	Musical Snapshots; by H. R. Haweis	12
Frederick Yates	8	A Note From Newport; by Sally Andrews	13
Reminiscences of Huxley	8	Late Verse	13
Premonition; a Poem by Lucius Harwood Foote	8	Her Point of View	14
An Interview with Madame Sans Gene	9	Stories of the Day	16

In devoting the larger part of our editorial space to the discussion of the silver question "The Wave" is departing from its customary rule that demands the treatment of a broad variety of subjects. All of the great dailies and weeklies of the East are confining their editorial discussions almost solely to this question. We are conscious of the deep gravity of the situation. Before the possibility of an era of free silver all other questions pale to insignificance. Our pen will be persistently directed toward spreading the truth of this question until election day. We are persuaded that our work has not been fruitless. Copies of "The Wave" series of financial articles may be had on application to our business office.

BRYAN'S PRO-CHINESE RECORD.

Mr. Bryan favors Chinese immigration. His record in Congress demonstrates that he was opposed to the Geary Law, and that he filed a petition requesting Congress to repeal that measure. The petitition which he presented may be found in another column. It opposed the Geary Law on the ground that by its provisions Chinese citizens would not receive the same treatment as was accorded to the most favored nation; and it opposed the provisions requiring registration and the taking out of certificates by the Chinese, on the ground that such a measure would put the Chinese to too much inconvenience. Had the doctrines and policies represented by that petition prevailed in Congress, our doors would have been thrown wide open to the Mongolian horde that so long threatened to overrun our State.

We desire to be perfectly fair to Mr. Bryan. His friends, in answering the charge we make to-day, will reply that the petition was introduced by request, and that he was not its author and had no sympathy with it. Mr. Bryan's practices give the lie to this defense. Let us examine Mr. Bryan's record and ascertain the facts. It was his custom upon introducing petitions to append to them, where he did not approve, a statement setting forth the fact that the petition was introduced by request, and that he neither affirmed nor denied the facts therein contained. At page 6253 of the Congressional Record of June 13th, 1894, Mr. Bryan introduced a petition in favor of the Chinese. Later he introduced another petition demanding an investigation of the office of Attorney-General Olney. On Thursday, August 9th, 1894, as appears on page 8334 of the Congressional Record, he arose from his seat in the House to state that he had appended to the petition in reference to an investigation of General Olney's office the statement that it was "introduced by request, and that he, having no knowledge of the facts upon which the petition was based expressed no opinion as to its merits, but presented it because he believed in the sacredness of the right of petition." He was very careful not to commit himself on this point, but he did not take this precaution with his Chinese petition. If Mr. Bryan did not favor Chinese immigration, and did not intend to express any opinion as to the merits of the petition in favor of the Chinese, then, as was his custom and as has been his practice, he should also have appended to that petition a statement that he "had no knowledge of the facts upon which it was based, and expressed no opinion as to its merits." That he was a careful legislator is shown by the fact that he arose and corrected the "Record" in reference to the Olney investigation, and desired it to be understood that he expressed no opinion as to the merits of the petition. By endorsing the Chinese petition without attaching his customary disapproval, he gave to it the sanction of his name, and his support as a Congressman. Does anyone for a moment suppose that Mr. Bryan, however much he regarded the sacredness of the right of petition, would have introduced a similar petition antagonistic to the interests of the silver mine-owner? Certainly not. He was willing, however, to introduce a petition in favor of the Chinese and against Americans. He would have requested the author of an anti-silver petition to go elsewhere for a Congressional sponsor. He would not even have introduced an anti-silver petition with his disapproval attached. It will require some argument on the part of the supporters of Mr. Bryan to demonstrate that this act on his part was not an evidence of his great friendliness for the Chinese. We submit the petition to the people of California, and ask them how they can endorse the candidacy of such a man. Will the "Examiner" explain how it can support for the presidency of the United States a man who could present such a petition to our national lawmakers?

CALIFORNIA'S ANOMALOUS ATTITUDE.

Folly is rapidly giving way to Reason, and there is, we are thankful to say, a marked improvement in the condition of the public mind on the financial question. It is one thing to noisily advocate a public policy, and it is quite another thing to cite substantial reasons to vindicate or justify your partisanship. Interrogate the professional silver man, demand facts, figures and arguments to sustain his theories, and you will be astounded at the multitude of words he will employ to clothe the few slim, forlorn and impoverished "becauses" that constitute the basis of his financial creed. Thoughtful men, who were captivated by the delusive catch-cries of silver, and were won over by the almost irresistable enthusiasm which marked the early progress of that mischievous movement, have encountered difficulty in "explaining"; and in searching for the wherefore, have come to realize the absurdity, not to say actual danger, of the situation. It is one of the encouraging signs of the times that such men are frankly admitting their error and conversion to the more conservative side. Fresh converts to free silver there are none, and it is safe to say that if the State were combed with a fine-tooth comb not a half-dozen recent proselytes to Bryanism would be found.

This week we devote ourselves to the discussion of a phase of the financial problem which is of grave importance to California, for it peculiarly involves our own particular welfare, not only as individuals, but as a commonwealth. The attitude of this State on the silver question, as expressed in the several political conventions, is one of the most astounding and inexplicable features of the present campaign. Our material interests are beyond question diametrically opposed to free coinage. Even though the East were committed to the cause of free and unlimited coinage of silver, we of all others should be unalterably and vigorously opposed to the perpetration of that ruinous financial freak. The blow that free silver would strike at America would fall with exceptional and most disastrous force upon us of the West. Our welfare and our prosperity are more deeply involved in this financial muddle than that of any other American State. Our situation is totally dissimiliar to that of the East, and is pregnant with the mosts disquieting features. To a man who has given the financial question any thought and study, a mere statement of the facts will decide the issue. But, following the suggestion of our first correspondent on the financial question, who requested us to give the a-b-c of the situation, let us together examine it and reason it out for ourselves.

If there is any one thing fixed and established in the laws of finance, it is the impossibility of floating concurrently two coins of unequal value. The debased and cheap money inevitably drives the dearer money out of general circulation. This is called the Gresham Law of Finance, and it is a law which, in the entire history of the world, has never failed to operate. Ever since the dawn of civilization it has been recognized. As far back as the year 1366, in the time of Charles V. of France, it was conceded as one of the fundamental principles of finance. Its operations are as sure as its effects are disastrous. Mexico, China, Japan and every other silver nation of the world, stripped of their gold, testify to the complete and certain operation of this law. We defy anyone to cite an instance in the history of the world where this law has failed to intrude itself upon the hapless nation that fell within its purview. Perhaps we can bring the force of this law closer to the reader by a homely illustration which involves, in a measure, the underlying principle, and will bring the argument closer home. What would our reader do himself? Suppose we had free coinage; our silver dollar would manifestly contain less intrinsic value than a gold dollar. We would have a silver dollar worth less than 100 cents, and a gold dollar worth a full 100 cents. Would our silver friend pay out his 100-cent gold dollar for an article which he could purchase with his 53-cent silver dollar? Or would he take it out of circulation, and only part with it at a premium.

The trouble with this silver question is that the Government is going to declare 20 silver dollars to be equal to 20 gold dollars, without giving to the silver dollars any support, or any backing, or any sustaining governmental credit, as it now does. Therefore, our gold will disappear from circulation under the Gresham law, and silver monometallism will result. This is an inexorable and primary law of finance, the operation of which cannot be avoided, postponed or mitigated. Indeed, the mere threat of Bryanism has already been sufficient to set that law in motion, as our crowded safe deposit vaults will testify. Silver men are answering this most serious fault of their system by saying, "Oh, gold is going to Europe, anyhow, as fast as it can. It won't matter if it does go; we will have silver to take its place." The man who makes this reply deserves a harder name than we are willing to apply to him in print. If gold is now going to Europe, it is likewise returning in exchange for our commodities. Under Bryanism it will not return, for the foreign purchasers of our commodities will pay us in our own depreciated silver coin, which Mr. Bryan proposes to cram down our throats for 100 cents, whether we want it or not. Now, may we ask the farmer with a mortgage, and every other creditor for that matter, how and where he proposes to secure the gold to pay his indebtedness. It will not come to him in the ordinary course of business, as it does to-day. Every man who has a debt or obligation unfettered by the gold clause will liquidate that debt in silver; while a man with a contract debt, payable in gold, must liquidate that debt with a money which will then be out of general circulation.

For years it has been the practice in California, and in all the Pacific Coast States, for that matter, to make our obligations payable in "gold coin of the United States." All our notes, all our mortgages and all our money obligations call specifically for payment in "gold coin." Some of the more carefully drawn documents make the debt payable in "gold coin of the United States of the present standard of weight and fineness." We of the West have been jealous of our rights in this respect, and have taken care to protect ourselves against any tampering with the coin of the Nation. This policy has never obtained in the East. It has been the practice there to require payment only in "legal tender money." The Eastern debtor, therefore, whose obligations call for no specific character of money, may, if he desires to repudiate one-half his debt, find some excuse for advocating a 53-cent dollar. No such opportunity is offered here. If we of the West desired to engage in the shady practice of liquidating our debts in a depreciated money we could only do so by advocating a change in the weight and fineness of our gold pieces,—and even this piece of legislative robbery would not avail where a contract called for "gold coin of the United States of the present standard of weight and fineness." The man of the Pacific Coast who believes that Bryanism will offer him an opportunity to defraud his creditor by liquidating his indebtedness with a cheaper dollar than the dollar of his contract, is hugging a delusion that must result in his own undoing. The situation is very simple, but it is very threatening as well. The counties of the State of California are burdened with an indebtedness of over five and one-half millions of dollars, every penny of which is payable in gold coin. By the census returns of 1890, there were in California 111,637 individual mortgages, aggregating $241,050,181. In Oregon there were 22,533 individual mortgages, aggregating $22,928,437; and in Washington there were 29,632 individual mortgages, netting $44,078,449, all payable in gold coin. There is no legal tender clause in our obligations to pay, around which a dishonest creditor may sneak. We are forced to face the music, and now we would like to ask our silver friends where the gold money to liquidate these mortgages is to come from.

Mr. Harvey, the great advocate of silver, faithfully pictures the condition of the California debtor, in his little book called "Coin's Financial School." He is speaking of the South American republics, and the same illustration will aptly apply to our own condition if Bryanism succeeds. He says:

"So that a bond of $100,000 executed when silver and gold were at a parity, payable in gold, must now be met by the payment in principle of $200,000 in their money. That is, to raise $100,000 in gold, they must sell 200,000 of their silver dollars."

This is precisely what the California debtor must do. A $1,000 gold indebtedness becomes a $2,000 silver indebtedness. A county indebtedness of $5,500,000 becomes $11,000,000; a State debt of $2,500,000 becomes $5,000,000; and the individual mortgage debts of the State grow from $241,050,181 to $482,100,362. So even the values of mortgages "go up" under Mr. Bryan's beautiful scheme of finance. It is but fair, however, to let Mr. Bryan answer this question for himself. He does try to answer it, but the hope he holds out only accentuates our fear. If any man who has a gold debt can take any satisfaction out of Mr. Bryan's explanation, we would like to hear from him. He says:

"We are told that the restoration of bimetallism would be a hardship upon those who have entered into contracts payable in gold coin. But this is a mistake. It will be easier to obtain gold with which to meet a gold contract when most of the people can use silver than it is now when everyone is trying to secure gold."

This is not the condition painted by Mr. Harvey as existing in the South American republics. It is not the condition that exists in any silver country of the world. It is an empty, thoughtless and meaningless defense of an indefensible position. Let the man with an outstanding gold obligation discover if he can a word of hope in this alleged answer. In the next breath, in the very same paragraph, Mr. Bryan contradicts himself completely. He says, with some show of triumph, and as though to relieve the inward oppression he must feel, that the Chicago platform declares in favor of such legislation as will prevent the making of gold contracts in the future.

Then, if Mr. Bryan is to be taken seriously, he proposes to deny to the people the privilege of making contracts in gold money which "it will be easier to obtain when all the people can use silver." Why should the Chicago platform deny to us the right to make a gold contract if money in that metal is to be so easily obtained? It is sheer unadulterated nonsense. It is not the kind of argument to be addressed to the desperate man who has staring him in the face a multiplication of his troubles and a doubling of his debt. The situation is too serious for him to accept such a thin and gauzy explanation. It is a matter of profound regret that no better, more plausible, or more hopeful, answer to this most unfortunate condition exists. There is no answer to it. If this one phase of the financial question was thoroughly understood by the voters of California and of the Pacific Coast States, Bryan would be buried so deep beneath their protesting votes that he would never again dare raise his head above the level of his most ordinary followers.

THE BANKER'S POSITION.

The friends of silver seem to consider it an unanswerable argument in favor of free coinage to declare that the bankers are against that financial policy. It is an argument, too, that seems to carry some weight with a certain class of minds; for the advocates of silver have of late sedulouslycultivated the idea, and bred an impression that bankers are the common enemy of all humanity. One interior editor, who is also the autocrat of the water front, has even gone to the pains of preparing a lengthy and labored article by which he attempts to prove that "bankers don't know anything about finance, anyhow." Of course, arguments and charges of this sort are of the cheapest character, and are hardly worthy of attention, but it seems as though something ought to be said in favor of these men who have come now particularly under the ban of sensational journalism. If the bankers oppose free coinage it is reasonable to suppose they do so because they believe financial disaster and hard times would follow such a policy. A banker can only prosper in a prosperous community. Hard times don't benefit him in the least. It is stupid to say that our bankers are interested in creating financial troubles, when nothing is so necessary to their life and prosperity as the prosperity of their environment. No one sets up a banking institution in a morass or a desert. In selecting a field for his operations, the banker must inquire cautiously into the prosperity of a community before he casts his fortunes there or establishes his concern. One must admit there are but few broad men in the banking business, for it is an occupation which rather runs to details; but we must also admit that there are quite as few broad men in other lines of business. When the question of finance arises, however, and the solution of that question simmers down to an acceptance of the doctrines of Mary Lease, or the views of bankers Jones and Smith, a sensible man will be inclined to give more weight to the opinion of the man of money. The truth is, the bankers are in the same boat with the ordinary citizens. They are exposed to the same dangers, subject to the same assaults, and must suffer from the same things that visit troubles upon the community wherein their business is transacted. If the number of heavenward pointing spires of the Christian Church are an index to the morality of a community, so is the number of banking institutions in a community an index to its prosperity and enterprise. As prosperity grows, banks increase; and as enterprise fails, they diminish.

BRYAN FAVORS CHINESE IMMIGRATION

HE FILES A PETITION IN CONGRESS FOR THE REPEAL OF THE GEARY LAW.

SOMETHING FOR THE WORKINGMEN TO PONDER OVER BEFORE VOTING FOR THE DEMOCRATIC CANDIDATE.

[Petition against Chinese restriction bill, introduced by Mr. Bryan June 13, 1894 (page 6253, Congressional Record.)]

To the Senate and House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

The Northwest Nebraska Annual Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, assembled at Alliance, Nebraska, on the 27th day of September, 1893, composed of twenty members, representing eighteen hundred and ninety church members, respectfully petition your Honorable Body to immediately repeal the Act passed on the 5th day of May, 1892, known as the Geary Law.

We make this earnest petition, first, on the ground of justice and fair dealing. By solemn treaty agreement the Chinese now in the United States are entitled to the same treatment as is accorded to the citizen or subjects of the most favored nation. The provision that they shall register and take out certificates to assure their continual residence here, producing the testimony of a white witness to their right to be here, requires of multitudes of them an impossibility, and yet subjects them to imprisonment and deportation if they fail to comply with the requisition. This requirement made of them alone, in contradistinction to all other foreigners in the country, is a palpable violation of the treaty.

We furthermore petition for the repeal of this law because it endangers our interests in China The Methodist Episcopal Church has one hundred and twenty-four missionaries in the Empire. It has churches, chapels, dwellings, school-buildings, hospitals, printing presses and other property to the amount of over $400,000. We have reason to fear that if the provisions of this law are insisted upon, our missionaries and property will be imperiled. The Christian sentiment of the country is opposed to this enactment, and we urgently beseech its immediate repeal.

Signed by order and on behalf of the Conference.

JOHN M. WALDEN,
President.

CHARLES H. BURLEIGH,
Secretary.

DR. ARENDT AND SILVER.

The June number of the "North American Review" contained a very thoughtful and interesting article on the silver question from the pen of Dr. Otto Arendt, the German bimetallist. In support of our own position in the present campaign we have before now quoted quite freely from what Dr. Arendt had to say. That gentleman then gave voice to some very pronounced views upon the folly of the United States attempting to serve silver by adopting bimetallism independent of European cooperation. He declared in language emphatic and convincing that such a proceeding on our part would be calculated not to force Europe to our views, but to perpetuate forever the gold standard in those countries. He also averred that, while free coinage on our part would cause silver to rise, it would not reach $1.29 per ounce, and the rise, whatever it might be, would not be permanent. He warned us that if we should attempt a course so foolish, our gold monometallism would be replaced by silver monometallism and our standard would not differ materially from that of Mexico with the disadvantages of a fluctuating and depreciating currency. He was very decided in the expression of his views, and urged us, if we would serve silver intelligently and preserve our own financial respect, to forsake every thought of free coinage until international bimetallism had been obtained. Since this article was written, the Republican party has declared strongly in favor of the very thing that Dr. Arendt advocated, and the Democratic party has declared with equal fervor against Dr. Arendt, adopting the very policy which he then so strongly condemned. One would naturally suppose the Doctor would favor the party that favored his views, but by some hocus-pocus he has been procured to write another article advocating the cause of Bryan. The excuse he offers to the American people for this more recent utterance is pitiable in the extreme. He states that at the time of writing his former article he took it for granted both parties would favor silver in their platforms, though not to the extent of free coinage. And now that one of the parties has favored silver to the extent of free coinage, which he declares would be fatal to us, he finds excuse for changing his views and espousing the cause which last June he declared would work our utter ruin. Some one ought to explain the Doctor's position. He stands discredited before the American people. The Republican party could not do better than to publish both of his articles side by side, for nothing could more clearly show the methods pursued by the silver mine owners to bolster up their unhappy cause.

It was a pretty bit of sentiment that moved the students at Yale to plant at the foot of the Woolsey memorial a slip of ivy taken from the tomb of General Robert E Lee; it was a reprehensible bit of sectional prejudice that led to its tearing down.

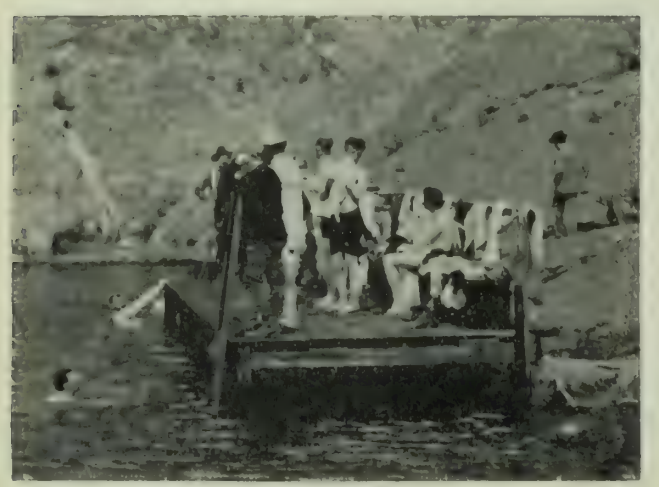
President Woolsey stood for a strong government and a united people. He was an authority on international law, and was recognized the world over as a specialist on the historical growth of nations. To him the secession of the Southern States, if accomplished, meant the destruction of the American nation, the overthrow of a government that gave promise of leading all governments in liberality as well as in power, and the postponement for an indefinite period of the triumph of the Anglo-Saxon race in the Western hemisphere. No man was stronger in the conviction that the Confederate States were wrong, and no man was more glad when they met defeat; yet he always regarded them as erring brothers, not as enemies, and in his old age spoke with eloquence and pathos of the reunion of the States which made certain that in North America we were to see the greatest nation and the highest civilization of the world's history.

Toward General Lee the North has never felt, even in the fierce days of the war and the black days of reconstruction, anything of that bitterness which was felt toward many of the Southern leaders. He was given credit for pure motive, and it was known that he left the Union to join the Confederacy in sorrow; he sacrificed associations of a lifetime, and on resigning from our army to follow his State he announced that he did so with the deepest regret, and only because he felt that it was his duty. No act by General Grant carried more hearty sympathy in the Northern heart than his refusal to accept General Lee's sword under the apple-tree at Appomattox. After the fierce strife of the war, Lee stepped into the Presidency of the Virginia University, and there rested until his death.

It was most appropriate, therefore, that at the foot of the memorial to the Northern patriot and University President there should be planted a sprig of green from the tomb of the Southern patriot and University President. If the North is to regard the South as of the Union, as loyal as itself, as earnest in its purpose to upbuild the national cause, it is important that in their youngest day the boys of the North should be made to feel that it is no dishonor to link the names of Northern and Southern statesmen. This was the meaning of the Yale incident, and that a Yale man could be so blind to its significance, so unpatriotic, and so unjust as to speak as did the Reverend Joseph Twytchell at the dedicatory exercises, can hardly be believed. Dr. Twytchell is reported to have said that if President Woolsey knew the graduating class of Yale were planting ivy from the grave of General Lee at the foot of his statue, "this bronze statue would avert its head." Rather may it be said of Woolsey, that if his soul were within this bronze masque his head would have bowed in approval of the sentiment which prompted the act, in appreciation of the students who had done it, and in acknowledgment of the honor.

A Japanese Tea Garden

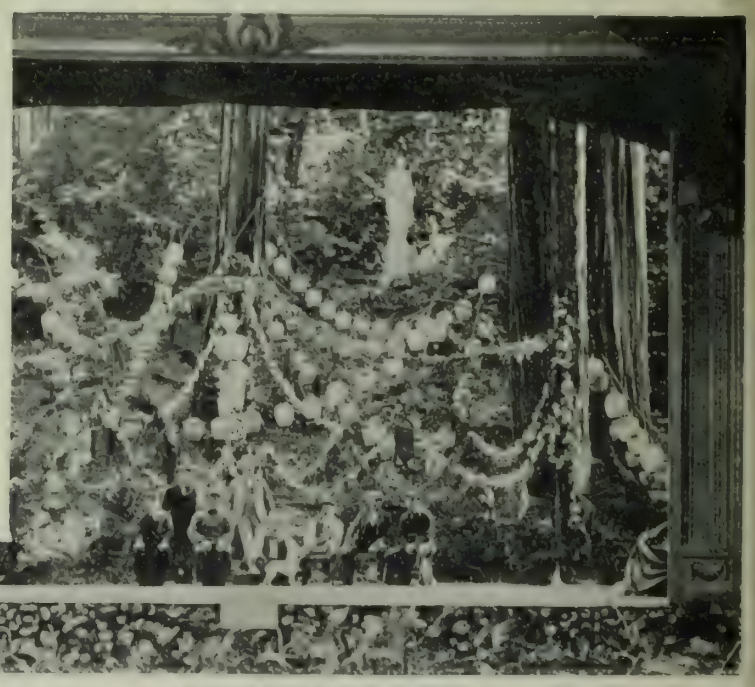
The Amphitheatre



A Morning Dip

Scene of the High Jinks

"Uncle George's" Headquarters



Scene of the Low Jinks

Entrance to the Grove

Onion Soup Breakfast

A MIDSUMMER HIGH JINKS

THE BOHEMIAN CLUB'S SUMMER CELEBRATION AT MEEKER'S GROVE

Photos by Jensen

BOHEMIA IN THE REDWOODS

A Veracious History of the Midsummer High Jinks.

There be Lambs' Clubs and Savage Clubs, Gridiron and Clover Clubs, but there is only one Midsummer High Jinks. The chief function of the Bohemian year is celebrated in the redwoods and is unique of its kind. As there are no redwoods elsewhere in America, nor in Europe for that matter, the entertainment has originality of environment to begin with. Background we all admit is a substantial consideration, but the Jinks has better characteristics than mise en scene. It is a midsummer moonlight picnic, and it expresses the joy of the true bohemian in the life of the open; expresses his sense of the beauty and glory of the woods; the freedom of the forest. He is supposed to hearken back to ancient conditions, to revive memories of olden days when his prototypes knew not the shelter of roof-tree, and the leaves and branches of the trees were their thatch. There are also remembrances of primitive worship in this midsummer commemroation, of the feasts of the great god Pan, of the worship of Ceres and countless other memories of centuries dark in the days before Columbus discovered the West Indies or Pizarro crossed Darien and confronted the Pacific.

A Midsummer High Jinks is an important ceremonial and more elaborate than the world at large or that section of it which has no relations in Bohemia, imagines. The Sires on whom devolves the preparation of a fitting entertainment are chosen months in advance of the important day. They plan and consult with their friends and persuade to their assistance the talent of the institution, the singers, story tellers and musicians; the actors, authors, dilittantes who form the backbone of Bohemia. This year Mr. Al Gerberding had the High Jinks and Mr. Hellman organized the Low Jinks, for in Bohemia the latter function, which is comedy, always follows the former, which is strictly serious and high class, calling forth thought and grave comment on some topic of the day, or upon the subject of the ceremonial. The scene of these midsummer gatherings is a redwood forest on Russian river, called Meeker's Grove. Situated some eight miles from Gurneville, it is off the main line of travel, and is reached by a spur track connected with a mill which is gradually converting these primeval giants into the lumber of commerce. Such magnificent trees, these redwoods, thrusting bare, stalwart, brown trunks high into the heavens. Their lofty summits are hung with branches which sprout spasmodically, spreading broad feathers of dark green foliage through which the sunlight slants in narrow beams and arrows, making inimitable effects of light and shade amid their dark aisles.

It is customary now for the best Bohemians, those who have time and inclination, to spend two weeks camping in the redwoods prior to the Jinks. On Saturday, the 8th of August, some fifteen members, accoutered with the paraphernalia of tent life, accompanied by servants and a cook together with all those accessories of linen and china and fruit and flowers and wine which make life a joy, headed for Meeker's Grove. There the canvas habitations were pegged out, cots and hammocks slung, and the life of the advance camp began. Each day the noon train, run special for the club, brought six to a dozen recruits, who swelled at night the circle round the fire, enriched the choruses with their voices and joined the crowd at the swimming hole each afternoon. For life in the redwoods is unconstrained if uneventful. There are neither collars nor cuffs, nor linen-bosomed shirts, nor stiff hats in evidence. No, the campers affect Glengarry caps and knee breeches, with golf stockings and soft silken or flannel shirts. Beneath the shade of the trees they lounge after the plentiful breakfast, which is served under proper club auspices. There are scores of trails through the forest, that lead to up hill and down, winding along the river bank, amid scenery characteristically Californian and beautiful in its originality and strength. The second week brings the Sires to the scene, and the elaborate preparations for the ceremonial already under way are accelerated. The stage is set up in its accustomed place, with huge brown trunks for proscenium arches. It extends far back up the hillside, down which the procession of mourners and actors who assist at the burial of Care find their way. The Low Jinks are held in a different quarter of the grove, closer to the camp. The series of photographs on the opposite page afford a vivid impression of the scenery and arrangements. In rehearsals and in amusements of a pleasant and unexhausting character the days pass until on Friday, the eve of the eventful night, a train load of material—scenery, costumes, and all manner of paraphernalia arrives. With it comes a delegation of costumers, servants, and the furniture and service for feeding the great gatnering so far from Bohemia proper. An idea of the magnitude of the preparations may be gathered from the fact that two hundred and twenty-five members sat down to dinner Saturday night, together with some thirty-five musicians. At least fifty waiters were present, and these, together with the cooks, the forces of the costumer, and others made an army of about three hundred and fifty all told.

The special train from San Francisco arrived at 2 o'clock in the afternoon. The one hundred arrivals found some one hundred and twenty-five men in camp. They spent the afternoon swimming, and at 6 o'clock all gathered round the banquet table, laid in horseshoe form, decorated with flowers and lighted with candelabra. When the several healths had been drunk, and prosperity properly invoked and toasted, the crowd headed for the Jinks and settled along the logs spread out for seats before the footlights. The setting was particularly effective—a forest scene, of course—with a ruined castle and an archway in the foreground. The performance that followed was Shakespearean—the idea being that the Bard of Avon penetrates into Bohemia and exchanges commentaries with the representative of St. John Nepomuk, who was enacted by Sire Gerberding. The curtain rose, and the calciums flashing amid the trees disclosed a gay throng in vari-colored garb, assembled on the hillside. There were Falstaff (Hugo Toland), and the melancholy Jacques (Fred Warde), Touchstone (Geo.Grant), Donald Graham as Orpheus, Othello, Hamlet, Prospero, Romeo and others of the long list of Shakespearean heroes. William Sproule was the Bard, and as his dialogue with St. John proceeded, he called for illustration by his characters. Falstaff declaimed and Orpheus sang Warde recited, and Falstaff declaimed, and Orpheus sang admirably. Rather more spectacular than literary the performance this year, though often the contrary is the case.

The great feature, however, is the Burial of Care, which forms a fitting climax to the solemnities of the High Jinks. A spell of darkness first, then red lights gleaming far up the hillside, sparkling through the brush, flashing among the tree trunks. It was the procession of mourners, headed by the High Priest, bearing the casket of departed Care. It descended slowly, zig-zagging among the redwoods, the lights changing from ruby to sapphire, then flashing into gold, brightening into green and fading through carnation and vermillion back to rubescence again. The strains of a dead march echoed solemnly through the aisles as the cortege wended its way through the portals down to the funeral pyre, where the burden was deposited. Incantations then by the High Priest, Uncle George Bromley, and an oration seriocomic by Joseph D. Redding; next a torch is set to the pyre and the forest glows with the ruddy hue of the leaping flames. It is an indescribably brilliant and beautiful effect and quite the finest feature of the ceremonial.

Supper followed with the accompaniment of much jollity, the uncorking of innumerable bottles, with jest and laughter and music. After that, it is time for the Low Jinks and the way to the stage is led by Sire Hillman, dressed as a comedy queen. The setting was that of a cafe chantant scene, with rows of Japanese lanterns festooned in curved lines from tree trunk to tree trunk. A bust of Pan in the background leered out white against the brown bark of a redwood. In the leafy distance were statues of the Patron Saints of Bohemia—the whole effect most graceful and full of color. The performance, which made an excellent vaudeville, opened with a minuet danced by a set of mock kings and queens, whose solemn antics were most laughable. Of the other features the best were the operatic scene, in which Joullin and Charles K. Field appeared, the Marionette dance by Gilett Burgess, the rendering of "Reuben-Reuben" by Messrs. Haxe and Willard, and the final passent by Her Majesty. Joullin has all the air and manner of an Italian basso, and Mr. Field possesses an unique falsetto. Their rendering was excellent, tragic, and, considering the condition, exceedingly funny. Mr. Burgess's Marionette dance was a ludicrous and thoroughly original conception, and worthy of the perpetrator, and the "Reuben" song was diversified with appropriate topical allusions. It was well into the small hours ere the congregation retired to its couches—consisting in most instances of straw and a blanket, though of course the resident campers were comfortable in cots with all the luxury of sheets and blankets.

The feature of Sunday morning is the breakfasts, at which the staple is onion soup, accompanied by mackerel, meats and cakes. The motive of the soup and mackerel is of course comprehensible; the meats and cakes seem, save for the sedate, an unnecessary reminder. A sacred concert followed; afterwards a delegation of active spirits went swimming, the others packed up, and at 2 o'clock the special train drew out of the forest and headed south for home. An army of servitors remained to gather up the tents, box the cutlery and damask, fold the costumes and load them on freight cars, a long line of which followed the special to town. The Midsummer entertainment then concluded with a dinner in the clubrooms on Post street, at which there was much exchanging of reminiscences and general comparing of the Jinks with its precursors. The concensus of opinion voted the show one of the most successful in history—if not as brilliant as the Buddha, or the great Redding Jinks—well to the fore, and perhaps better attended than any of its predecessors. The visitors—among them Herr Schott, the Wagnerian tenor; Frank Lincoln, the humorist, and several others—had not commendation strong enough to bestow. By the way, Sir Henry Irving cabled greetings and regrets from London, and the Lamb's Club sent a snow-white lamb to grace the occasion. The cartoon in commemoration has been assigned to Ernest Peixotto, one of the cleverest of the Californian artists, who is capable of recording the scene in an artistic manner.

In Old Orchard, Maine, the Christian Alliance Convention has just closed its session. On the final Sunday Rev. W. D. Lalecheur preached from the text, "Whatever Is in the House," and urged that whatever it was they should give it all up for the hope of joy eternal. So eloquent was the sermon that the congregation was carried by storm, and in the extraordinary scene that followed the unparalleled sum of $105,000 was raised. One man gave $25,000; another, who was in his New York office, felt a psychic influence and telegraphed ten thousand shares of stock at five dollars a share. A woman gave two houses which were sold on the spot for five thousand dollars. Men and women stripped themselves of their watches, rings, and jewelry of every description. One hard-headed business man said, "Either we have been in the presence of the spirit, or else this great audience has been under the hypnotic influence of the speaker." The New York Herald is authority for this extraordinary story.

"The Church Times" says that on a recent Sunday in a church in Dublin the choir was startled during the singing of the psalm by the appearance of the organ-blower's head, who shouted out, "Sing like blazes; the bellows is busted!"

A Chicago physician is using the X rays to detect the presence of death. A sciagraph of a dead and a live hand taken on the same plate show the difference between dead and living flesh. The soft parts of the dead hand are noticeably darker than the living tissues.

The Mauser rifle, which the Spaniards are using against the Cubans, has proved a failure. It is a gun of small calibre, but of marvelous penetration. Among the Cuban forces, there was so little fear of being hit by the Mauser bullets that it is rather a discredit not to have one or more wounds.

EARL LI

A Sketch of the Rothschild - Bismark of China.

There is not a more lionized man in the world to-day than Li Hung Chang, or more properly Li Chung Tang, China's leading statesman and diplomat, who is now on his way to this country. Although he is seventy-four years old, this is his first trip abroad, and he and his suite have brought new ideas of the Orient into the countries they have visited. For a Chinese statesman to hold strongly democratic ideas argues great breadth of vision, but for a self-made man whose grandfather is a matter of conjecture to hold commanding influence over a royal house whose origin antedates Adam himself—this is genius. Inheriting nothing but brains and energy, Li Chung Tang has made himself one of the richest, most learned and most powerful men in the world.

Personally he is a striking figure, being over six feet one in his stockings, and looking even taller because of his thick wooden soles. He wears a gown of bright yellow satin, falling from his neck to his feet, and over this a jacket, sometimes of brown velvet with gold buttons, sometimes of sealskin—unless it is a state occasion, when the famous yellow jacket always appears. The three-eyed peacock feather, another of his honors, is attached by a button to the top of his state hat, sticking gaily out behind. When not on dress parade, he replaces this with a skull cap of black silk, in the front of which is set an enormous diamond. He drinks almost no intoxicants, but is fond of his pipe, a complicated affair which a servant carries around after him, thrusting the end into his master's mouth at discreet intervals. At table he can use a fork as well as chopsticks, and shows considerable knowledge of European customs. Servants hover around him at meals to assist his every motion, straightening his dress and from time to time bringing him a steaming white cloth with which to mop his face.

While in London, Lord Lonsdale's beautiful house was put at his disposal, and, what specially pleased him, four magnificent black and yellow equipages. When he rides forth in one of these, drawn by four chestnut horses, each ridden by a yellow and black postillion, the British crowd is moved to cheers. Earl Li smiles genially on all sides, but the enthusiasm is an unexplained mystery to him. Chinese crowds don't cheer. The servants of Lord Lonsdale did not find life under Chinese rule an unmitigated picnic, and nearly died from want of sleep. About three in the morning the suite began to ring for tea and rice, and then a great bustle and hurrying from room to room followed, each person scrupulously locking his door behind him, were he only to be gone ten minutes. This was hard for serving men and women accustomed to "the quality" to put up with, and a further grievance lay in the fact that they could not always tell whether they were waiting on a high official or a mere menial, and so it was difficult to gauge the proper degree of condescension needed. It is difficult to tell just what purpose the sixty people of Li's establishment are for, and the three hundred and fifty pieces of baggage are equally puzzling; but the ambassadorial services of four shrieking parrots are utterly beyond a European's grasp.

It is interesting to get a Celestial point of view on our mode of dressing. Li's adopted son was asked if he thought his countrymen would ever adopt European clothing, and this is his answer, given through the interpreter: "His Lordship is at a loss to understand why anybody in his senses should want to wear the ugly, and in Chinese eyes indelicate, trousers, when he can adorn himself in rich and soft silks. To display one's limbs and the motion thereof when walking is regarded among us as barbarous. We are not proud to show that our forms resemble those of monkeys, nor can we exactly understand why noblemen and gentlemen and rich persons generally should care to wrap their limbs in common cloth. Besides, we are never in such a great hurry as to require less clothing than we wear. I assure you the clothes of Europe are to us ugly and uncomfortable; besides, they are worn by the Japanese, and that alone would tend to make them banned by the Chinese.

Perhaps Li Chung Tang's most noted characteristic is his inquisitiveness. With this he has a strong sense of humor, and will ask the most delightfully personal questions, when the answer must necessarily travel through an interpreter, and reach any number of ears. One woman whom he had just met was politely asked how far she believed in the efficacy of prayer—not an easy question to answer in a crowded drawing room. He has evidently little use for the New Woman, and declared that the girls he saw at the public schools ought to be at their needlework; books were for men. No wonder he thought woman's entire mission was to sew, when you consider that the last Mrs. Li had over five hundred robes. Nevertheless, one of his most powerful friends has been a woman—the Empress Dowager herself.

He is a strange, interesting figure, this Rothschild-Bismark of China, whether we look at him as a statesman wielding the affairs of nations, or as a scholar who graduated at the head of fifteen thousand students, or as a pig-tailed heathen, eating jam on fresh pork. He is above all things a modern, the first modern in China. His friendly reception of foreigners of every grade has done a great deal to break down the Oriental detestation of them, and to let in Western ideas and Western civilization. It is mainly through his influence that China has become crossed and recrossed by telegraph wires and railroad ties. The military and medical schools established by him are adding their power to the great spirit of advance, which is going to grapple with and overthrow the limitless self-conceit and slavish submission to tradition of the Chinese Mandarinate. It is as an official spy that Li has come to Europe and America. He is to decide what nations are really great and worthy of alliances, and the Government of China will accept and act on his judgments. We need not tumble over each other in our efforts to pay him homage, as the Germans did, but it is right that we should receive him as a great man on an important mission.

A Morning Recontre

On the Piazza

An Important Moment

Lining Up for the Game

Ready for the Start

The Coaching Parade

Between Races

THE "OUTING" AT DEL MONTE

ANNUAL MEET OF THE PACIFIC COAST PONY RACING AND STEEPLE CHASING ASSOCIATION

GIRLS AND HORSES

Some Account of Both as Seen at Del Monte with a Bit of Criticism on the Side.

DEL MONTE, Aug. 27.—"What came ye out for to see?" Was it the sweep of shadowed lawn, or the long line of the sea breaking feebly against its barriers of sand, or the great trees, their boles hidden behind columns of ivy, or this peerless hostelry, the floors whereof are like the tables of good housewives for cleanness, or the drive—the drive that rivals the Riviera—was it any of these things that brought ye here? No, none—for these are always here; these, one may see fifty-one other weeks in the year. But this is the week at Del Monte. A string of horses and a string of girls—thoroughbred in the main—these make this the week famous, the week gay, the week of weeks.

Girls, horses—horses, girls—is it not true that where you find a first-class article of one you find fine specimens of the other? Neither is complete without the other, and man, normal man, loves both. Let your motor-carriage come on, and your wheel for one or your wheel for twenty, they never can drive out the horse, for woman, regnant woman, must have her horse to ride and to drive. She finds it easier to master man that way. Was there ever a time since Saxon man lifted woman from the scullery and enthroned her as a thing to worship that the woman and the horse have not together played their parts in the romantic drama? Think over your history. Read Freytag's quiet pictures of old German days, and the mystery of the Neibelungen, and the tales of Arthur and his knights—since we first loved woman we loved to see her on a horse's back and we fought for her on a horse's back and carried her away on a horse's back. Romance attaches the two, and those whom sentiment hath joined together let no man put asunder—let him not dare to try. So in making a festival Society's instinct was true when it dictated that beautiful women and clean-limbed horses should be the show.

As for horses, we have seen all kinds this week; horses that can jump—fences, ditches, hurdles, hedges, anything; horses that can run; horses quick to turn; horses that prance and dance, singly, in pairs and in fours; horses that show descent from the patrician blood of Araby and horses no less proud that they spring directly from the wild, uncrossed, untainted stock of the American plains—speedy and long-enduring native sons. On Tuesday these little horses fought and foiled each other on the polo field. On Wednesday they climbed the hills like mountain goat and jumped like startled deer. Thursday they ran against each other on the track, urged by their rivalrous owners. Friday again they meet in that sport which is the greatest test man has devised for the intelligence and alertness of the horses. And Saturday is to see another and the greatest of the track days. But this is not all the part the horse plays here. He is driven, he is ridden to make a proper setting for my lady in the morning, and who shall say that a coaching parade, even though small, is not a thing of stateliness, aye, even of splendor? All fortune's favorites who have coaches, drags, carts of high pretension or other rig fitted for show, go forth each morning to waken their senses gently into life and prepare them for the more stirring things of the later day. They go and come with blast and snap of whip—and then one thinks—well, what one thinks depends, I suppose, upon whether one looks at or is looked at.

And all this that woman may have pleasure! The horse prances for her, he jumps that she may have a thrill and runs that she may applaud. He is drawn up before her box when the play begins, and she caresses him when he has come out victorious. He suffers her to guide him through the tortuous and labyrinthian drives of this great park while she sits splendid and erect, a joy to the eye. It is truly well to be a woman—if one can have horses at Del Monte.

As for the kind of woman for whom nature has been thus disturbed, it perhaps ought to suffice to say that she is of varieties many, so many, in fact, that to enumerate would be tiresome and to a great extent supererogatory—for do not all men know that the girl or the woman is of as many kinds as her sex is numerically strong? Wise men hold that woman, unlike the rest of creation, is not subject to classification, not divisible into families and species, but only into individuals. And the California girl is truly like her sisters of all other States and peoples, multitudinous in variety, and to choose a type is but to make a hazard on superficial resemblances. One thing I may say, however, that if that brilliant young woman who last year presented to the world the California girl as a boisterous and direct person of aggressive manners and much rotundity of person—if that clever story-writer were here to-day, she would hardly have the temerity to take that girl as typical. The number of girls in California society who are not stout, not even partridgy, has been demonstrated every day of the week at Del Monte baths between the hours of 11 and 1. To be sure, the ripe girl is in evidence, as well she may be, for she is very good to look upon, but she doesn't shout, not here, at any rate, and her voice is not coarse, and she manifestly thinks of other things than the adornment of her own person, and she knows how to say a bright thing, and she knows what the words graciousness and gentleness mean. There are many mothers here, some very old and some of middle age, and to both there is shown a courtesy and deference by the younger members of their own sex that promises well for the next generation of misses and mothers. The sweet-voiced woman of fine feelings and deep sympathies, of a higher culture than books can give, and of a calm repose of manner that bespeaks assured position, but without disdain or vulgarity—this woman is here and she is not old. She was born in California.

The hoyden we have always with us. Some men like her, and as the old woman in "Adam Bede" said of all women: "The Lord made 'em to match the men." But the California hoyden is not sui generis. The same girl is to be seen at Newport, and Narragansett is filled with her like. She talks slang and she talks it fast; she manifests a knowledge of the world that sometimes gives pause to her listeners; she is a romper, and the practical joke is the thing after her own heart. She is here, but she does no harm, and many like her, for they think her more frank than many more dangerous of the sisterhood.

The girl too conscious of her good lines and most striking poses—what would a resort be without her? She flirts in a very self-conscious way, and that, to put it directly, is not art. And the widow, the supposedly wily widow, plump, and decorously demure when in evidence. She needs must visit Del Monte when the B'lingum boys come down. The young wife who refuses to take the veil because she is married—you may see her any evening on the piazza listening to Cassassa's delightful music with one ear and drinking in compliments from a group of youth with the other. All these are here and many more—the supercilious young person, and the most unmistakable snob, and the too, too loud young richling, who finds fault with her hands because they contain too few fingers on which to spread her diamonds, and the daughters who manifestly desire to escape from mother—but what of it? I have heard more gossip, more scandal, more idle talk of intrigues, more proofs of underbreeding in a single hour at the Newport Casino than have come to my ears the whole week at Del Monte. There is a wholesomeness to the place even in its gayest week that would surprise the most casual visitor at one of Flagler's great Florida hotels. When the California girl takes possession of Del Monte and brings her company of players, she enjoys herself mightily, but she is not followed back to the city by a train of "things better left unsaid" and done.

Are there no men here? I have talked of girls and of horses. Are there no men to be taken account of? Yes, several and one. The several really don't count. They are good fellows for the greater part, men with their wives, and some who would like to get wives if, unfortunately, all the really first-class women hadn't already been appropriated, and others who take no thought but of a good time. These make up the several. But the one, he is a man removed, a man apart. I have seen him play tennis and he plays an earnest game. I have seen him tool his coach, and he is at that, too, thoroughly grave and honest. I have seen him riding like a Comanche over hills and over tracks, and here likewise he was intense. It has amused me to see him eye his coachmen and the dozen or twenty other handlers of horses that he has here. His eye goes down the dress to look for a flaw, a hair, a speck. He knows that the clothes are in correct style, for his own tailor has made them. The posture must also be according to model and the horses up to standard. Do you see what it means? He knows what he wants. How much he is ahead of many who have wealth and many who haven't! Seriously, he has determined to be all that he should be within the circle he has at present drawn, and the testimonial to his achievement is the consideration he is given. And when the time comes, believe me, the same qualities which make him now "facile princeps" among horsemen of his class will achieve other distinctions. If he had married otherwise I would not have been so rash to prophesy.

But some may yet ask what do people do at such times at Del Monte? They eat, gentle inquirer, eat three times a day, and they dress as often, and they sleep, not much oftener than once, and they fill in the rest of the time driving and watching the sports and swimming, during the day, and in the evening they sit upon the piazzas and look out upon a beautiful scene made up of trees festooned with lanterns, a waning moon in a dark blue sky, and directly in the foreground a platform covered with ferns and flowers and lighted with numberless electric lights from which come the Semiramide overture, the Pilgrim's Chorus from "Tannhauser," and a dozen other good things as given by Cassassa's forty players. It is a scene to be remembered, a midsummer night's dream such as Daly never dared to attempt.

T. N. S.

One would think that if any house in the city were safe from burglars, it would be the abode of I. W. Lees, captain of detectives and one of the notable thief-captors of the country, but a midnight marauder has dared to attempt even this mansion of the law. Two o'clock last Saturday morning, the policeman on the beat had his suspicions roused, and resolved to hide and watch the house. Nearly two hours later a young man in a light overcoat came rapidly along and boldly mounted the Captain's steps. The policeman accosted him with a personal question, but the young man coolly remarked that it was all right and that he belonged there, and inserting a key in the door, entered the house. The policeman was nonplused, and finally decided to wait and see if the young man came out again. He was too clever for that, however. Without stopping to collect any souvenirs, he escaped by a back window and a shed, and was off over the fences. The policeman's description of the man has led to the identification of the gang to which he belongs, and several of its members are already safe in jail.

The California Jockey Club plans to have the grand opening of its new race track near Shell Mound on the 19th of October, and the work is being pushed along at a flying rate. All night long, with the help of electric lights, the digging and grading and pounding go on, for apart from the construction of the actual track, stables must be built and grand stands put up. The club aims to make the track one of the most complete this side of the Rockies, and to have its opening day a very big affair. There will be twenty-seven stakes, aggregating $42,750, the entries for which will close November 1st. Six flat races for two-year-olds will take place later in the season, but the great race of the autumn will be the Burns handicap for $10,000. Already twenty-six events have been scheduled.

POLITICAL UPS AND DOWNS

Statesmen Who Love One Another — John Daggett's Friendship.

To judge by exteriors, the condition of affairs in the Republican ranks is unfortunate. The party is given up to internecine warfare. Contending factions, having each some show of authority, are arrayed against one another. Petty squabbles for supremacy will not aid the national ticket to success, and we all know now what the victory of Bryan means for the country. It is a pity that the situation has not yet developed a diplomat able to reconcile opposing claims. As a go-between Colonel Burns has not proved a success, and his article in the Examiner is liable to augment the breach rather than cement the party. Though Mr. Spreckles has the machine, the enemy seems to win most of the points. The selection by the Election Commissioners of Attorney Ruef, a member of the Spear faction, as the recognized spokesman of the party at its deliberations scores against him. And now it is announced that his old ally, County Clerk Curry, has deserted the sugar standard. Several reasons are assigned for this defection; first, the failure of the Spreckels to give Curry the congressional nomination which Eugene F. Loud secured; then the realization that his friend could do nothing for him with McKinley, and subsequently, his exclusion from the political firm of Martin and Crimmins, through whom Mr. Spreckels expresses his purposes.

* * *

On the other hand, it is suggested that, as Curry has everything to lose and nothing to gain by opposing the Boss, and as his success thus far is based on the favor of that gentleman, it would be suicide to oppose him. It is not incredible, however, that this sudden manifestation of enmity may only be a clever subterfuge to obtain a footing for Spreckels in the Spear party, which Curry will doubtless join. Buckley's victories were often won by manipulating the enemy, and perhaps the Sugar King, finding he cannot win in the open, is trying to lure the rebels into ambush. However, the events of the next few days will develop the fact. If the Spreckels-Martin men remain in the County Clerk's service, depend on it that Curry's hostility is a pretext. If the servitors are forced out, then there is veritable bad blood. Of course the "Chronicle's," purpose in atagonizing the Spreckels force is obvious. It desires to create an independent Republican ticket here to destroy the sugar organization. It is a pity for John D. that his moves are not quicker. He loses chances unnecessarily, and his campaign fails to gain prestige. Yet with his reputation and wealth, he should ere this have swept the opposition into the sea. Maybe he'll learn through disappointment.

* * *

A disquieting rumor is wafted over the Tehachapai from the South. Its burden tells the downfall of Hervey Lindley. It predicts the "barreling" of this eminent boss by Walter Moore, and the ascension of the latter to the political throne in Los Angeles. It may be this is only a passing from the fire into the frying pan, though Walter Moore promises better things than Hervey Lindley is now achieving. It seems that Moore, since becoming Chief of the Fire Department, has so exerted his executive ability that the brigade has a degree of efficiency which surprises its own members as much as the citizens in general. It is out of politics and actually extinguishes conflagrations. The boys find Walter a veritable martinet and up to every trick of the trade. It is not wonderful, therefore, he has grown popular and influential, and in the ebbing of the A. P. A. movement, with which Lindley is fully identified, it seems as though he would obtain the coveted control. As in San Francisco and other interior cities, the wave of bigotry is passing and the men who obtained prominence on the strength of their prejudices are losing hold. In his time Lindley has proved a bold manipulator, but more competent as a manager than able at achieving his personal ambitions. He has several times been defeated for Congress, but being strong of will and resolute he has manipulated local and county conventions with daring disregard of opponents.

* * *

Among the Democrats, the story goes that Sam Rainey is jealous of the popularity of Professor Kennedy, the Orpheum hypnotist, and proposes playing an engagement on the same stage, provided he is permitted to show off his best subject, Superintendent John Daggett of the Mint. To the ordinary reader, unaware of the magnetic power of Rainey, it may seem strange he should possess such a control over the Siskiyou statesman. The fact is, however, Daggett is so amenable to his influence that there is no trick which Kennedy's mediums perform that Sam cannot duplicate with the Superintendent of the Mint. He has done nothing politically for Daggett, yet the Mint is full of his appointees. He twists him to do his will in the Junta, and that without consideration, and yet has Daggett full of the belief that all these services are to be returned with a Senatorship or something else. The Superintendent is just now deeply interested in the cause of Joseph P. Kelly, whose candidacy he assisted in the Fifth Congressional District, having as associates in that noble cause Jim Rea of San Jose and Major McLaughlin of the State Central Committee. It was not for love of Kelly, however, that this was achieved, but to beat his old-time enemies, Jim Barry and Tom Clunie. However, there has since developed that matter of the forging of a proxy, and such is the curious bent of the Siskiyou statesman's mind that Kelly straightway became a politician in his sight, and he is now out for him with banners flying. Hence the presence of Rainey. Daggett, it seems, has certain offices in the Mint available, owing to the fact that the Civil Service classification has not yet been completed. These are being utilized in the cause of Kelly's success, and will doubtless go to certain good friends of Rainey.

FREDERICK YATES

A Plea for Our Local Artists and for Intelligent Criticism.

One of the hardest things a young artist born in this country has to learn is that, whatever his talent, he is without honor in his own country and among his own people until some foreign city has found him out and stamped him with her approval. The press of this city generally assume that if a thing is painted, written or composed here, it is necessarily of no merit, and the reporter's whole duty is to be funny at its expense. The result is that most of our artists leave as soon as possible for a more sympathetic atmosphere, where criticism is based on knowledge and aims more at truth than at journalistic humor.

It was this spirit of antagonism that lost California an artist she should have exerted every power to keep, if she has an atom of local pride. Frederick Yates, whom all London knows as one of the coming portrait painters, tried long and vainly to gain recognition here. An intelligent critic would not have failed to recognize his talent, but unfortunately that is not the kind of critic the press employs, even though it must know that in a community where artistic discrimination is not as yet widely cultivated, its careless word can make or mar a career. Though Mr. Yates' later work may be more finished, none of it holds more charm than a portrait of a little girl with red-gold hair and a dimpled chin, looking frankly out at you as she stands holding a Japanese doll by one arm. When this was exhibited here, it received just one press notice, which briefly disposed of it as "a portrait of a silly little girl, painted in a commonplace manner." The little girl is so real and living that one half expects her to swing that dangling Japanese doll and ask the question that is evidently just shaping itself on her inquiring little lips; and perhaps the critic thought that to paint things so that they looked like life was to be "commonplace." That was only one of many incidents that induced Mr. Yates to give up trying to follow his career here. He was very poor, and at one time needed money so badly that he took one of his pictures to an auction room. He had to provide a frame, and that cost forty-five dollars, while the commission took five more,—and the picture brought fifty dollars!

Utterly discouraged at last, he found means to go to London, and there, within a month of his arrival, one of his pictures was hung in a prominent place, and the great Watts himself came and complimented the young artist. Commissions soon followed, and it was only a little while before Mr. Yates had gained a secure position as a portrait painter.

Personally, Mr. Yates is tall and dark, with a narrow, interesting face and deep set eyes that take a somewhat tragic view of life. He has a nervous, intense organization, and impresses you as one who would die for a cause or be martyred for a principle, but who could never, under any circumstances, find a grain of humor in life's little ironies.

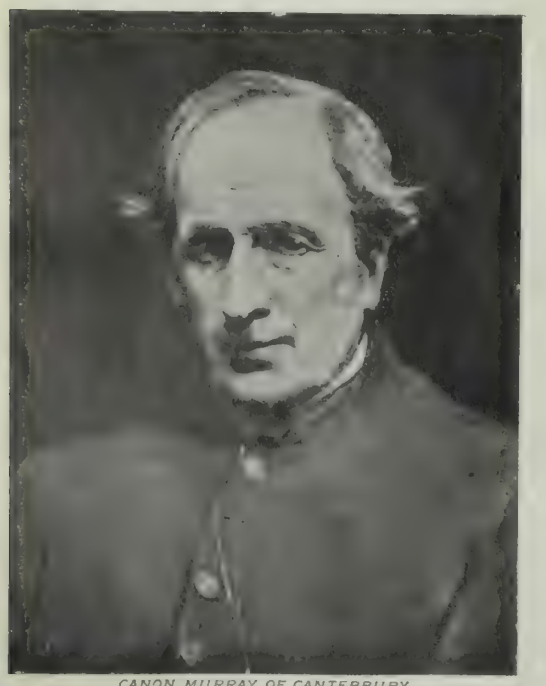
"Of course, over there one is merely a drop in the bucket," he said, speaking of his position. "But if they once like you, they stay by you. Here they would drop you in a minute for the first new man that came along. They are not only changeable, but they need——"

"They need?" I suggested, as he paused.

"In a very fine house here, I saw a painting in a red plush frame," he said, in a quiet, inexpressive tone that nevertheless conveyed a very clear idea of how the sentence could have ended.

"I had an art school here, and gave my classes nude models to study," he went on, presently. "Do you know hat a great many people thought I was depraved. I even received anonymous letters about it, and many would not join the classes on that account. What can you do with a community like that? Of course, it is different now, but—no, I prefer London. But I want to say this: You have true artists living here; Keith—Oh, there's nobody like Keith!—Bruce Porter, Atkins, Peixotto, and a number of others whose work deserves worthy criticism. They don't need your praise, but they do need your discrimination; they need the stimulus of your appreciation. Do see that they get it! Keep them here, build up an art center of your own. Why not? Sargent, the foremost portrait painter of to-day, is an American, and so is Whistler, and so was George Innes. You have a giant among you already in William Keith. Do stop the wholesale abuse, and attack only what is false and ugly. Let public opinion be guided by men who know what they are doing, and suppress the little cats that scratch."

MADAME LA COMPTESSE XXX



CANON MURRAY OF CANTERBURY

PREMONITION

I questioned my soul as I stood by the dead,
My soul in its anguish made answer and said,
No power can destroy, and no fiat create,
For death is transition, and life is a state,
The fruit of conditions coercive as fate.
Each atom of form, and each atom of force
Exist as a part of their infinite source;
And whether in motion, or whether at rest,
Must live, by a law that is never transgressed.
This then is the marvelous secret of death,
To live without life, and to breathe without breath.

—LUCIUS HARWOOD FOOTE.

The Salvation Army has made a new departure—on horseback this time. Six of its petticoated members have formed a cavalry brigade which is to start from Baltimore and carry the gospel through Maryland, Pennsylvania and Delaware. Captain Blanche Cox, the leader, used formerly to show her equestrian skill by dashing around a sawdust ring in pink tights and yellow hair, but now she will jog sedately through the land in a blue habit and a poke bonnet, on a mount who was forced out of his original business by the competition of the trolly. Another brigade to fight the devil is going forth on bicycles from Chelsea, Mass., under the direction of the Rev. J. F. Hazel, who claims to have received the order direct from divine headquarters. Groups of riders will go from town to town, and preach in the public spuares. These laborers will receive no salary beyond the freewill offerings they collect, and will carry with them a saucepan or two and a hammock. Neither short skirts nor bloomers will be admitted in the profession.

REMINISCENCES OF HUXLEY

Among those who knew the man and realized the tense force of his personality, the impression is strong that historians of the Nineteenth Century will rank him among its greatest forces. In the current "Nineteenth Century" appears a very interesting article from the pen of Wilfrid Ward, an especial friend of the great scientist, which affords in brief an impression of his tense and rugged individuality, and presents a number of reminiscences of his sayings:

"I felt my impression of Carlyle's dogged Scotch unsympathetic persistency in measuring everything by his own ideas sensibly deepened," says Mr. Ward, "by a story which Huxley told me of their mutual relations. Carlyle and he were for long good friends, but had a serious difference on the evolution question in the early stages of the controversy. Their personal intercourse ceased in consequence. After an interval of many years Huxley happened to see the Scotchman crossing the street in London, and thinking that bygones might be bygones went up to him and spoke to him. Carlyle did not at first recognize him, but when he had made out who it was, he at once said, with his Scotch twang, as though he were continuing the last conversation of years ago, 'You're Huxley, are you? You're the man that's trying to persuade us all that we're the children of apes; while I am saying that the greatthing we've really got to do is to make ourselves as much unlike apes as possible.' Huxley, who had hoped that the weather or politics might have been admitted for the sake of peace, soon found that the best thing he could do was to retreat, and return to their tacit ageement to differ."

"Admirably did he once characterize Tennyson's conversation. 'Doric beauty has its characteristic — perfect simplicity, without any ornament or anything artificial.' Of an eminent person whose great subtlety of mind was being discussed, he said that the constant over-refinement of distinctions in his case destroyed all distinctness. Anything could be explained away, and so one thing came to mean the same as its opposite. Some one asked, 'Do you mean that he is untruthful?' 'No,' replied Huxley, 'he is not clear-headed enough to tell a lie.'"

"He once spoke strongly oi the insight into scientific method shown in Tennyson's 'In Memoriam,' and pronounced it to be 'quite equal to that of the greatest experts.' Tennyson he considered the greatest English master of melody except Spenser and Keats. I told him of Tennyson's insensibility to music, and he replied that it was curious that scientific men as a rule had more appreciation of music than poets or men of letters. He told me of one long talk he had with Tennyson, and added that immortality was the one dogma to which Tennyson was passionately devoted.

"Of Browning, Huxley said: 'He really has music in him, Read his poem, 'The Thrush,' and you will see it. Tennyson said to me,' he added, 'that Browning had plenty of music in him, but he could not get it out.'"

"He spoke of the Royal Commission on Vivisection. 'The general feeling was at first strongly for vivisection,' he said, 'but one German changed the current of opinion by remarking, 'I chloroform a cat because it scratches, but not a dog.' 'This at once suggested possibilities of cruelty, and (as I understood) was the cause of the amount of restsiction ultimately placed on the practice.' Apropos of vivesection, he spoke strongly of the absurdity of the outcry against it, as long as such things as pigeon-shooting were tolerated for mere amusement."

MRS. FREDERICK YATES

KATHRYN KIDDER

A Talk Behind the Scenes with Madame Sans Gene.

Actresses are the most charming people in the world to interview—when you can find them. They are friendly, cordial, widely experienced and ready to tell whatever you want to ask, and though several trips may be necessary before you finally corner them, they are, on the whole, far more satisfactory than the busy political or literary celebrity, who keeps his appointment, but wishes to goodness that you wouldn't bother him.

Miss Kathryn Kidder said she would be in at half past two, and, being rather an unusual person, she was. She is a tall, grey-eyed woman, with fair hair that curves away from her forehead in loose waves, and graceful hands that never gesture. Her bearing is that of a well-balanced, self-controlled person, who might be frank, but would not lightly betray her inmost self. Her voice is sweet, refined and pleasantly natural, and lingers a little in one's ears as one thinks over her words.

I wanted to know how she came to go on the stage, whether it was the result of environment or chance or inward determination.

"I really think it was just chance," she said. "It was odd that it should have happened, too, for I come of a family of ministers—and Methodist ministers at that. Why, my grandfather thought even going to the theatre wicked. My family were all rather narrow about it, but I think I have influenced them a good deal, and they take a broader view now."

"Did you have to overcome much opposition, when you first began?" I asked.

"No, for it came about so naturally and easily. As a child I was perfectly devoted to Shakespeare, and naturally my family encouraged me. I knew pages by heart, and studied the plays far more deeply than I ever have had time to since I have been grown up."

"Did you take any special course of study that would prepare you for the stage?"

"Yes, I studied for a whole year in New York, though when I started in my father had no more idea that I would end by my actually going on the stage than he had of my flying."

"But you knew?" I queried.

"Well, I loved my Shakespeare, and I had my ideas," Miss Kidder said, with an inscrutable smile to herself. "In New York I met Frank Mayo—you know he died a little while ago—and he offered me the position of leading lady in his company. I was only sixteen, but I accepted it, and that was the beginning of it all."

"But—sixteen!" I exclaimed. "Weren't you terrified at the idea?"

"Why, not a bit. I hadn't the faintest conception of what I was undertaking. After that first engagement, I went out with Joseph Howard on a regular barn-storming tour. I played in every kind of play, from "held by the Enemy" to "Little Lord Fauntleroy," and took every kind of part, from a page to the mother of a grown son. I can tell you, that was experience. It taught me far more than any other kind of an engagement could have."

"It must be a comfort not to be nervous," I said, rather absently, for I was busily scribbling down points under cover of my card case.

"But I am, now," Miss Kidder protested. "I grow more so every year, as I realize more clearly all there is to be afraid of. First nights are terrible, whether it's a new play or merely a new place. I never could get through them if it weren't for a little formula I say to myself."

"Something like 'Let your lights,' or "All the world's a stage?'" I suggested.

"No, I say 'This is terrible, simply terrible. No wonder you are frightened; anyone would be. Of course you can't fail all those people, after they've bought their seats; but get through to-night, and you never need step on the stage again. There's your understudy all ready, and to-morrow and ever after she can take the part. Just get through this one night as well as you can.' So I get into a stoical sort of mood, and it steadies my nerves—or I pretend it does."

"And the next night?"

"Oh, by then I have forgotten all about it, or remember it half incredulously, as you do past seasickness. My giving up the part is a mere pretense to get me started."

"It's a novel idea," I said, inwardly hoping that she did not confide her first-night thoughts to the understudy, whose hopes would be kept in a state of violent fluctuation. "There has been a good deal of controversy as to whether an actor should actually feel what he portrays," I went on. "What side do you take?"

"It seems to me that one should have a perfect intellectual understanding of whatever emotion one must show, and to have that, one must of course have sympathy," she began thoughtfully. "If it is grief, you must have felt, you must know just what it is like and how it manifests itself. Having gathered this by experience, then it seems to me that on the stage you must have complete control of yourself, and merely portray. Feeling emotion is not the best way to show it, for it throws you off your balance, it often makes you inarticulate—or inartistic. I believe that the actress who doesn't shed a real tear has far more chance of making the audience cry than the one who actually weeps."

"Isn't it Coquelin who maintains that the actor should be perfectly free from emotion in the most impassioned scene?" I asked.

"I don't go quite so far as that," she answered. "I think one should feel just enough to stimulate, without losing a particle of self-command. Stage emotion is the result of careful study, not of haphazard inspiration, and one must be cool and clear-headed to give it its best rendering. It must be presented at dull, gloomy rehearsals as well as before an audience. The actress who never will act at rehearsals, who says, 'Wait till to-night—I'll know just how to do it then,' is the despair of managers—and she never gets very high."

"How do you attack a new part?" I asked, presently. "What is your first step when you have a character to master?"

"First, I find out all I can about the woman herself, her age, rank, associates, everything. Then I notice the attitude of other characters towards her. In my present character, Madame Sans-Gene, I found that the women of rank, who were spiteful, vulgar and dishonest, could not bear her, while the better men, the honest, straightforward ones, thought everything of her. Don't you see that that showed how honorable and high-principled she was? In that way I get to thoroughly understand my character."

"And then the memorizing?"

"Oh, no; that must come last of all. The words dull your ear to the spirit, if you learn them too soon. Indeed, one of the hardest things is not to learn them before I am ready to. I must study my gestures—for you know you appeal to the eye of an audience before you reach its ear. For instance, the gesture that means 'Listen!' does not come after the word, but before it. See, this way."

KATHRYN KIDDER
AS MADAME SANS GENE

She bent quickly forward, with narrowed eyes and intent look, and one arm shot out towards me with a sinuous, fascinating movement, before I heard the half-whispered "Listen!" It was impressive, and just a little creepy.

"Then there are the inflections to study, all the little shades of tone," she added, getting up with a smile, as I gave a startled glance at the time. "Yes, learning the part is really the very least of it all. No, I don't care to see the proof. I'll trust you. Good-bye."

The following sentiment of a member of the Government now in Washington is too good to keep. A San Francisco friend of his, having some horses to sell, wrote and asked the official if there would be any use in bringing them on to Washington. "No, people don't want horses here," was the reply. "The cars are run by electricity, the people by bicycles, and the Government by jackasses!"

Ten men have each made a million out of Cripple Creek, a hundred others have made more than fifty thousand each, and there are some thousand more who have made over twenty thousand each. Most of this money has gone to Colorado, though the French are now investing generously in that region.

Louisiana having adopted the Australian ballot system compelling every man to mark his own ticket, has thus excluded most of the negro vote. This, of course, is due to the ignorance of the colored men, who are unable to sign their own names.

An expert geographer tells us, in a recent issue of Cosmos, published in Paris, that there are 20,000,000 square miles of earth yet unexplored. It is, therefore, plainly evident that the Populist-Democrats have plenty of room to emigrate to before the cyclone strikes them next November.

Mr. Anthony Hope and Mr. Edward Rose are said to have divided $50,000 from the production of "The Prisoner of Zenda' 'on the stage.

ABOUT PERSONAGES

Sir George Newnes' penny daily, "The Courier," made up on the lines of a weekly, with news, gossip and personal paragraphs, but without politics, has proved a failure. The effort was costly in the extreme.

James F. Burns, a plumber, James Doyle, a carpenter, and John Harmon, a laborer, were the promoters of the Portland mine, which is now held at $6,000,000 and produced $480,000 last year. The average output of the mine is $70 per ton, and there is one streak of ore which runs nineteen ounces of gold to the ton.

Major Moses B. Handy explains the attitude of Alvinza Hayward and Charles D. Lane, who have declared for Bryan, on the ground that the premium on gold which will inevitably follow Bryan's election, would increase the value of the Utica twenty per cent, which would pay the expense of mining and milling.

Ex-Premier Crispi has applied for a pension, to date from the beginning of last month. He asks it because of his advanced age—he will be seventy-seven next October, and because the sciatica from which he suffers, and which has lately taken an acute form, prevents him from earning a living as formerly, as an advocate.

Sir Arthur Sullivan confesses he has no great facility at writing. Under the stress of inspiration, he has turned out four numbers in a day, but often spends a week over a single song. The ditty of "The Merryman and the Maid" gave him infinite trouble, and he confesses to have spent a fortnight setting and resetting the jingle.

Sir John Millais will be buried in St. Paul's, close to Lord Leighton. Speculation as to his successor is already keen. Richmond and Luke Fields are mentioned, but Val. Pinceps seems to have the best chance. The elder son of the late president of the Academy has no interest in art, but is the greatest living authority on basset-hounds.

Miss Clara Barton, returning from Armenia, goes to visit the Grand Duchess of Baden, her co-laborer in the Red Cross service during the Franco-Prussian war. The Grand Duchess has devoted her life to improving the hospital service of Germany, and has presented Miss Barton with a gold medal of remembrance, colors of Baden, and other tokens of admiration and gratitude.

The death of Charles Dickens and his sister Mary Dickens, who died within a few days of each other, brings out the fact that the family of the great novelist inherited his literary ability. Mary Dickens edited the "Letters of Charles Dickens" and contributed several magazine articles about her father. Dickens the younger deliberately went into trade, but subsequently became editor of "All the Year Round." His daughter, Mary Angela Dickens, gives promise of being a successful novelist. Of the other children H. F. Dickens is a prominent Queen's counsel. Two younger sons are prominent in Australian life.

Castelar, the Spanish statesman, has the enormous capacity for work which so often distinguishes great publicists. Returning recently from a visit to Pope Leo XIII he found an immense accumulation of mail from all over the world. During May he set about answering it, writing no fewer than 5,000 postal cards and 300 letters. Meanwhile he corrected five hundred galleys of proofs of his new book, "The History of the Nineteenth Century," which will be completed in ten volumes of 1,000 pages each, besides contributing to reviews and other journals.

Eugene Field left but a small estate. Thus far royalties to the total of $3,808 have been received; his books are valued at $6,503, and he owned also an equity of $1,000 in a house in Buena Vista Park, Chicago.

W. S. Stratton, who owns the great Independence mine at Cripple Creek, has an income of $2,000 a day from that property, and as much more from other mines. He has his office over a bicycle store at Colorado Springs, is about forty-eight years of age and looks sixty. His hair is white, and his complexion a mahogany brown, the result of hardships and hard work. He lives in the simplest manner in a little cottage that did not cost over $500, and is very sensitive about being asked for money. It was only after repeated failures that Stratton went prospecting at Cripple Creek. Wandering disconsolately over the mountain side, he found a broken piece of rock which, sent to a Denver chemist, assayed $300 to the ton. He promptly staked out a claim, and found gold almost from the grass roots, the ore growing richer as he dug down.

Is the mouth of Mlle. Ramos of the Varietes Theatre large enough to pronounce the letter S? is the question that a Paris court must decide. She was engaged for minor parts and cast for that of the Post, in a "Revue" brought out at the theatre. All she had to do was to come on the stage on horseback, dressed up as a postilion, to snap her whip and say with a smile, "The Post! I am the Post." That was all. The authors declared that she lisped, and took the part from her and gave her instead that of First Cat, whose speech was limited to three "Meows." She refused to play it, pleading sickness, and the director asks for the $10,000 forfeit for breaking the contract, though he declares he is ready to take $1,000. The actress declares that the director broke the contract in taking away her part without justification.

Highest of all in Leavening Power.—Latest U. S. Gov't Report

Royal Baking Powder

ABSOLUTELY PURE

THINGS AND PEOPLE

It has lately been asserted that Japanese labor is cutting out Chinese, and that the pigtail is being distinctly outrivaled in all branches of service, domestic and otherwise. It is true that the proportion of Japanese laborers to Chinese is rapidly increasing, but this is less due to their superiority than to the fact that there is no law to prevent their immigration, and every month brings new additions to the army of workers. The Chinese, on the other hand, are bringing in no recruits, and many are going on to other places, or back to China. The Japanese students will work for very low wages, and so are employed extensively as waiters, dishwashers, grape-pickers, etc., but the Chinaman is still lord of the kitchen range. No ambitious student of differential calculus or composer of impressionist poetry can beat an every-day cooles at rolls and ragouts, and the people who want a first-class cook still choose a Celestial. And they pay thirty and thirty-five dollars for him, too, in spite of the talk of hard times and reduced wages. Perhaps it is ordained that the Chinese must go in the fields and the boarding houses, but we still cling to the enlightened remnant in our kitchens.

***

There is nothing intrinsically interesting about peddling braces or selling books on subscription. If, however, these roles are merely transition periods in the career of some prominent and wealthy personage, they are invested with the halo of romance. Humanity loves a well graded crescendo effect. Innumerable excellent citizens who heard Rubinstein years ago, remember him only for the Turkish March, in which the illusion was produced of military music a mile down the street gradually approaching, the sound swelling louder and stronger until it burst into a magnificent fortissimo. Then, as gradually, it faded into silence by infinitesimal gradations. Life is full of instances of humility being exalted by luck or hard work, and it is a fillip to one's ambition and learn the poverty-stricken beginnings of men now prominent. All this is apropos of Dr. Daywalt, a light among the Populists and a successful physician, whom misfortune some years ago reduced to the straits of peddling spectacles. He traversed the country round the bay and, in Petaluma, was applied to by a pleasant young woman living with her mother, Mrs. Delaney, in a very wretched lodging for relief from her eyes. She suffered sorely, and he fitted her with glasses that reduced the trouble. Unfortunately the girl had no money to pay even for the spectacles, but referred Daywalt to her father, an itinerant dealer in kindling wood, who slept amidst his scraps and lived on rashers of bacon, which he frizzed over an oil stove. So miserable, apparently, was his condition that his wife obtained a divorce because of failure to provide, and took the daughter away because she feared the girl would starve with the father. Daywalt found the man, talked with him, got some inkling that he was not so poor as he represented, and made him pay for the glasses. Returning to Petaluma some months later, he called on the Delaneys and told them his suspicions. They knew nothing, and he set to work to help them. The result was that he fell in love with the girl, and concluding, if his earnings were eked out with economy there was enough for two, he married her. Probably it was as foolish a thing as he could have done, under the circumstances, for neither Daywalt, his bride, nor any one else had the faintest suspicion of what gifts the future held for them. Nine months later, old Delaney died in apparent destitution. To their surprise the executors found documents which revealed him as a veritable miser. Searching his woodshed they found concealed under the pile of old wood on which the old man slept an iron box full of gold and securities, worth nearly a hundred thousand dollars. This unexpected fortune proved a godsend. Daywalt finished a medical course begun under better auspices, and developed into so shrewd a manager that he has doubled the miser's capital, and outside his profession has also won the prominence in the Populist party, which gives him a voice in its councils.

***

The difficulty of doing justice to the curious characteristics of our Hebrew capitalists is admitted by the writer. He knows, however, with what sympathy and comprehension they will consider a speculation which precedent or instinct leads them finally to reject. This is not a personal experience. Merely something which happened to a lamented friend. He had a railway scheme in his brain, and it was as practical as such prospects are in this depressed era. He took it to a certain Sansome-street Croesus—a stout gentleman of innumerable money bags and infinite credit. Without difficulty a hearing was obtained and the scheme unfolded—as my friend imagined—with extreme lucidity, showing a certain profit for a moderate outlay. When he had gasped out the final sentence the capitalist, in a complaisant and patronizing way, placing his fat hands in a paternal way on the railroad projector's shoulders, said:

"My poy, you should take that proposition to Fourth and Townsend streets. Dose are the peoples what builds railroads."

And yet there are citizens who imagine the task of organizing an opposition transcontinental line mere child's play.

***

Captain Millen Griffith was so much of a figure in the marine life of San Francisco that some comment on his life and individuality is appropriate. A bluff, hearty, vigorous man, he carried into his business and private life the manners of the sea. The art of turning opportunity to advantage he possessed, together with remarkable luck. In spite of the success which followed his ventures, he was not without reversals, for the first fortune achieved before marriage was lost and the Captain had to work hard to start the million he left his children. However, his star guided him first into a big mining venture in Mexico with the Bradburys—the Tayo, which for over ten years yielded him an income of $50,000. His management of the tug boat industry was strong, ardent, prompt and extremely profitable, and he added to his wealth by entering the whaling business, then in its heyday. To illustrate the luck of this bluff old seaman, he had one year but half a dozen steamers out against the entire whaling fleet. Yet that season his vessels captured and tried out several hundred whales, and the ventures of his competitors returned empty. Dozens of similar instances throughout his career might be cited, showing him a veritable favorite of the fickle goddess. Not the least notable was the discovery of "Flying Jib," the lightning pacer, which Captain Griffith picked up for an ordinary carriage horse, at a nominal figure. His practiced eye appreciated the possibilities of his acquisition, and "Flying Jib" was put into training, with such results as the world knows. More than tug boats, whales and mines, the Captain loved horses, and he used to express the reckless audacity of his temperament by driving at full speed a team of travelers behind his drag through San Rafael. He possessed an excellent stable, good judgment and a few excellent friends who loved the imperious daring and blunt heartiness of his individuality. Captain Griffith came to California in '49. His demise followed close after that of his wife, who died July 4th last, after a married life of over forty years.

***

The plans for the coming Horse Show, which is to open December 9th and close on the 12th, are nearly completed, and a number of wise changes have been made in the rules and arrangements. The Association plans to make it not only a social event, but a remarkably good opportunity for the horse raisers of California to exhibit and sell their stock. Special inducements will be offered to the local breeders to take part. A rule that will give more chance to the smaller owners, and so increase the number of entries, is that which restricts the number of prizes one horse or owner can win. This will apply to the horses shown in harness, and will prevent a millionaire breeder like Mr. Hobart from monopolizing the rewards with one or two fine animals. In most classes no preference will be given to horses with docked or trimmed tails. This is partly on account of the growing sentiment against docking, and partly to give a chance to the livery stable competitors, who claim that mutilating the tail of a horse interferes with his sale. Up to September 15th the patrons of last year's show will have the selection of boxes, but after that all boxes and seats will be put up for open sale. A number of new trophies are to be offered.

THE LATE CAPTAIN MILLEN GRIFFITH

***

The whaling cruise, so generously advertised, proved a pleasant marine excursion rather than a successful expedition after oil and blubber. Whales there were in abundance down the coast. At least a score of them spouted within a few lengths of the Queen, but no attempt at a fishing performance was given, though a perfunctory effort at putting out a boat laden with Colonel Wills, an Examiner reporter (female), and several harpoons, was made. The inclusion of the journalist proved the occasion of a controversy between the commander and the agent, who leans to the idea that action without record is worse than futile. However, the four hundred passengers had a delightful sail over a summer sea, smooth and clear as a lake, and saw the wrecked Colombia firmly fixed on the rocks off Pigeon Point. That being attained they returned. On board there was not a solitary case of mal-de-mer.

***

Apropos of Wills, known both as "Colonel" and "Captain," the temptation to relate phases of his career is irrisistible. His source is unrevealed, for like many other geniuses, he arrived here unheralded. Life began for him in these wilds as "runner" for a Stockton paddle steamer. Never was there a better one. His cheek, his energy, his capacity for badinage gave him prestige even in that hardened environment. His boat was always laden with passengers, and so pleased were the owners with his success, that they dressed him in a fashionable garb—a long gray coat and a tall hat—to pursue the avocation more conspicuously. He is, or rather, was, a slim, boyish looking fellow, with a soft moustache and an ingratiating way, and his fortune really began with an introduction to the late Mervyn Donahue. I believe he caught the millionaire at the ferries and, quite unaware of his identity, hustled him on to his steamer before Mervyn knew where he was at. His manner was not lost on the president of the S. F. and North Pacific railroad, and Wills was straightway engaged as city passenger excursion agent with unlimited privileges, passes and the favor of Mr. Donahue himself. The latter meant accompanying the millionaire on trips in the private car to various parts of Sonoma county, together with free champagne and cigars several times a day. In this tropical atmosphere Wills bloomed like an orchid, dressed better than his master and persuaded the National Guard to encamp at Healdsburg. That meant much business for the line and the custody of distinguished visitors to the Passenger Agent, who, on one occasion, had the honor of escorting the late Governor Stoneman to the encampment. This was accomplished in the private car, with superb accessories, and as the Governor, returning to town, stepped on the Tiburon boat, he invited the Excursion Agent to join his staff. Whereupon plain Mr. Wills straightway became Colonel Wills and invested in a cocked hat and brass buttons. Such magnificent bursts of good luck are inevitably followed by periods of collapse. Donahue went to Europe and Wills' fame wilted, faded, and he himself disappeared.

***

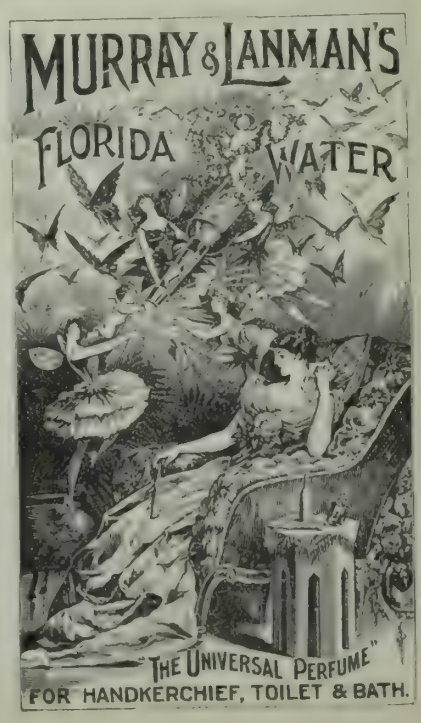
Whither, the record says not. A short time ago Mr. Wills returned and headed for Healdsburg, where he set himself to courting a pretty young woman, who happened to be a bit of an heiress into the bargain. The ingratiating young man won his way to her heart; subsequently to her pocket, for they were married and went traveling, moving hither and thither as the fancy moved them. In the role of husband Wills was inimitable—as long as the coin lasted; he blossomed into smart clothes and smoked good cigars. But the big drafts on the small fortune soon settled its dimensions, and, sadly, he turned again to his wits for a living. Hence the origin of the whaling excursion, which might have succeeded had its projector had ballast to his character. The fellow has nothing but an incorporated fund of self-assurance, however—undoubtedly a talent—but it requires for success an admixture of brains. And yet, in a way, Wills reminds one of Pinkerton, who has a real identity for all lovers of their Stevenson, though he is a much less attractive adventurer. The next move I look for with interest. It is sure he will never starve whoever else goes hungry.

***

A great deal of interest has been roused along the water-front by the arrival of the huge raft of logs from Astoria. A number of attempts to bring lumber to San Francisco this way have been made, but in nearly every case the rafts broke away from their tender and were dashed to pieces. The steam collier Miniola brought this great load down, and four tugs piloted it in safety across the bay, where its composite tree trunks are to be used as piles on the Southern Pacific's Oakland water-front lots. The raft, which is 528 feet long, 51 feet wide and 31 feet deep, contains 450,000 feet of lumber, and it is estimated that this method of bringing it down has saved the company $11,000.

***

The wiseacres are poking much fun at the Crimmins-Martin combination. No one ever suspected the possibility of a union between these gentlemen, whose loudly expressed enmity has been the feature of politics for some time. It seems that Mr. Blattner, when County Clerk, removed a brother of Martin from office, whereupon the latter vowed vengeance, which he obtained the next election, when Blattner was Crimmins' candidate for Sheriff. The little boss used every effort for his friend, but Martin fought him from the start and openly declared for the Democratic nominees, McDade and Haley. Both were elected, and in return his brother, a Republican, was kept in office throughout the Democratic administration. Since then, both leaders have been on the defensive.



THE THEATERS

The Columbia's New Play — Remarks on Tyrone Powers' Lope.

Whatever the captious may say of the initial performance of "The Social Trust," it must be admitted that the cast was good, the stage-settings excellent—in spite of the scant library—and the array of men in the first act magnificent. Six big—one way or the other—creatures.

"Shapes of all sorts and sizes great and tall
that stood along the floor and by the wall;
And some loquacious vessels were; and some listened, perhaps, but never talked at all."

As for the play itself, it is utterly uninspired, but nevertheless has its good points. It would have been better if the authors had denied themselves the coerced "Veraesque" daughter of their first act and the scented note in their last, for these two scenes make one reminescent when one should be interested, and insinuate that Messrs. Morris and Bell lack invention. With Pinero's cleverly constructed "Benefit of the Doubt" fresh in one's mind, the shifting of the scenes and people seems a bit clumsy, but this is a pardonable fault and one that would be easily forgiven in the work of a beginner if there percolated through the mass one drop of red blood or one salt tear; if there were but a throb here and there to suggest the "rapt eyes and hot heart," the enthusiasm and vivid interest of which all ruddy and vigorous things are born. Queries constantly arise in one's mind as the play unfolds. We wonder in the first act why the men were alone in the drawing-room after dinner, and if the women were sitting in the dining-room over their cigarettes and wine. We wonder why Mrs. Brewster went to the despised Mrs. Hallock's ball—unless it was to oblige the playwrights. We wonder why Charteris was there and the worldly aunt, and are profoundly surprised to find that Brewster expects Mrs. Nelson, who loved and saved his wife, to expose her at the end.

The cast was fair throughout. Worthing made love with his usual ardour and apparent sincerity. By the way, it is really alarming to know that such good imitations of the tender passion are to be had; how is one to know when they're the real thing? Frawley appeared for the first time since his retirement from the stage and was given a warm welcome. He and little Hope Ross had the fun—which wasn't very funny—all to themselves. It consisted mainly of definitions of four-cent girls and jibes at Boston. Blanche Bates was good in her nervously alert fashion, and had some of the best lines in the play. She raised quite a laugh with her remarks about Western women who passed their lives collecting wedding rings, and her anecdote of the woman whose divorced husband proposed again over a card table. "My hand," said the fair divorcee, "is not so bad that I have to take up one of my discards."

The indolent, melancholy Power was as natural and interesting as usual, but why, oh, why, does he persist in kissing a girl, then loping elegantly away from her, without any object whatever for his canter? In real life, you wouldn't do that, Mr. Power, you know you wouldn't. You would stay just where you were until a serious interruption occurred—that is if she was as pretty as Blanche Bates.

* * *

"The Gay Parisians," who, by the way, are very unhappy, are still filling the Baldwin with merry laughter, but so far we have not had even a glimpse of Mademoiselle Martinot's famous diamond garters, and I, for one, feel defrauded. Instead, Her Fair Chubbiness displays some very charming costumes—which cling to her lovingly—and considerable talent in a role so slight and frivolous that it would be like breaking a butterfly on a wheel to analyze it. The play itself is absurd, improbable, almost impossible, yet it is written with so feathery a pen and in such a light-hearted irresponsible fashion that one throws reason and other dull, kill-joy things to the wind and laughs like a happy child—that is, unless one's so-called "culture" has gotten the best of one's sense of humor and left an arid waste where there should be bubbling springs.

Of course when you are leaving and it's all over you may say, "What a commonplace farce," or "I hate horse-play," but nevertheless you will have laughed.

The cast, bar two — Mrs. Phillips and Sadie Martinot—is mediocre. Ferguson is funny of course, very funny, but it is nature not art—he would be just as amusing at a funeral—and the rest are hopeless. I felt a sincere pity for the poor creature who played the part of the nephew and had to say "You stop" and "Go away," when the pretty little maid tried to kiss him. It was painful, unnatural and ineffably sickening. Quite the most mawkish thing I've seen in years, even on the stage. A great many people laughed, it is true, but it was in a half-hearted fashion, and I please myself by fancying each cackle was accompanied by a large mental reservation and a burning desire to thrash the young idiot.

On the whole, though, one can laugh hilariously over "The Gay Parisians." It leaves an empty space in your soul, for it doesn't really tickle your intellect, and it leaves you as unsatisfied as laughing gas would. PEG WOFFINGTON.

MISS ADEL RELGARDE
OF THE ALCAZAR STOCK COMPANY

DRAMATIC NOTES

"The Gay Parisians" make their last appearance at the Baldwin Sunday night.

"On the Bowery," a sensational picture of East Side life in New York, will be given at the California a week from Monday. Steve Brodie plays the leading part.

"Madame Sans-Gene" will be put on at the Baldwin to-morrow night for a three weeks' run, under the management of Augustus Pitou. Miss Kathryn Kidder will play the part of the wonderful Frenchwoman, laundress and duchess, with Mr. Augustus Cook as Napoleon.

The Alcazar will open next Monday night with a stock company under the management of Messrs. Belasco, Doane and Jordan. The entire house has been renovated, and a new system of ventilation introduced. One of Nat Goodwin's plays, "Turned Up," will be the first produced.

In November, Henry Irving will present at the Lyceum Theatre, London, a production of "Madame Sans Gene." The great English actor will take the part of Napoleon, while Ellen Terry will appear in the title role. Mr. Irving is said to have some original ideas regarding the stage impersonation of "the little corporal," and will introduce them into his performance when the play is put on in the English metropolis.

The new Wein-Stube, or annex to the Orpheum ,opens this (Saturday) evening. For the coming week the English specialty artists known as The Cosman Couple are expected to arrive from Australia and Errol and Filson appear in a society sketch. Favor and Sinclair remain, and so do the four Nelson Sisters, who are credited with doing the best acrobatic work ever seen on the Orpheum stage. This will be the last week of Herr Techow's trained cats. Matinees every Wednesday, Saturday and Sunday.

L. R. Stockwell is to be the recipient of a double testimonial benefit at the California Theatre to-morrow (Sunday) afternoon and night. In the afternoon will be rendered an exceptionally strong vaudeville bill, on the programme of which will appear such names as Sadie Martinot, T. D. Frawley, Wilton Lackaye, Mme. Natali, Blanche Bates, Maclyn Arbuckle, Harry Corson Clark, J. Raffael, Edwin Favor, Edith Sinclair, Tilley Morrissey. The Fillipies, Rita De Angeles, Ferris Hartman, Levina Ray, the Carmen Mandolin Quartette and many others. A one-act comedietta, "The Picture," will be presented by T. Daniel Frawley, Maclyn Arbucle and Blanche Bates. In the evening the farewell performance of Rose Coghlan in the dramatized version of "Carmen" will take place. The box office is now open for the sale of seats.

A lively interest is being taken by the mediums and spiritualists in the expose of spiritualism to be given at the Auditorium, Sunday night by T. C. Alexander. Several mediums have responded to Mr. Alexander's sweeping challenge and have announced their intention of being present for the purpose of producing manifestations which they claim are genuine, and cannot be exposed. The mediums are up in arms, Mr. Alexander is determined and confident of routing them, and an exciting evening is promised when the contending forces meet.

Miss Lillian Dane, a graduate of the Columbia Theatre School of Dramatic Art, has been engaged to play an important role in "A Railroad Ticket" Company this season. Although she has been on the stage but six weeks, she is to receive $50 per week.

Senator Perkins and the Honorable W. W. Foote, are engaged in getting up a benefit for Mr. W. J. Egan, a deaf mute who goes to Washington to the school for the deaf and dumb. The Reliance Club will assist the young man when the entertainment takes place at the Macdonough Theatre in Oakland, on Monday, September 7th.

The Columbia Theatre School of Dramatic Art, is rehearsing a new play by Alice Yates Grant, entitled, "The Dummy," which they will produce at their next public performance.

Georgia Cayvan has decided to open at Palmer's Theatre on October 3rd in W. R. Wallts' new play written expressly for her, entitled "Mary Pennington, Spinster."

"The Wife" will follow "The Social Trust," at the Columbia Theatre.

San Francisco is to have a new musical departure in a series of grand orchestral concerts, to be given at the Baldwin Theatre, under the direction of Gustav Heinrichs and Sigmund Biel, with William L. Greenbaum as business manager. Three concerts are planned, to be given at 3:15 P. M., on alternate Fridays; that is, on October 16th and 30th, and November 16th.

Fifty musicians will take part, and each concert will have some special feature. At one Schumann's setting to Lord Brahms and St. Saeins will have promiwhile some actor reads the work. Dvorak, Godard, Wagner, Humperdink, Brahms and St. Saens will have prominent places on the programs.. Tickets for the series may be bought for two dollars and a half, and it is hoped that the community will loyally support this new move, not only as a pleasure, but as a means of cultivation too valuable to be neglected.

NOTES

Invitations are out for the wedding of Miss Virginia Carter Thompson, daughter of Robert A. Thompson, to Mr. Alan Dean Whittaker, which will take place on the 9th of September, at the Church of the Incarnation, Santa Rosa. The bride's father is the editor and proprietor of the Santa Rosa Democrat, and is one of the leading citizens of the place. His brother is the present minister to Brazil. Mr. Whittaker is well-known as an electrical engineer.

Every day brings fresh arrivals to the Hotel Vendome. Among the many who have registered there this week are Mrs. P. A. Hearst of San Francisco, accompanied by Miss Annie Apperson of Pleasanton; Mr. and Mrs. Payot, accompanied by Mrs. L. H. Curtis and Mildred Curtis; James Campbell and family of Honolulu; H. Dutard, Cutler Paige, Sigmund Beel, R. B. Hooper and wife.

The admirable photos of Biondi in the last issue were taken by Marceau, to whom due credit is now given.

This paper is printed by the well known Hicks-Judd Company of this city.

The oldest shipping house at Port St. Mary's, Spain, is the well known one of Duff Gordon & Co., shippers of the Duff Gordon & Co. sherries.

Occidental Restaurant, 337 Bush street. Headquarters for tourists. Separate rooms for families. Meals a la carte. Lunch 50c. Best French Dinner in the city, 75c. Joseph Munier, proprietor.

Dr. C. W. Decker, Dentist, 806 Market Street

Fall Style Neckwear and Hosiery at J. W. Carmany's, 25 Kearny Street.

The Maison Riche serves an elegant dinner at popular prices.

Adams' Tutti-Frutti Chewing Gum for Indigestion

The Original Swain's Bakery, 213 Sutter St., stands without a rival and has stood the test for years. The most delicious meals are served by gentlemanly attendants, and the management takes pride in having everything orderly. It is just the place for business men and ladies out shopping to lunch.

The costliest flavor of Schilling's Best tea is as good a money's-worth as the rest; but it is a different sort of money's-worth — rare aroma, an eloquent appeal to epicurean tastes.

It is cheap — two hundred cups to a pound — and it makes a plain meal luxurious.

Ideal Blend, $1.25, at grocer's.

Chew Adams' Pepsin Tutti-Frutti. It is sovereign for indigestion and agreeable to the taste

QUEEN LILY SOAP

BEST ON EARTH
FOR LAUNDRY USE

Patronize Home Industry

MUSICAL SNAPSHOTS

H. R. Haweis' Impressions of Certain Noted Musicians.

The competence of Dr. R. H. Haweis as a musical gossip is undeniable. His life has [illegible] musicians, he lives, moves and has his being among them. He knew Liszt and Rubenstein and Thalberg. He is familiar with Paderewski, with Patti, and the highly respectable Albani. A figure in London society, which Lady Jeune insists has become democratic, he moves round among lions as one of them, and expresses his mind every Sunday with a mannerly eloquence which hurts no one's feelings, and is more interesting than most sermons. In the "Contemporary Review," Dr. Haweis chats about artists in a pleasant, good-natured way, and offers a budget of entertaining reminiscences. He commences by excusing his tendencies in the direction of personalities thus:

A book on musicians, their associates and surroundings, by one who has known them, ought to be one of the most varied and entertaining of compilations. Musicians touch so many circles—they are so increasingly necessary to our life. They seem to meet us at every turn; they are the go-betweens of such widely divided sections of society. We pass in their company from kings to peasants; from the applause and glamour of courts to the starvation of garrets.

We revel in Bohemia and worship in cathedrals, join triumphal processions, frequent the cultured homes of literature and art, and hob and nob familiarly with the mighty notorieties, singers, players, composers, who have set continents aflame, and died not infrequently in penury and neglect.

It was at a large party at Miss Frances Power Cobbe's, I remember. Mr. Froude and John Richard Green, whose "Short History" had just appeared, were both in the room, and I was placed in a most embarassing position. The historian Green, who was one of my greatest friends, wanted to be introduced to the historian Froude, whom I knew slightly; but Froude, associating him with his implacable foe, the historian Freeman (a great ally of "Johnny Green," as Freeman used to call him), absolutely declined, and so Froude had to be dodged and Green put off in one way or another to avoid further mishaps. Green was never aware of this, and died, as I know, with very friendly feelings towards Froude. He said Froude improved very much as he went on writing, though he always thought him historically unscrupulous.

Charles Halle once said to me, "Fanny Kemble was the most difficult person I ever had to deal with. I remember one day at Manchester she was to read 'A Midsummer Night's Dream,' with Mendelssohn's music. Well, something in the lighting, or the desk, or the music, or the chair, did not quite suit her; but at that late hour nothing could be altered. So Fanny Kemble simply sat down outside on the stairs in the passage and cried. Nothing, she declared, would induce her to begin until everything was exactly to her taste! I implored her to go in, as the place was crowded and the people impatient. At last I got her on to the platform. I never saw a woman in such a passion about such a trifle."

She was then (about 1856) not so stout as she afterwards became. Her dark face and black hair, piercing black eyes, and long black velvet dress, gave her a strange and tragic appearance, which she entirely shook off in the early love scenes, but which served to color profoundly the terrible poison tragedy of the close. Fanny Kemble had an imperfect appreciation of music. She was for leaving out this and curtailing that. But Halle was firm about Mendelssohn, and she had to give in.

I like to know all about those whom I admire, nor will their frailties or idiosyncracies make me love them less. Who was it, when some one quoted the stale proverb, "No man is a hero to his valet," replied, "That is because the valet is not a hero"? Depend upon it, there is more to be learned—and if we had but Christ-like eyes, more to be loved—in the whole of a personality than in a part. And what is even unlovely sometimes acts only as a foil.

I like to know that when Carlyle stood on his hearthrug lashing himself into a fury and abusing even his best friends like pickpockets, there was a sly twinkle in his eye which no printing ink could catch, but which deprived the satire of its venom; but only those who saw Carlyle on his hearthrug knew that.

I am tickled to know that Wagner was an exact and expensive dresser, and that Beethoven was a sloven with an old coat and slippers trodden down at the heels. It interests me to hear that Paganini always carried a shirt in his fiddle-case, because he sweated so profusely over his solos that he had to change between the parts if he had to play twice. I even care to learn that Mendelssohn was a perfect child about pastry, which he could never resist, and which he always ate (especially cherry pie), and which always disagreed with him; that Schumann injured his third finger by tying it back to his wrist with a string because he hoped to make it more supple—it ended, however, in his almost losing the use of it; that Bulow got up in the night to play over passages which he thought he was likely to play inaccurately at his prodigious recitals; that when Thalberg was at the hight of his fame he wouldn't even carry an umbrella for fear of it cramping the muscles of his hand; that Malibran loved nothing so much as romping with Moscheles' children on the floor; that Paganini was so stingy that he would stand up under shelter in the rain and keep a whole opera-house full waiting sooner than call a cab. Professor Ella told me he found him one day crouching under the Arcade in Regent street and that he gave this artless explanation: "Hackney coaches," he said, "in London were so expensive!" and this when he had doubled the prices at the opera house where he played, and was rolling in money.

I love to think of Linley, the famous violoncello player, when he was upset in a coach accident, rushing for his violoncello case, and regardless of the cries and confusion, taking out his precious instrument, seating himself in a ditch by the roadside, and playing away as if nothing in the world signified now that his beloved companion was found to be unfractured.

The extreme sensibility of the musical temperament renders it singularly attractive and fascinating to many less gifted natures, and often redeems it from a good deal that is disadvantageous and even gross.

Oury, the great violinist (my old master), was a coarse looking fellow, and not over-polished in manner, but he had a delicacy of sentiment that made him vibrate to every gradation of musical sound, like an Æolian harp. Ernst was physically, especially in his later years, a nervous wreck; but to the end, when he pulled himself together, he gave forth weird melodies which seemed to belong to the music of another sphere. I have, however, heard him play deplorably out of tune, and once, in the middle of a Beethoven quartette, he laid down his violin suddenly without attemptimg a passage of no very great difficulty, saying, "I can no more." Well do I remember his cadaverous face, long black hair, and pale, thin, taper fingers. Ernst was by far the most bewitching master of the Cremona that has appeared since Paganini. Chopin's temperament was very similar, but less wild. Chopin, too, in his last years lost nerve, and was unequal to playing his more elaborate compositions.

When I was staying with Liszt in 1881 at the Cardinal Hohenlohe's palace at Tivoli, near Rome, I noticed how carefully he avoided those more startling passages in Chopin's music with which, forty years previously, he had electrified the musical world. Liszt well knew the inexorable limits imperiously assigned to him by the "Vandal Years;" his rapid octaves, however, were phenomenal to the end.

Well would it be if all artists could gauge their executive powers as accurately! One of the most remarkable survivals of vocal powers I ever came across was Madame Caradori Allan. She was born in 1800, and I heard her sing in about 1858 at Brighton, when her staccato notes in a famous song of Mozart's were quite phenomenal. The good lady was very much annoyed at the well meant but rather brutal bonhommie of a certain elderly royal duke, who, after hearing her when she was considerably past fifty, in the same song, poked her unceremoniously in the ribs. "Bravo, Caradori! dam well sung for an old woman like you"—from which it appears that royal tact is hardly like charity, that never fails.

Madame Grisi made sad mistakes in her declining years. Unlike Jenny Lind, she never knew when to leave off. She retired, but found life insupportable. Grisi came back to the concert room when far too lame to attempt the stage. I heard her sing at the Crystal Palace somewhere in the sixties. She imprudently tried Casta Diva, her great song in "Norma," but reached her high notes with a painful effort. The old men who flocked to hear her and remembered her triumphs in the thirties and forties sat crying like children.

How different this from Madame Lind-Goldschmidt, who, although she had long retired from the public stage, could still sing ballads like "The Three Ravens," and some of Mendelssohn's Lieder, and even "O for the Wings of a Dove," with incomparable effect. She sang till quite late in life in the chorous of the Bach choir, under the direction of Otto Goldschmidt, her husband; and one day a little choir boy of mine, who also sang in the Bach choir, came home breathless with excitement, relating how at rehearsal the solo lady had failed them, and how Madame Lind had volunteered to sing the part in "Hear My Prayer," and how nothing he had ever heard was like it, and nothing could ever be like it again!

MOORE'S POISON OAK REMEDY
Cures Poison Oak and all Skin Diseases. Sold by all druggists

BOOK NOTES

A novel that is frankly trashy, and does not pretend to be anything else, has its place in the world, and a certain value of its own. There are times of mental and physical exhaustion when it comes as a ministering angel. But even trash has become invaded by the present fad for being clever and having thoughts, and so has endangered its excuse for living. "Lady Val's Elopement" (J. B. Lippincott Co.) in spite of an abominable style built on Charles Reade's worst literary faults, would have been a very tolerable book of its kind, if it could only have been contented to keep its place. There are love affairs unnumbered, noblemen in disguise, unexpected fortunes, a timely death or two, and all the usual paraphernalia of a good, silly novel, but the authoress—John Bickerdyke is her name—was not content, and had to lug in socialistic problems and model cottages. (For sale by Joseph A. Hoffmann, 120 Sutter Street.)

From Berkeley comes an artistic little book in a rough grey cover, containing a new poem by Charles Augustus Keeler, author of lyrics and sonnets. The Promise of the Ages is an attempt to unite in harmony the warring factions of science and religion, showing the struggles of an earnest mind between the two. In the author's own words, "The poem recognizes the principle of evolution, but seeks to transcend this with the higher thought of the ultimate reality of the spirit. It is an attempt at a synthesis of the essential ideas of Darwin and Emerson." The poem touches on the very deepest problems of life, which a heart-strong boy is trying to work out for himself, helped by a wise idealist known as the Prophet. The boy is a strong, passionate character, who looks his temtations squarely in the face, and so conquers them.

"Oft-times he dreamed of sacrifice,—
Of losing self in him he loved,—
Of utter faith, unthinking, dead,—
The Prophet's word alone his law;
But, while he thought, a sense of shame
Crept like a vapor from the grave,
To shroud him in a sheet of scorn.
'Abandon self? Nay, not to God
Would I relinquish selfhood's claim!'"

Not a rough passage mars the rythmic swing of the metre, which changes often enough to give a sense of variety, and is interspersed with musical little lyrics. The following celebrates the world's evolution:

Man regenerate,
Love insatiate,
Hope with joy elate,
Groping and growing,—
Thus our world shall be
Climbing to liberty,
Glad in its victory,
Reaping and sowing.

Not through faith alone,
Light on our journey shone;
Slowly our hope has grown,
Lailed while groping;
Sowing the seed we reap,
Strong from the tears we weep;
Love that can never sleep,
Still keeps us hoping.

MAGAZINE NOTES

For several years Dr. Weir Mitchell has been at work on a novel of American life and character. The story is called "Hugh Wynn, Free Quaker," and will begin as a serial in the November Century. The scene is laid in Philadelphia, before and during the Revolutionary War, and among the characters are Washington, Franklin, Lafayette, Dr. Benjamin Rush, Benedict Arnold, and Major Andre. The hero of the story serves on Washington's staff.

Messrs. Hutchinsons' new magazine is to appear in October under the conduct of Mr. W. H. Wilkins, who is known as the joint-author, with Mr. Herbert Vivian, of one or two novels of a satirical character. It is said among those who claim to know, that the editorship was first offered to Miss Marie Corelli, and that a very handsome salary was proposed to her. That lady, however, was disinclined to undertake the necessary labor, which she felt would interfere with her fecundity as a novelist. Mr. Wilkins is a young man and has abundant energy.

The estate of the late Eugene Field consists of an equity of $1,000 in his Buena Park home, $3,803 in royalties from Messrs. Charles Scribner's Sons, $6,503 worth of books and furniture, and $100 in cash. The furniture includes a Gladstone ax and a Jefferson Davis chair.

A new weekly is to be started in Oakland and San Francisco to vehicle the musical and literary gossip of the two cities, and is to be called "The Artistic Life." The editor, Mr. H. A. Redfield, a well-known impressario, promises the first issue of the paper early in October.

The first number of the "Quartier Latin," the magazine of the American Art Students in Paris, is a monthly of the size and appearance of the "Chap Book." The letter press is all in English and is concerned almost conclusively with art topics. The illustrations are the most interesting feature of the monthly, which is hardly as original in style and make-up as might have been expected from the Bohemians of the celebrated quarter from which it is named.

"The Lark" for September! A sensation on every page, "pitched," as Vivette would say, "in every key of the diapason." And Vivette herself gayer than ever, appears in her maddest adventure, playing with the City of Boston as no one ever dared before. Yone Noguchi contributes "Two Moods," of remarkable power, one of which is introduced by this beautiful piece of phrasing:

'Sliding through the window of sea-green Heaven,
Innocent, misty vapours enter the roomy hall of the Universe,
Exhailing from the formless chimney called Spring, where the God, alone, transmutes His poetry of Beauty."

The current number of "The Lark" returns blithely to the abandon of its first numbers with the improvement in style that has come to it in the seventeen months of its existence. It is evident, however, to any "Larkaeologist" that with all its humor, the seriousness of "The Lark's" mission is being more and more accented, and the virile and optimistic quality of its verse is perhaps "The Lark's" true raison-d'etre.

The Outlook's magazine number for July contains a personal study of Major William McKinley, by Murat Halstead; one of Mr. William J. Bryan, by Richard Linthicum; a sketch of Harriet Beecher Stowe, by J. R. Howard; and a paper on "The Higher Life of Philadelphia," by Talcott Williams, all profusely illustrated.

Books Received.

"The Flaw in the Marble," by Harry C. Edwards. Published by the Frederick A. Stokes Co.

"Black Diamonds," by Maurus Jokai, translated by Frances A. Gerald. Harper & Brothers, publishers.

"A Master of Fortune," by Julian Sturgis. Frederick A. Stokes Co.

"My Literary Zoo," by Kate Sanborn. D. Appleton & Co. For sale by Wm. Doxey.

"A Journey in Other Worlds," by John Jacob Astor. D. Appleton & Co.

"The Pith of Astronomy," by S. G. Bayne. Harpers.

"A Story of the Heavenly Camp-Fires." Harpers.

NOW READY

HARPER'S MAGAZINE

FOR SEPTEMBER

CONTAINS THE SECOND PART OF

Mark Twain's New Story

TOM SAWYER, DETECTIVE

The most vigorous delineation of American life in the last generation since the appearance of "Huckleberry Finn." Illustrations by A. B. Frost.

FIRST IN PEACE

BY PROFESSOR WOODROW WILSON

portraying the character of Washington during the "critical period" between the close of the Revolution and his election as first President of the United States. Illustrations by Howard Pyle.

AMONG THE TREES
By ANNA C. BRACKETT

THE ART OF DRIVING
By HENRY CHILDS MERWIN

A SUMMER AMONG CLIFF DWELLINGS
By DR. T. MICHELL PRUDDEN with characteristic pictorial illustrations.

MUSICAL CELEBRITIES OF VIENNA
By WILLIAM VON SACHS
with 12 portraits of eminent living composers.

THE DEATH OF ESPARTERO
A vivid sketch of a Spanish bull-fight, by Royal Cortissoz.

FOUR GOOD SHORT STORIES

HARPER & BROTHERS, Publishers, New York

Gladness Comes

With a better understanding of the transient nature of the many physical ills which vanish before proper efforts—gentle efforts—pleasant efforts—rightly directed. There is comfort in the knowledge that so many forms of sickness are not due to any actual disease, but simply to a constipated condition of the system, which the pleasant family laxative, Syrup of Figs, promptly removes. That is why it is the only remedy with millions of families, and is everywhere esteemed so highly by all who value good health. Its beneficial effects are due to the fact, that it is the one remedy which promotes internal cleanliness, without debilitating the organs on which it acts. It is therefore all important, in order to get its beneficial effects, to note when you purchase, that you have the genuine article, which is manufactured by the California Fig Syrup Co. only, and sold by all reputable druggists.

If in the enjoyment of good health, and the system is regular, then laxatives or other remedies are not needed. If afflicted with any actual disease, one may be commended to the most skillful physicians, but if in need of a laxative, then one should have the best, and with the well-informed everywhere, Syrup of Figs stands highest and is most largely used and gives most general satisfaction.

Study This Out. It will not appear again.

$50.00 IN GOLD GIVEN AWAY

Who can form the greatest number of words from the letters in TOILERS? You are smart enough to make fifteen or more words, we feel sure, and if you do you will receive a good reward. Do not use any letter more times than it appears in the word. No proper nouns. No foreign words. Use any dictionary that is standard. Use plurals. Here is an example of the way to work it out: To, toil, toils, set, sot, sit, oil, oils, let, etc. These words count. The publisher of "Woman's World" and "Jenness Miller Monthly" will pay $20 in gold to the person able to make the largest list of words from the letters in the word TOILERS; $10 for the second largest; $5 for the third; $5 for the fourth and $2 each for the five next largest lists. The above rewards are given free and without consideration for the purpose of attracting attention to our handsome ladies' magazine, twenty-four pages, ninety-six long columns, finely illustrated, and all original matter, long and short stories by the best authors; price $1 per year. It is necessary for you, to enter the contest, to send 12 two-cent stamps for a three-months' trial subscription with your list of words, and every person sending the 24 cents and a list of fifteen words or more is guaranteed an extra present by return mail (in addition to the magazine), of a large 256-page book, "The Story of an African Farm," by Ralph Iron, one of the most remarkable books of the age. Satisfaction guaranteed in every case or your money refunded. Lists should be sent at once, and not later than September 20, so that the names of successful contestants may be published in the October issue. Our publication has been established nine years. We refer you to any mercantile agency for our standing. Write now. Address J. H. PLUMMER, Publisher, 905 Temple Court Building, B 246, New York City.

H. B. PASMORE

William Shakespeare, London, Conservatory, Leipsic

Teacher of Singing and Theory of Music

Will resume teaching August 4th. Classes in Harmony now organizing. For terms address

1424 Washington Street

Reception hour, Tuesdays at 1:30

Ziska Institute : 1606 Van Ness Ave.

School for Girls. English, French, German.
Thirtieth year begins August 3d.
MME. B. ZISKA, A.M., Principal.

JOHN HARADEN PRATT

TEACHER OF PIANO
SONGS ARRANGED
3021 Buchanan Street
Orders left with Sherman, Clay & Co.

Miss Adie's Boarding and Day School

(KINDERGARTEN)
2117 California St., bet. Buchanan and Laguna
English, French, German Reopens August 3d

S. F. CARPET BEATING AND RENOVATING WORKS

D. MACKINTOSH & CO.
Successors to S. S. Ferguson & Co.
Renovating, Laying and Refitting Carpets a Specialty
Telephone South 36 23 and 25 10th St., S. F.

A NOTE FROM NEWPORT

Newport came in for its full share of the murderous heat, and for a week society was utterly prostrated. The Casino ball was given up without a single sigh of regret. People not only died, but broke dinner engagements—a thing that has never been tolerated before in Newport. Some sent a doctor's certificate with their excuses, some just telegraphed and didn't care what anyone thought. Nobody, not even a Newport hostess, could keep a record of social sins when the mercury had climbed up out of the top of the thermometer, so this week will be as though it had never been, and the delinquent will have a chance to retrieve, now that cooler weather has come.

The Newport Horse Show is to have a new feature this year—a class for women's turnouts. The feminine whips are to drive their rigs to the grounds, but will take their places among the spectators while the judging is going on. A number of spider phaetons will compete, and Miss Edith Mills has entered her four-pony turnout, which is certain to win a prize. The fact that the horse show will be almost entirely an amateur affair makes it much more attractive from a social standpoint.

The illustrated periodicals still cling to the delusion that the fashionable bathing suit is a gaudy thing of stripes and frivolity, as decollete as possible in every direction, but as a matter of fact the quietest and simplest of swimming costumes are in favor among the upper ten. Black mohair is the material generally used, and it is made for genuine encounters with the ocean, not for a beach ornament.

Speaking of fashions, everybody is wearing sashes now. Sometimes they tie in back with little bows and long ends, and sometimes they tie in front, or over one shoulder, or down one hip; and as for material, they are of every conceivable kind, from tulle to velvet. Even street gowns have them, made of black satin, about eight inches wide, and arranged like a corselet. It is a pretty fashion now, but dressmakers whisper that their long ends are an indication of coming panels—velvet panels let into the sides of our cherished plain skirts. Everyone knows it is only a short step from that to overskirts and drapery. Must we submit?

Think of the great Futurity, the most valuable of the American turf prizes, being won by a two-year-old that had never raced in the East before, with an unknown jockey who likewise came out of the West. Marcus Daly, the copper king from Montana, must be fully a hundred and fifty thousand dollars richer for his plucky colt's performance last Saturday. It was a perfect day, and a mighty crowd gathered at Sheepshead Bay to win and lose and shout themselves hoarse. C. T. Patterson's Ornament was the favorite, and as the competitors trotted out on to the track, he drew the loudest applause; but the owner of Ogden kept on saying nothing and putting out more money on the innocent-looking brown colt. There was some delay at the start. Challenger gave as much trouble as possible, and Rhodesia got very gay, while Panmure was downright ugly, but after wasting eighteen minutes the flag fell, and they were off. There were ten in all, but interest soon gathered about three—Ornament, Rhodesia and Ogden. At the head of the home stretch Rhodesia was no longer in it, and the chestnut and the brown had it all between them. Tuberville, the little jockey from the West, took up his whip, and, a sixteenth from the finish, was a length ahead of Sloane on the favorite. Ornament made a plucky fight, but that length never lessened, and he came in second, to Ogden's first. Rodermond, who had been creeping up, came in third, then there was a great gap, for Rhodesia only struggled home just ahead of Scottish Chieftain. Opinions differ as to the amount Mr. Daly won, but nearly all agree that he effected the biggest coup in the history of American racing.

SALLY ANDREWS.

When you are selecting a wedding or a birthday present, go to S. & G. Gump's, 113 Geary street. They have a magnificent variety, just arrived from Europe, from which to select.

Hotel St. Nicholas, corner Market, Hayes, Larkin and Ninth. American or European plan. Ira R. and James H. Doolittle.

Maison Tortoni French Rotisserie, 111 O'Farrell street. Private dining rooms, banquet hall. S. Constantini, proprietor.

DR. H. G. YOUNG—Bridges and teeth without plates a specialty. 1841 Polk street.

LATE VERSE

Why Is It?

Why is it that the outcast cur
Securely loafs around,
While the beribboned poodle pet
Is landed in the pound?

—Washington Star.

After Twenty Years.

They parted, with clasps of hand
And kisses, and burning tears.
They met, in a foreign land,
After some twenty years:

Met as acquaintances meet,
Smilingly, tranquil-eyed—
Not even the least little beat
Of the heart, upon either side.

They chatted of this and that
The nothings that make up life;
She in a Gainsborough hat,
And he in black for his wife.

—T. B. ALDRICH.

No Cause to Sigh.

Moon, she come a-swingin' low;
How-de do, mer lady,
Time foh Mr. Sun ter go,
Meet you by an' by.
Clouds am swingin' in de west,
An' de rainbows build dah nest
Jes' above de mountain's crest—
Ain't no cause ter sigh.
Missie Moon, she smile so sweet,
How-de do, mer lady,
Daylight jes' gib in complete.
Meet you by an' by.
Watch dem colors cross de scene;
See dat pink an' white an' green?
Watah-millions what dey mean.
Ain't no cause ter sigh.

—Washington Star.

His No More.

'Tis mine no more, in cynic wise,
To sing of others' hair and eyes,
Or wander, fettered by no chain,
At will through all the fair demesne
Where light-won love as lightly flies.
Others may stray, when daylight dies,
With Silvias or Rosalies,
By whispering stream or darkling lane;
'Tis mine no more.
To you alone my songs shall rise,
No rival in my rhapsodies
Shall have a part; nor e'er again
My heart shall know another's reign,
For in your keeping, dear, it lies;
'Tis mine no more.

—Pall Mall Gazette.

She Waits for Him.

When, worn and tired with toil and care,
I homeward wheel my way,
A thought dispels my dark despair
And lights the homeward way;
A vision fair far up the street
With straining eyes I see—
I hurry then my love to meet—
I know she waits for me.

She waits for me, my love, my own,
She greets me with a smile,
I hear again her tender tone,
It shortens every mile.
She waits for me, because, you see,
Like lightning she can go—
At every turn she waits for me—
I ride so awful slow!

—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

Caught in the Act.

Over dusky mountains of gray, love, the moon flung her silver light,
And crept like a ghost, to our trysting place,
thro' the throbbing gloom of the night.

It shone on our hands close clasping, like the feathery fall of a kiss,
But my heart grew almost envious, that she should have shared our bliss.

A tress of my hair lay against your lips, and the moon shone on it so fair,
That you whispered, it looked like a silvery web, woven out of a tangle of hair.

Then I bent my head down close to your heart, where the darker shadows lay,
And your lips clung to mine in a selfish kiss, as a cloud drove the moon away.

—L. F. M.

Touches a Tender Spot.

Once I wrote a charming sonnet
To my Lady Mary's bonnet,
And I called it smart and fetching, and I called it highest art;
And I vowed each time I met her
With it on I loved her better,
And I ended by affirming that it simply touched my heart.
We were wed, but Mary's bonnets
Never move me now to sonnets;
If they did I'd spend in rhyming of my life
the greater part.
True, her millinery's charming,
But the bills are most alarming,
And they touch my pocket deeper than the bonnets touch my heart.

—Mary Clarke Huntington in N. Y. Sun.

If you wish to look neat have your suits cleaned and pressed for $1.00. Bay City Clothing Renovatory, 221½ Geary, rooms 19, 20, 21. 'Phone Main 5859.

J. F. Cutter

EXTRA

Old Bourbon

has been a staple family and medicinal whiskey for a quarter-century

E. MARTIN
—AND—
CO.
411 MARKET ST.
SAN FRANCISCO

Its Purity
A Surety
Of Its Excellence

Vina Brandy

Accept No Substitute
None So Good
None So Pure

Vina Distillery Co.
819 Market St., S. F.

MENNEN'S BORATED TALCUM

TOILET POWDER

Approved by Highest Medical Authorities as a Perfect Sanitary Toilet Preparation

For infants and adults
Delightful after shaving
Positively relieves Prickley Heat, Nettle Rash, Chafed Skin, Sunburn etc. Removes Blotches, Pimples; makes the skin smooth and healthy.
Take No Substitutes. Sold by druggists or mailed for 25 cts.
SAMPLE MAILED (Name this paper) FREE
GERHARD MENNEN CO., Newark, N. J.

Wedding Invitations are properly engraved and in correct form, at ROBERTSON'S

FRANK K. LANE G. WHITFIELD LANE

LANE & LANE

Attorneys and Counselors

Room 202
Crocker Building, San Francisco

HEALTHFUL! INVIGORATING!

CRECIENTE

Imported Sea Salt for Bathing

SOLD BY DRUGGISTS AND GROCERS

BAY STATE OYSTER HOUSE AND GRILL ROOM

15 Stockton Street

Oysters served in all styles. Orders for Theatre Parties given special attention M. M. ADLER, Prop.

FINEST ON THE MARKET

BEWARE OF IMITATIONS

EEL RIVER CREAMERY

SEE THAT THIS STAMP IS ON END OF SQUARE

A FINE GRAIN DELICIOUS FLAVORED BUTTER

If you appreciate a DELICACY
Ask your Dealer for the BRAND

The Big Show of the World
CENTRAL PARK
SAN FRANCISCO 10 DAYS COMMENCING ONLY THURS. EVG. SEPT. 3
Two Performances Daily: Afternoon at 2, Evening at 8
THE GREAT
ADAM 4PAW AND SELLS BROS.
America's Greatest Shows Combined!
DON'T MISS SEEING
2 GREAT PARADES UNITED 2
AT 10 A.M. SEPT. 3
The Largest Menagerie in the World!
4 BIG CIRCUSES 4
300 STAR ARTISTS 300
100 GREAT ACTS 100

Two Herds of Performing Elephants. Educated Seals and Sea Lions. Two Great Hippo tamuses. The Only Living Rhin ceros. Greatest Performing Beasts. Beyond All Comparison the Largest, Richest and Most Complete Arenic and Zoological Entertainment in the World. Two Performances Daily, at 2 and 8 p.m. Door open an hour earlier. Seating Capacity 15,000. Twenty-five Uniformed Ushers. Numbered Coupons. Actually Reserved Seats on Sale at Pacific Music Co.'s, 816 Market St.

BALDWIN THEATRE
AL HAYMAN AND CO. INCORP'D PROPS.
Next Monday, August 31st
First time here of the English Version of Sardou's Great Napoleonic Play
"Madame Sans Gene"
"MADAME DON'T CARE"
Manager Augustus Pitou takes pleasure in announcing KATHRYN KIDDER in the title role, supported by the principal members of the original cast, with all the magnificent scenery, properties, costumes and Empire furniture and decorations which contributed to the great success of the play in the cities of the East.

Columbia Theatre.
FRISCH, ANDER, GOTTLOB & CO. LESSEES AND MANAGERS
San Francisco's Great Home Organization
THE FRAWLEY COMPANY
One more week, commencing Monday, Aug. 31st in their magnificent production of
THE SOCIAL TRUST
The most successful comedy-drama ever produced in Frisco
September 7th, THE WIFE

Orpheum
O'FARRELL STREET, BETWEEN STOCKTON AND POWELL
Week Commencing Monday, Aug. 31
A NEW FIRST PRIZE BILL
Filson & Errol, America's Greatest Travesty Stars The Cosman Couple, England's Greatest Singing and Dancing Comedians; return engagement of Lydia Yeamans-Titus; Richard Pitrot in Local Impersonations; last week of The Four Nelson Sisters; and last week of Herr Techow's Trained Cats
Reserved seats 25c.; balcony 10c.; opera chairs and box seats 50c. NOTE—Visit the New Wine Studio

Alcazar Theatre
BELASCO, DOANE & JORDAN, Lessees and Managers
Auspicious Opening!
Week commencing Monday, August 31st
The Screaming Comedy
TURNED UP
By the New and Powerful Stock Company, comprising Eighteen Prime Favorites
Every Night! Matinees Saturday and Sunday
Prices: 15c. 25c. 35c. 50c. Box seats 75c
Box Office open from 9 a.m. to 10 p.m. Tickets may be secured by Telephone Black 681

REMOVAL
Rountrees English Chocolate, Kohlers Swiss Chocolates, and all brands of Foreign and Eastern Confectionery, imported by . . . .
W. L. GREENBAUM,
of 205 SUTTER ST., will, after December 1st, be found in large and commodious quarters at 128 POST ST., Bohemian Club Bldg.

SCOTT & McCORD
HAY AND GRAIN MERCHANTS
OFFICE, 615 SIXTH ST.

HER POINT OF VIEW

The Sunday papers are presumably edited for grown-up people, but if their present childish tone is developed much farther we shall have to hand them over to the nursery while we study the graver columns of "Babyland" and "Wide-awake." Does anyone over ten years old really care how tall an elephant would look if you put him in the Palace Hotel grill-room? Or whether Mrs. McBrinley wears silk or mohair shoestrings? Or what a dog's bark would look like if you could see it? The height of such childishness was reached not long ago when a New York paper borrowed a million dollars' worth of jewelry and an actress and photographed the combination. The picture and the description filled a whole page, while a separate picture of the ring-laden hand took up part of another; and as the first editorial commandment is "Thou shalt spread over as many pages as possible," in so far it was a success. But could anything be more tame and uninteresting than a picture of a jewel? Differently shaped pebbles would have done just as well, for not even radiating white lines can make a paper diamond glitter. However attractive an exhibition of one million dollars in jewels might be, to get them together just to show how much space they would cover seems a very childish performance for a prominent paper. Padding of this sort can all be blamed to the present craze for huge Sunday editions. A good paragraph is spread out and thinned and weakened into a poor column, and the matter for an interesting column has to do duty for a drag-out page. Is it the fault of the public taste? Have we no discrimination save in the matter of size?

* * *

It is a long, hard trip to go from here to New York. Five days of steady motion and noise and cinders, of cramped quarters insufficient tubbing and more or less unsatisfactory food. One arrives worn and tired, grateful beyond everything that the journey is over.

A little old diary, dated 1852, has just fallen into my hands. It describes, day by day, a journey to California, begun on February 17th, in a sailing vessel. At the last moment, just before the ship left, it was found that more tickets had been sold than the accommodations warranted, so some were obliged to go home again. At last they put off, plucky and cheerful, with a five months' voyage before them. They were pitched about in howling storms, becalmed under blazing suns. Their water supply grew low, and they were put on a scanty measure a day, while their bathing had all to be done with salt water. "It leaves one feeling very sticky," the writer of the diary adds. The food was evidently unspeakably bad. "Hard bread and bitter tea for breakfast," the diary says. "The water tastes a little better and is getting sweeter, but more of that horrible sauer kraut for dinner. Ugh!" Someone makes the writer some toast and she speaks of it almost with tears of gratitude. "It did seem so like home," she adds. "We made a lemon punch to-day and dined on bread and jelly," she says another time. "Hard living we get—salt beef, pickles, dried apple sauce and bread three times a day."

By stopping at Rio Janeiro yellow fever was introduced among the passengers, and the diary shows a dreary record of deaths and burials. Eleven died, one after the other, and most of the passengers who escaped were miserable from bad food, seasickness and the violent alternations of heat and cold through which they passed. Finally, on the 19th of July, over five months from the day of starting, the weary little diary winds up in San Francisco harbor with a devout "Thank Heaven."

Yes, it's a tiresome trip between here and New York, and the dining cars aren't always just what they should be, and five days is a long time to go without a comfortable bath. No wonder we make a fuss about the journey!

* * *

Where is it going to lead us, this passion to be amused? It is getting more complicated all the time, and ears, eyes and mouths must all be catered to at once. Instead of the comfortable one-ring circus, where you never missed a trick, you are now confronted with four bewildering rings at once, from one to the other of which your frantic attention scrambles, only to arrive just too late for "the best thing yet." A moonlight ride down the bay used to be quite fun enough for the average New Yorker, but now even that cannot be taken simply, and floating vaudeville has been introduced. A certain great steamboat found that it could no longer draw its four thousand people on a summer night while it offered nothing more exciting than scenery, so it built a couple of stages, called its upper deck a roof garden and humbly announced that it too could furnish the all powerful song and dance. Palms, lanterns and a violent orchestra lured people aboard, and soon the theatre was steaming down the bay, requesting the astonished sea breezes to "Tell 'Em That You Saw'r Me," and letting all the night know that "Baby, baby, That Is the Name I Love."

As a Nation, we can no longer take our pleasures simply, or one at a time. We're spoilt by cheap amusements. Before long we will be demanding skirt-dancers at symphony concerts, and merry-go-rounds at Yosemite. Yet a child takes more genuine delight in a water-wheel he makes for himself than in a store-full of bought toys—wherein lies the germ of a parable.

* * *

Miss Maria de Barril, who for several years has been the private secretary of Mrs. Frederick W. Vanderbilt, is well known in all social life. She is a tall, handsome girl with large, dark eyes, a brilliant face and beautiful figure. Brought up to lead a life of luxury, when family reverses necessitated her being self-supporting, she decided that the position of secretary was one she could most creditably fill. Out of several offers made her she chose that of Mrs. Vanderbilt. Miss de Barril has developed unusual business ability, great tact and a marked aptitude for her work. She writes a very striking hand, and has a thorough knowledge of composition; her business letters are excelent, and the lighter notes demanded by society she makes pleasingly acceptable. She signs them all "M. de Barril, for L. Vanderbilt."

The Maison Riche serves the best lunch in the city for 75 cents.

For health and strength: Damiana Bitters.

Deutz & Geldermann's "Gold Lack" is without doubt the finest dry champagne imported. No connoisseur should fail to try it.

Poodle Dog Restaurant, S. E. corner Grant Avenue and Bush street. Private dining and banquet rooms. Telephone 429. Blanco & Bruno, proprietors.

A Famous Home Production.

Have you ever drank Mira Valle Wines? If not, try a bottle of claret with your entre and with your roast a bottle of Grand Vin. All the leading restaurants and clubs have it. Depot, 604½ Geary street.

THE OVERLAND LIMITED

"The Overland Limited," via Union Pacific, takes only three and a half days to Chicago, and only four and a half days to New York.
The Union Pacific is the only line running Pullman double drawing-room sleepers and dining cars, San Francisco to Chicago, daily, without change, and composite buffet smoking and library cars between Salt Lake City, Ogden and Chicago. Only one change of sleepers to New York; dining car service the entire distance.
Upholstered Pullman tourist sleepers San Francisco to Chicago daily without change. Personally conducted tourist excursions to St. Paul and Chicago every Friday.
Tickets and sleeping car reservations at general office, No. 1 Montgomery street, San Francisco. Reservations secured in advance by all Trans-Atlantic steamship lines. Tickets on sale to and from all points in Europe. D. W. HITCHCOCK, General Agent, San Francisco.

HIRSCH-KAHN & CO.
MANUFACTURING OPTICIANS
IMPORTERS OF OPTICAL GOODS
PHOTOGRAPHIC APPARATUS & SUPPLIES ETC.
333 KEARNY STREET
SAN FRANCISCO CAL.

New Nob Hill Flat opposite the Flood Mansion
1011 CALIFORNIA STREET
Just finished. Thirteen rooms, two bath rooms, superb view, front and rear. All modern improvements. Rent $100. Make an offer. Apply to
G. A. BERTON
323 MONTGOMERY STREET

The first washing takes the store gloss off and reveals the shirt as it is. That's the time to compare

"STANDARD" SHIRTS
with those made East.
x x
NEUSTADTER BROS.
MANUFACTURERS
SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.

THE CALIFORNIA STATE FAIR AT SACRAMENTO
THREE WEEKS.
SEPT. 1ST TO 19TH
GRAND PAVILION DISPLAY.
ELECTRIC MOTIVE POWER TRANSMITTED FROM FOLSOM
SEVENTEEN DAYS RACING
CASSASA'S EXPOSITION BAND.
DON'T FAIL TO EXHIBIT TO ATTEND
EXCURSION RATES.

Marshall F. Jones
x Merchant Tailor
Room 15, Phelan Building
SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.

GEO. GOODMAN
Patentee and Manufacturer of—Artificial Stone
Schillinger's Patent In all its branches
SIDE WALK and GARDEN WALK A Specialty
Office, 307 MONTGOMERY ST. Nevada Block, SAN FRANCISCO

Ask your Blacksmith to shoe your horse with
PHŒNIX HORSE SHOES
GIVE THEM A TRIAL

ORDER YOUR CARRIAGES AND COUPES OF THE
PACIFIC CARRIAGE CO.
At Baldwin Hotel
200 Sutter Street, corner Kearny
48 Eighth Street, or
St. Nicholas Hotel, Market and Ninth Streets
Steamer and Train Service a specialty 'Phone 1950

Removal Sale The whole of my stock at 1212-18 Market Street is now for sale at an immense reduction from the usual prices, before removal to
New Store, 721 Market Street
in the Bancroft Building
Suits to Order from $10 Trousers to Order from $3
CHAS. LYONS, London Tailor

CHAUNCEY M. DEPEW, the famous orator, statesman, railroad president and millionaire, in an interview said of his recent visit to Del Monte: "I visited Monterey, and I call it the most beautiful place in the world. Monte Carlo cannot compare with it. Its seventeen-mile drive is unparalleled for fineness."

When Mr. Depew says it is the most beautiful place in the world he knows what he is saying, and means it, for he has seen pretty much all the beautiful and interesting places in the world many times over . . . . .

The Tavern of Castle Crag, the most beautiful, attractive and accessible of all mountain resorts, will open for the reception of guests June 1, and will close October 1, 1896.

GEORGE SCHONEWALD, MANAGER

CAMPING

Season 1896

Reduced Rates for Campers' Excursion Tickets

To the following Resorts, situated on the lines of the Southern Pacific Co.

Santa Cruz Mountains

ALMA, LAUREL, FELTON
BEN LOMOND, WRIGHTS, GLENWOOD
BOULDER CREEK

Shasta Region

SWEET BRIAR CAMP
SHASTA SPRINGS SHASTA RETREAT
MT. SHASTA CAMP

For information as to Ticket Rates, Routes of Travel, etc., address or call at any Ticket Office of Southern Pacific Company, or at

General Passenger Office
No. 4 Montgomery Street, Second Floor

Or at City Ticket Office
613 Market Street, Grand Hotel, San Francisco

ILLUSTRATED FOLDER MAILED FREE ON APPLICATION

WM. H. MENTON
Excursion Passenger Agent

RICHARD GRAY
General Traffic Manager

T. H. GOODMAN
General Passenger Agent

Pacific Coast Steamship Co.

Dispatch steamers from San Francisco for ports in Alaska 9 a.m. July 3, 13, 18, 28, August 2, 12, 27.
For British Columbia and Puget Sound Ports, July 3, 8, 13, 18, 23, 28 and every fifth day thereafter.
For Eureka, Humboldt Bay, S. S. Pomona, 2 p.m. July 5, 8, 12, 16, 20, 24, 28 and every fourth day thereafter.
For Newport, Los Angeles and Way Ports, 9 a.m. July 2, 6, 10, 14, 18, 22, 26, 30 and every fourth day thereafter.
For San Diego, stopping at Port Hartford, Santa Barbara, Port Los Angeles, Redondo -- Los Angeles -- and Newport, 11 a.m. July 5, 8, 12, 16, 20, 24, 28 and every fourth day thereafter.
For Ensenada, San Jose del Cabo, Mazatlan, La Paz, Altata and Guaymas, Mex., S.S. Orizaba, July 3 and 25th of each month thereafter.
Ticket Office: Palace Hotel, 4 New Montgomery St.

GOODALL, PERKINS & CO.
General Agents
No. 10 Market Street, San Francisco, Cal.

A. K. DAGGETT

Drawing of Deeds and all Legal Papers a specialty

NOTARY PUBLIC
14 Montgomery St., S. F.
Telephone 305

Coolgardie Gold Fields

FREMANTLE, AUSTRALIA
First Class $220 Steerage $110
Lowest Rates to CAPE TOWN
S. S. "Australia," Honolulu only, Saturday, Aug. 29, 1896, at 10 a.m.
S. S. "Alameda," via Honolulu and Auckland, Thursday, September 17, 1896 at 2 p.m.
Ticket Office 114 Montgomery St.
Freight Office 327 Market St.
J. D. SPRECKELS & BROS. CO., General Agents

The German Savings and Loan Society

526 California St., S. F.

Capital actually paid up in cash	$1,000,000 00
Deposits December 31, 1895	30,727,586 59
Reserve Fund	750,000 00
Guaranteed Capital	1,200,000 00

OFFICERS
President, B. A. BECKER
First Vice-President, EDWARD KRUSE
Second Vice-President, A. C. HEINEKER
Cashier, A. H. R. SCHMIDT
Assistant Cashier, WM. HERRMANN
Secretary, GEORGE TOURNY
Assistant Secretary, A. H. MULLER
DIRECTORS
B. A. Becker, Edward Kruse, A. C. Heineker, O. Shoemann, H. Horstmann, Ign. Steinhart, Dan'l Meyer Nic. Van Bergen, Emil Rohte
Attorney, W. S. Goodfellow

San Francisco Savings Union

532 CALIFORNIA ST

Deposits June 30, 1896	$23,657,219
Paid Up Capital and Surplus	1,594,085

ALBERT MILLER, Pres. E. B. POND, Vice-Pres.
LOVELL WHITE, Cashier
DIRECTORS
GEORGE W. BEAVER ROBERT WATT
THOMAS MAGEE GEO. C. BOARDMAN
W. C. B. DE FREMERY DANIEL E. MARTIN
ALBERT MILLER PHILIP BARTH
E. B. POND
Loans upon San Francisco and Oakland Real Estate, and Farms and Farming Lands in the country.
No charge is made for pass book or entrance fee.

Mutual Savings Bank of San Francisco

33 Post Street, below Kearny, Mechanics' Institute Building
Guaranteed Capital, $1,000,000
JAS. D. PHELAN, Pres. GEO. A. STORY, Cashier
S. G. MURPHY, JOHN A. HOOPER, Vice-Pres.
DIRECTORS—Jas. D. Phelan, S. G. Murphy, John A. Hooper, James Moffitt, C. G. Hooker, Frank J. Sullivan, L. P. Drexler, Robt. McElroy, Jos. D. Grant.
Interest paid on term and ordinary deposits.
Loans on approved securities. Deposits may be sent by Postal Order, Wells, Fargo & Co., or Exchange on City Banks.
When opening accounts, send signature.

ROYAL EXCHANGE ASSURANCE

OF LONDON
Incorporated by Royal Charter A. D. 1726
Capital Paid Up, $3,446,100 Assets, $21,584,413
Surplus to Policy Holders, $8,980,251
ROBERT DICKSON, Manager
NATHAN & KINGSTON, San Francisco Agents
501 MONTGOMERY ST.

Aachen and Munich Fire Insurance Co.

of Aix La Chapelle, Germany
Capital, $2,250,000.00
Total Assets, $6,854,683.65
United States Department
204 Sansome Street
VOSS, CONRAD & CO., General Managers

When You Leave Town

place your valuables in the
SAFE DEPOSIT VAULTS
OF THE
FIRST NATIONAL BANK
CORNER OF BUSH AND SANSOME STREETS
Office Hours, 8 a. m. to 6 p. m.

BIDS

FOR

Concessions and Privileges in Yosemite Valley

OFFICE OF THE YOSEMITE COMMISSIONERS,
San Francisco, August 11, 1896.

In accordance with Rule XXXIV of the Rules and Regulations governing Yosemite Valley and Mariposa Big Tree Grove, adopted July 13, 1896, sealed bids are hereby invited for the for the following concessions and privileges in the Yosemite Grant for the year beginning November 1, 1896, and ending October 1, 1897, viz.:

First—For keeping a livery stable and conducting a general livery business in the Valley, and also for the rental of the Royal Arch Farm and Stables.

Second—For rental of stable and coach house on Georgia Avenue for stage headquarters.

Third—For rental of hotel, outbuildings and grounds at Glacier Point and privilege of conducting a hotel business at that point.

Fourth—For rental of store building and privilege of conducting a general merchandise business in the Valley.

Bids must be presented to the Secretary on or before

Monday, October 12, 1896

at 12 o'clock M., at office of Commissioners, San Francisco.

Bids must be accompanied by sufficient guarantee that contract shall be carried out by bidders to the satisfaction of the Commissioners. The Commissioners reserve the right to reject any and all bids.

JOHN F. SHEEHAN,
Secretary and Treasurer,
Room 25, Tenth Floor, Mills Building, S. F.

NOTICE TO CREDITORS

ESTATE OF OSCAR J. PETERSON, DECEASED

Notice is hereby given by the undersigned, A. C. Freese, Administrator of the Estate of Oscar J. Peterson, deceased, to the creditors of and all persons having claims against the said deceased, to exhibit them with the necessary vouchers, within four months after the first publication of this notice, to the said Administrator, at room 35, Chronicle Building, the same being his place for the transaction of the business of the said estate in the City and County of San Francisco, State of Califofnia.

A. C. FREESE,
Adm'r of the Estate of Oscar Peterson, deceased.
J. D. SULLIVAN, Attorney for the Administrator.
Dated at San Francisco, August 12, 1896.

NOTICE OF ASSESSMENT. — BULLION Mining Company. Location of principal place of business, San Francisco, California. Location of works, Virginia Mining District, Storey County, Nevada.

Notice is hereby given that at a meeting of the Board of Directors, held on the 14th day of August, 1896, an assessment (No. 42) of ten cents per share was levied upon the capital stock of the Corporation, payable immediately in United States gold coin to the Secretary, at the office of the Company, room 20, 331 Pine street, San Francisco, California.

Any stock upon which this assessment shall remain unpaid on the 15th day of September, 1896, will be delinquent and advertised for sale at public auction, and unless payment is made before, will be sold on THURSDAY, the 8th day of October, 1896, to pay the delinquent assessment, together with the costs of advertising and expenses of sale.

By order of the Board of Directors.
R. R. GRAYSON, Secretary.
Office—Room 20, No. 331 Pine street, San Francisco, California.

NOTICE TO CREDITORS

ESTATE OF FRED LARSEN, DECEASED

Notice is hereby given by the undersigned, A. C. Freese, administrator of the Estate of Fred Larsen, deceased, to the creditors of, and all persons having claims against the said deceased, to exhibit them with the necessary vouchers within four months after the first publication of this notice to the said Administrator, at room 35, Chronicle Building, San Francisco, California, the same being his place for the transaction of the business of the said estate in the City and County of San Francisco, State of California.

A. C. FREESE,
Administrator of the Estate of Fred Larsen, deceased.
J. D. SULLIVAN, Attorney for the Administrator.
Dated at San Francisco, August 21, 1896.

BAJA CALIFORNIA

DAMIANA BITTERS

"Damiana" is a powerful aphrodisiac and special tonic for the sexual and urinary organs of both sexes and a great remedy for diseases of the kidneys and bladder. For weak nerves these bitters are invaluable, and leading physicians recommend them as the greatest invigorator known. Long-winded testimonials are not necessary. "Damiana" Bitters are known on their merits. (Send for Circular.)

NABER, ALES & BRUNE, Agents
323-325 Market St., S. F.

BONESTELL & CO.

Dealers in PAPER
Fine Coated Papers a Specialty
401-403 SANSOME ST.,
San Francisco, Cal.

THE PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU

510 MONTGOMERY ST., S. F.,

Reads all papers on the Pacific Coast, and supplies clippings on all topics, business and personal.

Pacific Towel Co.

Telephone 1780 No. 9 Lick Place, San Francisco
GEO. E. MOORE, Proprietor

Good Appetite

Is restored and the disordered Stomach and Liver invigorated by taking a small wineglassful, before meals, of the celebrated . . . . . .

Peruvian Bitters

RENTS BALDWIN & HAMMOND

COLLECTED AND INSURED

10 Montgomery St.

CHARLES S. WHEELER ERNST H. LUDWIG

Ernst H. Ludwig & Co.

THE MODEL AMERICAN CATERERS

Supply Wedding Breakfasts, Luncheons, Dinners, Matinee Teas and Receptions on shortest notice. Also Terrapin Entrees Luncheons and Dinners. Ice Cream, Cake, &c.

Telephone 2388 1206 SUTTER STREET

We Have Appointed

Coburn, Tevis & Co.

OUR AGENTS FOR

CHOCOLATE MENIER

MENIER & CO

COTTON SAIL DUCKS

22-inch, in all numbers. Medium, Soft and Hard

. . ALSO . .

Heavy Naught, Wagon and Draper Ducks

From 30 to 120 inches wide

Monumental and Imperial Ounce Ducks

Manufactured by Mount Vernon Company Baltimore

Murphy, Grant & Co. . . Pacific Coast Sole Agents

It Makes the Hair Grow

Canadian Vegetable Tonic

MRS. E. E. MCLEAN, Physician for the Hair

Hours 1 to 4

St. Ann's Building, San Francisco

COMET OOLONG

The oldest and most reliable brand of Tea on the market. Sold only in ¼ lb papers at 20 cts. per paper.

ALL GROCERS KEEP IT

STORIES OF THE DAY

The late Sir Henry Parkes, the Australian statesman, had a great opinion of his poetic gifts, and on one occasion, when addressing a Sydney meeting, he said: "I would rather be known as a third-rate poet than as a first-rate politician." A man in the crowd, seeing his opportunity, exclaimed in strident accents: "Well, and aren't you?"

Prominent among the insignia of the Army of the Cumberland was the acorn, and the story is told that Gen. Thomas, who had given strict orders against foraging, caught an Irishman on the river bank with a pig he had just killed. Bursting with anger, he turned to consign him to the guard, but the Irishman's explanation was irresistable. "You see, Gineral dear, he was atin' the corps badge, and it was for that I killed him!"

The only blemish on General Young's character as a soldier was a love of display. Many years ago when quite young he attende a ball in Richmond and turned out in all the splendor he could muster. His new General's uniform gleamed from afar with gold lace, his high boots glistened, and his silver spurs and jewel-handled sabre clanked as he strode into the hall. A Southern beauty, whose tongue was keen as the General's sabre, called out to him so that every one could hear: "General, why didn't you ride in?"

A relative of Stonewall Jackson bore the peculiar name of Return Meigs, which always caused a good deal of surprised comment. It seems that when his father was engaged to be married, an unfortunate misunderstanding led to a temporary separation, which weighed so hard on the disconsolate lover that when the object of his devotion relented and said, "Return, Meigs," he declared those were the sweetest words that ever fell upon his ears, and he thereupon commemorated his happiness by giving his son this unique name.

Some years ago, a well-known foreign prince, who owns a large estate in the Midlands, invited his tenants to a hunt breakfast, at which claret was the principal beverage. After the breakfast, and just before the hounds were thrown off, champagne was handed around in large cups, when one old-fashioned farmer, after taking a long pull at one of the cups and smacking his lips, exclaimed: "Well, Your Royal Highness, I didn't think much of that port wine we had at lunch, but I must say this cider is the best I ever tasted."—"Answers."

Mr. James Gordon Bennett of the New York Herald has a strange and erratic memory. One day, having bought a number of new shirts, he ordered them sent immediately to the office. The parcel duly arrived and remained there for over a year. Mr. Bennett, meantime, never putting in an appearance. Suddenly, without any notice, he rushed in one morning, evidently in a state of great perturbation. The staff concluded they were all to be discharged on the spot. Mr. Bennett excitedly asked: "Have those confounded chemisiers sent my shirts along?" He never even alluded to the lapse of time which had occurred since his last visit.

Alphonse Karr, the French humorist, once sent to his neighbor, an elderly Italian count, to borrow a certain book. The count, whose library was famous, regretted that it was his rule never to let his books leave the house, but invited Mr. Karr to come over and make free use of the library,—which he did. A short time afterward the count needed a sprinkler, and sent to his literary neighbor. Karr sent to the count an extremely polite note: "I deeply regret the impossibility of obliging you by the loan of a sprinkler, but as a matter of principle I could not possibly allow my sprinkler to be used outside of my garden; but if you desire to use it on my own lawn I shall gladly place the sprinkler at your disposal all day."

There are many wild and unfounded tales about George Law, but this one is said to have actually happened. After he was graduated from Columbia College, his father made him a driver on the Eighth Avenue line of street cars, and his duty every day was to take a car down from the stables to the Astor House and back twice. One night, after a cold rain had chilled the young driver to the marrow, a college friend jumped on the car and suggested that he stop while they ran down the street. But Mr. Law preferred to follow his own ideas, so giving his horses a sudden yank he turned them sharply, until, by a quick effort, they lifted the car off the track. Over the cobbles the strong brutes drew the car, to the amazement of conductor and passengers, and, rattling down through the street, stopped in front of the saloon. Law alighted with his friend, and so did the rest of the passengers. After all had taken a drink at the driver's expense, they returned to the vehicle, and the car again started the noisy progress over the stones.

A SAVING OF ONE-HALF

Baggage transferred to trains or steamers and return. Trunks, 50c each for the round trip. Morton Special Delivery, 650 Market street and 408 Taylor street.

Among the many great Financial Corporations on the Pacific Coast, none rank higher than the

FIREMAN'S FUND INSURANCE CO.

Its Agents are found throughout America, and its Record for Prompt and Equitable Settlement of All Honest Losses is Firmly Established

D. J. STAPLES, President WM. J. DUTTON, Vice-President B. FAYMONVILLE, 2d V.-Pres., Sec'y
J. B. LEVISON, Marine Sec'y LOUIS WEINMANN, Asst. Sec'y STEPHEN D. IVES, General Agent

SEA BEACH HOTEL SANTA CRUZ CAL.

August and September

For these two most delightful months by the seashore SPECIAL RATES WILL BE GIVEN, ranging from $10 to $17.50 per week. New management! Excellent table. For further information, address

JOHN R. CHACE, Prop.

THE GRILL ROOM SERVICE —OF THE— PALACE HOTEL

Has been extended to what was formerly the City Restaurant. This immense room, which has a direct entrance from Market Street is known as - - - -

"THE LADIES' GRILL ROOM"

NEW DEPARTURE—CHARACTERIZED BY PROMPT SERVICE—MODERATE CHARGES

Drown your Malaria

in Byron's wonderful curative waters. These seven famous mineral springs and baths have cured many of the very worst cases. As a sanitarium, Byron leads California. Write for particulars.

Byron Hot Springs

Contra Costa Co., Cal.

THE LICK HOUSE

Occupies the block bounded by Montgomery, Post and Sutter Streets

IT IS——

——scrupulously clean;
——accessible to all street car lines and places of amusement;
——conveniently situated for business men;
——a quiet, model place for a family to spend the winter;
——moderate in price, yet first-class in every particular.

AMERICAN OR EUROPEAN PLAN

K. B. SOULÉ, Manager

The California Hotel

SAN FRANCISCO

ABSOLUTELY FIREPROOF

HOTEL RAFAEL

SAN RAFAEL

Open All the Year Round

Fifty Minutes from San Francisco

Average winter temperature 64 degrees. Both hotels strictly first-class. Modern, Exquisite and Home-like. Both under the personal supervision of General Warfield.

R. H. WARFIELD & CO. Proprietors.

For those who appreciate Comfort and Attention

A QUIET HOME CENTRALLY LOCATED

OCCIDENTAL HOTEL

SAN FRANCISCO

WM. B. HOOPER, MANAGER

CRESTA BLANCA WINES

AWARDED THREE HIGHEST AWARDS AT

THE ATLANTA EXPOSITION

OF SIX MEDALS AWARDED TO CALIFORNIA

Cresta Blanca Wines

OBTAINED THREE

WETMORE-BOWEN CO.

140 Montgomery Street

Under Occidental Hotel

H. S. BRIDGE & CO.

Merchant Tailors

Many Novelties in Imported Wear. Shirts to Order a Specialty.

622 Market Street, San Francisco

(Up-stairs, opposite Palace Hotel)

Brushes For barbers, bakers, bootblacks, bathhouses, billiard tables, brewers, bookbinders, candymakers, canners, dyers, flour mills, foundries, laundries, paperhangers, printers, painters, shoe factories, stablemen, tar roofers, tanners, tailors, etc.

BUCHANAN BROS.

TEL. 5610 609 SACRAMENTO ST

BRUSH MANUFACTURERS

TERRA COTTA PRESSED BRICK FIRE PROOFING GLADDING, McBEAN & CO. 1358-1360 MARKET ST. WORKS, LINCOLN CAL.

This Paper not to be taken from the Library.
CALIFORNIA STATE LIBRARY

THE WAVE

VOL XV. No. 36 SAN FRANCISCO, SEPTEMBER 5, 1896 PRICE 10 CTS.

"AM I GOING DOWN OR UP"

THE WAVE

Is published every Saturday, at THE WAVE Building, No. 24 Montgomery Street, San Francisco.

Subscription, $3.00 per year, $1.50 six months, 75 cts. three months. Foreign subscriptions—countries in postal union—$5 per year. Sample copies free on application. The trade is supplied by the San Francisco News Co., 210 Post Street; east of the Rocky Mountains by the American News Co., New York.

THE WAVE is kept on file and is for sale at Brentano's, 17 Avenue de l'Opera, Paris, France; 31 Union Square, New York City; 1015 Pennsylvania Avenue, Washington, D. C.; and 206 Wabash Avenue, Chicago.

Advertising rates and all other matters pertaining to the business of the paper, address THE WAVE, 24 Montgomery Street. Eastern Agent, E. Katz, 230-235 Temple Court, New York.

HARRISON M. PARKER, Business Manager

Entered at the San Francisco Post Office as second-class matter

THE WAVE PUBLISHING COMPANY

SAN FRANCISCO, SEPTEMBER 5, 1896

CONTENTS

Editorials	3	About Personages	9
The Big Lumber Raft	4	Society Gossip	10
The Del Monte Week	5	The Theatres, by Peg Woffington	11
Things and People	6	"The Folly of Eustace"	12
Perils of the Perambulator	7	A Note From Newport, by Sally Andrews	13
A Yaqui Joan of Arc	7	Late Verse	13
The Crisis at Zanzibar	7	Her Point of View	14
The Harbor of the Golden Gate	8	Stories of the Day	16
The Vanderbilt-Astors	9

THE BENT PIN THAT WILL MAKE SILVER JUMP.

If you are an advocate of free and unlimited coinage of silver, pause long enough to consider what Mr. Bryan and his followers are prophesying as the inevitable result of free coinage.

You understand, doubtless, that the silver in the present American silver dollar is worth but 53 cents, yet it is a full legal tender for double its intrinsic value. You understand that the United States maintains the value of its silver dollar here and elsewhere because it does not permit the foreign or native mine-owner to indiscriminately dump his silver into our mints; and because, too, the Government has refused to treat the silver dollar as being of less value than the gold dollar, and has never failed upon demand to pay out gold for silver.

What Mr. Bryan intends to do is simply this. He proposes, in effect, that Congress shall say:

1st. The Government of the United States shall no longer redeem silver with gold or attempt to maintain the parity between gold and silver, but shall let silver take care of itself.

2nd. The Government shall no longer limit the quantity of silver to be coined, but shall open its mints to its indiscriminate and unlimited coinage.

Viewed from the standpoint of a man on a fence, this performance might, by one sagacious in such things, be regarded as a most deadly blow to silver. The proposition does not invest the silver dollar with any new properties, but it does divest it of some. It does strip away the support the Government now gives that dollar; it does very effectually divorce the qualities of caution and conservatism from our financial policy; and it does give the bullion broker, the owner of abandoned silver mines, the Mexican, Chinese and English, an opportunity to crowd our mints to their full capacity.

This is a very simple thing Mr. Bryan proposes to do, but watch the result which he prophesies. True, trifling things often achieve marvelous effects. A bent pin, for instance, is trifling in itself, yet if properly placed and skillfully adjusted it will cause two hundred pounds of human avoirdupois to rise in a most sudden and unexpected manner. Perhaps Mr. Bryan has a like surprise in store for us.

We have heretofore avoided figures very largely in our financial articles, but this week we will borrow some from the "Examiner."

The stock of silver bullion in the world, according to that journal, amounts to something over four billions of dollars. In passing we may say, and we wish to say it with some emphasis, that it is only the silver dollar of the gold countries that is maintained at a parity with gold, and it is only in the free silver countries that the silver dollar passes for less than the gold dollar. But this is a digression. Consider Mr. Bryan's proposition for a moment in all its absurdity. He proposes to raise the price of silver—not in America alone, but all over the world; not by investing the dollar with new attributes, but by knocking from under it the gold support our country now gives it and making it a commoner dollar than it is now. He proposes to improve the quality by increasing the quantity. His "bent pin" of free silver is to have an electrical effect all over the world. In far off China and Japan, the impoverished coolie, whose little hoard of wealth is limited to a single coin hidden away in his filthy hovel, is, through the single legislative action of America, to see his 53 cent dollar double in value without an effort on his part. All China is to rejoice because Mr. Bryan will have made its money, now worth intrinsically 375 millions, jump to the extraordinary figure of 750 millions. The Chinese merchant who now pays us two dollars for our flour will marvel much that this great nation of money-makers should legislate his money up and our products down. Mr. Bryan proposes that the silver dollar in India, which we sold as bullion at 53 cents and upwards, shall return as 100 cents. He proposes by this very simple and childlike policy to say to Mexico, "We will pay you 100 cents for a dollar you are now willing and anxious to part with for 53 cents."

There are in India, according to the "Examiner," 950 million dollars in silver; in China, 750 millions in silver; in the Straits settlements, 115 millions, and in Mexico, 50 millions. The silver money in these countries alone aggregates $1,865,000,000, which is worth intrinsically and in purchasing power in the markets of the world but $932,500,000.

Mr. Bryan, with his "bent pin," proposes to double the purchasing power of this money, proposes to increase its value to an amount greater than our entire national debt, by simply giving the bullion owner a dollar in return for 53 cents worth of bullion, which dollar he is to work off on the rest of mankind for 100 cents. This proposition is so manifestly unreasonable and absurd that it is a little difficult to understand how anyone can seriously believe it to be true.

Mr. Bryan is told that should we adopt free coinage the silver of the world would be dumped into our mints. The "Examiner" attempts to answer this charge. It says:

"If there was a stock of silver bullion anywhere in the world ready to be dumped on the market at the establishment of free coinage, there is no doubt that we should get it. But where is there any stock of silver bullion that would raise our money supply by 50 per cent. or 25 per cent., or even 10 per cent.? Not in the United States. That is certain."

The Examiner admits there is no doubt that we would "get it" if there was a stock anywhere to be found. As it has asked the whereabouts of this stock, let it also answer.

In its enthusiasm, the "Examiner" offered a number of prizes for essays best setting forth the benefits that would come to California through free coinage. These essays answer the "Examiner's" question pretty well. The prize winners vividly set forth the fact that silver mining would increase with wonderful vigor; that abandoned mines would be opened, new mines discovered, and great silver development follow. One writer glowingly pictured 30,000 additional men busy dragging 53-cent silver from the face of nature, and foretold the revival of mining in Nevada. The whole gist of their articles was a greatly increased production of silver, which of course is true. Such production would not only increase with us, but with Mexico, and every other silver-producing country as well.

But our journalistic advocate of Bryanism was not content with the conclusions of its essayists. It went further still in an article prepared by that admirable statistician, Charles G. Yale, and announced the result over the startling lines:

MINES CLOSED

BY THE NATION'S EXPERIMENT

OF 1873.

Mr. Yale's article vigorously declares that "Great numbers of silver mines have closed altogether, while others have limited their output." And, further along, he describes the situation in these words: "No silver-producing section of the United States is now being worked to its full capacity. The miners who firmly believe that their silver is worth $1.29 per ounce do not care to produce large quantities for which they can get only about 60 cents. They prefer to wait until the people declare for free coinage and the Government again takes their silver at its proper value."

This statement by Mr. Yale answers the "Examiner's" and Mr. Bryan's question, "Where is all this silver to come from?" The silver mine owner is waiting for the people to declare themselves willing to stamp 100 cents on a disc of metal worth only 53 cents. The miner in Mexico is waiting for the same thing, and so are they lying in wait for us in England, China and India.

Where will the great quantities of silver come from? If the "Examiner's" explanation is not sufficient, the story of the past is pregnant with information. In 1878 the silver output of the United States amounted to about $3,000,000 per month, and 371.25 grains of silver then sold for 89 cents. The silver men commenced an agitation in 1876, which resulted in an act of Congress in 1878 authorizing the purchase of two to four million dollars' worth of silver per month, and declaring the silver dollar to be full legal tender for all debts, public and private. We were promised then, as the Government purchases would equal our production, that silver would increase in value to $1.29 per ounce, just as we are now being promised the same thing. The world knows the result. This new demand for silver excited the greed of the mine-owner who opened up his abandoned mines and instituted the development of a large number of new properties. Millions of ounces of the white metal were placed upon the market. The Government faithfully continued to purchase silver under this act for eighteen years and the production continued to increase; it increased so much, indeed, that the metal dropped from 89 cents per ounce in 1878 to 72 cents in 1889, despite the continued purchases.

Again the silver men appeared before Congress. The markets were glutted with silver. They claimed the Government was not purchasing enough. "Increase your purchases, and silver will go up to $1.29," they declared. As a consequence and as a compromise to prevent a free coinage bill, Congress passed what is known as the Sherman Act, which authorized the purchase of four and one-half million ounces of silver per month. The same result followed. Production increased and silver kept dropping until it reached 60 cents in 1893, when the purchasing clause of the act was repealed.

The "Examiner" has most happily and most clearly demonstrated that the silver miners are only waiting for the people to act, withholding their silver from the market biding the unhappy hour when the people will declare their willingness to give the mine-owner one dollar for every 53 cents' worth of silver, and obligate themselves to take his 53-cent dollar for 100 cents. This is all they are waiting for. The spiders are weaving webs in their hoisting works to capture the indiscreet fly venturing too close to their ever spread nets, and all is silent about the mill and shaft. The silver mine owner is meanwhile weaving another web, and unless we are wary indeed, we may find ourselves caught in its silver meshes and the life-blood of the nation going out to fatten the ribs of the mine owner.

There is a good deal of nonsense afloat concerning the "Crime of '73," and a good deal of sentimentalism has attached to the demonetized dollar. For the eighty years preceding 1873 the United States had coined but a little over eight millions of silver dollars. Since the "crime" it has coined $430,790,041. Our coinage of the silver dollar did not average over $100,000 a year before the crime, while the average number of dollars coined annually since 1878 has been $23,285,948. From 1805 to 1835—thirty years—not a silver dollar was coined in America. "The Crime of 1873" demonetized a dollar that was unknown, unused, and practically uncoined. No one objected to the Act until 1876. The silver mine owner did not object to it, because he was not then taking his silver to the mint. He was never given over to making sacrifices for the public welfare. He sold his silver abroad as bullion, and it never came to be American coin. Silver was high, and this accelerated the production to such an extent that the value of silver finally dropped. It dropped to a point where the mine owner could no longer sell to Europe the quantity of silver contained in an American dollar for more than a dollar. Until then he did not concern himself as to whether we had few or plenty of silver dollars. He was willing enough to have his bullion sent to the mint when its market value was less than its mint value—100 cents. He wanted the best price for his metal. He was not concerned about our coinage laws when silver was high, but the fall in silver which brought its bullion value down below its coinage value made him noisily solicitous about the money of the people, made him anxious for free coinage at a ratio which would give him a profit in excess of that which he could obtain in the markets of the world. He had ignored the existence of our mints for years, and not until he had an opportunity to impose upon the people did he utter a word of protest against the "Crime of 1873." In 1878 he wanted to turn into the mints 92 cents and receive a 100-cent dollar. To-day he is strenuously advocating a policy that will permit him to turn in 53 cents and receive in return a 100-cent dollar. What is most astonishing, he finds in the farmer and the laborer upon whom he proposes to work off this dollar his strongest allies and suporters, a condition of affairs at which the world must marvel.

DOWNFALL OF THE "ARGONAUT."

How have the mighty fallen! Time was—alas, 'twas in Pixley's time—when, at this season of the national campaign, the Argonaut would have been found manfully battling and struggling in the heat of the fight, at the head and front of the affray, thoughtless of individual profit, thoughtless of personal gain, thoughtless of personal interest, and mindful only of its country's welfare, its sacred honor, and its future prosperity. But time has worked a wondrous change since Pixley's death. Never in all the history of that journal has the country been in such peril or threatened with such overwhelming dangers as now. Never in all its history has the victory of the party it pretends to represent meant so much to the well-being of the people of this great nation. Never before in its history has it been possible for a loyal paper to do more loyal party service Never before was education so necessary and so vital to correct the world of misinformation that has been spread by the ancient enemy of its party. Yet in the face of all this, while the country is standing at the threshold of an epoch of disaster, while honest but misguided men are threatening to destroy the credit and prosperity of the country, that journal, which takes unto itself a wide variety of virtues, has been practically as silent as the grave upon the great issues soon to be decided by the American people. What has it done? Like a harlot of the press it makes bold to bid for money in compensation for its service. It has notified the "Republican National Committee," and the "Republican State Central Committee," and the "leaders of the Republican party of the East," and the "leaders of the Republican party of the West," in double-leaded editorials, that "There was never a time when a campaign of education was more needed. There never was a campaign of education that was so slow to be begun."

It impounds its wonderful knowledge of impending danger waiting for the magic touch of a subsidy from its own party before it opens its flood gates of righteous indignation upon the Democracy. It does not volunteer to spread the light or inaugurate the campaign of education so necessary to the public welfare, but with double-leaded editorials proclaims that "The people should not be left clamoring for the truth—the truth should be ready at their hands. It is the duty of the Republican committees, State and National, to see that the people, who are striving to inform themselves, are informed."

No doubt it is the duty of these committees to do just these things, but it is likewise the solemn and bounden duty of every citizen who can discover the impending danger, as Mr. Hart confesses to have done, to volunteer his services in a cause that means so much to the future of America. But the contemptible, double-leaded editorial runs off at a double-leaded gait and warns the various committees to which it has given notice, that

"Somebody has to pay for everything in this world. The founders who cast the type, the paper-makers who make the paper, the ink-makers who make the ink, the printers who print the documents, the girls who address the wrappers, etc., etc., must all be paid."

What would Pixley think of this proceeding were he alive! With what fine scorn would he have treated another sheet guilty of such a performance. The last double-leaded editorial upon this subject, and there have been two, closes with this shameful prayer:

"We therefore call most earnestly upon the Republicans of this State who believe their own assertions when they say that free silver means a danger to State and Nation, to back up the faith that is in them. If they believe in sound money, let them prove it. Let them put up some sound money for sound money's sake. Money talks."

The loyal Republican who reads between the lines must blush when he views the depths to which this once powerful journal has fallen. At a time when the Democratic press all over the country is abandoning party for the sake of country, and is staunchly supporting the nominee of its Republican adversary, it comes with poor grace from a Republican paper to make such unblushing demands to insure its party fealty.

THE SOCIALISTS' CONVICTION.

The twelve jurymen, who, in the case of the Socialists recently tried for disturbing the peace, returned a verdict of guilty, are entitled to the thanks of the community. The ordinary juryman is only too apt to be carried away in the other direction by a false conception as to what constitutes American liberty. The right of free speech was in no way involved in the case. It was simply a question as to the right of exercising that privilege to the discomfort and annoyance of the neighborhood. The testimony of reputable citizens established the fact that the Socialists' gatherings at the corner of Seventh and Market streets had at various times disturbed the peace of the neighborhood, and particularly the meetings of the Order of Odd Fellows. The fact was also established that the Socialists had frequently been notified of the disturbance they were creating, and, though requested to do so, had neglected and failed to abate the nuisance. The meetings were a matter of nightly occurrence. Patience being outraged, they were finally arrested. That conviction promptly followed may be regarded as a healthy sign. Subsequent to their conviction the Socialists held another meeting at the same place, and attracted a large crowd by displaying signs and banners bearing the devices peculiar to Socialism, for which they were again placed under arrest. Probably few of the men who participate in these socialistic meetings would countenance a bald infraction of the law and a disturbance of the peace in the ordinary course of affairs. The trouble with them is they believe their cause superior to the ordinary regulations of the law. Because a noisy gathering represents a creed, a belief or a new scheme of social organization, its followers are not exempt from responsibility to the law. The cause they represent invests them with no peculiar privileges. It is difficult for the Socialist to understand this, however, and despite repeated arrests he is apt to stubbornly struggle for his "rights" until bad blood is engendered and some heads are broken.

DECLINE OF THE SEALING INDUSTRY.

The fur seals are being exterminated at an alarming rate, thanks to the unrestrained and remorseless hunting of them that goes on every year. So long as the Government held a monopoly of the seal industry, there was no danger of extermination, but when the Paris arbitration tribunal of 1893 recognized, and, to a certain extent, legalized pelagic sealing, the wholesale slaughter began. The monopoly was careful to kill only bachelor seals, as the young bulls are called, but the pelagic sealers take what is easiest to get, and so three fourths of their catch are females. This involves the loss of the young seal for whom the female is foraging, and often of another still unborn, so the thirty thousand females killed last year meant a decrease of nearly ninety thousand seals. How nearly they have been exterminated is shown by the last reports from Behring Sea. Outside the sixty-mile line that protects the Pribylof Islands, seventy schooners have been lying to pick up any seals that came out for food, and the average catch has been two or three a day, where it used to a hundred or more. In a very few years, at the present rate, the seal will become extinct.

There is just one hope for the industry, and that lies in the rumor that the Russian Government is considering the plan of asking the United States and Great Britain to join in framing some resolutions which shall absolutely prohibit all pelagic sealing. Russia's strong-minded way of laying down laws and seeing that they are kept has been of inestimable value to her sealing industry. The few who have tried to elude or defy her have promptly found themselves imprisoned in a Russian fortress, with their ships confiscated or burned, and that one lesson is generally enough for them. This policy may be a little high-handed, but it is very good for the seals. If we would save our own, stringent laws with stringent penalties are the only means.

Ask any farmer or workingman why he favors Bryan and the free and unlimited coinage of silver, and he will tell you that free silver will double the supply of money, and create a corresponding increase in wages and prices. In all likelihood this is the only reason they will give for favoring Bryan. The "Examiner," however, which is the only supporter of Bryanism in San Francisco, very unkindly knocks this theory in the head, and leaves no excuses for the farmer or the workingman to support the bullion owner in his fight to cinch the people. It says there is not the slightest evidence that the free coinage of silver would result in doubling the supply of money or in doubling prices, and then says:

"It must be admitted that the extravagant claims of free silver enthusiasts who tell the farmer that throwing open the mints will immediately raise wheat to one dollar a bushel and double the price of hogs, have assisted to spread this idea. But a careful review of the silver market and the money situation justifies the declaration that nothing of the kind can happen."

The farmer ought to cut this out and paste it in his hat, and the interior exchanges who have some rational views on the financial question could do no better than to print this extract, and state, upon the authority of the "Examiner," that it is a silly and foundationless claim, to say that free silver will raise the price of wheat and double the price of hogs.

The Nicaragua Canal project is reported at a standstill. It is claimed that there is a sandbar at the mouth of the river extending a mile into the sea, through which no amount of dredging can keep a channel clear. The same authority, the "Cincinnati Enquirer," declares that the Panama Canal can be finished at one-third the estimated cost of the Nicaragua Canal, and it is in every way practicable. There the work is progressing satisfactorily under the new management. Seventeen miles of the canal are already navigable for ships, and they have cut down the surface of the earth six or eight feet ten miles further. Two thousand negroes are employed at forty cents a day, and the canal is over half completed. All the digging and excavating is done by steam engines. It costs $30,000 a month to keep the machinery in repair and free from the fearful influence of the climate.

Princess Eugenie, the little daughter of Princess Beatrice, the Queen's favorite daughter, and the late Prince Henry of Battenburg, is pronounced the richest royal heiress in Europe. Victoria designs to leave to her the immense accumulations of a thrifty life-time—not only millions of money but also the royal domains of Balmoral in Scotland and Osborne in the Isle of Wight. In addition Empress Eugenie promises to endow the maiden with her own vast properties, which represent at least ten millions of dollars.

SOBER SECOND-THOUGHT.

Fresh evidences that the straying Republican is wandering back to the fold are to be found on every hand. An old line Republican, who, early in the campaign, announced his intention of voting for free silver and Bryan, but who has latterly come to give the question sober thought, has at our request given his reasons for returning to the support of McKinley. He says:

"I confess to having been carried away by the first wave of Bryanism that swept over the country, but sober second thought has convinced me of my error and awakened me to the awful consequences that would follow in Mr. Bryan's wake if he proved successful in the coming campaign. Owing to unpardonable misrepresentations concerning the passage of the act designated at "The Crime of 1873," I with a great majority of the people of these United States had come to believe silver demonetized by trickery and fraud. Without stopping to carefully consider the past, we concluded that the present hard times were owing to the passage of the act of 1873. Being in this frame of mind, when the Boy Orator appeared before the Chicago convention with his borrowed crown of thorns and cross of gold, and captured that body, and thereby secured the nomination for the Presidency, it is not strange that many well-meaning people hastily determined to support him, thinking he was the Moses who could lead them out of the Egyptian darkness of despair and show them the promised land flowing with the milk and honey of prosperity and happiness. Thousands so announced their intentions before they had even seen the miserable platform upon which he stood. What was their amazement when they learned through Senator Sherman's speech the truth as to the passage of the act of 1873. That act simply did not provide for coining silver dollars, and before that time many years had passed without coining even one single dollar, and the country had not been ruined then or subsequent to the passage of the act of 1873 by reason thereof. By the way, a copy of Senator Sherman's speech should be in the hands of every voter in the United States. These good and well-meaning citizens, myself among the number, finally had an opportunity to examine the Chicago platform, and found it to be a 'whited sepulchre, fair without, but within full of dead men's bones,' and all manner of uncleanliness. In it was found the skeletons of discontent, envy and hate, and the festering corpses of anarchy and crime, with Altgeld and Tillman for its guardians.

"They carefully perused the various speeches made by this candidate, and in them he never even referred to the tariff question, the most important of all questions now before the American people. They further found that the bent of his mind was to array class against class; those who had little or no property against those who had. They found that the spirit dominating him and his followers was calculated and intended to array section against section; the West and South against the East and the Middle States; they found the only question which he deemed worthy of discussion was the free and unlimited coinage of silver, which he prescribed as a panacea for all the financial, political and social evils of the times. They also found that he was willing, yea, anxious to pack the Supreme Court of the United States, and generally cripple and harass the Federal judiciary, because it had rendered a decision upon a constitutional question contrary to the opinions of the Populists and anarchists, who are all great constitutional lawyers, although they have never looked at a law book except at the covers.

"They also noted with alarm that all the criminal classes, disturbers of the public peace—all those who were looking for work and praying they might not find it—all those windy orators who were upon the street corners denouncing the economical and thrifty, and urging the idle and the dissolute to help themselves and murder the owners of property, were to a man in favor of the election of Bryan. And when these citizens remembered that four years ago to-day the people of the United States were never as prosperous all over the country as then; that money was abundant, the hum of industry was everywhere heard, and he who desired could obtain employment at remunerative wages, and the people were contented under a wise and protective tariff, and that the 'Crime of 1873' did not prevent universal prosperity, and when these citizens further reflected that as soon as it was known that a Democratic Congress and Democratic President had been elected on a revenue platform, that manufacturers began to lessen the amount of articles manufactured, and times began to change for the worse, and when the McKinley tariff was repealed and a revenue tariff had been adopted, that thousands of manufacturies were closed, and hundreds of thousands of operatives were in consequence thereof discharged, and want instead of prosperity prevailed throughout the land, and that all classes were injuriously affected, and especially the producers and workingmen of the nation who had been deluded by false promises to vote for free trade instead of protection, in order that a dinner-pail could be purchased for a few cents less, and when these citizens further took into consideration the fact that hundreds of articles formerly manufactured here were not to be found upon the shelves of our merchants, but that foreign-made fabrics manufactured in countries where labor was obtained for a few cents a day, had driven from our home markets the domestic fabrics; and when these citizens saw all these things they retracted what they had before intended to do, and determined that as good citizens and lovers of their country they could not and would not vote for a person nominated on such a platform and entertaining such views, which are detrimental to the best interests of the country and the people. 'The sober second thought' of the people is now turning to McKinley as the savior of the country. Mr. Bryan will learn before this campaign ends the truth of Mr. Lincoln's remarks, when he said: 'You can fool some of the people all of the time; you can fool all of the people some of the time, but you cannot fool all of the people all of the time.'

"I confess to having been one of the misguided, and I am thankful that I count myself among many other of my friends who have discovered the folly of Bryanism and the dangers with which it is alive. JUDEX."

ON DECK

A LUMBER RAFT

The great raft that came down from Stella, Washington, last week, lies, huge and inert, in the Oakland creek, an object of apprehension to the big lumber companies here. For if Bains and Robertson continue to bring down their cigar-shaped rafts, the price of timber in San Francisco will go down, at least three dollars or three and a half a thousand feet, and the big companies, who now saw up their logs into boards and planks and send them down in vessels, will have to change their methods and take to rafting, if they wish to compete. The present method of transportation costs from three dollars and a quarter to four dollars a thousand feet, but in rafts it is very much cheaper. The Mineola, which towed the raft down, brought her usual cargo of coal, and so could afford to charge less than even a towboat would. The raft was valued at forty-five thousand dollars, and its entire cost, including towage, insurance, etc., was thirty-four thousand, leaving a profit of eleven thousand dollars for the projectors.

A SIDE VIEW

It took some clever manipulating to land the great raft in the Oakland creek. The 560,000 lineal feet of piling made a bulk five hundred and twenty-eight feet long by fifty-two feet broad and thirty-one feet deep, drawing twenty-four feet of water. At the very highest moment of the tide, there is barely twenty-five feet of water on the Oakland bar, and if the raft had touched bottom or struck a snag, the chains would have snapped and the logs scattered over the bay. Captain Gray, whose tugs had taken charge of the monster cigar off Union street, went as near the bar as possible, then watched the tide. When it was at its height, the tugs darted forward, and the raft passed over without a scrape.

The only other attempt at rafting logs was of the Southern Pacific from Washington to San Francisco. That raft was also built by Bains and Robertson. The present one belongs to the builders themselves, who prepared the timber on credit, and brought it down as a speculation. A company is to be incorporated, and, with the money coming from the sale of stock, together with their present capital, this firm plans to build sawmills on the Alameda county shore, and to go into the lumber manufacturing business.

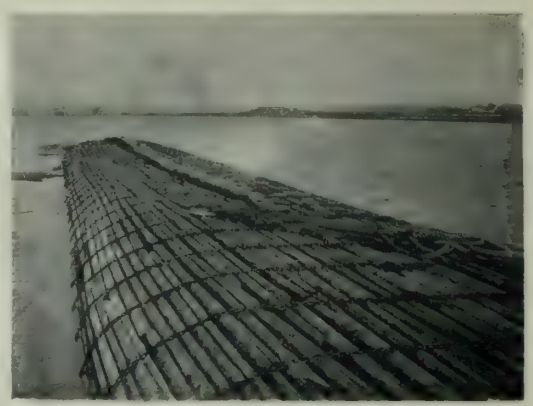
GENERALITIES

A well-known Philadelphia physician condemns in strong terms the habit of eating cloves and other spices to deaden the liquor breath. They are powerful irritants, he says, and eaten in any quantity are more harmful than the liquor itself.

Hermitine, or electrolyzed salt water, has come into vogue as an antiseptic in Paris hospitals. It was first used by Dr. Proger, who discovered that it removes all bad odors, cleanses and heals fetid wounds and sores, and kills microbes, more effectually than any other antiseptic known.

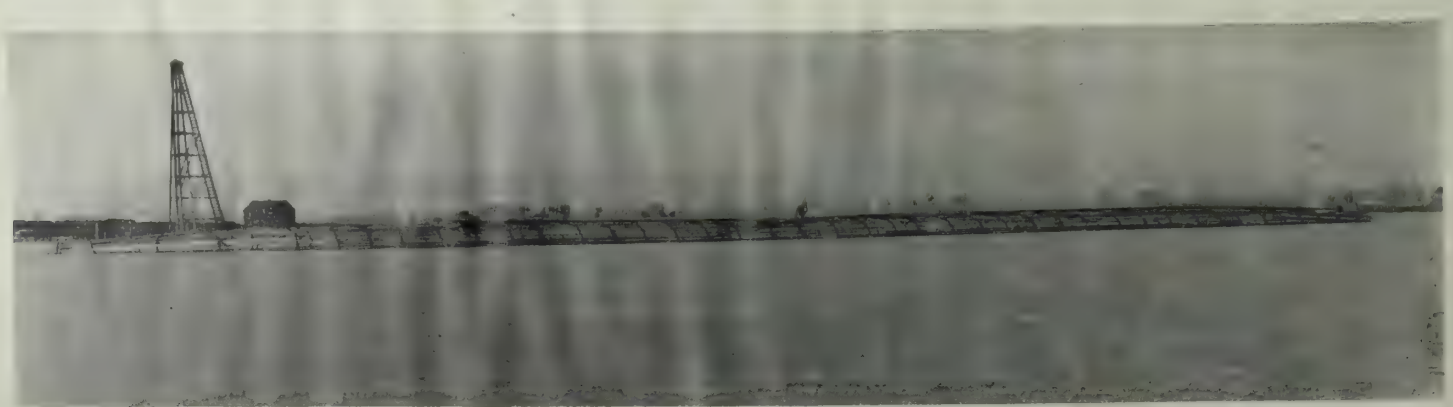
The French loan of $80,000,000 to Russia, which is at present being floated, is a specially advantageous one, as it is issued at 92, redeemable at par, and will bear interest at 3 per cent. Russia has already borrowed from France nearly one billion dollars, and it is assumed the object of this loan is to increase the gold reserve so as to render easy the adoption of the gold standard next year.

In Paris a movement is on foot to place some restriction on the bestowal of the Legion of Honor badge. It has been distributed so promiscuously of late for petty political services, etc., that it carries with it little or no distinction, while it should be, as was originally intended, the mark of a grateful people for some distinguished service to the country.



THE STERN

The Irish vote seems to have passed out of existence this compaign. The national votes that are cutting a figure are those of the Germans and the Scandinavians, who now hold the balance of power in many of the western States. Both are for sound money. It is said there is not a German newspaper of any prominence anywhere in the United States that is supporting Bryan.



THE RAFT LYING IN OAKLAND CREEK

THE DEL MONTE WEEK

Reminiscences of the "Outing," with Comment on Individual Stars.

Last week's entertainment at Del Monte was, I have no doubt, the most perfect in detail and conception that the Pacific Coast has yet seen. Those who have attended all past entertainments at this resort and all the leading ones at others, are warrant for this statement. It was on a scale and of a character not heretofore attempted, and it is certainly to the credit of the far western civilization that such a week could be given here. One would have to cross the full length of the continent before finding its rival, and even then there would be lacking those natural beauties which make Del Monte pre-eminent and give her a vast advantage over any of her Atlantic sisters. I have seen more money spent on a single night at Lenox than went to make a whole week of days and nights at Del Monte. Beautiful Lenox, in her famous Berkshire hills, might use up all the fortune of the Stokeses and the Morgans and still be unable to produce a Del Monte night. Man has so little to do in California to make nature do her best.

It is a pity that those who are wont to speak with disrespect of society men as "Dudes," "Anglomaniacs" and the like, could not have seen the races and games. The California Van Bibber is quite as sinewy as his New York prototype. He has the muscle of a drayman and the agility of a tiger. Speak not with disrespectful sneer of the man of "Dick" Tobin's age who has the courage to ride a race with professional jockeys. Do you know what it means to ride with these trained little rascals of the track? Ask Mr. "Jimmy" Swinnerton, the little bear artist of the "Examiner"—he once was a jockey. (This was before he became a negro minstrel.) Swinnerton will tell you that in riding with professionals Mr. Tobin ran the gravest risk of being ridden into, fouled, smashed up against the fence, and generally used up. Mr. Tobin himself realized this and let his horse out at the start that he might get out of reach of these dangerous little brownies of the track. And in going to the front so early the race was lost, but it was the only thing to do. One of the jockeys did grab his lines and jerk his horse out of his course, but Mr. Tobin's protest was not effective because not sufficiently substantiated.

The foxiness of those jockeys was illustrated in the behavior of Maynard, the boy that was hurt. He was taking the water jump, when his horse swerved, and Maynard fell almost into the arms, as luck would have it, of Dr. Shiels, who had crossed the courses to see the horses make the leap. The boy was unconscious at first, but when he came to he soon realized that he was very much an object of attention and sympathy. With the keenness of the gamin he played 'possum most successfully until a purse of $50 was raised on the track and sent to him, when his senses returned with remarkable rapidity, and he proved to be almost unhurt.

Speaking of Swinnerton reminds me of a bit of gossip concerning him which was floating about the track—he is going to Europe. Mrs. Hearst has determined to give him the benefit of five years of education in London and Paris. He promises not to abandon caricature, but to mingle with the new masters in that line of work, and, while learning how, preserve his originality. But the gentleman rider Swinnerton was the only one in evidence at Del Monte. And a good rider he is if he would but keep his legs in a bit more and hold his hands lower. That he didn't come in first was not his fault. He was on one of Hobart's horses, but Hobart didn't intend that he should win—for Prince Fortunatus was up himself and on a faster pony.

If Walter Hobart ever goes in for politics he will be a success. He knows the knack of catching the mob. Yes, no doubt of it, young Hobart can play to a gallery as well as our own honored and beloved Governor. Whiskers of Monterey cheered Hobart every time he made a play at polo. Up and down around the field the Monterey Hayseed would rush, crying at the top of his voice, "Bully boy, Walter! Good boy, Hobart! Give it to 'em, Walt! You're all right, old boy! Won it, by Jee! You won it, Walt! Say, boys, ain't he a daisy?" This is not exaggeration, not a word of it. It is a stenographic report. There was no man on the field that "took the centre" so many times and held it so long, to the great delight of the crowd, as this young millionaire. His one pleasure seems to be exercise. He trains like a college halfback,—tennis for a couple of hours in the morning, not a girl's game, but a battle with Joe Tobin or Lawson; a couple of hours of polo in the afternoon, and a drive with four spirited horses to handle later, and an hour's bowling before going to bed. This is work, don't you know it? Downright hard work, when you keep it up day after day.

"Those boys may have money," I heard one of the assembled farmers say to a companion, "but they ain't any the worse for it." So must we all say. "Joe" Tobin had been playing the game of three men,and, after dropping his stick, had picked it up vaquero fashion, without dismounting. I don't know how many Tobin's in all contributed to the sports; they all have the sand and skill of the thoroughbred. Go to the tennis court, the bowling alley, the swimming tanks, the polo ground, or the track, and you would find some slim, agile Tobin doing something daring or skillful, or both. And "Joe" is the Tobin of Tobins on horseback, afoot or aswim.

But why prattle on? It is gone, and not for another year at least can California have an opportunity to see so much of gentlemanly sport and elegant entertainment. How it will be possible for Mr. Douty, Major Rathbone and the other gentlemen who, for last week, planned so brilliantly and executed so faithfully, to excel themselves next year, no one can foresee. Apparently all that could be done to make the week one of festival was done; there was not so much as to pall, nor so little as to satisfy; there was pleasure for the eye and the ear; spirited, speedy horses; quick, courageous men; handsome and intelligent women, brilliantly dressed gay equipages music of string and of wind instruments, a sky that smiled—what more, what more could man, dissatisfied man, ask?

T. N. S.

Among the rich mines of Leadville is one called "Dead Man's Claim." It seems a certain popular miner had died, and his friends having decided to give him a good sendoff hired a man for twenty dollars to act as sexton. It was in the midst of winter; there were ten feet of snow on the ground, and the grave had to go six feet below that. The grave-digger sallied forth into the snow, deposited the corpse for safe-keeping in a drift, and for three days nothing was heard from him. A delegation sent to find the fellow discovered him digging away with all his might, but found also the intended grave converted into the entrance to a shaft. Striking the earth it seems he had found pay rock worth sixty dollars a ton. The delegation at once staked out claims adjoining his, and the deceased was forgotten. Later in the season, the snow having melted, his body was found and given an ordinary burial in another part of the camp.

The Roentgen rays are apt to have dangerous consequences to thoses who experiment with them. A certain electric engineer who has often demonstrated the beauty of his finger bones by placing his left hand within their radius is losing all the nails from its fingers. Patients whose heads have been subjected to the influence of the rays have had their hair fall out or turn white. These results are due to the potency of the ultra-violet rays of the spectrum, and it is suggested that the old superstition about the danger of sleeping in the direct rays of the moon has a scientific basis inasmuch as these same ultra-violet rays exist in moonlight.

Colonel Watterson favors the nomination by the Democracy of a third ticket, but says that if anything could make him bolt it, it would be his own nomination.

THE PONY RACING MEET

1. Swinnerton's mount. 2. The favorite ahead. 3. Lining up for the paper chase. 4. The Baldwin coach. 5. Walter Hobart's drag. 6. Hobart on Li Hung Chang. 7. Start of the Hares. 8. The water jump. 9. Scene on the grounds

THE SULTAN'S PALACE

THE WATERFRONT, WITH SAID BARGASH'S HAREM TO THE RIGHT

SCENES AT ZANZIBAR

SEE PAGE 7

INTERIOR OF THE ENGLISH MISSION CHURCH

THINGS AND PEOPLE

May be it is optimism, but the President of the Horse Show Association indignantly refuses to attribute his brilliant anticipations for the forthcoming equine conclave to aught but certainties. In the first place, he insists the show is out of the experimental stage; in the second he has had sufficient support already promised to ensure success. Not only will the society high-lights of last season contribute their rigs and their blooded stock, but there has been developed a degree of interest among the breeders that has not hitherto existed. In addition there is the generous participation of the two Jockey Clubs, perhaps the most important assistance the equine cause could obtain. Last winter several of the important stables were not represented, through misapprehension, or lack of interest, or some other cause; this time we are to see an exhibit from the Palo Alto stock farm, which means, doubtless, the Orloff trotters, together with several of the great stallions and mares of that noted establishment. Mr. Corbett has promised the stars of his stables; Walter Hobart will have all his drags and coaches and other turn-outs in the several competitions; Charles Baldwin, whose young wife has quite as pronounced a degree of equine enthusiasm as her brother, will run the latter a close race for blue ribbons. George Newhall, Joe Grant, Richard Tobin and Henry Crocker are determined that victories shall not be easily won in any of the ornamental classes. Though George Pope announced he would not again participate after his failure to secure first honors last season, it is said he has found a team to match Hobart's best and will contribute them to the show. So all auspices point towards a brilliant assemblage of equipages and horses, though the spectacular and sensational element which Talbot Clifton contributed will this season be absent.

***

I am told also of the promised participation of the Riding Club, and the Driving Association, whose members disport themselves at the Speed Track in the Park these golden autumn afternoons; there is a genuine interest among the coachmen of the Western Addition on the subject of their rigs, and any number of private turnouts—broughams, wagonettes, carriages, victorias, brewsters, phaetons, tandems, etc., will be entered. Even the livery-stable keepers have been appealed to, and the rigorous rules by which horses of abundant and bushy tails and manes were discriminated against, in favor of equines clipped and abbreviated, according to fashionable dictates, have been suspended. These professionals claim that in the eyes of most of their customers a docked horse is a damaged horse, and that, in consequence, they are debarred from contributing to the show. However, there is no longer this excuse, so we may anticipate a profusion of livery rigs in the general competitions. It is pleasant to learn that Mr. Reginald Rives and Mr. Carman have both promised to assist the directors as judges. In answer to the invitation of the Board they replied, saying they had enjoyed themselves so thoroughly before, that they could not afford to miss another opportunity of visiting the Coast.

*

The O'Farrel failure and its dreary consequences of scandal have dragged forth from well-earned retirement the personality of F. S. Wensinger. For many long years he was one of the leading real estate dealers and investors of San Francisco, and enjoyed that confidence and estimation which come only to men of proved conscientiousness and rectitude. In every community there are a few such men who, combining shrewdness and worldly wisdom with cautious conservatism and uprightness of character, inevitably win fortunes and the suffrage of a large clientele. To Wensinger, a devout Romanist, came first the wary capitalist determined to take no chance of losing his hard-earned possessions; he was entrusted with the extensive real estate business of the Catholic Church; he collected rents for the Archbishop and suggested their investments. The same influence brought him the affairs of the Catholic millionaires—the Donahoes and Donahues, together with the rank and file of the faith, who felt their fortunes safe and secure in the hands of a man in whom the clergy believed. In due course, as the city grew, Wensinger waxed rich, and aided his customers to increase their accumulations. The business centre moved south from his old office on Sacramento street, but there he remained, and his clients never found it too far to go after him. As head clerk and assistant he had young O'Farrel, the nephew of his wife, son of a wealthy rancher of Sonoma. O'Farrel senior, was a splendid type of the genuine Irishman—a man fashioned somewhat on the lines of Barney Murphy, generous and kindly, loving to dispense a broad and jovial hospitality. He boasted that he killed and consumed a beef every day, which is not incredible considering he kept open house for the county, maintained an army of retainers and rarely sat down to dinner with less than a dozen for company.

***

That rate of living demanded more money than O'Farrell possessed, and there came a time when he suffered the pinch of poverty. But not for long, happily—he died. In course of time Wensinger, growing richer, left his business more completely in the hands of young O'Farrell, whose discretion and character he had tried so earnestly to cultivate. What is bred in the bone however, sooner or later comes out in the flesh. O'Farrell in many ways is his father over again, generous and kindly disposed, but with little of the caution and less of the conservatism of his uncle. He had neither the old man's application nor his steadiness, though no one denied him excellence of intention. These recent years have played havoc with Wensinger's accumulations. He loaned money to Mrs. Hood of Los Guillicos, and the depression of land values forced her property into his hands. The amount of the mortgage, I believe, was $70,000. This failure of his nephew has already cost him $40,000 cash. Nor is it probable his losses will stop there. He will never permit the Archbishop to suffer, even if he himself be out of pocket thereby. I saw him the other day in the Occidental Hotel, a stick in one hand and a check book in the other, the figure of a patient, honorable old man, dragged out of his retirement by the unexpected call of the world—sorrowful, but acquiescent to the decrees of the Architect of Fate.

***

Considering how general the interest in vaudeville performances is, it is not unreasonable to suppose there prevails considerable curiosity, also, as to the personalities and identities of the singers, contortionists and acrobats whose performances amuse or excite our wonder at the Orpheum. It cannot truly be said these stars of the variety stage are underpaid. Indeed, a successful vocalist or dancer often commands a higher salary than the stars of the legitimate drama. Take, for instance, Professor Kennedy, whose hypnotic entertainment was a feature of the programme two weeks ago. His income while at the Orpheum was $1,000 per week. Of course this is an unusually exalted stipend, but hypnotism draws, and, besides, the Professor is a shrewd business man. With one exception that is the largest salary Gustav Walter has ever paid, though Papinta's weekly honorarium approached it. This young woman had $500 a week for her dance, but there were also electricians and assistants to the number of eight to aid her, and, besides, nearly a ton and a half of excess baggage, bringing the cost of this attraction to $800 per week. Biondi's show—one of the most taking the house ever had—cost nearly $500 per week, for the act is an expensive one, between dressers and other accesories. The Vitascope called for $500 also; the Nelson sisters received $350; Aragon, the feminine rope walker, $200; the Marlowe-Dunham combination $450; the Fredericks $350. These, of course, are the most expensive people in the show business. The figures of these salaries do not include the cost of transportation and baggage, which Manager Walter has also to meet. Those who have read thus far will not be astonished to learn that the weekly payroll of the Orpheum averages between $2,500 and $3,000 per week. However, the house seats considerably over $5,000 per week, and as standing room is the rule half the week, it is not astonishing that Gustav Walter's income averages $50,000 per annum.

***

The story of Mrs. Fitzherbert, the morganatic wife of the fourth George of England, is one of the romances of history familiar to most readers of the newspapers. That the dissipated monarch was legally and lovingly bound to the fascinating Catholic commoner admits of no doubt, but in Great Britain the ruler may not mate out of his own station, and policy required the elevation of some German princess to the throne. There were children, however—children with royal blood in their veins, but, in order to avoid complications, they were sent out of the kingdom and reared and educated in the United States. A liberal income was allowed them, and they flourished, honorably following various avocations. Among their descendants is Mrs. S. W. Holladay, who is a great granddaughter of George. Dr. Ord, a distinguished army surgeon, who fought through the war and has lived for many years past in Arizona, admits the same descent. The latter is in town now, at the Occidental, for a brief term of days. He is an intellectual and able man whose scientific attainments have added much to our knowledge of the flora and fauna of that territory. No man knows better about the region than Dr. Ord, and it is certainly interesting to listen to his experiences of early days there.

***

The misadventure of the Alliance Club in Southern California, whence it went on a tour of conquest, is not astonishing considering that Los Angeles is exuberantly free-silver. The coinage heresy has captivated Los Angeles, Pasadena and their environments. Between its inroads, and the faction fight between Lindley and Moore, the Republican party is in a bad way. Admitting the Los Angelans as the most single-minded of self-seekers, it seems astonishing they should have got so far adrift as to throw over McKinley. The ordinary arguments of the Bryanites should find ready refutation among the Pioneers of '89, but it must be remembered that the latter-day emigration was quite largely recruited from Kansas and the Middle West—a happy hunting ground for economical fallacies. Considering this condition, the misfortune which befell Samuel M. Shortridge is not astonishing. A vast and exultant audience assembled to hear the orator, and it listened patiently, with occasional murmurs of applause, to his parading of the old-time Republican heroes. At the behest of his organ tones the dead and gone warriors and statesmen of the party stalked mightily through the hall, their achievements and characteristics exalted high above the possibility of Democratic competition. Finally, when he had reached the height of his admiring tribute and it came the moment to present the bitter and unworthy contrast, he paused—a significant pause. The tall speaker shook menacingly a long fore-finger. "And now for Bryan and silver," he said in a tone in which irony struggled fiercely with sarcasm. The word was enough. A wild roar arose. Cheers for Bryan echoed clamorously through the hall. For ten minutes the hubbub kept up, fully half the audience participating. The plaudits finally ceased. Thereupon Shortridge continued, "But Major McKinley—" The other and heretofore silent half of the gathering at once grew exultant. The atmosphere was split and shattered by their happiness. Again the orator essayed to go on. "Now, I see," he commenced, "why Mr. Bryan's——" That last Bryan was the climax. Cheer after cheer rent the air. The silverites roared and yelled to such a degree that the meeting adjourned in disorder. I fancy, after this, it will be difficult to find reputable Republican orators to dare a Southern audience.

***

It is reasonable to presume, however, that to the faction fight must be attributed much of the responsibility for the condition of affairs prevailing among the Southern Republicans. The party is restive under the leadership of Hervey Lindley, who is not a man of any real consideration or principle. He is cold-blooded, self-seeking, narrow-minded and ungenerous—a poor mental outfit for a political leader. To his adversary, Walter Moore, there may be attributed many of those defects which seem inherent in the political character, but he has frankness and geniality of manner; he is true to the cause he espouses and to the friends he is pledged to—which cannot truthfully be said of Lindley.

***

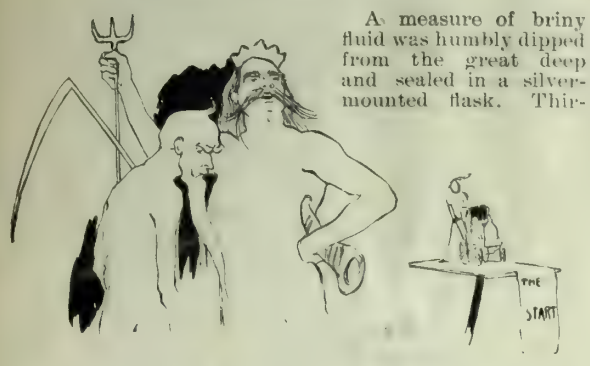
The paragraph appearing in this column stating the objections of certain United States officers at the adoption of the regular service uniform by the National Guard, has given rise to some controversy. It was alleged therein that a bill was being drafted for presentation to Congress providing a distinct uniform for Uncle Sam's own soldiers, and containing clauses precluding the assumption of this garb by State militia or any other military body. I am assured by General Graham, however, that the attitude attributed therein to the regulars, does the service an injustice, as no such sentiment is entertained. On the contrary, he states that it has been recommended in the report of a regular officer detailed by the War Department to inspect the militia of a certain State, that the National Guard should be uniformed and equipped in the same manner as are the regular troops.

***

The financial pinch in New York, I am told, is almost as severe as that which preceded the war. In San Francisco coin was never scarcer, business never worse. The condition which followed the Pacific Bank suspension three years ago was bright in comparison with that prevailing now. The Savings banks will neither pay without notice nor loan on good security, and one is led to ask how they propose paying interest to their depositors next January. If they earn nothing they can pay nothing. The consequence of this suspension of loans is the enforced idleness of record-searchers and lawyers whose time is devoted to passing on titles. How they long for November to put an end to existing uncertainty. In the meantime, however, the Safe Deposits have rented their vaults to the final subdivision, and I am inclined to believe it would surprise even the financiers to learn the amount of gold being hoarded for an expected advance. This condition, however, forces the payment of labor throughout the city in silver halves and dollars and a pile of the white metal in lieu of gold twenties is apt to force the most enthusiastic of the free coinage men to reconsider their positions.

PERILS OF THE PERAMBULATOR

Details of "The Waves" Great Relay Baby-Carriage Race from the Pacific Ocean to Lake Merritt.



A measure of briny fluid was humbly dipped from the great deep and sealed in a silver-mounted flask. Thirteen hours and twenty-seven minutes later it was poured gurgling forth, to mingle with the squinting waters of Lake Merritt. How did it get there? How did it traverse the mighty sand lots, the burning concrete, the hostile settlement on the other side? "The Wave" knows how. "The Wave" will tell you.

Friday morning a mighty concourse was gathered at the Cliff House, to watch the starting of The Wave's great Relay. At a given signal the flask was placed in the outstretched hands of Baby Booboo McChinley, the quivering fingers of nurse Maggie Flynn tightened on the handle, and with a bursting yell from the crowd, they were off!

The run to the Park gates was a stormy one. Courier Booboo showed a tendency to confuse his carriage with a dining car, no doubt misled by the space and size of the flask, and several times narrowly escaped strangulation. Once he was nearly arrested by the mounted police for violating the speed regulations, but flew past with a merry laugh, the fleet-fluted Maggie Flynn never slackening her pace. At one time seemed imminent. As the perambulator rounded a curve at a perilous rate of speed, a lawn mower attempted to cross in front of it. Courier Booboo sounded his rattle just in time, and the carriage sped on with only a slight jar. At last the gates were reached, and the flask flung into the waiting carriage of Courier Pudgy O'Brien three seconds ahead of the scheduled time. Booboo was royally cheered, and borne away by the crowd, who all clamored for the honor of setting up the Mellin's food.

A FEARFUL COLLISION

Pudgy O'Brien is a plucky, determined-looking person, whose somewhat fabulous appearance is misleading, being entirely a matter of dress. His orders were sharp and quick, and occasionally punctured by profanity, but the build of his propeller was unfortunately heavy, and several minutes were lost inflating his tired lungs.

At the corner of Van Ness avenue and Sutter street, Ernestine Rachael Goldenstein shook her blonde curls impatiently and strained her blue eyes with watching, as the moment for starting went by, and her perambulator still lacked the precious silver-embossed flask of old Ocean's salt tears. Two minutes, three—there he was! As the flask leaped across the waiting carriage, Courier Ernestine seized it, and uttered a cry of rapture. "Sterling!" she murmured, as she shot away in the direction of Polk street.

Now nature began to show a terrible aspect. Trade-winds clutched at Courier Ernestine's lace veil, dust flung itself fiercely upon her pink silk coverlet, watering-carts shied their mad torrents foaming across her way. At one time it looked as though the great "Wave" Relay were to be marred by

A FRIGHTFUL TRAGEDY.

In an attempt to cut across Market street, the perambulator slipped, swayed, and plunged sidewise to the very depths of the gutter, pinning The Wave's courier beneath it as it went. Horror-stricken spectators rushed to the rescue, but fortunately no worse injuries were sustained than a bumped head and a severe nervous shock. Miss Goldenstein was unable to continue, but bravely retired to the nearest lawyer to commence a suit for damages against the Market Street Railway Company, while a tramp perambulator bore the silver flask to the ferry and placed it in the hands of Courier Collie Punkington. The trip across the bay was attended by severe squalls, but was nevertheless made in good time, and at Seventh and Broadway, the spacious carriage of the Waverley trains was drawn up to receive the travel-weary flask. Full details of this last run have not reached us, but from perambulatest accounts it seems to have been fraught with peril. At one point a goat, presumably bribed and set out by our cowardly rival, the Arguenot, claimed the road and both sidewalks, making a detour over three picket fences necessary. The twins themselves fell into a violent altercation as to which should hold the flask, and a great deal of valuable skin was lost before the matter was submitted to arbitration and the bottle placed between them. The Lake was reached two minutes before the schedule time, and while waiting for the mighty moment when the Ocean should gush forth from its silver bondage the bigger twin, in a second of impatience, flung several valuable articles of personal attire into the shining waters of Lake Merritt. A brave swimmer flung off his coat and boots, and springing boldly in, waded after them, recovering everything but one bronze boot. Then time was proclaimed, and the swaying crowd on the bank held its breath as the stopper was drawn, and, with a chuckle of delight, the sea leaped to the bosom of its little sister. Then, in a storm of cheers, the twins were raised on the shoulders of the crowd, and "The Wave" proclaimed to be

A TIDAL WAVE.

THE CRISIS AT ZANZIBAR

The accompanying pictures of Zanzibar were taken during the reign of Said Burgash, who seized the throne that rightfully belonged to his brother while the latter was away at his father's funeral. Sulimam, being of a peaceful temperament, permitted this usurpation, and contented himself with the position of Prime Minister. Every evening at sunset it was the custom of Said Burgash to review his troops in front of the palace. At sunset, too, it is a familiar spectacle to see a chain-gang of women from the old fort, marching to the palace with their chutties of water on their heads. At some distance from the palace is the English Mission church, built on the site of the old slave market. It has always been one of the most picturesque sights of Zanzibar, with its walks of coral rock, and its procession of barefooted, surpliced choir boys.

Zanzibar is a low, crooked, ill-smelling city of about a hundred thousand inhabitants, the greater part of whom are Arabs. In 1856 it gained independence, but has been under a British protectorate since November. It was this fact that led to the recent bombardment of the city, and the complete destruction of the palace. On the death of Hamed bin Thwain the Sultan, his relative and supposed murderer, Said Kalid, defied the protectorate and seized the throne, barricading himself in the palace with seven hundred armed Askaris. The British promptly bombarded the palace till there was not a stone or a soldier left standing, and established the new Sultan, Hamoud bin Mohammed bin Said. Policy controlled England's passion for annexing in this case, for France and Germany would probably be extremely unwilling to give up their rights and consular jurisdiction, and England is not anxious for a row with either of these powers just at present.

GUIDO

I know you are fair,
But what do I care
For the lustre of eyes
And the ripple of hair.
The earth is forlorn, and the heavens are lead,
Since under the arch of the pitiless skies,
Guido, brave Guido, my brother, lies dead.
Together we three,
That is, Guido and I
And the mother who bore us,
Lived in a cottage that looks on the sea;
The mountains behind, and the glad waves before us,
And over us ever the blue of the sky.
We breasted the deep in the gray of the morning,
And mended our nets at the ebb of the tide;
And we laughed,
And we chaffed,
At the fond mother's warning,
Who could not forget how our good father died.
Thus peacefully speeded
The seasons unheeded,
Till rumors were rife
Of the roar of the battle and din of the strife;
There was call for the lovers of country to come,
And Guido grew restless, I knew what it meant,
He was life of my life, and together we went;
Oh! her eyes were so dry, and her lips were so dumb,
As we marched away,
At the break of day,
To the blare of the trumpet, and beat of the drum.
It was grand to rally for freedom and God,
But, oh, the ruin! and oh, the cost!
We conquered the foe, but the battle is lost,
Since Guido, dear Guido, lies under the sod.
The red lights flash forth from the red-tiled town,
And the brazen tongues of the bells ring out,
And the men and women go up and down,
And meet us,
And greet us,
With cheer and shout;
But a mother stands watching beside the door,
While the spent waves moan on the shingly shore.

LUCIUS HARWOOD FOOTE.

The late Sir Henry Parkes, five times Prime Minister of New South Wales, was born a Warwickshire peasant, and by stress of natural genius rose to political eminence. He was always poor, however, and so wretched a financier of his own affairs that he was continually borrowing money. He had an ingratiating way of asking for $150, his favorite amount, and even the men who hated him, and they were numerous in Sydney, found it difficult to refuse his importunity. The "Morning Herald" of that city once printed a picture of Sir Henry standing in an easy attitude with his hands in his pockets. One of his victims remarked on seeing it: "Call that a life-like picture of Parkes? Why, he has his hands in his own pockets."

A YAQUI JOAN OF ARC

Santa Teresa and Her Fanatical Troops on the Rio Grande.

In a little settlement of Northern Mexico, the spirit of Joan of Arc has come to earth again,—or is it merely a half-breed imitation of a New Woman? At all events, among the Yaqui Indians, who live on the shores of the Rio Grande, there lives a strange girl, half Indian, half Spaniard, who may yet play a momentous part in the history of Mexico.

Santa Teresa, as she is called, has all the dash and enthusiasm of a Mexican, the craft and cruelty of an Indian, the fanatical zeal of a Catholic and the deviltry of a heathen. She is only twenty-three, but for seven years she has been making all the trouble she could between the turbulent Yaquis and the Government.

At sixteen, before she had earned the title of saint, Teresa had a lover. She loved him with all the passion of her wild nature, and put implicit faith in his promise to marry her. He, meanwhile, was carrying on a double affair, and, first thing she knew, the other woman married him, and displayed him proudly in the face of the community. At this Teresa went into violent convulsions, which ended in a cataleptic trance. For days she lay stiff and unconscious, while the awe-struck neighbors flocked in to look at her, and to murmur among themselves that she was bewitched. At the end of eight days, just as the community was deciding to burn the faithless lover and his wife for witchcraft, Teresa awoke and spoke wonderful words to them. She said that she had gone out of her body during the convulsions, and had mounted to a palace of silver and gold, where beautiful angels surrounded her, in jewelled spurs and silver-trimmed sombreros and heavenly mantillas. They told her among other things that the rest of her life must be spent healing the sick. She would have revealed more, but her father interposed, saying that the conversation of the saints should not be made common talk. He had noted the awe-struck faces, and knew that a little mystery would only increase his daughter's importance. The Yaquis are not, properly, Indians, but descendants of the Aztecs, whose superstitious instincts they have kept. Thousands now flocked to Santa Teresa, as she was called, to be healed by her drugs or the touch of her hands. Her mysterious drugs, which she carries slung around her neck in little bottles, are supposed to be a legacy from the ancient Medicine Men of her tribe, and never more than a drop or two is used at a time. Just how much actual healing is done we have no means of knowing, but her people believe in her.

It is as a soldier that Santa Teresa has made herself most famous, for she considers herself divinely appointed to lead a religious crusade against the Mexican Government. She is constantly gathering bands of fanatics to fall upon the little Mexican towns, riding like a whirlwind at the head of them, and holding aloft a hideous little image of the Virgin Mary, a talisman which rouses her followers to frenzy. They say that her father prompts many of her actions, and that both are much under the control of Aguirre, a weird, dwarfish hunchback who is always at her side on the field of battle.

None of Santa Teresa's uprisings have as yet amounted to much. The first was put down at once by regular troops, and the young woman and her father were taken to Guaymas and imprisoned. Waen the authorities learned that a band of her adherents were marching to rescue her, they wisely avoided bloodshed by shipping her over the border into Texas, where she was released with a warning never to return to Mexico. Twice she crossed the border to lead a revolt, but was both times obliged to escape back as best she could. When, only a few weeks ago, she made a third attempt, the Mexican Government lost patience, and has now placed the frontier towns under military guard, and formally demanded of the United States the surrender of the saint, her father and the dwarf. She is skirmishing about the border at the head of a band of fanatics, who believe her a saint delegated by divine will to lead them to victory. If her future is not cut off by an irate government, it promises to be an eventful one.

In appearance Santa Teresa is short and heavily built, with a dark, Spanish face that is now eager and alert, now sluggish and unexpressive, with eyes solemnly fixed on things unseen by other mortals. When her followers see this latter look, they whisper that she is communing with the saints, and their reverence deepens. Her courage is unquestioned. She is always in the thick of the battle, riding as the men do and fighting far better. Her people believe that she is bullet and bayonet-proof, for in spite of her conspicuous appearance, her bright neckerchief, her big sombrero and leather leggings, she has never received a single scratch.

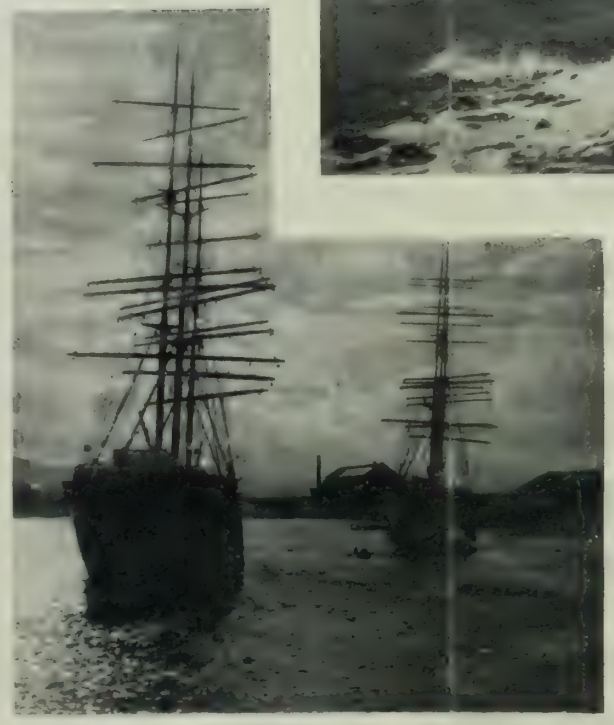
Father Casey of Denver, who has just returned from Mexico, does not consider Teresa and her miracles as of much importance. In regard to her church standing, he says:

"Reports about Santa Teresa, as the Yaqui Indians call her, were not widespread at the time I was in Mexico. She was regarded as a pious, harmless woman, who believed herself capable of doing good among sick people.

"Nogales is largely inhabited by these Yaquis, who are half-breed Indians, not nearly the equals in intelligence of the regular Mexicans. They are not at satisfied with the Mexican Government, and may have made the excitement caused by Santa Teresa's doings an excuse for an uprising.

"So far as I am concerned, I do not know that the woman ever performed a miraculous cure. She was not considered worthy of much notice by the regular Mexicans when I was among them, and not of any at all by the Church. The trouble attributed to her now is not likely to prove serious."

Father Casey's estimate is a little disappointing to lovers of romance, but does not take away from the fact that Santa Teresa would make a most picturesque heroine for a stirring novel.



THE HARBOR OF THE GOLDEN GATE

SUNSET AND MOONLIGHT IN SAN FRANCISCO BAY. FROM PHOTOS BY H. B. HOSMER AND W. B. TYLER

THE VANDERBILT-ASTORS

American Millionaires From an English Standpoint.

The authenticity of the personal reminiscences of American millionaires which appear in the current "Cornhill," may be open to doubt, but they have the merit of being interesting. An editorial note apprises us that the writer speaks by the card and had intimate relations with the men about whom he writes. This adds interest to the story of Jay Gould's sufferings and the interview with Phil Armour, though we are inclined to imagine the hour at which this alleged meeting took place is a misprint. Surely it should be 8 rather than 6 o'clock. For an Englishman the writer is very respectful, has few hard things to say about the plutocrats of our native land. Indeed, he points out that we have about four thousand millionaires, and granting them ten millions apiece, and deducting this from the national wealth, we still find an enormous per capita increase during the last fifty years. It is evident, therefore, that the millionaires have not grown rich by impoverishing the people. In fact, they have aided very materially in creating new wealth, and as a class are not an evil. Whether they have done harm as individuals, each personal record must decide. Everybody knows the story of Commodore Vanderbilt, the founder of the family, how he began as a barefooted, penniless boy of six, to work for his living, and at seventy was worth seventy millions. He, his son and his grandsons have all possessed such remarkable executive ability, however, that they would have commanded splendid positions and salaries, no matter what state they had been born into.

"While on the subject of the Vanderbilts," says the writer, "let me show a strange contrast between the 'ideal homes' of two brothers—Cornelius and George Vanderbilt. The home of the former is a stone palace on Fifth avenue, which cost, with its contents, over five million dollars, and it has a garden. That garden is but a narrow city lot, yet it cost over 400,000 dollars, becauses a brown stone house, comparatively new, was pulled down to make room for three beds of blossom and a few square yards of turf. The whole establishment covers less than one acre of the earth's surface. This is the ideal home of Cornelius Vanderbilt. Last year I visited George Vanderbilt's six million dollar home in the very heart of the North Carolina mountains; and I found it very hard to leave that wonderful view from the terrace, of fifty mountain peaks, some over 6,000 feet in height, and the valley of the beautiful French Broad. This Vanderbilt farm contains 180 square miles of country. You can drive in a straight line from the houses thirty-five miles without getting out of the Vanderbilt property. Roads, in splendid condition, lead to all parts. There is a game preserve of 20,000 acres, and two fishing rivers. Near the house are sunken gardens, greenhouses, a tennis court, to make which a retaining wall sixteen feet thick and forty feet high was built. There is a bowling green 200 feet wide and 700 feet long, surrounded by a hand-carved granite balustrade. The house itself is 300 feet one way, by 200 feet the other; a bit of old France for architecture. Three hundred stonemasons have been kept busy for three years; it will take the same force as much longer to complete the work in hand. When the 'home' is finished it will represent an investment of six million dollars. And the land, it must be remembered, cost little. The Southern folk seem very proud of their new Northern millionaire. For his disbursements in the neighborhood, which for three years have never fallen below 15,000 dollars a week, have put new money into many pockets, new hope into many hearts."

The fortunes of the Standard Oil combination are the most recently gathered of American millions. Thirty-five years ago five men thought they saw possibilities in petroleum; to-day they are worth six hundred millions. Of course, the 'Standard' is a wicked monopoly, and has had rude things said about it. But that is a way the world has, and perhaps always will have. John D. Rockefeller, the brain and nerve of this great trust, is a ruddy-faced man with eye so mild and manner so genial, that it is very hard to call him a 'grasping monopolist.' his hobby now is education, and he rides this hobby in robust, manly fashion. He has taken the University of Chicago under his wing, and already the sum of 7,000,000 dollars has passed from his pocket to the treasury of the new seat of learning in the second city of the Republic. He has a peculiar way of sending in his remittances, and his manner will perhaps be best shown by quoting this letter from Mr. Rockefeller to the president of the university in question. It is thoroughly characteristic:

" 'Dear Sir.—I wish to contribute to the endowment of the University one million dollars in 5 per cent. gold bonds. I make this gift as a special thank-offering to Almighty God for returning health. Yours truly,

" 'JOHN D. ROCKEFELLER.'

"Six letters like that have gone forth from the pen of Mr. Rockefeller, and, however unscrupulous the great trust may be, the edge of public censure cannot help being dulled by these brief billets.

Here is a view of Jay Gould different to that which British pens generally write:

"I would like to put this one memory of Gould on record, for it gives a glimpse of that other Gould I prefer to remember. I am seated before a blazing fire in the library of a man I see at a glance is a book-loving as well as a book-owning man. Near me, by the centre table, Jay Gould is seated in a low chair. The shaded lamp throws a flood of light on a book he holds, and also shows in relief against the background of shadow his clean-cut features. It is the face of a student, and as he turns to answer some question I have asked about the book, I find the happiest expression resting on that face. The dark eyes are brimming over with that thoughtful look which shows a free mind and a happy moment. Then suddenly a spasm of pain distorts the face, the eyes close, the book falls from a nerveless hand. For a moment he seems to suffer the torture of the damned. Then he pulls himself together, begs to be excused, and then goes slowly up the broad stairway to pass a night of anguish. His nemesis has struck home; neuralgia, which has traveled with him forty years—an enemy which all his wealth could not bribe—had claimed its pound of flesh. When I heard of how he died—turned his face to the white wall, whispered 'I am so tired, tired,' and then slipped into the unknown—this scene came back to me with new meaning. Gould grabbed for gold—got it; and that was all he did get out of life."

The author then goes on to tell of a meeting with Phil Armour.

"One cold winter morning, having arrived in Chicago about 7 o'clock," he continues, "I was making my way to the hotel. It seemed an unchristian hour for a white man to be on the street, especially when that street was located in the business centre of a great city. Suddenly my companion touched me on the arm and said: 'Look, there's 'Phil' hard at work. Come in. We'll fix up a small game of poker for this evening.' I had often heard of Phil Armour, the millionaire pork packer, butcher, grain-gambler, railway director, and miscellaneous capitalist, and so I followed my friend gladly up the short flight of stone steps, across a large office made to accommodate a hundred clerks, but now deserted, on, on till we entered a small room and stood in the presence of 'Phil.' Although it was in the heart of winter, he was in his 'shirt-sleeves,' and stood there—for all the world a second Perkyn Middlewick, butterman—carefully examining a large book, in which was shown the business at all his branches day by day. He is always at his office two hours before his clerks arrive; and he always begins the day's work with this careful study of the previous day's business. I have been told by men able to judge that no man in America has the same exact and early information as to how he stands and what his men are doing. He has five men in his employ, to each of whom he pays a salary of 20,000 dollars a year. And all his employes are well-paid, well-treated, but also—and here lies the secret of his success—all well-worked, body as well as brain. Phil Armour impressed me as a big, brainy, active boy, very glad to be alive, and very much alive in brain, eye, ear, and body. He seemed as nerveless as an old oak tree, and his eyes saw right into your brain—at least that is how I felt. Phil Armour is worth about thirty million dollars. He has given between three and four million dollars to various charities.

"After a few words with the great 'pork packer,' my friend broached the poker question. Honestly, from the way Armour's face brightened and his eyes snapped, I feared he was on the point of suggesting a game of 'draw' there and then. But he did not. He only invited us to come to his house that evening. He would have 'some of the boys there to meet us.' And 'the boys' who did meet us were a most interesting lot, all millionaires except two, Judge Gresham, Cleveland's favorite Cabinet Minister, and the writer. There was the leading gambler of the Chicago Board of Trade, Norman B. Ream, a tall, loose-jointed man with a face of iron, and eyes that saw far and deep. He has often moved the grain markets of the world up and down at will. He was always bluffing at poker, always losing too, for the limit was small; his great game has no limit, and the 'bluff' often wins. There was Marshal Field, ten times a millionaire, made out of keeping shop; the one-time partner of Mr. Leiter, now father-in-law of Hon. George Curzon. He had a squeaking voice, was timid in play, and when he asked for cards I fancied it was one of his five hundred clerks crying, in their accustomed way, 'Cash,' 'Cash,' 'Cash!' Pullman, of palace and sleeping-car fame, was there, looking the comfortable farmer, rather than uncomfortable millionaire Mr. Stead paints him. He put down 'three four spots' on my bluff, rather than pay five dollars to see what I had. He was as conservative in poker as in palace cars. He was a winner at the end of play. He had a paternal, domineering way even with his brother millionaires, the manner and method which have made all his troubles with labour; for he is an honest man, a just one. All the talk about his selfishness and tricky ways is ridiculed by men who know his life day by day, and see it in all its phases. Potter Palmer, the millionaire hotel owner and real estate man, was another of the party. His name and his millions were all that made him differ from the multitude. The rest of the company were men lacking individuality—men who had, one might say, their millions thrust upon them by the increase in value of land long held in the family. Taken all together, they were as pleasant, unassuming, companionable set of men; and each wore his mantle of millions easily. It is very curious, but I find I have left out the most interesting man in our card party. This is due, in all probability, to the circumstance that he was the only man who did not play poker. This man was James J. Hill, the shrewdest and most successful railway man in the West, and a railway man who enjoys this unique record—his properties have in the past paid, and do still pay, large and regular dividends. Forty years ago 'Jim Hill' was a 'roustabout' on the wharf in St. Paul, Minnesota. That is, he earned two dollars a day carrying wood and freight on his back from the wharf to the deck of the Mississippi steamboat. He 'roustabouted' so well that he soon owned that boat. That boat seemed to breed other boats with surprising rapidity. Money came to him from everything he touched. At last the Manitoba Railway, owned by Hollanders, got into trouble. Hill somehow got the road out of trouble, but at the same time out of the possession of those Holland owners. To-day he is worth seventy million dollars. In appearance he strongly suggests a lion on two legs. The kind of lion, in the financial world, the lamb so often lies down with—inside quarter for the lamb. He has an undersized body, but oversized head, wears his hair a la Samson in the ante-Delilah days, and his hat is always two sizes too big for him. He neither smokes, drinks nor gambles, but in the face of such a record of the minor virtues, no one ever calls him a saint. Behind his millions lies this romance. While he worked for wages on the wharf, his sweetheart worked for wages at the only hotel. When wealth came to him he sent his sweetheart, for two years, to an Eastern school, then married her. To-day, from the window of their home—a house which cost 700,000 dollars to build—he can see the old wharf where he once worked hard.

ABOUT PERSONAGES

Dr. Jameson is amusing himself while in Holloway jail by writing a book about the Transvaal raid. Of course Cecil Rhodes will be consulted as to its publication. Li Hung Chang keeps a diary of his travels, rising early every morning to record the impressions of the previous day's experiences.

Princess Maud, recently married to Prince Charles of Denmark, has taken to "poker work," which consists in tracing and working out designs on wood with red-hot irons. The couple will reside in Copenhagen, with their country residence near Bernstorf Castle, while their English home will be in Appleton, near Sandringham.

The French Government has conferred the Legion of Honor cross upon Edwin Lord Weeks, the well-known artist whose Oriental pictures are familiar to readers of the magazines. He has traveled through Algeria, Morocco, Turkey and Persia, and is the author of a book describing a journey from the Black Sea to the Persian Gulf, which the Harpers published.

Sousa, the conductor and composer, received but $35 for the "Washington Post" march, but for the "Liberty Bell," which was published under a different arrangement, he has already netted $28,000. From the "Cotton King" march, which was written but a year ago, he has made $20,000, and he calculates on an average income of at least $25,000 annually from his compositions.

Paris is much interested in the anticipated visit of the Czar and Czarina. The relations between France and Russia are most cordial and friendly, as evinced by the visit of the Russian naval officers two or three years ago, when all Paris took a holiday and the fetes surpassed anything the French have yet attempted. If the Czar decides to make the visit he will receive a welcome such as is rarely accorded sovereigns when visiting foreign nations.

Li Hung Chang had a good deal of fun interviewing his visitors in England. He chaffed Secretary Chamberlain about his single eye-glass, and asked him whether as Colonial Secretary he ever had a surplus, and if he had, what he did with it. He wanted to know also if the Queen and Lord Salisbury ever interfered with his management. The great Celestial looked forward to meeting the American reporters whom he predicted he would surely interview and without telling them anything about himself.

The German press is greatly incensed over the failure of Lord Salisbury to join in the naval blockade of Crete, to prevent the insurgents obtaining ammunition, supplies, etc. German opinion strongly favored a blockade, while Great Britain contended that if the European powers prevented the Greeks from reinforcing the insurgents they must also prevent the Turks from sending reinforcements to their own troops. The Continental Powers would not agree to this, with the result that Great Britain practically refused to participate.

Queen Victoria has officially announced that on June 20th, 1897, having completed the sixtieth year of her reign, she will be willing and happy to receive the felicitations of her subjects. An imposing pageant is outlined to take place in London, which will be as brilliant at least as that which signalized the Jubilee in 1887. To signalize the affair it is proposed to gild the great dome of St. Paul's, which was a favorite idea of the late Prince Consort. On this great occasion the Marquis of Salisbury will accept the dukedom which he has twice refused, and Mr. Conygsby Disraeli, nephew and heir of the Earl of Beaconsfield, will be elevated to the peerage.

David R. Francis, appointed to succeed Hoke Smith as Secretary of the Interior, owes his selection to the stand he took for gold in the preliminary battle for delegates to the Chicago convention. He is prominent in politics, was Governor of Missouri, and when Cleveland was making up his cabinet, prior to entering the second term of administration, Francis was summoned to consultation. But for a factional fight in St. Louis he would certainly have obtained a secretaryship then. He is comparatively a young man, strong and vigorous, of sunny temperament and genial disposition. He has a florid complexion, sandy hair and moustache, is a millionaire, and personally resembles Secretary Morton.

Candidate Bryan studied law in the office of Lyman Trumbull, the well-known Chicago lawyer, and whenever he is in Chicago lives at the Trumbull home. One night the family were having a reception when Bryan chanced in, and, pressed to remain, he consented, much against his will, for he was not properly attired for a function. A number of prominent men were among the guests, and the conversation turned on the Sherman law, which was blamed for the prevailing depression. Bryan, attired in his rough tweed suit, took no part in the conversation; but, finally he interposed to ask one of the loudest of the talkers—a leading capitalist of Chicago—to tell why the Sherman law should be repealed. In the discussion that ensued Bryan showed up so brilliantly that he became the centre of a lively group and riveted the attention of the gathering.

Hoke Smith, who has recently retired from Mr. Cleveland's cabinet, was admitted to the bar at eighteen years of age. He is tall and symmetrical, has a large, frank, resolute, beardless face, and a determined character. At the age of thirty he was making fifteen thousand a year from his law practice, and soon after he acquired a controlling interest in the "Atlanta Journal," the most influential evening paper in the South. Under his management the stock of this sheet was selling at twenty dollars a share, but it is now worth one hundred and twenty, and out of the venture Hoke is said to have made half a million dollars. Prior to the Chicago convention, the "Journal" was a sound-money paper, but its owner decided to support Bryan, much to the embarrassment of the business manager and others connected with the institution. He purposes going to New York soon to practice law.

IN SOCIETY

Entertainments and Happenings In Town and Out.

A problem, which is at present occupying the minds of the thoughtful is what special social stigma is to be drawn from the fact that so many expectant maidens have deferred making their debut until 1897. Is it that Leap Year casts a shadow over their chances of success, or do they deem another year of travel or of the schoolroom will add an extra cachet and rub off that suspicion of the tarnation that clings to their unsophisticated garments? Be it as it may, the ranks of the debutante are daily lessening, and this week I hear that both Miss Susie Bunning and Miss Maria McKenna have joined the backers out.

When one recollects that a season ago two quivers full of blooming buds made their formal entrance into society and achieved an unprecedented success, bearing their blushing honors thick upon them, one is forced to wonder whether the over-wary matron does not wish to place a winter or two between so glorious a record and her untutored fledglings' first flight. Then these brilliant buds will have become belles of two seasons—twice-told tales, with some of the glamour and most of the illusions swept off. It must be remembered, also, that there are but a handful of debutantes this year, and it is a difficult matter and carries but a small degree of glory to be queen of half a dozen.

How does this half dozen, you ask, compare with the buds of yesteryear? Among them are certainly a formidable trio who will cause many of the maidens to look to their laurels—Miss Alice Hoffman, a stunning looking girl and already a belle in the younger set. Miss Kate Salisbury will run the gauntlet and carry off a prize, while Miss Clara Huntington's triumph is a foregone conclusion. Another girl who has the charm of novelty in addition to a piquant personality is Miss Helen Hopkins, whose circus party is elsewhere alluded to.

The engagement of Miss Maraquita Collier and Mr. Arthur Macondray was somewhat of a surprise. Since Miss Collier—'Quita, as she is called by her intimates—made her debut last month at a tea given in her honor by Mrs. McCutcheon, she has been an immense favorite with the younger set, and Mr. Macondray's attentions to her were already marked during that series of Dutch treat theatre parties that Mrs. Collier and Mrs. McCutcheon organized. As the Colliers are in mourning, the wedding is to be an extremely quiet one.

Atherton Macondray belongs to the well-known Macondray family, and is now general manager of the old firm of Macondray & Co. He is a prominent member of several clubs, and has also associated himself with the Valley Railroad enterprise. This is an excellent record for so young a man as Mr. Macondray. He has the business energy of the founder of the house, and seems liable to make a record for himself.

The Hemphill sale was quite a social event. There is precious little going on in society at present save a few dinners, and any opportunity for a gathering is eagerly taken advantage of. The Hemphill house is quite a large one and full of furniture, which I am told fetched such excellent prices as to encourage others with homes in the Western Addition to dispose of their goods and chattels.

The Jewett dinner Wednesday night was a pleasant affair and a great success. Quite a number of prominent bohemians were there, and Frank Lincoln, the well-known entertainer, amused the guests with his stories and imitations. Ladies' day at the Bohemian Club on Wednesday gathered in the clubrooms the wives and daughters of the members who were shown the sights of the institution and the relics of the great midsummer jinks.

Few tours have been so pleasurable as the recent southern trip of Major and Miss Rose Hooper. They went direct to Coronado, where they remained about a fortnight; from there to Glenwood and Redondo, stopping a few days in Los Angeles, where they were charmingly entertained by the Bannings and Bradburys; from there to Santa Monica and Catalina Island and home via Santa Barbara. Major and Mrs. Hooper have taken the former Whittell house on the corner of Sacramento and Jones streets, for the winter. Major Hooper has quite recovered from his severe attack of pneumonia.

Among the debutantes of the winter whose coming-out will not lack celebration is Miss Helen Hopkins, the eldest daughter of Mr. and Mrs. E. W. Hopkins. She is a tall, slender, graceful girl, a blonde, bright, interesting and charming. She has many friends in the younger set, for she was educated at Miss West's school, but recently the finishing touches in the way of accomplishments have been put on at an Eastern academy. The first entertainment this young lady has given was a circus party to San Jose Wednesday night, given under very enjoyable auspices. The guests were taken from the depot at Third and Townsend streets to San Jose by special train, then headed for the Vendome, where an elaborate dinner was served, thence to the circus, back to the Vendome for supper, thence to town, stopping at Menlo to drop the Hopkins family and their friends who had been drawn from that vicinity. It proved a very jolly and decidedly an interesting affair. There is a presumption that Miss Hopkins will give a coming-out dance sufficiently elaborate to satisfy the exhilarative anticipations of the younger set.

There were not nearly as many handsome gowns shown at Del Monte as I anticipated. I saw but few stunning gowns during the entire week. There were any number of pretty light costumes, but almost no real creations. Everybody favored white, white for morning gowns, white for afternoon wear, and white for dinner. Of course, the material and mode differed according to the hour, duck being chosen for morning wear, dimity for afternoon, and dotted muslins over silk slips for evening. Even the men favored white and wore duck trousers on all possible and permissable occasions. This wearing of white garments is no small item. One popular and fastidious young benedict's laundry bill, I hear on excellent authority, amounts to $700 a month.

There are several rumors of fashionable engagements afloat. One is eagerly anticipated when the Honolulu steamer arrives. Another rumor links the names of a young millionaire and a gay debutante, daughter of a prominent public man.

Monday night has ceased to be the fashionable night at the theatre. Society no longer attends the opening performance. Wednesday is the night. At "Sans Gene," on Monday night, the audience was large, handsomely groomed, and, to a certain extent, fashionable. But the people who give the tone to a house were not there. Not a B'lingumite was to be seen, and frankly there is no fashionable tone without B'lingum.

Mrs. Justice Field has been the guest of honor at several charming and informal affairs of the past week. On Wednesday last Mrs. McKenna gave a park luncheon in her honor.

Miss Martha Shainwald has returned after nine months spent in visiting Honolulu, Japan and Australia. Her trip was delightful, and she has brought back with her many odd and costly souvenirs. Among them are some charming pieces of Japanese bric-a-brac, a centre table, an eccentric lounging chair and a low tea table. This bright young woman tells many amusing anecdotes connected with her stay in Australia, not the least interesting being a personal experience in which she came off with flying colors and much appaluse. While at a kindergarten entertainment, presided over by some prominent people in Sydney, the master of ceremonies, by some mysterious agency, was made aware of the fact that a representative of the land across the sea was present in his audience, and he called upon Miss Shainwald to say a few words. The call came so unexpectedly that for a moment she was nonplussed, but only for a moment. Then her tongue was loosed and she made an extremely bright talk explaining the growth of the system in California, the number of schools and the interest taken in them here. The address was a great success, and Miss Shainwald was there and then and thereafter the object of particular attention.

The announcement of Miss Daisy Belle Sharpe's marriage to Mr. Ed A. Howard of Oakland will come as a surprise to the friends of both. Miss Sharpe is a talented young woman, whose dramatic debut was accomplished under agreeable circumstances recently. She is decidedly pretty, as her photograph shows, graceful and accomplished. Augustin Daly approved her style to the extent of offering her an engagement for the coming season. However, it is to be presumed her marriage brings her dramatic career to an early climax. She is to be congratulated on preferring matrimony to the stage. This especial affair was a case of love at first sight, for Mr. Howard and Miss Sharpe met but a few weeks ago, and their marriage is set for Monday next. Mr. Howard is well known over in Oakland, and is associated with his brother, dealing in carriage lumber and hard woods generally.

Over in Berkeley one hears much about the German garden party at Mrs. Ben Morgan's place on September 26th. It is outlined to be quite an elaborate affair and under the especial auspices of Mrs. Morgan, it cannot fail to be well managed. The Berkeley surgical ward of the Children's Hospital is the beneficiary, for this is a pay entertainment, with a variety of amusements given in exchange for one's fifty cents. First there is a German luncheon, served according to Teutonic precedent; then music, which Miss Bessie Wall and other well-known musicians will contribute. Next a German play in four acts, produced under the direction of Fraulein Lidell, and a variety of other features which thus far are outlined rather than arranged. The participants and assistants will all wear Teutonic costumes; of course the music will be German, and the refreshments will naturally follow the same order.

MISS DAISY BELLE SHARP
WHO IS TO MARRY EDWARD HOWARD OF OAKLAND
Photo by Thors

The Original Swain's Bakery, 213 Sutter St., stands without a rival and has stood the test for years. The most delicious meals are served by gentlemanly attendants, and the management takes pride in having everything orderly. It is just the place for business men and ladies out shopping to lunch.

Chew Adams' Pepsin Tutti-Frutti. It is sovereign for indigestion and agreeable to the taste

Dr. C. W. Decker, Dentist, 806 Market Street

The Paper Chase is now the favorite amusement at San Rafael. Every Saturday there is a pursuit, and among the results is the evolving of certain capable horsemen and some daring equestriennes. The chase last week was a great success, and for this afternoon another is promised, starting at 2 P. M., with Dr. Howitt as hare. Baron von Schroder, Jim Archibald, Frank Johnson and the usual array of bright and pretty young women will follow the chase, and the winner will be suitably rewarded. On Admission Day there will be another chase, with special prizes. It will be a cross country hunt, and Frank Johnson will be hare.

Though the summer season proper at the Vendome is virtually over, the weather is so delightful at San Jose that this popular caravansary continues to attract the usual quota of visitors. On Saturday night the hotel is generally crowded, and to the usual current of events is generally added a dance, which gathers in the rotunda some of the brightest and prettiest of the San Jose maidens, together with the usual assortment of swains. During the last week there were quite a number of Eastern visitors at the hotel. Mrs. Ponce de Leon of New York, accompanied by Mrs. McClung, Miss Spooner of San Francisco, and Mr. H. C. Potter Jr. of Philadelphia, Mr. and Mrs. W. Dana Kimball of Boston, Mr. and Mrs. C. Brown of Honolulu, and many more were registered. Mr. N. G. Arques and Miss Maud Arques have taken rooms at the Vendome for the autumn, and it is presumed that Miss Arques will be married in the hotel. Mr. and Mrs. Finnegan have returned home from a visit lasting over several weeks. On Saturday night last there was quite a large crowd of guests and San Jose society people in the rotunda to listen to the final concert of Professor Lowinsky's orchestra, which during the summer months has afforded the guests so much real pleasure. An excellent programme was rendered.

Candidate Bryan has the head and the square jaws of a fighter, a habitual trick of frowning, eyes sharp, bright and fierce-looking, like an eagle's, and he smiles with them without using a muscle of his mouth. From the eyebrows to the crown, his head slopes back like the skull of an Aztec, nor is there a compensating bulge in the rear—but rather a forward slope from the neck up, which gives the impression of a pig head sharpest and narrowest at the top. The comparison with Lincoln is most inexact. The latter was tall, slouching, easy-spoken, humorous, whereas Bryan is short, compact, earnest and devoid of humor. Despite their opposition to the candidate's theories, the correspondents are unanimous in admitting his earnestness and sincerity. His voice is the best part of his oratorical equipment, but the capacity of extemporaneous eloquence is denied him. His finest efforts do not affect an audience as did the greatest efforts of Blaine and Conkling.

OPORTO PORTUGALO

Of the numerous vintage ports we have tasted, none were more interesting than the collection shown us at the Douro Lodges and Vineyard of Messrs. D. M. Fuerheerd Jr. & Co. This firm keeps certain of its vintages from particular quintos intact, and here we tasted the "Commendador" of 1870, remarkable for its delicacy and fine flavor; also a sample of 1873 from the Quinta de Roncao, dry and full of flavor. We were also shown some other natural ports without any addition of spirits—vintages of '75, '73, '71, '72. The latter was a well rounded wine of singularly refined flavor.—Vizetelly in "Facts about Port."

When you are selecting a wedding or a birthday present, go to S. & G. Gump's, 113 Geary street. They have a magnificent variety, just arrived from Europe, from which to select.

Hotel St. Nicholas, corner Market, Hayes, Larkin and Ninth. American or European plan. Ira R. and James H. Doolittle.

The Maison Riche serves the best lunch in the city for 75 cents.

For health and strength: Damiana Bitters.

DR. H. G. YOUNG—Bridges and teeth without plates a specialty. 1841 Polk street.

Occidental Restaurant, 337 Bush street. Headquarters for tourists. Separate rooms for families. Meals a la carte. Lunch 50c. Best French Dinner in the city, 75c. Joseph Munier, proprietor.

Dainty and Refreshing
PAR EXCELLENCE
"THE UNIVERSAL PERFUME"
For the Handkerchief, the Dressing-table and the Bath.
Murray & Lanman's
FLORIDA WATER
Its fragrant, lasting sweetness exerts a subtile charm and never tires or cloys.
Ask your Druggist for the genuine Murray & Lanman's.

THE THEATRES

Kathryn Kidder as "Madame Sans Gene" at the Baldwin.

There are plays, there are pageants and there are other things which are a little of both and not much of either. To this class belongs "Madame Sans Gene," a hasty pudding tossed lightly together by Sardou's skillful hands, its ingredients—Napoleon, Fouche, Catherine Hubscher, old anecdotes and old scandal. Nevertheless it is a very good "show," well staged, well acted and undeniably interesting in spite (or, perhaps, because) of the fact that its incidents are all old friends, or at least acquaintances.

It would be difficult to find a more picturesque and diverting character than its central figure, Catherine Hubscher. Her very nickname, "Madame Sans Gene," arrests the attention and her fearlessness, loyalty and acuteness hold it fast. The lines give her almost all of those traits which enlist our sympathies, all that is true, strong, plucky and independent; to these Kathryn Kidder adds much grace and beauty and a certain delightful genuineness and simplicity. Her handling of the part can hardly be called subtle or finished, but she is vivid, comic and unaffected—three darling qualities which are quite as desirable as all the insidiousness in the world—or Sarah B. Her chief defect is that it is quite impossible for her to look bourgeoise. I'm not sure that she tries; it is quite possible she prefers to be charming and let art go—elsewhere.

In any event she could hardly change those taper fingers and those slender, sloping shoulders. She might, though, have made her train more frequently and yet not so desperately in the way—oftener troublesome and not so tremendously. That is if it must be made a trial and a trap for her at all. My private opinion is that Catherine's skirts would have been the least and most easily mastered of all her troubles. The tumble over her petticoats in the second act was the least natural of all her gaucheries. It was obviously premeditated, and the tangle was too elaborate. I've seen Miss McAllister of the Frawley company fall over her train twice as unconsciously and ludicrously. Neither was the lesson in curtsying cleverly received; it was crude and over-done, though the rest of the scene, the trying on of the dress and the slippers, was very amusing. One had a distinct sensation of surprise when Miss Kidder drew off that gay little dressing sacque and stood before us in her stays and petticoat. One had a faint desire to lend her a corset cover and a fresh underskirt, but there's no denying that she was charming as she stood there, erect and unconcerned, with her beautiful arms hanging straight by her sides.

Her superb disregard of the tradesmen's presence was positively regal and not at all bourgeoise. A woman of the people, however, would have been callous, not oblivious.

On the other hand the bumpkin-like way in which she thrusts out her shapely feet to receive their heelless slippers was thoroughly in character; so, too, was her reply to the shoemaker who asserted that a previous pair had burst because she "walked in them."

"Of course," said Madame. "How would you have me walk? On my hands, with my head down like an onion?"

"I meant," replied the unhappy man, "that your highness lifted up your feet and put them down instead of sliding them along."

And lift them up she did, sometimes very high indeed, as when she kissed her "dear Lefebre," and, with her hands on his shoulders, sprang a foot or so in the air for pure joy. Nine-tenths of the time, however, Kathryn Kidder forgot Madame Sans Gene's early occupation. The vivandiere was there but not the washer-woman. She imbued the role with the spirit of the woman who had smelled powder, heard bullets whistle, dragged many a wounded soldier out of the thick of the fight, and had slept under the stars with the wind for a coverlid and a stone for a pillow. Her Madame Sans Gene is a creature of the open air; there is nothing about her to suggest long days spent in bending over hot soap suds and soiled linen. If there were, perhaps we would not be so well amused, for "honest toil" may be dignifying, but it is also stiffening and deadening.

Perhaps the prettiest picture Miss Kidder made during the entire evening was just as she finished explaining to Fouche how he would advance himself by falling in with her desire to assist Neipperg to escape. She was sitting in a nest made by her gorgeous blue pelisse, and as she threw herself back with a charming air of triumph and a distracting assortment of curves and flowing lines, the admiration for Empire gowns, which Ada had destroyed in me, sprang up again and flourished alarmingly. Which reminds me that the Empire gown proves—if it needs proof—that ninety men out of a hundred are dull, inartistic animals, for there is only about one in a hundred who doesn't like the outlines of a tightly laced corset better and doesn't confuse a Josephine gown with a Mother Hubbard.

The support was fair, though it was impossible not to wish for a better Neipperg, as Willis Granger's sole idea of expressing emotion is to open and shut his eyes like a sleepy chicken. Wallace Shaw was an excellent Fouche, sly, unobtrusive, observant, with a wily, fox-like face and a coolly critical manner. Augustus Cook was made into a very tolerable likeness of Napoleon, and acquitted himself as well as a man can who has to eavesdrop and open his wife's letters.

The rest were merely lay figures for silk and satin, with the exception of Mademoiselles Lincoln and Campbell, who quarreled like two cats on a back fence.

PEG WOFFINGTON.

The Maison Riche serves an elegant dinner at popular prices.

STEVE BRODIE

THE HERO OF "ON THE BOWERY" AT THE CALIFORNIA NEXT WEEK

DRAMATIC NOTES

"The Prisoner of Zenda" will be the next attraction at the Baldwin Theatre. The company includes James Hackett and Isabel Irving.

Instead of sending "The Sporting Duchess" to the Coast especially to play the two weeks intended for its presentation at the Baldwin this month, the management have decided to make the piece one of the features of the coming stock season at the California.

We are to have "On the Bowery" at the California next week, with Steve Brodie as the star. This is the Steve who jumped from Brooklyn bridge and owns the greatest resort on the Bowery. The scenery is typically Bowery, and one act is laid in Brodie's own saloon.

The Frawley company presents "The Wife" next week with a capital cast. Wilton Lackaye, Blanche Bates, Frank Worthing, Alice Pixley, Macklyn Arbuckle, Hope Ross, Frawley, Leslie and Clark have the leading roles. It is a good show and should have a good run. The staging is excellent. Matinee Admission Day.

The grand opera season at the Tivoli continues a success. To-night "Rigoletto" is performed by special request, and next week Miss Ida Valerga makes her reappearance in "Lucia." The excellence of the cast has previously been commented upon, and it is certain an interesting performance will be given. The orchestra is under the direction of Gustav Hinrichs.

"All the Comforts of Home," a four-act farcical comedy, will be produced at the Alcazar Theatre during the week, commencing on Monday next. The play is a very clever composition, the dialogue being bright and funny and the ludicrous situations many. The combination in the competent interpretations by the Alcazar stock company should make a thoroughly enjoyable entertainment.

The greatest circus that has ever come to San Francisco arrived yesterday morning in three special trains, for this year the people of San Francisco are to have an opportunity of seeing the great Forepaugh and Sells Brothers show. The tour thus far is one of the most successful on record. Its attractive qualities are quite out of the ordinary, though it is generally admitted that the greatest feature is the menagerie. Possibly it will be the last big show to visit the Coast in years.

Miss Leila Owen Ellis, daughter of Mrs. Ellis, the well-known dramatic teacher, is to give a recital on the evening of next Thursday at Beethoven Hall. Miss Ellis has been a decided success in the East, where she has been much in demand at society recitals. There it is the custom to obtain professional talent to add interest to an evening's entertainment. Besides, she participated in the Beerbohm Tree engagement in New York, and an interesting future is prophesied for her.

The bill at the Orpheum next week will be made up for the most part of new people. Six new acts are announced. They include the Vassar Quartette, Ferguson and Mack, the Irish comedians; Bellman and Moore, in songs and dances; Terry and Elmer, a singing and dancing team; Miss Elmer is said to be the most perfectly formed woman on the vaudeville stage; Miss Marguerite Ferguson, a contortion dancer; the brothers La Rose, Chinese impersonators and trick acrobats, are also strong features, and the programme is certainly one to look forward to.

Miss Kate Dougherty, a San Francisco girl, is coming to the front as a composer of music. She has spent some years in the study of harmony, both in the East and abroad, and has now published a song with the somewhat florid title of "Blue Sweet Eyes and Morning Glories." The words are by Kate Clark Brown, author of "Beauty for Ashes." Miss Brown has just completed the libretto of an elaborate extravaganza, for which Miss Dougherty has written the music.

Adams' Tutti-Frutti Chewing Gum for Indigestion

FEMININE SPLASHES

With one accord Mrs. Carl Browne, Coxey's daughter, and the "Goddess of Peace," in his famous Washington procession, was pronounced the beauty of the recent St. Louis Convention. She has lovely blonde hair and big blue eyes, is vivacious and bright and interested in every political movement of the day, although she refrains from taking an active part in any.

* * *

The Assistant Atttorney-General of Montana is a woman, and her name is Ella Knowles Haskell. She is an exceptionally successful lawyer, renowned for having obtained the largest fee ever given to a woman, and an enthusiastic Populist. She has already made sixty speeches on silver and intends to make many more. If you should chance to meet her in the street meanwhile, you would be likely to mistake her for a happy little housewife, so essentially feminine is she in dress and manner.

* * *

It should be interesting and encouraging to all female politicians to know that Mary Ellen Lease is fast gaining recognition for herself as one of the best dressed women in America. In the frankest way she says of herself: "I've tried to progress and guess I've succeeded." Her last public appearance was made in a gorgeous black satin skirt of latest fashion, and a chic linen waist with richly embroidered sleeves finished at the neck with a broad violet ribbon.

Poodle Dog Restaurant, S. E. corner Grant Avenue and Bush street. Private dining and banquet rooms. Telephone 429. Blanco & Bruno, proprietors.

The oldest shipping house at Port St. Mary's, Spain, is the well-known one of Duff Gordon & Co., shippers of the Duff Gordon & Co. sherries.

Deutz & Geldermann's "Gold Lack" is without doubt the finest dry champagne imported. No connoisseur should fail to try it.

Maison Tortoni French Rotisserie, 111 O'Farrell street. Private dining rooms, banquet hall. S. Constantini, proprietor.

If you wish to look neat have your suits cleaned and pressed for $1.00. Bay City Clothing Renovatory, 221½ Geary, rooms 19, 20, 21. 'Phone Main 5859.

When the Eastern visitor reaches San Jose he is often at a loss to know where to go for a team. He will make no mistake, however, if he directs his steps to the Hotel Vendome Stables, headquarters of the Mount Hamilton Stage Company. From here the stage coach for the Lick Observatory sets out every morning, and there, too, you can find on call the fastest horses, the neatest and trimmest rigs and the tidiest equipments. F. H. Ross & Sons are proprietors.

Oliver Wendell Holmes' book, "Over the Teacups," is full of pleasant bits.

You can get great pleasure from your own teacups, if you drink pure fresh-roasted tea.

Schilling's Best.

A. Schilling & Company
San Francisco

"THE FOLLY OF EUSTACE"

An Author Too Good to Belong to the Decadents.

One laid aside "The Green Carnation" with the feeling that it was a pity so much cleverness should be wasted on so poor a book, and "The Folly of Eustace" (D. Appleton & Co.) leaves the same impression of misdirected talent. If Robert S. Hichens could be brought up all over again, he might give us work of a vastly higher kind. One would prescribe for him a childhood spent largely out of doors, with plenty of healthy, unfanciful children to play with, a discreet quantity of schooling, enough poverty to make a moderate amount of wholesome work a necessity, a rector's daughter, a wedding trip through the cathedral towns, and a vine-covered home in a community where "Pickwick" is still read, and where "Ivanhoe" holds unquestioned supremacy. Then what charming novels he would give us, what normal pictures of life as it is lived; what human men and women would cross his pages, in place of the puppets that he laughs at and despises! And what a glorious contempt the present Robert S. Hichens would have for the Robert S. Hichens of such surroundings!

One shrinks from using the hackneyed word decadent, but nothing else will describe this morbid tendency to picture only the abnormal aspect of life, to magnify the diseased member till all proportion between it and the sound, sweet whole is lost. "The Folly of Eustace" and the two other stories with it, powerful and beautifully written though they are, all run one way, and that way madness lies. Eustace is a commonplace young man, who deliberately sets out to make London stare and laugh. Patiently and faithfully he plays the part of a buffoon, until people do smile and look, and he becomes a fad. When he marries, he clings desperately to his oddities, thinking his wife will despise him if she catches a glimpse of his fun-weary, commonplace self, and never guessing how tired she has grown of his vagaries and their unmistakable false note. He has one supreme chance to win her back, but misses it.

At this time, too, a strange need of protection crept over her, the yearning for man's beautiful, dog-like sympathy, that watches woman in her grand dark hour before she blooms into motherhood. When she knew the truth, she resolved to tell Eustace, and she came into his room softly, with shining eyes. He was sitting reading the "Financial News" in a nimbus of cigarette smoke, secretly glorying in his momentary immunity from the prison rules of the fantastic. Winifred's entry was that of a warder. He sprang up laughing.

"Winnie," he said, "I think I am going to South Africa.

"You!" she said in surprise.

"Yes; to give acrobatic performances in the street, and so pave the way to a position as a millionaire. Who ever heard of a man rising from a respectable competence to a fortune? According to the papers, you must start with nothing; that is the first rule of the game. We have ten thousand a year, so we can never hope to be rich. Fortune only favors the pauper. I am mad about money to-day. I can think of nothing else."

And he began showing her conjuring tricks with sovereigns which he drew from his pockets.

She did not tell him that day, and when she told him, it was without apparent emotion. She seemed merely stating coldly a physical fact, not breathing out a beautiful secret of her soul and his, a consecrated wonder to shake them both, and bind them together as two flowers are bound in the centre of a bouquet, the envy of the other flowers.

"Eustace," she said, and her eyes were clear and her hands were still, "I think I ought to tell you—we shall have a child."

Her voice was unwavering as a doctor's which pronounces "You have the influenza." She stood there before him.

"Winifred!" he cried, looking up. His impulse was to say "Wife! My Winifred!" to take her in his arms as any clerk might take his little middle-class spouse, to kiss her lips, and, in doing it, fancy he drew near to the prison in which every soul eternally dwells on earth. Finely human he felt, as the dullest, the most unknown, the plainest, the most despised, may feel, thank God! "Winifred!" he cried. And then he stopped, with the shooting thought, "Even now I must be what she thinks me, what she perhaps loves me for.

She stood there silently waiting.

"Toys!" he exclaimed. "Toys have always been my besetting sin. Now I will make a grand collection, not for the Pope, as people pretend, but for our family. You will have two children to laugh at, Winnie. Your husband is one, you know." He sprang up. "I'll go into the Strand," he said. "There's a man near the Temple who has always got some delightful novelty displaying its paces on the pavement. What fun!"

And off he went, leaving Winifred alone with the mystery of her woman's world, the mystic mystery of birth that may dawn out of hate as out of love, out of drunken dissipation as out of purity's sweet climax.

His child does not live, and then comes in the other man, and the dreary banality of an elopement. Eustace's highest dream has been to see a caricature of himself in "Vanity Fair," and this comes at the very moment that he learns of his wife's flight. We leave him with her letter in his hand, the caricature at his elbow. Well, he has deserved it all, and there is nothing for him to do. If he commits suicide, people will only look on it as one of his freaks. It is a dangerous thing to set the world laughing, for you cannot always stop it when you will.

The second story, "The Return of the Soul," would give a magnificent chance to an actress. It is based on the transmigration of souls, tracing intuitions to unrecognized memories of a former state. A boy tortures a cat to death, and years later marries a girl into whom this cat's soul has gone. She grows to dread and hate him, and finally strangles him in revenge for the cruelty that she does not consciously remember. He had gradually learned the dreadful truth, and his terror had grown day by day as the little cat-like traits began to show themselves in her. A clever actress could make this development vividly striking, beginning with the soft, cushioned tread, and letting the curtain fall on the crouching figure that has already forgotten the murdered man on the couch, and is making little purring sounds to herself over the sparrow she has just caught at the window. It would be a weird play, too interesting to leave and too unpleasant to enjoy.

J. W. T.

Fall Styles Neckwear and Hosiery at John W. Carmany's, 25 Kearny Street

MAGAZINE NOTES

"St. Nicholas" this month prints several more poems by Margaret Frances Mauro, the little girl of twelve whose work has raised so much wondering comment. "Ye Romance of Ye Oldenne Tyme" does not seem like a child's production, while the picturesque fancy that tells of "The bird who weaveth a silver string for the harp of minstrelsy" is itself destined to weave a number of silver strings when its power is full grown. Miss Agnes Repplier contributes a sketch entitled "At School a Hundred Years Ago," in which she shows how much better treatment is accorded children today than was the lot of their great-grandmothers. Quoting from the accounts of the girls of long ago, Miss Repplier draws a picture of school life at the close of the last century that is far from attractive. School rooms were extremely cold in winter, discipline was rigid to a degree, and the girls were strapped to fiendish contrivances to make them stand erect. A sketch of Joseph Francis, the inventor of the lifeboat, and the founder and father of the life-saving service, is written by W. S. Harwood.

"Harper's" comes out with a number of short stories this month. "His Duty" is a stirring, dramatic tale, thoroughly original and well written, as all Octave Thanet's stories are. This is one that a man would delight in. "The Mortuary Chest," by Alice Brown, is also good, in spite of being in dialect. "Where Had John Been?" by Helen H. Gardener, belongs rather to the anecdote page of a weekly than the main body of a monthly, and might very well begin, "The late Dr. So-and-so was fond of telling the following anecdote of his medical career." It is hard to see why "A Picture of Saint Cloud" was accepted by a magazine that must have a wide choice of material. It is not well written, artistic, effective, or even interesting.

No serial story of the present time is attracting so much attention as Mrs. Humphry Ward's "Sir George Tressady," which is running in the "Century." Mr. Howell's lively story of Saratoga, "An Open-Eyed Conspiracy," is continued in the September number, and Mrs. Amelia E. Barr contributes the first part of a novelette, "Prisoners of Conscience," which deals with life in the Shetland Islands, and is strikingly illustrated by Louis Loeb. The short stories of the number are "Sonny's Diploma," by Mrs. Ruth McEnery Stuart; "Abner," by Lynn Roby Meekins; and "The Healing of Meechum," by Frank Crane.

"Godey's Magazine" begins this month with an article by Robert Shackleton on "Political Caricaturists," in which the work of Homer Davenport is rated extremely high. Everybody in San Francisco knows his clever pictures, and it is interesting to learn that he never studied art, and did not suspect his power as a caricaturist until about two years ago. Before working for "The Examiner" he was a jockey, a baseball umpire, a steamboat fireman, an engine-wiper and a circus clown—and he is still under thirty.

In the September "Atlantic" Charles Dudley Warner has an interesting article on the career and influence of "Uncle Tom's Cabin" and the forces that influenced "the little woman who made the great war," as Lincoln called Mrs. Stowe. The story was sold to the "Era" for three hundred dollars; then a young and unknown publisher took it up and brought it out, giving the author the usual ten per cent royalty. "Marm Lisa" is the name of a serial by Kate Douglas Wiggin, begun in this number.

The "Century Magazine" is said to have paid $18,000 for the serial rights of Mrs. Humphry Ward's "Sir George Tressady." For both serial and book rights she will probably receive about $60,000. It has been estimated that for the three novels, "Robert Elsmere," "David Grieve," and "Marcella," she has been paid over $200,000, while Anthony Trollope received $350,000 for his works.

The new "Cosmopolitan" runs four complete stories, one of which, "Belle's Beaux," by Frances Courtenay Baylor, contains some very clever character work. Belle is an unmitigated flirt, and bullies her different young men unmercifully, but in the end gets engaged once too often, and married a Cuban grandee, who attends to the family bullying himself.

LITERARY NOTES

It is said that Martin J. Pritchard, the author of that extraordinary Messianic novel just published by Messrs. H. S. Stone & Co., entitled "Without Sin," is the daughter of Lady Monckton.

"The Unclassed," by George Gessing, is too sombre a book to be popular; the subject is painful, and in most of the reviews has either been misunderstood or travestied with malice prepense; but in some respects it is doubtful whether the author has ever equalled it.

R. K. Munkittrick has written a quatrain that reminds one of that famous couplet of "J. K. S.," "Where the Rudyards cease from Kipling and the Haggards Ride no more." Referring to the "unhappy author," he says: "He is happy as he capers on the ever-golden shore, where the Houghtons cease from Mifflin and the Harpers harp no more."

Mr. Paul Leicester Ford's story of "The Great K. and A. Train Robbery" was written during a trip across the continent, at the request of his companions. In four days, reading it aloud as fast as it was written, he finished the draft of the story as it now appears in the August "Lippincott's." He did not think of printing it, but his friends insisted upon preservng it as a souvenir of the trip, and so he finally submitted it to "Lippincott's Magazine," with the success which the story warrants.

"Field Flowers," which has lately been issued under the auspices of Mrs. Eugene Field and others, who are working in the interest of the Field Monument Fund, contains sixteen of the most delicately fanciful poems of Eugene Field. The poems have all been illustrated by artists who are friends of the poet. The price of the book is $1; and each copy is a certificate of subscription to the Eugene Field Monument Souvenir Fund. A. P. Swift & Co., Chicago, are the publishers.

The strange nemesis of Guy Boothby's "A Bid for Fortune" figures again in "Dr. Nikola" (D. Appleton & Co.), an exciting story of the Orient. The indomitable Doctor sets out to penetrate into some of the most secret monasteries of China, where his detection would mean horrible torture and death, and pursuades an adventurous, hard-up young man to go with him. A certain order is reported to have found the secret of life and death, by which it can restore the dying and raise the dead, and Dr. Nikola determines to master this. By bribery, disguise, mesmerism, and daring the two Europeans finally gain entrance to this place and witness its miracles, escaping again with infinite peril, to be ever after menaced by the danger of assassination. The Doctor brings the sceret with him, and promises soon to give it to the whole world, though it is not surprising that the book closes before this takes place.

"Some Correspondence and Six Conversations" is the somewhat motley name of a little book published by Clyde Fitch (Stone & Kimball), the component parts of which have appeared during the past year in such periodicals as "Life" and the "Chap Book." They are full of clever touches, and of realistic details that rouse sudden little laughs of recognition, and are done in farce-comedy vein, even when the theme is a sad one. "The Six Conversations" irrisistibly suggests "The Dolly Dialogues," but it is time we gave up this cry of "cribbed from Anthony Hope," and recognized that Hope has founded a school of dialogue which may be followed as legitimately as a school of music or painting. It would naturally be preferable that each author should originate an absolutely new line for himself, but so long as this is manifestly impossible, he should be allowed to follow along any other man's line unchallenged so long as he gives his own individual conception of it. There is always the chance that it may lead him far beyond where the first man stopped. To have found the source of the Nile is still glorious, even though one was not the first to discover that there was such a river.

"The Babe, B. A.," is a sketch of life at Cambridge, by Edward F. Benson, of "Dodo" fame (G. P. Putnam's Sons). The Babe is an irrepressible young college boy, with an angelic face, and an amusing grievance against a world that refuses to take him seriously. He can't even get into serious trouble at college, though he does his unlimited best, for authorities dismiss him from their tribunals with the insulting remark that it's "only Babe." Of course, under all his boyish folly, he is a thoroughly good fellow ,and comes out very well in the end. The book is bright and amusing, though now and then it comes dangerously near the fatal reef which wrecks so many college stories,—known, for want of a better word, as "smartiness." It is the easiest quality to recognize, the hardest to define. It might be called the wit of dull people, did not the truly clever ones occasionally fall into it. "Freshman humor" might describe it to anyone who had ever had the glorious misfortune of being a Freshman, but that still leaves it undefined for the rest of the world. Call it a misconception of repartee, and if you would have an example, read almost any story in almost any college periodical.

"The Babe," is a pleasant addition to the long list of books on college life. During the last few years nearly all the big colleges have figured in fiction, but for vividness and true humor, untouched by a single "smarty" stroke, Jesse Lynch Williams' "Princeton Stories" still stand at the head. (For sale by Wm. Doxey.)

Chauncey Depew's Poker Story.

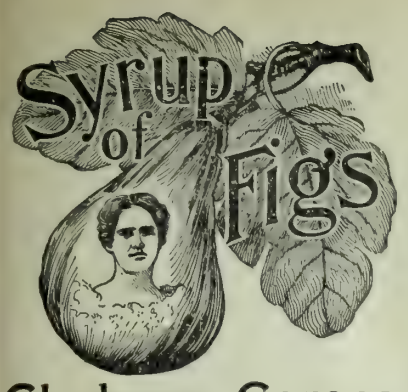
When Dr. Chauncey M. Depew was asked for a poker story some time ago he had no personal experiences, but raked out of his box of stories a tale that he sometimes tells over the dinner table.

The genial railroad magnate said he was in a small town in Massachusetts where a celebrated poker ring was operating. The central figure was an eccentric farmer nearly 90 years old, who had played poker since he could hold a card. He was extremely wealthy, but always refused to settle until the game was finished, when he would give checks for the amounts of his losses. The game had been in progress for several hours, and the old man had raked in a tremendous amount of cash.

An excitable young man about 20 years o'd was the victim of the evening. He had lost every cent he had in the world—some $300 which had all found its way to the old man's pocket.

Then the luck turned. He held four aces. The old man had four kings. The betting ran so high that the other players dropped out of the game. In less than ten minutes $1,500 was on the table. When the hands were shown the young fellow was jubilant, but the fates were against him.

The old man drew out his check book, called for a pen and some ink and then dropped dead. The young man's money paid for the funeral.



Gladness Comes

With a better understanding of the transient nature of the many physical ills which vanish before proper efforts—gentle efforts—pleasant efforts—rightly directed. There is comfort in the knowledge that so many forms of sickness are not due to any actual disease, but simply to a constipated condition of the system, which the pleasant family laxative, Syrup of Figs, promptly removes. That is why it is the only remedy with millions of families, and is everywhere esteemed so highly by all who value good health. Its beneficial effects are due to the fact, that it is the one remedy which promotes internal cleanliness, without debilitating the organs on which it acts. It is therefore all important, in order to get its beneficial effects, to note when you purchase, that you have the genuine article, which is manufactured by the California Fig Syrup Co. only, and sold by all reputable druggists.

If in the enjoyment of good health, and the system is regular, then laxatives or other remedies are not needed. If afflicted with any actual disease, one may be commended to the most skillful physicians, but if in need of a laxative, then one should have the best, and with the well-informed everywhere, Syrup of Figs stands highest and is most largely used and gives most general satisfaction.

Argonaut OK WHISKEY

IS FIVE YEARS IN WOOD BEFORE BOTTLING

E. MARTIN

—AND—

CO.

411 MARKET ST.

SAN FRANCISCO

MENNEN'S BORATED TALCUM TOILET POWDER

Approved by Highest Medical Authorities as a Perfect Sanitary Toilet Preparation

For infants and adults

Delightful after shaving

Positively relieves Prickley Heat, Nettle Rash, Chafed Skin, Sunburn, etc. Removes Blotches, Pimples; makes the skin smooth and healthy.

Take No Sub-titutes. Sold by druggists or mailed for 25 cts. FREE

SAMPLE MAILED (Name this paper)

GERHARD MENNEN CO., Newark, N. J.

HEALTHFUL! INVIGORATING!

CRECIENTE

Imported Sea Salt for Bathing

SOLD BY DRUGGISTS AND GROCERS

BAY STATE OYSTER HOUSE AND GRILL ROOM

15 Stockton Street

Oysters served in all styles, given special attention. Orders for Theatre Parties. M. M. ADLER, Prop.

A NOTE FROM NEWPORT

Weddings and balls have done their best to enliven Newport of late, with a long array of dinners to back them up. On Wednesday Miss Edith Bishop and Mr. Moses Taylor were married against a background of pink hollyhocks in Old Trinity, which was packed to overflowing. The bride wore the plainest, severest kind of a white satin gown, which nevertheless shrieked Worth with every rustle. The sleeves were nearly tight, having only a scrap of a puff at the top, and a slight drapery of old point was the only trimming of the bodice. All over the gown, and reaching way down to the end of the train, fell the loveliest veil of point applique, fastened to her hair with diamond pins. The bridesmaids all wore white silk with blue girdles and stocks, and carried pink roses, while the ushers—but they always wear the same gray trousers and frock coats and pearl pins.

Then of course there is the other wedding, or have the dailies worn out everyone's patience on the subject? When two such fortunes as the Vanderbilts' and the Whitneys' come together, it must be regarded more or less as a national event. Everybody knows that Harry Payne Whitney has been wooing Gertrude Vanderbilt for herself, quite irrespective of her twenty-five millions, and you would think that the papers here had made the match themselves, they are so proud and pleased about it. While the small and quiet wedding was being prepared for, Mr. Whitney Sr. was more than busy engineering a mysterious project up in Berkshires. Having bought seven thousand acres back of Lenox, in the most beautiful district in New England, he put hundreds of men to work on it, and within a fortnight there has sprung up an ideal summer home for his new daughter-in-law. Miss Vanderbilt was in the plot, but it was kept a secret from young Mr. Whitney until the last minute. Of course, the house itself could not be finished in that time, so an "Adirondack camp" was put up for the honeymoon. Right in the woods a flooring was built, and on this were placed two tents—one for sleeping and the other for eating, everything being as simple and primitive as possible. If it rains or turns cold, a comfortable little farm house is all ready to gather the young couple in. Their own house will be a comfortable, colonial affair, not at all pretentious.

The two rival (or companion) balls at Wakehurst and Rockhurst were very magnificent affairs. Mr. Van Alen had put up an elaborate canvas ballrom in the sunken garden at the south end of his place, and the effect was lovely, though to tell the truth it felt just a little chilly to bare shoulders. The cotillion favors were collected by Mr. Van Alen while he was abroad, the most effective being little gold horseshoe pins, set with pearls, and white ribbon sashes with massive silver buckles.

Mr. Calvin S. Brice's Monday afternoon receptions grow more popular all the time, and the one at which the great and only Maggie Cline sang was simply jammed. Maggie was splendid in yellow satin, and sang "Throw him down, McCloskey!" so as bring down the house.

The committee in charge of the Golf Club created quite a sensation last week by suddenly marching off the famous French chefs, and establishing genuine old darkey cooks in their places. The chefs were all right in their way, but it was decided that if this was a country club, as it aimed to be, it should have country fare. Johnnycake is cutting out truffles and terrapin, while pate de foie gras sinks into insignificance beside the delights of succotash and Indian pudding. Of course, there are some decadent gourmands who murmur, not to say kick, at the change, but the majority are delighted. The old uncle in charge of the kitchen is in a state of bursting pride, and prophesies that before long the crowned heads of Europe will eat nothing that is not prepared by dusky hands.

From the present indications, we are going to look extremely queer this fall, and still queerer when the winter really sets in. The new skirts don't flare, and are almost skimpy. In back they are circular, somewhat like the old bell skirts, but the front and sides are hardly gored at all. Often, in a house gown, the front breadth is braided or corded, so that it looks like a panel, while the side breadths have the effect of wide box pleats. The silly little sleeves are very ugly, being an unwilling compromise between full and plain. Sometimes they wrinkle like mousquetaire gloves all the way up to the jerky little puff that thrusts itself out at the top, but more often they are plain, uncompromising, gawky. Of course, we will admire it in time, but after having had the freedom of our elbows for eight years, it is bitter to give it up.

SALLY ANDREWS.

LATE VERSE

The Death of Balen.

In a critique of Swinburne's "Tale of Balen," the "Saturday Review" compares Swinburne's setting of Mallory's "Morte D'Arthur" with that of Tennyson, to the disadvantage of the latter. The following passage, in which the dying Balen lies, waiting for death beside his dead brother, is pronounced altogether superior to the whole collective merits of Tennyson's "Idyll":

And there, low lying, as hour on hour
Fled, all his life in all its flower
Came back as in a sunlit shower
Of dreams, when sweet-souled sleep has power
On life less sweet and glad to be.
He drank the draught of life's first wine
Again: he saw the moorland shine,
The rioting rapids of the Tyne,
The woods, the cliffs, the sea.
The joy that lives at heart and home,
The joy to rest, the joy to roam,
The joy of crags and scaurs he clomb,
The rapture of the encountering foam,
Embraced and breasted of the boy;
The first good steed his knees bestrode,
The first wild sound of songs that flowed
Through ears that thrilled and heart that glowed,
Fulfilled his death with joy.
So dying not as a coward that dies
And dares not look in death's dim eyes
Straight as the stars on seas and skies
Whence moon and sun recoil and rise,
He looked on life and death and slept.

Whist.

Hour after hour the cards were fairly shuffled
And fairly dealt, but still I got no hand;
The morning came and with a mind unruffled
I only said, "I do not understand."
Life is a game of whist. From unseen sources
The cards are shuffled and the hands are dealt;
Blind are our efforts to control the forces
That, though unseen, are no less strongly felt.
I do not like the way the cards are shuffled,
But yet I like the game and want to play;
And through the long, long night will I, unruffled,
Play what I get until the break of day.
—Ironquill.

Autumn.

Some things are good on autumn nights,
When with the storm the forest fights,
And in the room the heaped hearth lights
Old-fashioned press and rafter;
Plump chestnuts hissing in the heat,
A mug of cider, sharp and sweet,
And at your side a face petite
With lips of laughter.
And, tapping at the window pane,
Upon the roof the rolling rain,
The wind, that seems a witch's cane
That summons spells together;
A hand within your own awhile,
A mouth reflecting back your smile,
And eyes, two stars, whose beams exile
All thoughts of weather.
And, while the wind lulls, still to sit
And watch her fire-lit needles flit
A-knitting, and to feel her knit
Your very heartstrings in it;
Then, when the old clock ticks 'tis late,
To rise, and at the door to wait
Three words, or at the garden gate
A kissing minute.
—Madison Cawein, in the September "Century."

Beware the Rogue.

Deep in the shadow of her hazel eyes,
Waiting to capture men, Love lurking lies.
Her glances are the arrows of his bow,
Wherewith he lays unwary victims low;
And she, unused to Cupid's artful wiles,
Unconscious aids his purpose by her smiles,
And knows not, as her smiles and glances dart,
What anguish these may bring to many a heart.
Ah! hap'ess maiden, innocently gay,
No presage of the future breeds dismay;
She does not know how soon the treacherous guest
Will make her heart the haven of unrest.
Ungrateful Cupid! Soon from her he'll fly,
And seek a refuge in some lover's eye,
Then from that point of vantage, aim a dart
To pierce and agonize her maiden heart.
—Thomas Dunn English, in "Harper's."

Editorial Dignity Upheld. During a Salvation Army meeting conducted by General Booth in Melbourne, Australia, a reporter for one of the evening papers rose to leave the hall with his copy. "Brother," cried the General, "you will be d——d if you go now." "I shall be d——d by the sub-editor if I don't go," said the reporter, going. "But the Lord is greater than the sub-editor," called the General after him. "Th— sub-editor does not think so," said the reporter as he closed the door.

Putting the Boy to School.

When a Chinese gentleman wishes to place his little boy in a school it is, according to the Youth's Companion, a very formal affair. He is escorted to the reception-room, and both he and the teacher shake their own hands and bow profoundly. Then the teacher asks:

"What is your honorable name?"

"My mean, insignificant name is Wong."

Tea and a water-pipe are sent for, and the teacher says, "Please use tea." The Chinaman sips and puffs for a quarter of an hour before he says to the teacher:

"What is your honorable name?"

'My mean, insignificant name is Pott."

"What is your honorable kingdom?"

"The small petty district from which I come is the United States of America." This comes hard, but etiquette requires the teacher to say it.

"How many little stems have you sprouted?" This means "How old are you?"

"I have vainly spent thirty years."

"Is the honorable and great man of the household living?" He is asking after the teacher's father.

"The old man is well."

"How may precious little ones have you?"

"I have two little dogs." These are the teacher's own children.

"How many children have you in your illustrious institution?"

"I have a hundred little brothers."

Then the Chinaman comes to business. "Venerable master," he says, "I have brought my little dog here, and worshipfully entrust him to your charge."

The little fellow, who has been standing in the corner of the room, comes forward at this, kneels before the teacher, puts his hands on the floor and knocks his head against it. The teacher raises him up and sends him off to school, while arrangements are made for his sleeping-room, and so forth. At last the Chinese gentleman rises to take his leave.

"I have tormented you exceedingly today," he says.

"Oh, no, I have dishonored you!"

As he goes toward the door he keeps saying, "I am gone; I am gone." And etiquette requires the teacher to repeat as long as he is in hearing, "Go slowly, go slowly."

In Missouri.

Missouri was half under water, but business was business, so the traveler pushed ahead as best he could on horseback. Coming to a swollen river, he fastened his clothes to his horse, and side by side they swam across. On the other side the road forked, and not knowing which way to go, he looked around for a sign. There was none, but just across the river, near the spot he had entered to swim across, he saw a board nailed on a tree. There was nothing to do but get in and swim across again, as undoubtedly that was the sign containing the directions. This is what he read on the other side: "Five dollars fine for crossing this bridge faster than a walk."

Its Purity A Surety Of Its Excellence

Vina Brandy

Accept No Substitute None So Good None So Pure

Vina Distillery Co.

819 Market St., S. F.

Wedding Invitations are properly engraved and in correct form, at ROBERTSON'S

FRANK K. LANE G. WHITFIELD LANE

LANE & LANE

Attorneys and Counselors

Room 202

Crocker Building, San Francisco

Miss Adie's Boarding and Day School

(KINDERGARTEN)

2117 California St., bet. Buchanan and Laguna

English, French, German. Reopens August 3d

Ziska Institute : 1606 Van Ness Ave.

School for Girls. English, French, German. Thirtieth year begins August 3d.

MME. B. ZISKA, A.M. Principal.

FINEST ON THE MARKET

BEWARE OF IMITATIONS

EEL RIVER CREAMERY

SEE THAT THIS STAMP IS ON END OF SQUARE

A FINE GRAIN DELICIOUS FLAVORED BUTTER

If you appreciate a DELICACY Ask your Dealer for the BRAND

BALDWIN THEATRE AL HAYMAN AND CO. INCORP'D PROPS.

Monday, September 7th

Second Week of the Greatest Production of the Age!

Madame Sans Gene

With Kathryn Kidder in the title role

Magnificent Scenery! Gorgeous Costumes!

House crowded at every performance

Monday, September 14th, Last Week Madame Sans Gene

CALIFORNIA THEATRE AL HAYMAN & CO. INCORP'D PROPS

Monday, September 7th

Engagement Extraordinary of the Sensation of the Century, Davis & Keogh's Vivid Picture of Greater New York, the Phenomenal, Successful and Stupendous Scenic Production

On the Bowery!

The all-conquering cast led still led on by the hero of two continents, STEVE BRODIE, Champion Bridge Jumper of the World and King of the Bowery. Carloads of Elaborate Scenic Pictures!

Columbia Theatre.

FRIEDLANDER, GOTTLOB & CO. LESSEES AND MANAGERS

And now comes the climax of them all, the famous Society Comedy By De Mille and Belasco The Wife

The longest run of any play ever presented at the Lyceum Theatre, New York

The great cast: Blanche L. Bates; Hope Ross; Madge Carr Cook; Lansing Rowan; Alice Pixley; T. Daniel Frawley; Wilton Lackaye; Frank Worthing; Macklyn Arbuckle; Harry Corson Clarke; George Leslie; Wilson Enos; George Bosworth.

To be produced by the FRAWLEY COMPANY with new scenery and accessories from the original models

Tivoli Opera House

MRS. ERNESTINE KRELING : : Proprietor and Manager

SEASON OF GRAND OPERA

Saturday Evening, by special request, Rigoletto

Sunday Evening, Verdi's Tragic Opera, Ernani

Next Week: Monday and Friday, Lucia
Tuesday, Romeo and Juliet
Wednesday and Saturday, Il Trovatore
Thursday, The Bohemian Girl
First appearance of MLLE. IDA VALERGA

Popular Prices : : : 25 and 50 Cents

Orpheum

O'FARRELL STREET, BETWEEN STOCKTON AND POWELL

Week Commencing Monday, Sept. 7

A NEW BILL OF STRONG ATTRACTIONS

Ferguson & Mack, America's Great Irish Comedians Marguerite Ferguson, Contortion Dancer; Bellman & Moore, Refined Singing Comedians; The Vassar Quartette; Bros. La Rose, Eccentric Acrobats; Terry & Elmer, Eccentric Dancers; Filson & Errol, Albini, Richard Pitrot, Nellie Maguire, and others.

Reserved seats 25c; balcony 10c; box seats and opera chairs 50c. Matinees Wednesday, Saturday, Sunday

Alcazar Theatre

O'FARRELL STREET, BETWEEN STOCKTON AND POWELL

BELASCO, DOANE & JORDAN, Lessees and Mgrs.

Last performances of TURNED UP

Commencing on Monday, September 7th, the Funniest of Comedies

All the Comforts of Home!

By the Alcazar Stock Company

Prices: 15c, 25c, 35c and 50c. Matinees Saturday and Sunday: 15c, 25c and 35c.

Box Office open from 9 a.m. to 10 p.m. Tickets may be secured by Telephone (Black 991)

REMOVAL

Rountrees English Chocolate, Kohlers Swiss Chocolates, and all brands of Foreign and Eastern Confectionery, imported by . . . .

W. L. GREENBAUM,

of 205 SUTTER ST., will, after December 1st, be found in large and commodious quarters at

128 POST ST., Bohemian Club Bldg.

S. F. CARPET BEATING AND RENOVATING WORKS

D. MACKINTOSH & CO.
Successors to S. S. Ferguson & Co.

Renovating, Laying and Refitting Carpets a Specialty

Telephone South 36 23 and 25 10th St., S. F.

SCOTT & McCORD

HAY AND GRAIN MERCHANTS

OFFICE, 615 SIXTH ST.

HER POINT OF VIEW

What a matter of fashion virtue and vice are! It is a little discouraging to find that time juggles with right and wrong as he does with sleeves and collars, and that, though you may deliberately set out to be bad in one generation, the next is very likely to look on your actions as both sensible and discreet; while the virtue of the past often appears uncommonly shady in the present. This was forcibly brought home to me the other day by a story I heard of a pretty young school-teacher who went to board in the house of one of her pupils. There was a small dance about to take place in the nighborhood, and the teacher was touching up her gown for the occasion when the little girl came into the room. "O, Mith Brown, are you going to the party?" she asked, evidently awe-struck. "Why, yes," answered Miss Brown. "And you're going to danth—danth all night?" "I dare say I am," trying not to laugh. There was a solemn pause. "Mith Brown, do you know what happenth to people who go to parties and danth all night? They don't even burn up—they juth thizzle and thizzle and thizzle!"

It is hard to realize that this was once an universal opinion, and that round dancing was not only bad form, but unmentionably wicked. And what a lot of innocent fun they missed, those evil-minded, suspicious and most respectable ancestors of ours. We have not the slightest hesitation in traversing the streets with little more than an aigrette and a bunch of violets on our heads. Yet not so very long ago no truly modest girl would have appeared in public without burying her face in a poke bonnet, with a lace veil draped across the front, and a little curtain hanging down behing. Even modesty, it seems, is a changeable quantity, and what we condemn as the sins against it today may be its accepted virtues to-morrow. Try as we will, we can't be absolutely good or absolutely bad. For our worst sins, our descendants may pat us on the back, and say we were ahead of our times. And in the future, for living up to what is now called high virtue, our grandchildren may "thizzle and thizzle and thizzle!"

* * *

Hitherto there have been two ways of meeting the horrors of dentistry—ether and grim endurance. Neither is pleasant, and many a brave man shows what an abject coward he can be when it comes to an appointment with the red velvet chair. Now a third method is coming into use, which promises to take all the terrors out of hammer and bore and pincers, and this is hypnotism. A Boston authority on dental science has mesmerized a number of patients, and says that in a few years the practice will be universal. All he does, apparently, is to keep repeating, "Sleep, sleep; you are resting; you are not suffering; you are not dreading it; you do not care for it; sleep, sleep!" and as long as this little crade song is kept up, the patient believes him, and lets him saw away without a murmur. When told to wake up, he comes to himself at once, perfectly well in mind and body. If further experiment proves this system entirely successful, what a revolution it will work in other directions. Every family will have its hynotizer, and the flesh need suffer no longer from its heritage of ills. Pain will be an unknown experience. The system could equally well be applied to mental suffering. By firmly telling the grief-stricken patient, "You know you're all right; you don't mind a bit. You'd really much rather not have a husband" (or a brother, or a fortune, as the case might be), you would quickly bring about a state of tranquil resignation, or even of enjoyment. No more anxiety, no more foolish lying awake over worries—what a paradise the world would be! To be sure, it might be the worse for our souls, if it is true that all well-endured suffering is spiritual gain. But perhaps that is a mere superstition, invented to comfort us for our inevitable woes. Character might not get so much development, but that wouldn't matter much in a world without pain. The millenium would indeed be here; but what an awful time we should have when the family hypnotizer was off on his vacation!

Ito, Sotomi & Co., the leading Japanese Curio dealers of this city, have succeeded the Japan Curio Trading Company. This combination means a great deal for the curio speculators of San Francisco, for the reason that they will now be in direct contact with the importers. The firm has the shrewdest buyers in Japan, who are constantly sending to this coast rare novelties. The firm has a retail store at 116 Sutter street, where many curios may be seen.

STORYETTES

Bishop Wilmer, of Alabama, says that one of his friends lost a dearly beloved wife and in his sorrow caused these words to be inscribed on her tombstone: "The light of mine eyes has gone out." The bereaved married within a year. Shortly afterwards the Bishop was walking through the graveyard with another gentleman. When they arrived at the tomb, the latter asked the Bishop what he would say of the present state of affairs in view of the words on the tombstone. "I think," said the Bishop, "the words 'But I have struck another match' should be added."

* * *

Paderewski had a long, hard struggle before the world found him out. At twenty-seven he was poor, ill, and in debt, when the Princess de Legin hired him to play for an entertainment. Every one was delighted, but even in those bitter days Paderewski would not stand any patronizing. He had walked to the house, and when the princess said, as he was about to leave: "You must allow me to send you home in my carriage," he replied: "Madame, my carriage is at the door." That night was the turning point in his career.

A Word to Those Desiring Rest.

For one desiring a pleasant outing at this time of the year the places along the line of the San Francisco and North Pacific Coast Railway offer special advantages. Along the route the weather is simply superb. The foliage, which in other parts of the State is entirely dried up, is just at present at the height of bloom. The streams, while not as large as they were a month ago, still offer good fishing and bathing.

The particular advantage of the places along this route is that they are all within easy reach of the city. One may take one of the fast trains of that line on a Saturday afternoon and within an hour he will be in the very heart of the California redwoods.

The return trains are arranged so as to bring the pleasure-seekers back to San Francisco early Monday morning.

For a very short outing this enterprising road has improved El Campo, a garden spot of California. To this delightful spot a man may take his family and spend the Sunday beneath its glorious trees. Here are boats, bathing facilities, and everything which endears such a spot to a man, who, tired from the week's hard work, desires rest and recreation.

A Famous Home Production.

Have you ever drank Mira Valle Wines? If not, try a bottle of claret with your entre and with your roast a bottle of Grand Vin. All the leading restaurants and clubs have it. Depot, 604½ Geary street.

THE OVERLAND LIMITED

"The Overland Limited," via Union Pacific, takes only three and a half days to Chicago, and only four and a half days to New York.

The Union Pacific is the only line running Pullman double drawing-room sleepers and dining cars, San Francisco to Chicago, daily, without change, and composite buffet smoking and library cars between Salt Lake City, Ogden and Chicago. Only one change of sleepers to New York; dining car service the entire distance.

Upholstered Pullman tourist sleepers San Francisco to Chicago daily without change. Personally conducted tourist excursions to St. Paul and Chicago every Friday.

Tickets and sleeping car reservations at general office, No. 1 Montgomery street, San Francisco. Reservations secured in advance by all Trans-Atlantic steamship lines. Tickets on sale to and from all points in Europe. D. W. HITCHCOCK, General Agent, San Francisco.

Marshall F. Jones

Merchant Tailor

Room 113 and 115, Phelan Building

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.

GEO. GOODMAN

Patentee and Manufacturer of—Artificial Stone

Schillinger's Patent In all its branches

SIDE WALK and GARDEN WALK A Specialty

Office, 307 MONTGOMERY ST. Nevada Block, SAN FRANCISCO

Ask your Blacksmith to shoe your horse with

PHŒNIX HORSE SHOES

GIVE THEM A TRIAL

ORDER YOUR CARRIAGES AND COUPES OF THE

PACIFIC CARRIAGE CO.

At Baldwin Hotel
200 Sutter Street, corner Kearny
48 Eighth Street, or
St. Nicholas Hotel, Market and Ninth Streets

Steamer and Train Service a specialty 'Phone 1950

Removal Sale The whole of my stock at 1212-18 Market Street is now for sale at an immense reduction from the usual prices, before removal to

New Store, 721 Market Street

in the Bancroft Building

Suits to Order from $10 Trousers to Order from $3

CHAS. LYONS, London Tailor

All Good Money

has an eagle on it:
and all good shirts

"STANDARD" SHIRTS

have this mark on them:

TRADE N.B. MARK.

MADE IN CALIFORNIA

NEUSTADTER BROS., Mfrs.

SAN FRANCISCO

THE CALIFORNIA STATE FAIR AT SACRAMENTO THREE WEEKS!

SEPT. 1ST TO 19TH

GRAND PAVILION DISPLAY.

ELECTRIC MOTIVE POWER TRANSMITTED FROM FOLSOM

SEVENTEEN DAYS RACING

CASSASA'S EXPOSITION BAND.

DON'T FAIL TO EXHIBIT TO ATTEND

EXCURSION RATES.

The Big Show of the World

CENTRAL PARK

SAN FRANCISCO 10 DAYS ONLY COMMENCING THURS. EVG. SEPT. 3

Two Performances Daily: Afternoon at 2, Evening at 8

THE GREAT

ADAM 4PAW AND SELLS BROS.

America's Greatest Shows Combined

The Largest Menagerie in the World!

4 BIG CIRCUSES 4
300 STAR ARTISTS 300
100 GREAT ACTS 100

Two Herds of Performing Elephants, Educated Seals and Sea Lions. Two Great Hippotamuses. The Only Living Rhinoceros. Greatest Performing Horses. Beyond All Comparison the Largest, Richest and Most Complete Arenic and Zoological Entertainment in the World. Two Performances Daily, at 2 and 8 p.m. Door open an hour earlier. Seating Capacity 15,000. Twenty-five Uniformed Ushers. Numbered Coupons. Actually Reserved Seats on Sale at Pacific Music Co.'s, 816 Market St.

New Nob Hill Flat opposite the Flood Mansion

1011 CALIFORNIA STREET

Just finished. Thirteen rooms, two bath rooms, superb view, front and rear. All modern improvements. Rent $100. Make an offer. Apply to

G. A. BERTON

323 MONTGOMERY STREET

CHAUNCEY M. DEPEW, the famous orator, statesman, railroad president and millionaire, in an interview said of his recent visit to Del Monte: "I visited Monterey, and I call it the most beautiful place in the world. Monte Carlo cannot compare with it. Its seventeen-mile drive is unparalleled for fineness."

When Mr. Depew says it is the most beautiful place in the world he knows what he is saying, and means it, for he has seen pretty much all the beautiful and interesting places in the world many times over . . . . . .

The Tavern of Castle Crag, the most beautiful, attractive and accessible of all mountain resorts, will open for the reception of guests June 1, and will close October 1, 1896.

GEORGE SCHONEWALD, MANAGER

CAMPING

Season 1896

Reduced Rates for Campers' Excursion Tickets

To the following Resorts, situated on the lines of the Southern Pacific Co.

Santa Cruz Mountains

ALMA, LAUREL, FELTON
BEN LOMOND, WRIGHTS, GLENWOOD
BOULDER CREEK

Shasta Region

SWEET BRIAR CAMP
SHASTA SPRINGS SHASTA RETREAT
MT. SHASTA CAMP

For information as to Ticket Rates, Routes of Travel, etc., address or call at any Ticket Office of Southern Pacific Company, or at

General Passenger Office
No. 4 Montgomery Street, Second Floor

Or at City Ticket Office
613 Market Street, Grand Hotel, San Francisco

ILLUSTRATED FOLDER MAILED FREE ON APPLICATION

WM. H. MENTON
Excursion Passenger Agent

RICHARD GRAY
General Traffic Manager

T. H. GOODMAN
General Passenger Agent

Pacific Coast Steamship Co.

Dispatch steamers from San Francisco for ports in Alaska 9 a.m. July 3, 13, 18, 28, August 2, 12, 27.
For British Columbia and Puget Sound Ports, July 3, 8, 13, 18, 23, 28 and every fifth day thereafter.
For Eureka, Humboldt Bay, S. S. Pomona, 2 p.m. July 5, 8, 12, 16, 20, 24, 28 and every fourth day thereafter.
For Newport, Los Angeles and Way Ports, 9 a.m. July 2, 6, 10, 14, 18, 22, 26, 30 and every fourth day thereafter.
For San Diego, stopping at Port Hartford, Santa Barbara, Port Los Angeles, Redondo -- Los Angeles -- and Newport, 11 a.m. July 5, 8, 12, 16, 20, 24, 28 and every fourth day thereafter.
For Ensenada, San Jose del Cabo, Mazatlan, La Paz, Altata and Guaymas, Mex., S.S. Orizaba, July 3 and 25th of each month thereafter.
Ticket Office: Palace Hotel, 4 New Montgomery St.

GOODALL, PERKINS & CO.
General Agents
No. 10 Market Street, San Francisco, Cal.

A. K. DAGGETT

Drawing of Deeds and all Legal Papers a specialty

NOTARY PUBLIC
14 Montgomery St., S. F.
Telephone 305

Coolgardie Gold Fields

FREMANTLE, AUSTRALIA
First Class $220 Steerage $110
Lowest Rates to CAPE TOWN
S. S. "Australia," Honolulu only, Tuesday, Sept. 22, 1896, at 10 a.m.
S. S. "Alameda," via Honolulu and Auckland, Thursday, September 17, 1896 at 2 p.m.
Ticket Office 114 Montgomery St.
Freight Office 327 Market St.
J. D. SPRECKELS & BROS. CO., General Agents

The German Savings and Loan Society

526 California St., S. F.

Capital actually paid up in cash	$1,000,000 00
Deposits December 31, 1895	30,727,586 59
Reserve Fund	750,000 00
Guaranteed Capital	1,200,000 00

OFFICERS
President, B. A. BECKER
First Vice-President, EDWARD KRUSE
Second Vice-President, A. C. HEINEKER
Cashier, A. H. R. SCHMIDT
Assistant Cashier, WM. HERRMANN
Secretary, GEORGE TOURNY
Assistant Secretary, A. H. MULLER

DIRECTORS
B. A. Becker, Edward Kruse, A. C. Heineker, O. Shoemann, H. Horstmann, Ign. Steinhart, Dan'l Meyer Nic. Van Bergen, Emil Rohte
Attorney, W. S. Goodfellow

San Francisco Savings Union

532 CALIFORNIA ST

Deposits June 30, 1896	$23,657,219
Paid Up Capital and Surplus	1,594,085

ALBERT MILLER, Pres. E. B. POND, Vice-Pres.
LOVELL WHITE, Cashier

DIRECTORS
GEORGE W. BEAVER ROBERT WATT
THOMAS MAGEE GEO. C. BOARDMAN
W. C. B. DE FREMERY DANIEL E. MARTIN
ALBERT MILLER PHILIP BARTH
E. B. POND

Loans upon San Francisco and Oakland Real Estate, and Farms and Farming Lands in the country.
No charge is made for pass book or entrance fee.

Mutual Savings Bank of San Francisco

33 Post Street, below Kearny, Mechanics' Institute Building
Guaranteed Capital, $1,000,000
JAS. D. PHELAN, Pres. GEO. A. STORY, Cashier
S. G. MURPHY, JOHN A. HOOPER, Vice-Pres.
DIRECTORS—Jas. D. Phelan, S. G. Murphy, John A. Hooper, James Moffitt, C. G. Hooker, Frank J. Sullivan, L. P. Drexler, Robt. McElroy, Jos. D. Grant.
Interest paid on term and ordinary deposits.
Loans on approved securities. Deposits may be sent by Postal Order, Wells, Fargo & Co., or Exchange on City Banks.
When opening accounts, send signature.

ROYAL EXCHANGE ASSURANCE

OF LONDON
Incorporated by Royal Charter A. D. 1726
Capital Paid Up, $3,446,100 Assets, $21,584,413
Surplus to Policy Holders, $8,980,251
ROBERT DICKSON, Manager
NATHAN & KINGSTON, San Francisco Agents
501 MONTGOMERY ST.

Aachen and Munich Fire Insurance Co.

of Aix La Chapelle, Germany
Capital, $2,250,000.00
Total Assets, $6,854,683.65
United States Department
204 Sansome Street
VOSS, CONRAD & CO., General Managers

When You Leave Town

place your valuables in the
SAFE DEPOSIT VAULTS
OF THE
FIRST NATIONAL BANK
CORNER OF BUSH AND SANSOME STREETS
Office Hours, 8 a. m. to 6 p. m.

BIDS

FOR

Concessions and Privileges in Yosemite Valley

OFFICE OF THE YOSEMITE COMMISSIONERS,
San Francisco, August 11, 1896.

In accordance with Rule XXXIV of the Rules and Regulations governing Yosemite Valley and Mariposa Big Tree Grove, adopted July 13, 1896, sealed bids are hereby invited for the for the following concessions and privileges in the Yosemite Grant for the year beginning November 1, 1896, and ending October 1, 1897, viz.:

First—For keeping a livery stable and conducting a general livery business in the Valley, and also for the rental of the Royal Arch Farm and Stables.

Second—For rental of stable and coach house on Georgia Avenue for stage headquarters.

Third—For rental of hotel, outbuildings and grounds at Glacier Point and privilege of conducting a hotel business at that point.

Fourth—For rental of store building and privilege of conducting a general merchandise business in the Valley.

Bids must be presented to the Secretary on or before

Monday, October 12, 1896

at 12 o'clock M., at office of Commissioners, San Francisco.

Bids must be accompanied by sufficient guarantee that contract shall be carried out by bidders to the satisfaction of the Commissioners. The Commissioners reserve the right to reject any and all bids.

JOHN F. SHEEHAN,
Secretary and Treasurer,
Room 25, Tenth Floor, Mills Building, S. F.

NOTICE TO CREDITORS

ESTATE OF OSCAR J. PETERSON, DECEASED

Notice is hereby given by the undersigned, A. C. Freese, Administrator of the Estate of Oscar J. Peterson, deceased, to the creditors of and all persons having claims against the said deceased, to exhibit them with the necessary vouchers, within four months after the first publication of this notice, to the said Administrator, at room 15, Chronicle Building, the same being his place for the transaction of the business of the said estate in the City and County of San Francisco, State of Califofnia.

A. C. FREESE,
Adm'r of the Estate of Oscar Peterson, deceased.

J. D. SULLIVAN, Attorney for the Administrator.
Dated at San Francisco, August 12, 1896.

NOTICE OF ASSESSMENT. — BULLION Mining Company. Location of principal place of business, San Francisco, California. Location of works, Virginia Mining District, Storey County, Nevada.

Notice is hereby given that at a meeting of the Board of Directors, held on the 14th day of August, 1896, an assessment (No. 42) of ten cents per share was levied upon the capital stock of the Corporation, payable immediately in United States gold coin to the Secretary, at the office of the Company, room 20, 331 Pine street, San Francisco, California.

Any stock upon which this assessment shall remain unpaid on the 15th day of September, 1896, will be delinquent and advertised for sale at public auction, and unless payment is made before, will be sold on THURSDAY, the 8th day of October, 1896, to pay the delinquent assessment, together with the costs of advertising and expenses of sale.

By order of the Board of Directors.
R. R. GRAYSON, Secretary.
Office—Room 20, No. 331 Pine street, San Francisco, California.

NOTICE TO CREDITORS

ESTATE OF FRED LARSEN, DECEASED

Notice is hereby given by the undersigned, A. C. Freese, administrator of the Estate of Fred Larsen, deceased, to the creditors of, and all persons having claims against the said deceased, to exhibit them with the necessary vouchers within four months after the first publication of this notice to the said Administrator, at room 35, Chronicle Building, San Francisco, California, the same being his place for the transaction of the business of the said estate in the City and County of San Francisco, State of California.

A. C. FREESE,
Administrator of the Estate of Fred Larsen, deceased.
J. D. SULLIVAN, Attorney for the Administrator.
Dated at San Francisco, August 21, 1896.

BAJA CALIFORNIA

DAMIANA BITTERS

"Damiana" is a powerful aphrodisiac and special tonic for the sexual and urinary organs of both sexes and a great remedy for diseases of the kidneys and bladder. For weak nerves these bitters are invaluable, and leading physicians recommend them as the greatest invigorator known. Long-winded testimonials are not necessary. "Damiana" Bitters are known on their merits. (Send for Circular)

NABER, ALFS & BRUNE, Agents
323-325 Market St., S. F.

BONESTELL & CO.

Dealers in PAPER
Fine Coated Papers a Specialty
401-403 SANSOME ST.,
San Francisco, Cal.

THE PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU

510 MONTGOMERY ST., S. F.,

Reads all papers on the Pacific Coast, and supplies clippings on all topics, business and personal.

Pacific Towel Co.

Telephone 1780 No. 9 Lick Place, San Francisco
GEO. E. MOORE, Proprietor

Good Appetite

Is restored and the disordered Stomach and Liver invigorated by taking a small wineglassful, before meals, of the celebrated . . . . . .

Peruvian Bitters

CHARLES S. WHEELER ERNST H. LUDWIG

Ernst H. Ludwig & Co.

MODEL AMERICAN CATERERS

Supply Wedding Breakfasts, Luncheons, Dinners, Matinee Teas and Receptions on shortest notice. Also Terrapin Entrees Luncheons and Dinners. Ice Cream, Cake, &c.

Telephone 2388 1206 SUTTER STREET

We Have Appointed

Coburn, Tevis & Co.

OUR AGENTS FOR

CHOCOLATE MENIER

MENIER & CO

HIRSCH-KAHN & Co.
MANUFACTURING OPTICIANS
IMPORTERS OF OPTICAL GOODS
PHOTOGRAPHIC APPARATUS & SUPPLIES ETC.
333 KEARNY STREET
SAN FRANCISCO CAL.

COTTON SAIL DUCKS

22-inch, in all numbers. Medium, Soft and Hard

ALSO

Heavy Naught, Wagon and Draper Ducks

From 30 to 120 inches wide

Monumental and Imperial Ounce Ducks

Manufactured by Mount Vernon Company Baltimore

Murphy, Grant & Co. Pacific Coast Sole Agents

It Makes the Hair Grow

Canadian Vegetable Tonic

MRS. E. E. McLEAN, Physician for the Hair

Hours 11 to 12, 1 to 6

St. Ann's Building, San Francisco

COMET OOLONG

The oldest and most reliable brand of Tea on the market. Sold only in ½ lb papers at 20 cts. per paper.

ALL GROCERS KEEP IT

GRAY HAIR RESTORED

to its natural color by LEE'S HAIR MEDICANT, no dye, harmless, pleasant odor. $1.00 a bottle

LEE'S HAIR TONIC removes dandruff, stops hair from falling out and promotes growth $1.00 a bottle

LEE MEDICANT CO 108 Fulton st., N.Y.

Illustrated Treatise on Hair on application FREE

STORIES OF THE DAY

J. E. Dodson, who takes the character parts in the Empire Theatre Company, says apropos of noses, in the Dramatic Mirror: "A few years since, before I had mastered the art of manufacturing olfactory organs, among the numerous substances for nose construction to which I gave a trial was flour—ordinary wheat flour. I was playing Tittums, the low comedy part in "The Steeplechase," and about half way through the farce I found that the part was going uproariously, not only with the audience, but with the people on the stage. They could scarcely give me my cues for explosive bursts of laughter, and I came to the conclusion that I must be in a particularly happy comedy vein. This went on till the end of the piece, and not even a remark from the gallery of "pipe his conk off." (which being freely rendered means "Look at his nose") awoke me to the fact that anything was wrong with that organ, though afterwards I recalled that I had an uncomfortable tendency to squint. But when the curtain came down, and the company, still bursting with laughter, at length ejaculated: "What's the matter with your nose?" I rushed to the dressing-room and found that it was swollen to a most abnormal size. I had used self-raising flour.

* * *

It was Jay Gould's love of a joke that once saved Calvin S. Brice from utter ruin. Brice was heavily involved after building the Nickel Plate road, and tried to persuade Vanderbilt, who owned a parallel road, to buy him out, but Vanderbilt refused. Brice then went to Gould with a beautiful scheme, and an offer of $500,000. Gould didn't care for the $500,000, but he was a jocose speculator, and a joke on Vanderbilt was not to be resisted. The next day the papers said that Gould was going to buy the Nickel Plate. Gou'd when questioned, looked wise. At the end of a week he meandered, snaillike, over the Nickel Plate in the rear end of an observation car, and had all the air of a man who was looking at a piece of property. Stories were wired about Gould's trip from every water tank and way station along the line, and before Gould had reached Chicago [illegible], in a fit of hysterics, wired Brice that he would take the Nickel Plate. A bargain was promptly struck and Brice was saved.

* * *

Mrs. Hetty Green has a vast impatience of legal red tape, and changes her lawyer as often and as easily as if he were a bonnet. After discharging a dozen or so in a certain case, she, in some mysterious way, secured a lawyer from Texas who was an unknown quantity. If he had ever appeared in the New York courts none of the counsel on the other side could place him. He was a big, sturdy-looking man, and he started in as if he meant business. Mrs. Green was jubilant over her find, and told the reporters all that she knew about him. She referred to him as her "Texas steer," and when the new lawyer read this in the papers the next morning, he was angry and disgusted. Like his predecessors he threw up the case. He left town, and Mrs. Green said that she never would find as good a fighter in her interests.

* * *

Russians are fond of telling the story of an answer given to the Emperor when His Majesty proposed to his future wife. "The Emperor, my father, has commanded me to make you the offer of my hand and heart," was the Czarewitch's quaint way of putting it. "And my grandmother, the Queen," replied the lady, "has commanded me to accept the offer of your hand: your heart I will take myself." It is said on good authority that the Emperor is passionately devoted to his wife, and that she is equally fond of him.

* * *

Captain Middleton, a friend of the Prince of Wales, had a humorous little trick of seizing a man's dress coat by the tails and splitting it up the back. One night, seeing the Prince's secretary, Sir Francis Knollys, in a tempting fit of abstraction, he carried out this little pleasantry, tearing the coat to the very collar. There was a shout of laughter, in which Sir Francis joined as heartily as any one. "You take it coolly," said some one. "Well, you see," was the jovial answer, "I've got one of Middleton's coats."

* * *

The selection of Chicago as National Headquarters of the Democracy is due to the determination of Mrs. Bryan, and is against the wish of Chairman Jones, who desired to manage the campaign from Washington. He had been promised also the assistance of Senator Arthur P. Gorman, whom Mrs. Bryan distrusted, and would have none of. The Bryans believe Governor Altgeld the shrewdest politician in the country.

A SAVING OF ONE-HALF

Baggage transferred to trains or steamers and return. Trunks, 50c each for the round trip. Morton Special Delivery, 650 Market street and 408 Taylor street.

Among the many great Financial Corporations on the Pacific Coast, none rank higher than the

FIREMAN'S FUND INSURANCE CO.

Its Agents are found throughout America, and its Record for Prompt and Equitable Settlement of All Honest Losses is Firmly Established

D. J. STAPLES, President WM. J. DUTTON, Vice-President B. RAYMONVILLE, 2d V.-Pres., Sec'y
J. B. LEVISON, Marine Sec'y LOUIS WEINMANN, Asst. Sec'y STEPHEN D. IVES, General Agent

THE GRILL ROOM SERVICE OF THE

PALACE HOTEL

Has been extended to what was formerly the City Restaurant. This immense room, which has a direct entrance from Market Street is known as - - - -

"THE LADIES' GRILL ROOM"

NEW DEPARTURE—CHARACTERIZED BY PROMPT SERVICE—MODERATE CHARGES

CURED

Those springs are indeed wonderful x x x

I have been suffering from repeated attacks of rheumatism during the past thirteen years. The last attack began about six months ago, the trouble being principally in the hips and knees. I was bedridden for two weeks previous to my start for Byron Hot Springs, where I was advised to go by some friends who had been cured of rheumatism there. I arrived at Byron on June 24, 1896, and after two weeks' treatment left there feeling as well as I ever felt in my life.

(Signed) D. MATHIOT.

Byron Hot Springs

Contra Costa Co., Cal.

The California Hotel

SAN FRANCISCO

ABSOLUTELY FIREPROOF

HOTEL RAFAEL

SAN RAFAEL

Open All the Year Round

Fifty Minutes from San Francisco

Average winter temperature 64 degrees. Both hotels strictly first-class. Modern, Exquisite and Home-like. Both under the personal supervision of General Warfield.

R. H. WARFIELD & CO. Proprietors.

For those who appreciate Comfort and Attention

A QUIET HOME CENTRALLY LOCATED

OCCIDENTAL HOTEL

SAN FRANCISCO

WM. B. HOOPER, MANAGER

Union Iron Works

BUILDERS ELECTRICAL MACHINERY

AGENTS FOR STORAGE BATTERY

ITO, SOTOMI & CO.

Successors to JAPAN CURIO TRADING CO.

Japanese .·. Art .·. Goods

116 SUTTER STREET SAN FRANCISCO

THE LICK HOUSE

Occupies the block bounded by Montgomery, Post and Sutter Streets

IT IS——

——scrupulously clean;
——accessible to all street car lines and places of amusement;
——conveniently situated for business men;
——a quiet, model place for a family to spend the winter;
——moderate in price, yet first-class in every particular.

AMERICAN OR EUROPEAN PLAN

K. B. SOULÉ, Manager

CRESTA BLANCA WINES

AWARDED THREE HIGHEST AWARDS AT

THE ATLANTA EXPOSITION

OF SIX MEDALS AWARDED TO CALIFORNIA

Cresta Blanca Wines

OBTAINED THREE

WETMORE-BOWEN CO.

140 Montgomery Street

Under Occidental Hotel

ELECTRIC..

Supplies
Construction
Repairs

CALIFORNIA ELECTRICAL WORKS

409 MARKET STREET

H. S. BRIDGE & CO.

Merchant Tailors

Many Novelties in Imported Wear. Shirts to Order a Specialty.

622 Market Street, San Francisco

(Upstairs, opposite Palace Hotel)

Brushes For barbers, bakers, bootblacks, bathhouses, billiard tables, brewers, bookbinders, candymakers, canners, dyers, flour mills, foundries, laundries, paperhangers, printers, painters, shoe factories, stablemen, tar roofers, tanners, tailors, etc.

BUCHANAN BROS.

TEL. 5610 609 SACRAMENTO ST.

BRUSH MANUFACTURERS

TERRA COTTA PRESSED BRICK FIRE PROOFING

GLADDING, McBEAN & CO.

1358-1360 MARKET ST.

WORKS, LINCOLN CAL.

This Paper not to be taken from the Library.

THE WAVE

VOL XV. No. 37 SAN FRANCISCO, SEPTEMBER 12, 1896 PRICE 10 CTS.

AT THE TENNIS TOURNAMENT

THE WAVE

Is published every Saturday, at THE WAVE Building, No. 24 Montgomery Street, San Francisco.

Subscription, $3.00 per year, $1.50 six months, 75 cts. three months. Foreign subscriptions—countries in postal union—$5 per year. Sample copies free on application. The trade is supplied by the San Francisco News Co., 210 Post Street; east of the Rocky Mountains by the American News Co., New York.

THE WAVE is kept on file and is for sale at Brentano's, 17 Avenue de l'Opera, Paris, France; 31 Union Square, New York City; 1015 Pennsylvania Avenue, Washington, D. C.; and 206 Wabash Avenue, Chicago.

Advertising rates and all other matters pertaining to the business of the paper, address THE WAVE, 24 Montgomery Street. Eastern Agent, E. Katz, 230-235 Temple Court, New York.

HARRISON M. PARKER, Business Manager

Entered at the San Francisco Post Office as second-class matter

THE WAVE PUBLISHING COMPANY

SAN FRANCISCO, SEPTEMBER 12, 1896

CONTENTS

Editorials	2-3	Society Gossip	11
Circus Scenes	4	The Theatres; by Peg Woffington	11
A Priest Among the Lepers	5	A Great Jurist	12
Li Hung Chang at Home	7	Her Point of View	13
The Native Sons' Celebration	7	In the Current	13
Tennis at Del Monte	7	Re-Told Tales	14
The Animals' Home	9	Late Verse	14
About Personages	9	Stories of the Day	16
Things and People	10

"LET US HAVE AN OVER-PRODUCTION OF MONEY."

It is a matter of some wonderment that the free silver movement should find peculiar favor in farming communities. A gentleman from the interior attempts to explain the situation in this off-hand way. He says:

"The farmer knows that the value of his crop has depreciated, and that there is a marked diminution in the demand for farm products. He is told that over-production is responsible for his trouble. As everything seems to be suffering from the ills of over-production, he is now willing to try a little over-production of money, and see if this will not help matters."

Possibly this idea or something akin to it has taken up temporary lodging, not only with the farmer, but with many others, not farmers, who feel the pinch of the times.

"Let us have an over-production of money!"

There is a most inviting ring to that sentiment. More honest money would mean greater development. More honest money would mean less idle men. More honest money would mean lower rates of interest, and a consequent freer use of capital. The smokeless chimneys of the idle factories would again give forth the signs that tell of glowing fires of industry that burn below. The deserted shops, abandoned looms, and silent anvils, would again ring out the stirring anthem of prosperity. Enterprises now abandoned would take on new life.

Idle money is non-productive money. What does it matter if the wealthy owner of a silver mine is benefitted? He cannot lock his coin up forever in safe deposit vaults and prosper by the hiding of it. If he would take further advantage by its possession he must send it forth along all the avenues of trade and enterprise or suffer its ownership to become a burden and a care. To profit through the ownership of money, it must be put to a profitable use. With more money, every industry in the State would take on new life, latent resources would be developed, and great undertakings engage the attention of idle capital. The hungry man who solicits alms upon the street to-day would then have an opportunity to earn by honest toil the money that would satisfy his every want. The lean purse of poverty would fatten with the frugal savings of honest thrift. Want would give way to plenty, and misery make way for happiness.

"Let us have an over-production of money!"

The cheerless habitation to which the weary and disheartened unemployed goes home with disappointment written on his face, would then be bright and cheerful. The scanty meal that only mocks at hunger would then give way to steaming roast, and full, and plenty. The wife of Labor would be brighter and happier; the children better clad, better fed, and better housed. No longer would they feel the great oppression that comes with poverty and want; no longer would the family gatherings at night be marked by sighs and despondent misgivings. The soured and discontented man with despair written on his face and hatred in his soul, the man who is tempted to abnegate the holy teachings of his youth, and, cursing the flag and country of his birth, dreams of revolution and anarchy, would, by the magic touch of employment, be transformed into a loyal and contented citizen.

To the unfortunate assailed by poverty, to the man involved in debt, the cry "Let us have an over-production of money!" comes home with telling force. It is all radiant with hope, pregnant with promise, and offers safe and sure deliverance from the fast tightening clutches of increasing poverty. If he snatches eagerly at this poor straw, if he takes this glittering delusion to his despairing heart, believing it to mean salvation, one may not blame him. Certainly, one may not harshly blame him. He is not wise in the subtleties of finance; he cannot with easy facility penetrate the fraud and expose the fallacies of the man who apparently speaks with tongue of frankness and sincerity. He is simply obeying the immutable law of nature, and following where hope beckons to disaster. The hour of his awakening is the hour we dread. The advocates of silver are destroying every hope but that held out by their insane remedy. When that heartless instructor, bitter experience, shall have swept theories, fallacies and predictions to the wind, when he finds staring him in the face a naked and grinning something infinitely worse than the jade of want that now besets his way, who shall answer for his conduct then? Who curb or limit the frenzy of his madness, or mould the manner of his thinking along conservatives lines? He is being taught now to hate wealth, and to suspect the prosperous of conspiring to his ruin. When his hope in free silver is destroyed, he will be told that the powers of plutocracy have again achieved a victory, that the theories of Bryanism are living truths, but that the powers of wealth have obstructed their operation.

"Let us have an over-production of money!"

Yes, it does sound sweetly upon the ear. But what kind of money? And at what cost? If any man should come forward with a scheme for the alleviation of poverty that had for its basic principle the suspension of the law of gravitation, the shallowest mind would discover its absurdity, and it would fall of its own weight. There are laws of finance and laws of trade around which we cannot dodge, the operation of which we cannot avoid. Like the laws of nature, they are unwritten, and require no enacting clause to give them force and effect. No legislative body framed their provisions, yet they are more absolute and irrevocable than the most carefully devised statute law that ever left the hand of ingenious legislator. We cannot with safety ignore their existence, any more than we can defy the laws of nature and expect to survive. The danger of Bryanism lies in its utter disregard of every fundamental principle of finance and its uncompromising defiance of the primary laws that have governed the world ever since pelts and feathers were the common currency.

We need not run into an abstruse discussion of this subject. Already the question is littered with too much useless waste that is confounding rather than convincing. We are anxious to reach the eye and the understanding of the man who is looking for a plain unadorned statement of the case. In our endeavors to this end repetitions may occur, but in adhering to truth one must abjure fiction and cling meanwhile to the dull monotony that goes with truth.

The farmer is told by Mr. Bryan, Mr. Harvey, and every advocate of silver, that prices have not gone down, but that gold has gone up in value; that an increase in the value of gold has brought about a corresponding decrease in the value of farm products; and that therefore we must advocate the free and unlimited coinage of silver at the ratio of 16 to 1, to change this condition and relieve this depression.

The advocates of McKinley declare that such a financial policy would drive gold from the market, leave us on a silver monometallic basis, and that our dollar would—like the dollar of every other silver country of the world—be worth only its face value, at present 53 cents.

To this, Bryan replies that we would have no such thing as a 53-cent dollar, but that silver would jump to $1.29. Let us quote a little from an article by Professor Laughlin, in the August "Review of Reviews." He says:

"In his speech of acceptance, Mr. Bryan emphasizes the effect of the gold standard in causing low prices and distress; hence it is urged that the free coinage of silver is advisable because silver is a standard lower down, nearer to goods than gold, and that it would bring higher prices. And yet, quite in the opposite vein, Mr. Bryan holds that free coinage of silver will cause such a demand for silver that it will be kept at par with gold (that is, will rise to $1.29 an ounce). In that case, of course, prices will still remain on the level of gold, up to which silver has been lifted. The irreconcilable inconsistency in these two grounds for urging free coinage of silver is fatal to the claims of the silver party. If free coinage of silver will raise the silver dollar to par with gold, then let it be heralded far and wide throughout the West that Mr. Bryan, in New York, has demonstrated that prices must still remain on the gold standard level. For, if silver is to be raised to par with gold, then the farmer will have to use the same number of bushels of wheat to pay his debt under the silver standard as under the gold standard, since both are held together. If Mr. Bryan is right in proving that silver will rise to par with gold, prices will remain on the gold level; consequently he is absolutely wrong in telling the farmer that prices will rise. Both of these things cannot by any possibility be true."

We have before demonstrated that gold would go out of circulation should we attempt free coinage. The Gresham Law of Finance would here come into operation. It is a law that is constant and unchangeable, based upon that characteristic of mankind that never fails of operation; to-wit, human selfishness, self-protection.

Do you ask what would result to us with this change of standard? Professor Laughlin vividly and truthfully sets forth what would be inevitable, and we commend its careful perusal to the man who cries, "Let us have an over-production of money!" He says:

"This change of standard cannot take place without disastrous results and a panic. Why should we expect a commercial panic to follow? The withdrawal of gold means a change of standard. Before silver could be raised to par, according to Mr. Bryan, a new demand must arise for silver, and a demand be taken away from gold. That is only another way of stating that we must go to a silver basis in order to create the demand which will raise the value of silver to par. In short, we must have the fearful cataclysm following a change of standard before Mr. Bryan can prove his theory right or wrong.

"The reasons why a panic must follow a change of standard are clear. Business men are selling goods on time, and discount their bills at banks. To pay wages in his factory to-day he gets the present worth from the banks of the debts due him for goods sold. These sales and discounts are made at prices determined by the existing gold standard. Suggest a lowering of 47 per cent. in the standard,—and imagine if you can the ensuing confusion. How can any kind of a business contract be made if it is not known within 47 per cent. what the value of the payment will be? No bank will loan the deposits left in their hands, or renew old loans, if there is fear that the repayment may vary by 47 per cent. And even before the change of standard could be enacted men would all wish to sell their securities and property for gold before the change to silver came about. If, then, every one is selling, and if the banks refuse to loan because of the uncertainty,—picture but faintly the consequent distress and failures. One house, unable to get loans to meet its maturing notes, fails; that brings down another house,—then all come crashing down in ruin. The horror passes all description: the hopes of a lifetime gone, homes sold, and beggary for wife and children. This would be the first effect of free coinage of silver; and already the faint possibility of it has forced down the prices of securities, in many cases, to a point as low as in the panic of 1893.

"The results of a panic will be reduced production, lessened demand, rigorous economy, diminished transactions, idle capital, idle labor, general prostration, and the heaping up in banks of unemployed money. Less money will be needed for the lessened business. The demand for silver will be less than the present demand for gold, as a first result of free coinage of silver."

This condition of affairs pictured by Professor Laughlin will inevitably follow in the train of successful Bryanism. Can the farmer and the laborer discover here anything that will tend to better his condition?

If free silver wins and increases the price of silver to $1.29 the farmer will take no profit from it, for values will remain just where they are to-day. Money will not be any more plentiful, for, according to the Examiner, there is not a stock of silver bullion anywhere in the world to be found that will increase our money supply ten per cent. Then where is the laborer or agriculturist to be benefited?

If free silver wins, and silver does not increase in value, then, manifestly, we will have a 53-cent dollar, and all the unhappy conditions set forth by Professor Laughlin will come to us. Wherein then will the farmer or laborer be benefited?

It is not an over-production of money that is needed in America; it is an over-production of common sense. We need a return of confidence more than anything else just now. There is money enough in America,—money to spare, but it is securely guarded in steel vaults, and Fear shoots the bolt that locks it away from the avenues of industry. Fear has gathered it in from general circulation; Fear hesitates to let it go forth, and Fear will hold it tight within its grasp until the American people with decisive voice demonstrate that they are not to be deluded by the fripperies of a tinselled financial policy. Restore confidence, and we will restore to trade and industry the funds necessary to inaugurate a new era of prosperity.

THE PALMER TICKET.

The Indianapolis Convention was one of the most respectable and dignified of the political bodies which have met this year, and we feel warranted in saying that never in this country, or in any other, has there been held a political convention its superior in tone and spirit. It was composed of men who place principle before party, their country before desire for office, and such men are always distinguished, we regret to say, even in the United States.

When it became evident that the Altgelds and the Tillmans had captured the Democratic party, the Wave declared that a real Democratic ticket was necessary to keep the party from utter destruction. That opinion we still maintain. If there is to be a Democratic party in the future, it must be a party of national honor. The Populists cannot succeed to the traditions and glorious history of the Democratic party. There is nothing in common between the visionary and dishonest notions of the Populists and the patriotic sentiments and practical ideas of Jeffersonian Democrats.

Populism is not Democracy. This all men of insight must realize. If the party now calling itself the Democratic party ever again wishes recognition as the lineal descendant of the party founded by Jefferson, strengthened by Jackson, revived by Tilden and Cleveland, it must blot out of its record the Chicago Convention and return to the principles of the Indianapolis platform. To adhere to the Chicago platform means absorption by the Populists.

The Indianapolis Convention insures the defeat of Bryan. Perhaps it was not necessary to do this, as the Bryan chances have been shooting the quick chute into oblivion for a month past. But whatever Bryan's chances were, they are no more. With General Palmer as the sound money candidate for President, the State of Illinois is surely against Altgeld and Bryan.

When this campaign has gone into history as the most foolish and fatal that the Democrats ever conducted, there will again come to the sane leaders of the Democracy the power to keep their followers within the bounds of respectability and honesty. The men who now are gold men will resume control of the Democratic party, Populism will be disgraced and without repute, and there will be no longer need for such a party as the National Democracy. The present bolters will not be welcomed back to the Democracy, the welcoming will be done by the bolters, for the prodigals are those who follow Bryan, not those who make up the Palmer army.

General Palmer is a rugged leader of men. He does not have to argue and compel by reason to bring men to his side. Commanding in presence, strong in voice and magnetic in manner, he has from boyhood been one of the leading figures of his State. Lincoln was his friend; they sat together in the great Bloomington Convention where the Republican party was born in Illinois. General Baker and General Palmer were rivals at the bar and took to the field of war, after years of separation, to fight for their flag, the one to die a glorious death at Ball's Bluff, the other to live to become Governor of his State and Senator of the United States. Lyman Trumbull and John M. Palmer fought the good fight against slavery together, and when the Republican policy of reconstruction became intolerable they stepped into the Democratic party. Trumbull grew more radical as age came on, dying a few days since as a Populist, while Palmer, who at one time allowed himself to flirt a bit with the greenbackers, refused to pledge himself for free silver when offered the senatorship as a reward. His last election depended on the votes of two Farmers' Alliance men in the Illinois Legislature. Palmer had the solid Democratic vote. These farmers called Palmer before them and offered their votes if he would pledge himself to silver. He refused, saying that he had rather lose the senatorship than give such a pledge. His manliness so commended itself to these Populists that they voted for him without the pledge, and so he was elected. He will carry county after county in Illinois, dividing the Democratic vote. Across the State line in Indiana he is almost as popular as in his own State. In Kentucky he has as running mate the most picturesque blue-grass Confederate, the much beloved Buckner, and together there is little doubt but that they will save Kentucky to the Democracy of honor.

The gold Democrats of California are deprived by our ballot law of the opportunity to vote for this ticket, but they will no doubt make a campaign of enthusiastic and much needed education along lines that must commend themselves to the decent and the thoughtful. A Palmer Democrat is a worthy American—he has courage, candor, common sense and patriotism.

SENATORIAL SELECTION.

During the week an evening paper published a lengthy article condemning corruption in the election of United States Senators. Too much cannot be said upon this subject, for such things make toward the destruction of our Republic and mock at the pretense of honesty in elections. No surprise should be expressed at the almost universal demand for the election of Senators by the direct vote of the people, when one comes to consider the methods employed by the Boss in the interest of wealthy candidates for the Senate. The Boss has long had a place in our politics, and it has ever been his custom to look forward to the senatorial year as one of fat harvests and rich rewards. His prey has been the man of wealth, who, tired for a while of massing further fortunes, or possibly for the purpose of furthering his ends, desires senatorial honors, and is willing to pay for them. Why should he not represent the commonwealth in the Congress of the United States? Other rich men have before aspired to that exalted place. What matters it if he is without experience in public affairs? He is willing to learn his duties, at the time when he should be most familiar with them, while occupying his seat as a Senator in Congress.

The man of wealth in this frame of mind falls a ready victim to the Boss. We have no objection to the rich serving the people in a senatorial capacity, but we do object to the methods generally accredited to them to reach that end. The political Boss has carefully cultivated the notion that he and his methods offer the only safe and speedy means of securing a seat in the Senate. He is the advocate of corruption, and leads his victim by easy stages to a point where he is willing to be robbed. Happily, we are getting along to a place now where ex-Bosses freely admit in the public prints that "one man power has had its day in politics." It is but a short step now to the place where the Boss, as we have known him, will figure only in history. New methods will obtain, and contests for senatorship will be transferred from secluded corners in the lobbies of the State Capitol, if not direct to the people, at least to their local political organizations. This will mean much for decency and for honesty.

The successful canvass of the State made by Senator Perkins two years ago marked the first inroad made upon the prerogatives of the Boss in senatorial elections. That the Boss was alarmed at this innovation is putting the matter mildly, and that he now objects to it goes without saying. In striking contrast to the situation described in the editorial in question, was Senator Perkins' canvass. Possibly he had a Boss working for him, but if so his movements were accomplished with so much secrecy that his name, genealogy and environments have never been discovered. As we recollect it, Senator Perkins, instead of resorting to the ancient and ignoble practice of the past, took the wishes of the people into consideration and submitted to them his claim for preferment. He stood willing to have them express their wishes in the matter through their regularly chosen delegates. Being a man of unimpeachable integrity it was but natural that a large number of legislative candidates were instructed by their constituencies to cast their votes for Mr. Perkins. These instructions were all given before election day, and the California voter for the first time in history had a knowledge that his voice would be heard in the selection of a United States Senator. Unless we are mistaken, most of the legislative candidates so instructed were successful at the polls. There is honor and credit to such a campaign. We are not in Mr. Perkins' confidence, but if we attach any importance to the commotion now being made by some of the Bosses and political manipulators, we may conclude that he is again submitting his cause to the people, and probably with signal success, or else such protests would not have been uttered. It is reasonable to presume that if the Perkins plan of soliciting an expression of opinion from the people is meeting with the opposition of the Bosses that Mr. Perkins will not appeal in vain to the source of all power. In the absence of a law authorizing the election of Senators by the direct vote of the people, no better method than that pursued by that gentleman can be found to register the wishes of the people in the matter of selecting Senators than to have the County Conventions express a preference. If any proof was needed on this point, it is evidenced by the fact that no Boss or political manipulator has been heard to raise his voice in behalf of such a plan. They are all against it, and with good reason.

PAMPHLETEERING REVIVED.

The day of pamphlets is returning. The pamphlet is the most influential factor to-day in American politics. The present campaign is the outgrowth of pamphleteering, and is largely conducted by means of the small printed tract. The carrying over of the Democratic party to free silver was but the result of a pamphlet campaign made among the farmers and laboring men. Being unable to bring to the support of their unhappy cause the influential journals of the nation, the free silver men were forced to resort to this old-time method of agitation, and by their success have demonstrated that the pamphlet is as efficient a weapon to-day as ever it was in the days of Junius or Steele. Notwithstanding the desertion of all their leading papers in the Eastern and Middle States, the Democratic managers appear not in the least discomfited, but perfectly willing to make their arguments through this extraordinary channel, the political tract. Had there been such a newspaper bolt at the time of Mr. Cleveland's first candidacy, it would have appeared fatal to his chances of election. The newspaper was then considered the greatest instrumentality for catching votes, but now it is seen that campaigns can be conducted without newspapers, and the people are willing to read and ready to believe without the endorsement of a newspaper headline.

The newspapers are to blame for this state of affairs. They have not been jealous of their honor or careful of their character, and the confidence of the people in them has been unduly shaken. When a real crisis, like the present, is at hand, they fail to carry the weight and influence of long ago. A statement of fact made now in many of our newspapers at once becomes the subject of suspicion. Men of ordinary intelligence are more apt to believe the gossip of the street or of the club than they are the gossip of the newspapers. The news page and the editorial page have of late become discredited. Business men who are given the option of having their matter published in the editorial columns or in the news columns, prefer the latter because they are read by more and are quite as influential. Having lost character and responsibility, the modern American newspaper has lost its capacity to influence the minds of its public through its editorial expression. Generally speaking, whatever it says in a political campaign is presumed to be the result of cowardice or corruption—either the paper is afraid to do otherwise than follow the party programme, or it is bought directly. It is at a time like this that such a feeling of suspicion takes on the shape of a public misfortune. With a knowledge of this broadcast lack of confidence in the press it is no wonder that the political managers, on both sides, have taken to the pamphlet. They have found that the anonymous little flyer is a better educator than the ordinary daily newspaper column, for it is allowed to speak for itself. The facts and arguments it presents are not handicapped by the partisanship and unreliability of the newspapers.

A century or less ago, the pamphlet was the greatest means of popular agitation available. With the improvements in the art of printing and the development of the newspaper business, the daily paper drove the pamphlet out of the field, but the journal of that day was one of principle and of candor, a paper of independence and honor, not terrorized by its subscription list, and free from the domination of its advertisers. If its editor spoke, the people, knowing this fact, believed in it. Now, however, we are forced to return to the pamphlet because men have lost confidence in those who should be their guides and their teachers.

THE NEW IRISH LAND ACT.

The passage of the new Irish Land Act represents a greater triumph of diplomacy than the world at large realizes. To make a busy government find time to discuss a complicated and technical bill of over fifty clauses, put it through the House of Lords, secure for it the royal assent, and advance it to the statute-book — this took every atom of Mr. Balfour's power and influence. The fact that it was an Irish question doubled the difficulties in a Parliament whose chief interest is centered on British affairs. That Mr. Balfour, the Tory Chief Secretary, should have made an earnest and unprejudiced study of the Liberal Land Bill of 1895, frankly accepting its good points, showed a broad-mindedness that inclined both sides to give his bill a fair hearing. Of course, he has had to meet bitter opposition, and the new act has been stigmatized as a sham and a fraud, satisfactory to no one, but if its detractors had studied the matter as Mr. Balfour has, they would not have been so anxious to see it destroyed.

The first advantage of the bill is that, in the case of nearly four hundred thousand tenants whose rents have been already fixed (numbering fully three-fourths of the Irish farmers), it forbids legal attack on their status when they seek a second judicial term. That alone would have been a great deal to accomplish, for it saves the immense body of the tenantry from the extortions of lawyers and burdensome bills of costs. Next in importance comes the provision which extends from £50 to £100 valuation the right of the holders of pasture farms to claim a fair rent, a measure which will directly benefit over four thousand men. The technicalities which made entrance to the Land Court so difficult are done away with. Tenants of "Demesne Lands," "Town Parks," "Dairy Farms," and "Mill Holdings," have had their rights made clear: the provision that excluded "joint tenants" and "tenants in common" from the Land Act of 1881, unless all agreed to enter court, is abolished, together with certain sub-letting disqualifications: tenants of an estate that is "in settlement" are no longer excluded from the Land Court.

One of the minor improvements takes away from landlords the power of fixing the "tenant-right" wherever a "fair rent" is sought. Another allows leaseholders to apply at any time for the conversion of their leaseholds into judicial tenancies. The landlord's power to bring ejectments is restricted, and he is obliged, on appeals, to notify the tenant of any objection to his status. Moreover, in future, a privilege given a tenant by his landlord will become a right, unless the landlord chooses to cut off a proportionate amount from the rent. The buying of land is made easier by extending the time for the repayment of installments from forty-nine years to over seventy: and various other improvements have been introduced in the "purchase" clauses. Lastly, additional powers have been given to the Congested Districts Board, and in certain cases the Land Commission will be allowed to arbitrate between evicted tenants and landlords, with a view to adjusting an irritating and dangerous question.

It is possible that the passage of this act may work a certain change of base for the Tory party in regard to Ireland. The disaffection of landlords will be more than made up for by the approval of a much larger class who look only to the good of Ireland. The Protestant farmers of Ulster have had keen eyes fixed on their landlords for some time, and their support would be well worth having. The effect of the bill can as yet only be guessed at, but, before the next Parliament assembles, its influence will be clearly seen.

CIRCUS SCENES

The "Mammoth Aggregation" on an Opening Day.

"You may go in," said the man who guarded the entrance to the circus grounds, "but"—this he added with great cheerfulness, "you will probably get hit in the head by a piece of timber or something."

After all there was nothing much to see. There was a huge tent swelling in the breeze, a long string of closed cages, a body of quiet workmen building seats and the three rings—nothing more except two or three quietly dressed women and half a dozen men who sat about on wagon-tongues, camp chairs and boxes and talked a little in a disjointed early-family-breakfast fashion. The heart of the circus was evidently not here, so we took the advice of the press agent—a courteous, pleasant boy—and went off in search of the stables and the laborer's cook-tent. Pushing through the crowd that swarmed about the rear entrance to the grounds, we followed Mission street east until we reached the lot which is our Postoffice site. There we encountered another crowd and a big negro, swollen with importance, who wore a medal on his breast, inscribed with "Say, give me a dollar," and a very incongruous air of condescension and dignity. After honoring us with considerably more attention than the permit, which I think he only pretended to read, he let us in the enclosure with a magnificent wave of the hand and a thunderous Jove-like look and bellow at the small perspiring boys who blocked the way.

As the gate closed behind us and the country odors of hay and camp-fire filled my nostrils the old primeval nomadic instinct of man stirred in me, as in a sleeping dreaming animal stirs: with memories of hay-fields sending up their fresh fragrance to the stars and visions of woods and streams; of waking in the night to hear the soft munching cropping sounds of browsing horses and the muffled chirp of drowsy birds. Why lay this gipsy freedom down, oh, my wandering friends, to become a part of an army cast down here in a sandy, arid spot in a big city with the eternal rattle of wheels and cable-cars and the thousand jarring sounds of civilization in your ears? Would you not be happier wandering—a part of some much less august caravan—through Eastern villages, pitching your tents under wide-spreading elms where the rustle of leaves and the ripple of water could reach you? One could understand the charm of such a life. It is so that we like to think of you, as gipsies, something free, irresponsible and wild, not as mountebanks living in squalor, misery and towns. For you are birds of passage, you come to us in the summer and in the winter you are gone,—we know not where,—like the swallows and the green leaves. Small wonder then that we weave romance about you, and that to children you are shrouded in mystery and possess a dear charm which even years and ill-health can never wholly dispel. But this! What is there is this life to win you as it does? Those of you whom the public sees pass most of your time "on the grounds" or in the narrow sleepers of your train. A few go to hotels. In cities you eat at restaurants; in small towns in your dining tent, which is generally pitched in some blank, treeless space near the big circus-tent with its crowds of two and four-legged animals and its large assortment of smells.

The laborers, those who pitch the tents, groom the horses, feed the animals, etc., have a separate dining-tent. In this city, owing to the small size of the main grounds, they, the horses and the elephants were lodged, as I stated before, on a vacant lot. They have most of the hard work, considerable danger and no glory, and yet they, too, seem to like the life, while the darkies (there are about twenty-five in Messrs. Sells and Forepaugh's combination) fairly exuded contentment. The two head-cooks, big, fine-looking fellows, were the pictures of satisfaction as they ordered the waiter-boys around and bent over their rude stoves (one of which was a sheet of iron with eight holes or eyes in it, supported over a rousing wood fire.) They were surrounded by vegetables, rounds of beef and elephants when I saw them, and by a quirk of the mind those historic words of Nelson's, uttered in the thick of a fight, floated through my brain. "It's warm work," he said, "and this may be the last to any of us at any time, but believe me I wouldn't be elsewhere for thousands." That expresses what these circus people feel I thought to myself, as I hastily retreated from a shrieking elephant and found comparative safety at the heels of a horse.

This was a position more easily obtained than avoided, for preparations were on foot for the morning parade, and the horses, nearly 300 in number, were marching out of their long canvas stables (which formed three sides of a hollow square) by twos and fours. Big, well-groomed, fat creatures, generally plebian but good to look at nevertheless. Eight of the heaviest, broad through the chest and rump, took their places in front of the steam calliope; eight others swung on to the band wagon, their harness jingling rythmically as they threaded their way through the crowd with long springy elastic strides. Everybody was doing something, from the smallest stable boy up to the big elephant, who, on being bidden, walked sedately across the lot and moved a heavy wagon out of the line of march by pressing his head and trunk against it. Looking down the long tent stables two or three men could be seen in as many stages of undress. One was shaving, another was changing his shirt. As he ducked his head through the neck opening, the broad bare back gleamed as if wet. He evidently had not patronized one of the six long towels which hung near by. A great many of the glittering heroes who figure in the parade dressed, without undressing, on top of their turnouts, with their reins in one hand and their ornamental pair of trousers in the other, but the riders, the clowns and other really high lights came from the dressing tents a block away in full costume. Some were ahead of and a few behind time, but there was no confusion or anything which bore even the faintest resemblance to swearing, except an occasional ferocious remark from a beautiful tiger who had not yet been sent to the circus tent. The horses, as well as the men, waited patiently for the word to move on; two of the little Shetland ponies even went so far as to lie carefully down in their harness and take a nap. Finally, about eleven, all was ready, the elephants lumbered ponderously out of the enclosure, their chains clanking. The wagons with their barbaric ornaments fell in line, interspersed by riders who straightened themselves as they passed out the gate and assumed an air of ease and indifference. The negroes who fed the steam calliope sprang to their places, after giving a final rub to the boiler which shone like their black faces. A clown rushed by with a yell. Helter-skelter he went, in his little cart, upsetting a sack of barley here, bumping against a rider there, and all unrebuked, for his ring manners and his privileges seemed to descend upon him with his parti-colored clothes and his cap and bells. A boy who had been harnessing four pretty little bays to a springless chariot surrendered them now to a girl in a flowing plush robe.

THE PERFORMING DOGS

DRIVING A STAKE

"She's only been driving them two weeks," he said, as the horses plunged off. "I guess she'll be pretty well shaken up to-day. I was when I drove them in from the station this morning—you have such rough streets."

Poor fellow he had not had the chariot-girl's air cushion to lessen the jolts or her elegant long plush train and her admiring spectators to support and comfort him, for it was four in the morning when he took his drive; it was dark and everybody was sleepy, and not a few were cross, for who would like to rise before dawn and work hard all day arranging a place for some one else to "show off" in?

But even the "artists" don't have a very easy life. They breakfast at seven, join the parade at 10:30, give an afternoon and an evening performance daily, and (if of the weaker sex) make many their own clothes. That some of the women find time also to do fancy work was testified by the lace handkerchief which was laid in my hands as I stood that night in the women's dressing-room. It was as delicately scented as a grande dame's garments—those snowy garments which lie between silken sachets in the wide drawers of her stately chiffonieres. Yet it came out of a crowded trunk, cast down with thirty others in a little enclosure not more than ten by eighteen feet. It seems that the part of circus life which the women dislike most is not the work or the danger, but these cramped dirty dressing rooms, and, as I glanced around me, I was not surprised that it should be so. Underfoot was dirt and unevenness, overhead a flapping canvas. Trunks, gaudy clothes and half-naked women were everywhere. In the centre of the room a supple, comely leg flashed into view for an instant, as its owner smoothed out a wrinkle in her tights. One girl was struggling into a pair of satin small clothes; another's round, white body, stripped to the waist, stood out against the dingy canvas with startling distinctness, as she unfastened a refractory shirt which had caught in her fluffy jewelled head. In the midst of this motely crowd, but seeming a little out of it by reason of her stillness and abstraction, a tired girl leaned her grey silent face against a beam and waited with a far-away look in her eyes—a strange contrast to the rush and color about her.

WAITING FOR THE BELL

BEHIND THE SCENES

"What's the matter? Oh, she's been feeling bad for a day or two," said the head of the dressing-room. "Will she go on to-night? Why, of course."

PEG WOFFINGTON.

Professor Hilprecht of the University of Pennsylvania, who is in charge of the excavations at the site of the ancient mound at Niphur, has made a wonderful discovery of written tablets, which carry back the history of the world 2250 years further than any records ever before located. It seems that the Professor's predecessor, Dr. Peters, had worked down to a certain floor or platform, which he and others had taken to be the ground level of the ancient city. One of the party suggested that this level should be penetrated and the digging continued until rock or virgin soil should be reached. The suggestion was adopted, and, to the delight of all concerned, it was found what was supposed to be the level of the ancient city was only the level of a comparatively modern city built over the ruins of an older one or a succession of older ones. Twenty-three feet below the platform, Professor Haines came upon the most ancient keystone arch known, an arch which, Professor Hilprecht thinks, cannot be later that 5000 B. C. The most valuable finds were the inscriptions upon the broken vases, bricks and tablets. From these it is confidently predicted by Professor Hilprecht that a continuous history of Babylonism will be written.

F. R. Burnham, the famous American scout, who killed Mlimo, the prophet of the Matebeles, is the hero of seven campaigns in Africa, and is probably the best-known scout in Africa. He is one of the three survivors of the party of thirty-eight picked men who, under Major Wilson, advanced across the Shangani river in pursuit of Lo Bengula in December, 1893. The main body, under Major Forbes, were on the other side of the river, and when the patrol party found themselves surrounded by thousands of Lo Bengula's warriors Burnham and two others volunteered to make a dash through the enemy in the hope of reaching Forbes and telling him the situation. Although volley after volley was fired upon them, they forced their way through the bush, reached the river, and crossed it with difficulty, only to find that Forbes himself was sorely pressed. The river meanwhile had risen so rapidly that it could not be crossed, and Wilson and his men were left to make the famous last stand, when all perished while singing together "God Save the Queen."

The cause of the pleasure arising from riding a bicycle is discussed in the French "Revue Scientifique" by M. Charles du Pasquier. He rejects the opinion of another man of science, Monsieur Tissie, who thinks the pleasure of wheeling comes from the "numerous associations of ideas corresponding to the various attitudes assumed in the effort to keep one's balance," and asserts, on the contrary, that the pleasure is due to the absence of variety in the motions and attitudes of the rider. The latter feels himself moving swiftly and easily by means of a simple and uniform effort of his muscles, and hence his pleasure. But according to Monsieur Pasquier, the monotony of the movement, while it tends to quiet the nerves and exalt the sensibilities, may, if the exercise is carried too far, result in injury, by reducing the nervous activities of the rider to a minimum. He asserts that overindulgence tends to narrow the activity of the mind.

The Canadians of the Pacific region are at last awake to the evils of insufficiently restricted Chinese immigration. A petition for further restriction, signed by more than ten thousand residents of British Columbia, is to be sent to the Federal Government in Ottawa. Every additional bar put up by Canada on the Pacific Coast will make easier the enforcement of the restriction laws on this side of the border.

FATHER CONRARDI AND THE KANAKA LEPER CHILDREN

FATHER CONRARDI

A Priest Among the Lepers on the Island of Molokai.

"Wet not thy burning lips
In streams that to a human dwelling glide,
Nor rest thee where the covert fountains hide.
Nor kneel thee down to dip
The water where the pilgrim bends to drink,
By desert well or river's grassy brink.

"And pass thou not between
The weary traveler and the cooling breeze;
And lie not down to sleep beneath the trees
Where human tracks are seen:
Nor milk the goat that browseth on the plain
Nor pluck the standing corn, or yellow grain."

So runs the leper's doom, in Nathaniel Parker Willis' poem. Its mournful "Room for the leper! Room!" ran persistently through my head as Father Conrardi talked of his life on the island of Molokai. He went there eight years ago to take up the work that that was falling from Father Damien's crippled hands, and for seven years has done his work alone. Everybody remembers Father Damien's long years of labor and the fierce attack on his character that was made by a contemptible Protestant minister. Stevenson never wrote anything greater than his answer to this attack, and there was very little left of the minister by the time the writer of Samoa had finished with him. Stevenson told his wife that that was the only time in his life he had felt actual pleasure in taking up his pen to deliberately injure another man. Father Conrardi spoke of this affair very temperately:

FATHER CONRARDI

"It all came from jealous anger," he said. "Great as Father Damien's work was, he was praised too much given the credit of things that others had done. The government spent eighty thousand dollars on the lepers, and even this was credited to Father Damien by his admirers. The Protestant missionaries could not forgive this. It was just jealousy."

Father Courardi was born in Belgium, and his English, though pure and correct, has a slightly foreign accent. His face is clearly cut, and must have been very handsome when he was younger, though now it is half hidden by a dark beard, and there is a worn look about his eyes, which he has a trick of closing as he talks. He is an earnest, broad-minded man, thoroughly Catholic in spirit, simple and natural in manner, and utterly without egotism or personal vanity. His entire life has been one of self-denial and hardship, and yet, to quote his own words, "It has not been half long enough for all I want to do. I wish I were a man of thirty, to have twenty good, strong, active years still before me."

"Tell me about your work at Molokai," I said. "Did you go there just in the character of a priest?"

"That is the way the Board of Health would have us go—just as priests," he answered. "They do not like it when we visit the sick to nurse and care for them. But what could I do? They were men suffering alone, dying alone. How could I keep away? I am a man as well as a priest, and as a man I had to help them. The government builds them cottages and supports them, but it does not go to them in the night when they need help, and it resents our doing it."

"Are the lepers very unhappy," I asked.

"Why no, not as a rule," he answered. "The disease is not a painful one, and it dulls their sensibilities. Then most of them are Kanakas, and a Kanaka is always perfectly happy if he can live in idleness. Two-thirds of them would be genuinely sorry if they were cured and had to go away and earn their own living. They used to allow the husbands and wives of lepers to come with them and stay while they lived, and do you know, as soon as they died, these well men and women would marry other lepers, so as not to be sent away. No, they are not unhappy."

"But when they first come, isn't it dreadful for them?

"At the very first, they may feel badly, and when they are children they are frightened and lonely, but I comfort them all I can. I take them up in my arms—just little fellows, you know—and I put their heads on my shoulder, and talk to them, and they soon stop. I make friends with them, and they are very grateful for anything I do. When I came away, nine hundred joined in petitioning me to stay." He told this as a favor to be grateful for rather than as an honor to be proud of.

"Do they never commit suicide?" I asked, inwardly wondering what this priest would think of Dr. Wendte's theory.

"Almost never. Two have taken poison, but they had just come. Most of them are well content to live out their lives. They cook and take care of their cottages and do a little planting and digging, though the soil is very thin, and often many seeds must be put in the ground before one comes up. Then they have Bible classes and singing clubs and a hall to meet in. They are vastly better off than the lepers of Canton, for instance. Those have $3 a year—no more—given them to live on, and horrible little huts without a single window, with four or five people eating and sleeping in one room. Oh, it is vile, and nobody does anything for them. I would have stayed there and worked, but it would have injured my order."

"But why?" I asked in some wonder.

"It is the Chinese belief that leprosy is a curse from God," he said, with a tolerant smile for heathen superstitions. "If I should go among them, they would think I had committed crimes so horrible that this was the only way of expiation, and so I should have no influence, and my order would get a bad name. I have worked as a missionary in India, and I spent years with the American Indians." And Father Courardi shook his head, as though Molokai were far the lesser evil.

"Were there any whites among the lepers?" I asked presently when we had come back from an interesting digression on Protestant and Catholic missionaries.

"Yes, about fifteen, and two of them were women. One had been a nurse at the pest house here in San Francisco, and at first she utterly denied having it, but it was proved by running pins into her back. She would not feel them at all. Leprosy generally shows first in the eyebrows and lips and hands. A boy of ten will have the face of a man of seventy, when the disease has progressed."

"Are they nearly all Catholics?"

"There are Calvinists and Mormons, too. The Mormons keep their religion chiefly so that they may have two or three wives. In fact, the morals—well, we do what we can, but it is not much, and the Missionary Board does not care about that, though it is very strict about their keeping Sunday. It prohibits music and singing, and when one Sunday night a little boy was heard banging on a tin can—Oh, that was horrible! They could not be shocked enough. We Catholics do not believe that Sunday should be a day of long faces.

FATHER DAMIEN
FROM A VERY OLD PHOTOGRAPH

We tell our people they must go to mass once, and then they may go out into the fresh air and enjoy themselves all they can. With us it is a day of vacation."

I agreed with him so heartily that we again branched off into a theological byway, and then my time was up. My last question was whether he had no fear of catching the disease himself. His face was serenity itself as he answered:

"No, not at all. It is not contagious; one cannot tell how or why it comes. I cannot say I haven't it, for it does not show for five or six years, and so some day my hands——" he crooked his fingers strangely, as perhaps the lepers do, and looked down at them with tranquil interest; then he smiled at me, and there was something almost saintlike in his expression. "No, I am not afraid," he repeated.

J. W. T.

The use of hypnotic suggestion in dentistry is increasing. It is superior to gas and more effective than cocaine. A prominent dentist, Dr. Fillebrown, says: "I prophecy that in a few years every man who practices dentistry scientifically will have his practice controlled by the principle of hypnotic suggestion. It has been urged as an insuperable obstacle to the success of hypnotism in dental operation that the constant cutting in the most sensitive portion of our anatomy, the dentine, would arouse the patient, no matter how thoroughly hypnotized. This, however, is overcome by uninterrupted suggestion."

M. SELIGSON,
California Parlor, No. 1.

J. H. CUNNINGHAM,
Pacific Parlor, No. 10.

J. J. SWEENEY,
Golden Gate Parlor, No. 29.

F. C. GERDES,
Mission Parlor, No. 38.

H. M. LOCKE,
San Francisco Parlor, No. 49.

MELVILLE H. BAKER,
El Dorado Parlor, No. 52.

ROBERT WILSON,
Rincon Parlor, No. 72.

R. R. MARTIN,
Stanford Parlor, No. 76.

J. F. McGLYNN,
Yerba Buena Parlor, No. 84.

JULIUS GABRIEL,
Bay City Parlor, No. 104.

FINLAY COOK,
Niantic Parlor, No. 105.

D. E. MURDEN,
National Parlor, No. 118.

E. V. LONG,
Columbia Parlor, No. 121.

S. S. FOSTER,
Hesperian Parlor, No. 137.

ALEX DIJEAU,
Alcatraz Parlor, No. 145.

M. SQUIRES,
South San Francisco Parlor, No. 157.

A. H. PAPE,
Sequoia Parlor, No. 160.

JOHN J. FLYNN,
Precita Parlor, No. 187.

J. T. COSGROVE,
Olympus Parlor, No. 189.

WM. MOOSER, JR.,
Presidio Parlor, No. 194.

PRESIDENTS OF THE SAN FRANCISCO PARLORS, NATIVE SONS OF THE GOLDEN WEST

Photos by Marceau and Thors

LI HUNG CHANG AT HOME

Domiciled in An Adobe Palace Set in a Big Barracks.

The starring tour of Li Hung Chang is almost ended. After the plaudits of Europe have come the bravos of America. Both hemispheres have united in honoring this yellow-jacketed, peacock-feathered Celestial, who travels the world with a retinue of sixty and a coffin. It is a great reception he has had—we could have done nothing more for the Prince of Wales The sensation which Irving or Bernhardt evoke are insignificant beside the excitement which the Viceroy of Pi-chi-Li has inspired. Considering the honors, the salutes, the cheers, the presidential handshake, the national honors, who would ever imagine that a Geary law bars the Golden Gate against the Viceroy's countrymen, or that anti-Chinese oratory had ever been a feature of American politics.

The estimates of Li Hung Chang current in journalism are mere birds-eye views. The writers are historians whose deductions are made from historical events or a single interview. There is little in evidence about His Excellency from anyone who really knows the man. This is an advantage which ex-United States Consul George T. Bromley possesses. Among his friends he numbers the great Chinaman, and his knowledge is neither hearsay nor assumption, but the fruit of intercourse and observation. In fact, Mr. Bromley and the Viceroy were on such excellent terms when the former was stationed at Tientsin that he had the entree of the latter's Yamen at all times and was the recipient of many courtesies and concessions at his hands.

"I am inclined to think it was because of my years that Li Hung Chang and myself became so friendly," Mr. Bromley told the writer. "I remember my first official visit, presenting my credentials,—the Viceroy's face lighted up as he asked how old I was, and how pleased he became when I revealed the number of my winters. "Five years older than I," he commented through the interpreter. This calculation gave him infinite pleasure, and the fact of my seniority entitled my statements to great weight in his mind, for the Chinese are great respecters of old age, and hold sacred white hairs and ancient wisdom. As the world knows now, Li Hung Chang is a great inquisitor, never happy save when putting questions. He wished to know all the particulars of my life; if I were married; the degree of my income; my habits of living. I told him I was rich and a widower and expected to be a great-grandfather ere I returned to America. During the reception his servants passed round cups of champagne of which the Viceroy is very fond. He asked if I did not prefer it to all other drinks, and I assured him I esteemed it next to whisky, at which he was much surprised. He looked at me in amazement, whereupon I explained my theories of whisky and longevity at length, at which the Viceroy was properly impressed. I notice, indeed, that he has begun to use spirits, though it is a Chinese spirit and not comparable with the fruits of European stills."

The impression so current the world through of Li Hung Chang's great wealth is borne out by Mr. Bromley. He is enormously rich -being equal to those opportunities which have come his way. He owns warehouses, manufactories, steamers, telegraph lines, but his Yamen, or residence, is not comparable to the palaces of the old world.

"It is a disappointment, this Yamen of the Viceroy's," continued Mr. Bromley. "Imagine an immense one-storied adobe house, in the midst of a vast barracks, surrounded by high walls. Ten thousand troops at least are stationed there, armed, but the interior boasts none of that splendor we are accustomed to associate with wealth and standing. The audience chamber is a vast bare apartment provided with black ebony chairs and little tables around the walls such as you find in Chinese restaurants. A strange survival of a carpet covers the floor —it is the only carpet in the house. A life-size portrait of the Viceroy hangs behind his table. In the entourage he alone is splendid. Always accoutred in robes of silk or satin, sometimes covered with a sealskin cloak, he is ever an imposing figure, and is the more gorgeous because of the blankness of the background. Throughout the house the furnishing is equally sparse. Nor is their fine pottery or silverware to compensate. The truth is, the Chinese have no sense of the luxuries of living. Their houses are draughty and cold. The Chinese idea of heating is to have a big brass stove full of charcoal glowing in the room an inadequate substitute for our furnaces. However, after his experience in London and at the Waldorf, Li Hung Chang will remedy the deficiencies of his abode on his return. Indeed, his Yamen is rather a fortified place than a home. Within it he could stand a siege readily. It is situated outside the walls of Tientsin."

Mr. Bromley's administration affords interesting reminescences. Shortly after the young Emperor's accession to the throne, Prince Chun, his father, a Celestial aristocrat of great age and dignity, who had never in his life been out of Pekin, was made head of the army and navy. The latter role demanded that he should at least see a warship, and to Tientsin he came consigned to the Viceroy to inspect the navy. At first the great man decided not to receive the Consuls, but he changed his mind and invited them to an audience in the Treaty Temple within the city It was a gala day. The diplomats were in the uniform of their rank, and were admitted to the Vice Regal presence in orper of seniority. The British Consul, as doyen, had the first interview, saluted and was led out. Next came Mr. Bromley, who confronted Chun with all that suavity for which he is famous. The Prince bowed and the interpreter said how happy he was to meet the representative of America, whereupon Bromley, not to be outdone, defied etiquette with a pleasant little speech, expressing the good wishes of his Government towards the Prince, wishing him a pleasant journey and a safe home-coming. The innovation created something like consternation, but as the interpreter Chinesed it for Chun the eyes of that dignitary brightened and his face lightened up. Li Hung Chang proceeded then to question Bromley for the edification of the Prince, asked him his age and other particulars, and then Chun rather embarrassed our Consul by stating he hoped the President of the United States would protect the Chinese in his jurisdiction from harm, but fortunately, this was only etiquette, he having heard nothing of the Wyoming riots which were then creating consternation in the seaports.

"Subsequently," Mr. Bromley said, "I heard through Li Hung Chang that Prince Chun alluded to me during the voyage he made in the warship to Port Arthur, and said my speech had given him more confidence than aught that had happened since he left Pekin. But I had many marks of favor from the Viceroy. An American warship was disabled near Shanghai. Her captain could find no one capable of repairing her in Chinese waters. I went to Li Hung Chang and told him the difficulty. He straightway sent the vessel to the Royal arsenal up the river, an unheard of concession, for which I was very grateful. On another occasion he came bravely to the rescue of certain missionaries who had suffered in a revolt in one of the southern districts of the Viceroy's province. He telegraphed at once his orders for the punishment of the ring-leader. But these are only a few memories

They are pleasant memories -on both sides. When Mr. Bromley celebrated, with what pomp and circumstance the Bohemian Club well knows, his seventy-fifth birthday, there came across land and sea a message of congratulation from Li Hung Chang. Quite a thoughtful reminder of the Chinese statesman, it was, couched in the terms of graceful courtesy which Celestial etiquette prescribes. Mr. Bromley had hoped to meet his old friend ere he returned to China, and, indeed, arranged to go to Vancouver to meet him. The trip is a weary one, however, and the connections are ill-timed, requiring early-morning reconnaissances which the ex-Consul does not feel equal to undertaking.

THE NATIVE SONS' MONUMENT
DESIGNED BY DOUGLAS TILDEN AND WILLIS POLK

THE NATIVE SONS' CELEBRATION AT STOCKTON

The celebration of the Native Sons at Stockton afforded a series of brilliant spectacles and evoked much enthusiasm. The annual gatherings of this organization have the virtue of excelling each other. The last is always more brilliant than its predecessor, a characteristic they have in common with the Bohemian Club Jinks. The weather on Admission Day proved delightful; there was a clear sky, and the sun, though generous, was not insistent. The town was gay with banners, flags, arches and an abundance of national coloring,—the usual style of decorative effect, enhanced by the summer raiment of the citizens and citizenesses, who were resplendent in straw, duck and muslin. The parade itself was longer than the great one at Sacramento last year; Governor Budd assisted with his staff; there were three policemen and innumerable bicyclists. In fact, it was a very picturesque pageant, and unrolled itself like an Oriental army. Nearly every man carried a Japanese umbrella, some of them immense structures of colored paper, others little mushrooms of parasols in gay shades. There was kaleidoscopic variety exhibited in the uniforms of the Sons. Eldorado Parlor was accompanied by a contingent of Native Daughters in white muslin and white shoes. The members wore white caps. Another Parlor affected black clothes, relieved by white hats and vests. The Daughters of Estrella Parlor walked in the form of a star; they were bare-headed and sheltered themselves under little parasols of white silk. A Sacramento contingent was glorious in blue coats with brass outtons and white duck trousers. The Sons of Amador county turned out together with a float burdened with mammoth squashes, grains, minerals and metals. Natives of Tuolumne county paraded in red shirts with pick-axes and spades, and were accompanied by a cortege of Native Daughters in white duck and tam o'shanters, mounted on burros. Certain of the Parlors marched in double rank, with a troop of Native Daughters between their lines. Indeed, for the nrst time the Native Daughters were a distinct and prominent factor in the procession, and they were certainly one of its most interesting features.

After the pageant there was a regatta in Stockton channel, which, with its assemblage of boats and river steamers, looked like the Mississippi river in anti-railroad days. In the evening the entertainment concluded with a water parade, which was really a beautiful spectacle, and noteworthy as the finest detail of the celebration. Scores of launches, house-boats, and crafts of all kinds were decorated with lanterns. They flitted hither and thither over the smooth surface of the lake, whose banks were festooned with lanterns. Rockets and calcium lights set the sky ablaze. There were pyrotechnics in innumerable variety—glowing, burning, fizzing, sparkling. Altogether every one was very happy. The Native Sons were thoroughly entertained and satisfied, which was all that was required. Among other important results of the celebration was the exhibition of Stockton's progress. There is no question but that the capital of San Joaquin county has enterprise and energy, and is determined to figure as the leading city of the interior. Of the Native Son order itself, its members are so much before the public that they speak for themselves. It is an important and growing organization and has an esprit de corps which no other institution in the State boasts. It is made up of young California—a vigorous and enterprising growth of youth liable to be heard from in many a contingency and connection. I reproduce elsewhere the beautiful monument commemorative of the discovery of gold which Douglas Tilden and Willis Polk have designed to the order of James D. Phelan, who proposes to erect it on the corner of Mason and Market streets.

TENNIS AT DEL MONTE

There was some excellent tennis at Del Monte on Admission Day. Quite a crowd of society people and tennis experts were in attendance. The new champions are the brothers Whitney, who were victorious after a hard fought contest with Hardy and Driscoll, which reminded the spectators of the gay days of old when Tobin and McGavin won for the California Club years ago. It was really an exciting match. At first the play was very close and honors were even. Then Hardy and Driscoll braced up, and by the clever smashing of the latter won the first set. The second and third were won by the Whitneys, who played a high lobbing game. Hardy and Driscoll captured the fourth, but the fifth and decisive game was won by the Whitney brothers. The victory entitles the winners to the handsome loving cups offered for the all-comers. The two silver challenge cups go to them by the default of Hardy and Hardy, last year's champions. Some excellent tennis was shown in the Consolation Tournament, which was won by Gage and Nicholson from Upham and Eckart, who had previously shown excellent form, but were evidently too fatigued at the last to do themselves justice. Miss Bee Hooper was awarded the ladies' championship by default, no adversary having offered to dispute her pre-eminence. This seems a pity, as the lady players used to be the best features of the autumn meeting. This victory confirms Miss Hooper in the possession of the beautiful trophy which the Tennis Association offered. It had to be won three times. Otherwise, the gathering at Del Monte seems to have gone some way toward reviving the waning interest in tennis. Some excellent playing has been seen, and it is probable the fight for the championship next season will prove as exciting as the old-time battles in which Taylor disputed honors with Hubbard.

Cecil Rhodes has gained new glory in the Matabele campaign. He went among the savages unarmed and promised the chiefs that they should have no further cause for complaint of ill usage from the native police. Then Secumbo, the leading chief, laid his gun and assegai before Rhodes as a declaration of peace. Rhodes, flushed with success, declared the scene one to make life worth living.

STOCKTON FROM THE WATERFRONT

THE SCENE OF THE NATIVE SONS' ADMISSION DAY CELEBRATION, SEPTEMBER, 1895

By Courtesy of Mr. C. W. Hopkins

THE ANIMALS' HOME

Dogs That Have Had Their Day and Some Others.

On the corner of Sixteenth and Harrison streets stands an ugly, dark-red building, a combination Bastile and morgue, for the canine population of the town. It is labelled with delicate euphuism, "Animal's Home," but every dog in town knows it's just the public pound. Here eventually come all the little rag-a-muffin curs, whose world offers no papers to sell, and for whom no boys' clubs are organized; the lean, mangy wrecks of dissipation and hardship, with not even spirit enough left to yap at the pound man; the tramps and beggars and riff-raff of back alleys, and the forlorn offspring of unloving mothers and unknown fathers. Among these there is always a runaway or two from the Western Addition,—a prodigal fox-terrier who wanted to see life, or a portly clubman pug who has lost his tag, and whose tail comes mournfully out of curl as he finds himself looking at life through wire netting instead of plate glass.

Though "Animal's Home" may be a somewhat misleading name, it is best to abolish the old bugbear word "pound," as well as the brutality that went with it. The Home is distinctly humane in its treatment of the waifs that are brought in by the wagons. The dogs are kept in wire cages, grouped together with regard to size and temper, and are fed regularly and decently. Cleanliness is impossible, but the floor is frequently hosed off and an attempt made to mitigate inevitable odors. After forty-eight hours, the dogs are disposed of with the least possible suffering. A network cage is wheeled on a truck to the entrance of a proscribed cage, running along a small track, and into this the dogs are driven. Then it is wheeled back into an air-tight box, connected by rubber hose with gas pipes. The gas is instantly turned on, and in two minutes the victims of an imperfect civilization are asphyxiated. In the top of the box is a window, through which the whole performance may be watched. It is not at all dreadful. As the dogs smell the gas there is some suspicious sniffing, then perhaps a whine or two before they sink quietly down, with no struggle, no slightest indication of pain. For less than a minute when the lost is identified and leaps out, a free doggie, to fling himself upon his master and rush around him in frantic circles of delight; then there rises a tumult of congratulation, anguish and rage, that nearly splits the roof, and the more currish and utterly unlikely to be claimed a dog is, the more noise he makes.

AN UNUSUAL GUEST

There are always about a hundred dogs at the Home, to say nothing of stray horses and occasionally an astonished goat. The benefit of having these kept out of the streets is incalculable, and a well-run institution, like the Animal's Home, is a blessing to the city. In hotter climates this system saves hundreds of lives. As the Cincinnati Enquirer vividly puts it:

> These are the days the little dog
> Goes wild all in a minute. He > Spins like a top
> Till comes the cop
> And shoots the whole vicinity.

"I'M WORTH MORE THAN THREE DOLLARS!"

they continue to breathe, though quite unconscious, and then even that stops, and their little tragedy is finished. As for the horses, they are taken away to the boneyard, where a speedy ax transforms them into material for mucilage and fertilization. The men who conduct this are not the scowling brutes dreamed of in childhood, but are young and cheerful, and apparently good-hearted. They even keep a dog or two of their own, to say nothing of a monkey. There are eight attendants in all, counting the drivers and catchers, and each wears the star of the police.

It is interesting to see an anxious master come to redeem his dog, three dollars in his reluctant hand. The instant a strange face enters the room, there is a mad commotion. Every canine thinks it is someone for him, and shouts "Here I am!" at the top of his lungs. But that is absolutely nothing to the noise which follows

FOG IN THE CANYON.

BY GELETT BURGESS

Banked in a serried drift beside the sea
  Rolling, wind-harried in a snowy spray,
Majestic and mysterious, swirling free,
  The ghostly flood is massing, cold and grey;
  Inland it marches, and at close of day,
Pearl-white and opal, sunset-hued with rose,
  It storms the ridge, and then in brave array
The fog's dumb army up the canyon goes.

And now the forest whispers, tree to tree—
  Their grim defense is marshalled for the fray;
Pine, fir and redwood, standing cap-a-pie.
  Down the long spurs and on the hilltops sway.
  And now the misty vanguards, wild and gay
Ride down the breeze—and now their squadrons close,
  And sweeping like an ocean on its prey,
The fog's dumb army up the canyon goes.

The trembling bushes cower in the lee;
  O'er the mad rout, the ragged smoke-wreaths play,
And scurrying cloudlets desperately flee.
  On the low crests, the waving banners s'ay,
  Now lost, now conquering, striving to delay
The riotous deluge—yet in vain oppose—
  Height after height is carried, and away
The fog's dumb army up the canyon goes.

All night the battle wages, weird and fey,
  And gallant woods dispute their phantom foes—
But conquering, overwhelming with dismay—
  The fog's dumb army up the canon goes.

The Lark.

Marcus Daly backed his colt Ogden for the Futurity to the extent of $35,000, and won $100,000. No one suspected the speed of the horse, though he had displayed remarkable speed in previous matches.

THE ANIMALS' HOME

Birmingham, England, has been making a successful experiment with the Gothenburg system. In September, 1901, the corporation opened a public house in Elan village within its limits, in which temperance drinks as well as pure liquors were sold, the profits going to support a reading room and recreation hall in another building. It had to compete with an old-established public house, but gained rapidly on it. The official in charge, a teetotaler, is convinced, after a year's experience, "that the interests of temperance are far better served by providing wholesome liquor under proper regulations than by either leaving the traffic to be conducted in the ordinary way, or in attempting to prohibit it altogether."

ABOUT PERSONAGES

Count Ito, called the Bismarck of Japan, is a man of blood and iron in the conduct of internal affairs, but in his conduct of foreign affairs belongs to the old school which believes in vacillation and deception.

Mrs. Maybrick is seriously ill in the hospital connected with the prison where she is confined. Her condition is so serious that the authorities yesterday suspended the rules and permitted her to receive a visit from her mother.

General Gallieni, appointed by the French Government dictator of Madagascar, is a plucky soldier and intrepid explorer. He proved his prowess in Senegal and on the Upper Nile, and after all others had failed, succeeded in restoring order in Tonquin.

Secretary Chamberlain, who is pronounced the ablest debator in the House of Commons, has immeasurably bettered his position before the English nation. He was distrusted for his infernal cleverness and smartness, but is now trusted and regarded as the champion of England against the German Emperor.

Jean Richepin, the French poet, resembles a chieftain of the cave-dwellers, with his fierce face and long, shaggy locks. He is wonderfully versatile, having been poet, musician, actor, athlete and dramatist. When he wrote "Nana Sahib" for Bernhardt, he played the title role himself.

Since the death of his mother, Lady Wilde, the health of Convict Oscar Wilde has broken down. There appears to have been deep affection between them. The Home Secretary recently decided that there should be no remission of the sentence. That decision is now under revision, and Wilde's release is probable about October.

Czar Nicholas II bears his honors sadly. At his arrival in Vienna recently it was noted that he looked pallid, with an indescribably tired face. He was very small and weak beside his tall, haughtily beautiful wife, as she alighted from the train, dressed in a robe of azure satin, heavily embroidered with silver, her hat, plumes, mantle, shoes and parasol of the same color, but without gloves.

"I'M AFRAID I'M LOST!"

When in London Whistler gets himself up in a very long black coat like those which the little men in Noah's arks wear, a French top hat with the brim standing straight out, a long bamboo wand in his hand, his hair made up in curls, all of which are dyed black with the exception of one which remains quite white, and on grand occasions is tied up with a small ribbon. In the street he has generally a crowd of small boys in pursuit.

Madame Adam, the brilliant editor of the "Nouvelle Revue," was born in a small manufacturing town on the frontier. Her father was a freethinker, while her grandmother, the only other relative she had, was a devout Catholic. As the young girl grew up, her father endeavored to force his views upon her, and the grandmother endeavored to checkmate the father. Asked to choose between atheism and Rome, the young girl declared herself an agnostic, and has so remained ever since.

Sir Edward Monson, who has succeeded Lord Dufferin as British Ambassador in Paris, is tall, spare of figure, with an expressive face and a long patriarchal beard. He was Lord Lyon's secretary at Washington during Lincoln's administration, and has much of that quietude and repose of manner which distinguished his former chief, who was regarded by the French as the beau ideal of an ambassador. He is a brother of Lord Oxenbridge, was educated at Eton and has won a fellowship at Oxford; he has served as Consul-General at Pesth, as Minister to the Argentine Republic, to Denmark, Belgium and Austria, and comes to Paris direct from Vienna.

The old members of the firm of Harper Brothers in New York are dying fast. Mr. Philip Harper died last March, and now Mr. Joseph Wesley Harper, the senior of the firm, has followed him. Mr. Joseph Harper practically retired from business a few years ago. "Wesley" was the name by which the late publisher went among his brothers. On one occasion, a much-respected but dry old friend of the family called on James Harper, and after a time asked him how he and his brothers distributed the work between them. "John," Mr. Harper said, good-humoredly, "attends to the finances; Wesley to the correspondence; Fletcher to the bargaining with authors and others and —don't you tell anybody," he said, drawing his chair still closer and lowering the tone of his voice—"I entertain the bores."

THINGS AND PEOPLE

The senatorial situation presents phases unsuspected of the multitude conceding the Legislature to a coalition of Populists and Democrats. The question is who will go to Washington representing the combination. In the Democracy there is no lack of candidates—the most prominent being W. W. Foote and Congressman Maguire. Thomas V. Cator is the choice of the Populists. The latter, an adroit politician, is so handling the fight that it need surprise no one if he wins votes enough to elect himself Senator Perkins' successor. Taking advantage of the prevailing condition, and assisted by Senator Stephen M. White's left hand (his business member) he is negotiating for Populist Assemblymen in exchange for Democratic Senators. In districts in which the Senators hold over, the wily Cator concedes Superior Judgeships to the Democrats in return for the endorsement of his Legislative candidates. Having the Populists well in hand, it is easy to ensure the execution of such bargains, especially as Senator White, from whose prestige the selection of a second Democrat might detract, and who is to have the benefit of Cator's support two years hence, is tacitly aiding the project. I am sure the Dr. Jekyll front of the Senator will resent the suggestion of such self-seeking, but his Mr. Hyde back will keep on attending to just such affairs after the fashion so often alluded to in these columns. Indeed, the Senator, who likes his left hand to be as white as a lady's, never lets it know what its fellow is at. It would be red as a beet from blushing. Strange as it may appear, this admirably arranged scheme of Cator's has also the aid of the "Ole Bill" contingent, which, according to rule, should be at the back of Foote's pretensions. The pulling down of Van, candidate across the bay, was not accomplished without concessions, and, it is said, in return the assistance of the contingent was pledged to the support of certain Populist Assemblymen in Democratic precincts.

The character of Thomas V. Cator is so well understood in this State that it should be unnecessary to comment on his record. He is no fit representative of California, or any other State, in the United States Senate. He is not a man of principle or rectitude, and there is no dependance to be placed on his character or pledge. He is smart and clever, but without sincerity, and his ascendancy among the Populists is unerring testimony of that party's lack of intelligence. One certainty exists,—there will be Democrats in the Legislature who will vote for anyone rather than for Cator, and the probable consequence is that no Senator will be elected. That is a condition which would harmonize admirably with the aspirations of Senator White, whose prestige as the sole representative of California would be considerable. In the event of Bryan's election, he would without doubt be Autocrat of Patronage.

* *

We are a queer community. To achieve public distinction with us, a young man must do something reprehensible or ridiculous, something that will warrant the caricaturist in adorning his subject with short legs and a long nose, and give the "funny man" an opportunity to write columns of cheap wit. The simplest and most certain method of obtaining obscurity is to do something really worthy of public recognition. The young man particularly is condemned the moment he steps out of mediocrity and begins to display a real talent. Frederick Yates, had he remained in San Francisco, would still have been an obscure artist. Fortunately he took his brush and easel to London, and awoke to fame in a brief period. We sometimes wonder if this is merely an idiosyncrasy of human nature, or whether it is purely a local disease, a something peculiar to us alone. There was decided this week in the Superior Court a case in which some seven thousand defendants were interested, and which involved one-half of the Mission, valued at some sixty million dollars. On behalf of the property-owners, the cause was argued in the main by Mr. Franklin K. Lane, a young lawyer of marked ability. He came out victorious, but, more than that, the court in sustaining his position went so far in its opinion as to compliment Mr. Lane upon the manner in which he had handled and argued the case: To capture the nickels of the seven thousand defendants, one of our great dailies pretended to publish the decision in full, but exercised great care in expurgating every reference made by the judge to the young attorney. It was a plain, open and deliberate garbling of the opinion. If Mr. Lane had been guilty of some indiscretion, the same journal would have given him columns of notice calculated to destroy his character; while, on the other hand, it would go to great pains to deny him a few lines of well merited commendation when spoken by a Court.

The fact is that only the vicious or degenerate appear to be worthy of attention by most of our daily papers. Let a man do some commendable piece of public service and he is altogether without notice, but let him turn himself into a clown and he gets columns. Let any agitator, a Kearney or an O'Donnell, harangue mobs of idlers and he is treated with much greater consideration than some scholar, who, after years of study, develops a theory which makes for man's social or physical improvement. Our courts suffer from this same treatment. The hundreds of cases decided against the corporations pass without comment, but the occasional few they win are made to appear the result of corruption. We often wonder why it seems impossible in the United States to get our best citizens to accept positions of public trust. The reason is apparent—good men get no credit for what they do, while the unscrupulous politician, if he smoothly stands in with the newspapers, escapes all censure. If some foreign fakir turns up in San Francisco and talks of great investments, he can command the space of the press, but let a local merchant or capitalist attempt to promote some enterprise of real merit and he will be compelled to pay handsomely for every line that his scheme is given. This is well understood. Not long ago a local banker was consulted as to the best means of enlisting capital for a home enterprise and he gave this advice: "Get a good-looking Englishman or German to come here with the scheme; have him put up at the Palace; and in a week every newspaper in town will be booming him. It would cost me ten thousand to get the same space." Only foreign things and things discreditable to the city seem worthy of notice in the local press—this is hard to say, but it is too true.

Ever since Jimmy Swinnerton has been in journalism the strangest and most romantic tales have been afloat about his past. Doubtless some enemy, some deadly rival, circulated those weird yarns, which conferred on the clever young artist so checkered a career. The keynote of most of the series was resentment and parental oppression. The stories go that Jimmy as a small boy ran away from home, and after enjoying a brief experience as a gypsy, joined Sells' circus and officiated for some months as assistant to the chief acrobat. Tiring of that limited though aerial sphere, he apprenticed himself to the clown, who discharged him out of jealousy. Cast once again upon the world the youthful Swinnerton found a place in a minstrel troupe and was billed through Arizona and Southern California as the "Boy Endman." His love of variety again came to the fore, however, so, retiring from minstrelsy, he became a jockey. Just what degree of success the future caricaturist gained in the sporting world the tale sayeth not, but we next find Jimmy in the art school studying the gentle craft of line and curve, settled down to hard work at a profession in which he has since distinguished himself. During the years of his labor here Swinnerton has been pestered with these malicious libels, but has borne up proudly under the affliction of their implications, not troubling himself even to stamp their untruth. He has steadfastly preserved an unflinching mien and a straight upper-lip in the face of these intrigues of his enemies, who never guessed that under that scarlet waistcoat there smouldered a fierce rage and a tormenting grief burning deeper because repressed. It must be admitted that Mr. Swinnerton's silence under libel has been misinterpreted, as the majority of his friends have believed the stories true. However, to the rescue of the caricaturist's reputation, his father, in ex-Judge Swinnerton of Stockton, has at length come, and in the following letter places the model youth of his gifted and excellent son in its proper light before the world. His statement should end once and for all the circulation of these libels.

THE NAT V. SONS BUILDING ON MASON STREET

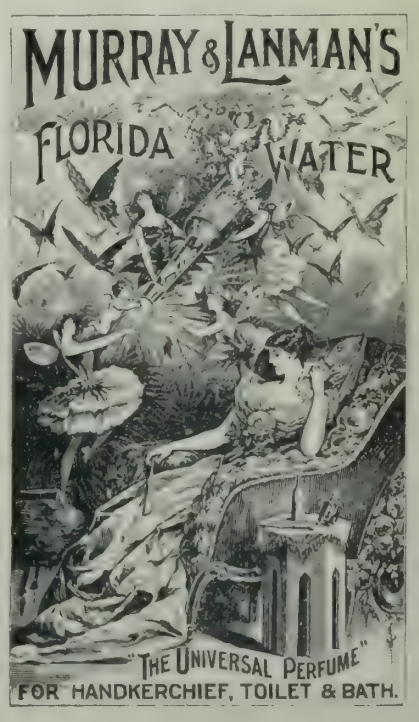
Editor Wave: I notice in your issue of last Saturday a statement that Jimmy Swinnerton was once a jocky—before he became a negro minstrel. As the father of the young man I do not feel at all flattered by these Munchausen stories, whatever he may think about it. Will you kindly state for me that Jimmy Swinnerton never was a negro minstrel and never was a jocky. I desire to stop these flights of imagination now lest my son should before long figure as a reformed burglar and the long-lost Charlie Ross. He never ran away from home. I never opposed his becoming an artist. To the contrary, he was a most obedient boy as good as any father could ask, and I assisted him to develop the talents—which I discovered at a very early stage in his life—by every means in my power. Respectfully, J. G. SWINNERTON.

It is told me on good authority that since the nomination of Bryan some three million in gold has been drawn from the San Francisco savings banks and locked up in Safe Deposit boxes. This enormous sum is being held in most instances with the expectation of an appreciation in the value of the yellow metal. In others the owners fear the consequence of a free silver era, and are providing against such contingencies as the prophesied exodus of gold. However excellent for the safe deposits, the condition is by no means pleasant for the savings banks, whose natural function is suspended in the interim. It is fortunate, however, that the long sustained era of depression has reduced all business institutions to a purely living basis. The accentuated stringency of these latter months had evidently been foreseen and prepared against, and I am inclined to believe the business community will weather it without serious impairment or disaster. The election of McKinley will really mean a revival of enterprise in California. I believe the accumulated gold in the Safe Deposits will next year find its way into paths of legitimate development of which we will all experience the benefit.

Thus far, Gus Spreckels has had no financial reason to repent of the bargain which relieved his father of the cares of the Hawaiian Commercial Company. The deal has proved most advantageous in spite of malign consequences predicted at the time it was consummated. The fates, it is true, have fought for the younger sons. Most opportune has the Cuban civil war been for them. The price of sugar has gone up in consequence and the destruction of the fertile plantations of that unhappy island have opened in New York an excellent market for the product of Honolulu. In addition, however, they have accomplished some clever financiering. The $900,000 debt of the company has been refunded—less $200,000 paid off,—and at 5 per cent instead of the former 7½ per cent. The running expenses of the plantations, which averaged $50,000 per month, have been materially reduced, and, indeed, the business is in a first-rate condition. I am told the company produced some twelve thousand tons of sugar this season, which will be marketed at $80 per ton, leaving, as may be deduced, a splendid margin of profit to gladden the hearts of owners of the much-abused, much-manipulated Hawaiian Commercial.

In these dull, depressed days it is good to hear of corporations which are not complaining of reduced profits or a limited field. It is a safe rule that the affluence of individuals reflects the prosperity of a community, a point of view which may be unpopular in the "Examiner" office, but is therefore the more deserving of credence by lovers of truth. Among the commercial combinations which have safely weathered the perils that so often wreck associated enterprises, is the Alaska Packers' Association, the company which controls the output of the salmon canneries. There is an excellent market in Europe for this product and no difficulty is experienced in placing all of it that is put up. An immense amount of capital is utilized in the industry and excellent dividends are paid the various stockholders—a pleasing change from the era when the various concerns were cutting at one another's prices and rates were below a profitable margin.

There is a strong impression that San Francisco, at least, may be saved for the Republican party. There is little hope for the rest of the State. The farmers are all for free silver, and the State Central Committee has no money to educate them differently. The McKinley propaganda must be made with books and papers and cartoons, and in order to circulate these there must be coin available, and Mark Hanna is using his gold in the East. The character of the Bryan vote might easily be gathered at the Steve White meeting the other night. In the audience one saw neither German nor Hebrew faces. The laboring classes were there en bloc; south of Market street had the floor and the galleries, but the assemblage differed materially from other Democratic audiences I have seen in the hall. The leaven of intelligence and ability was absent.



IN SOCIETY

Entertainments and Happenings In Town and Out.

By degrees, so gradual as to be almost imperceptible, so cautious as to pass without comment—and yet sure as the footsteps of time—has the evolution of the debutante been. Several seasons ago, when the college girl was as yet in her infancy, the woman suffragist an unknown quantity, and matrimony the god to whom all bent the knee, the experienced matron would hasten to plunge her daughter into the social vortex, with all the unlovely angels of extreme youth and its accompanying lack of manner still upon them.

At that time the bud was at best merely a promise, and viewed in that light received scant attention. The reign of the debutante had not even reached an inner-consciousness. It was not even an ambition. The beauty of the day was the society maiden with the hardily acquired confidence of three seasons. The trials of the matron of that period, happily past, were untold and of a most unenviable description, for the success of her blushing bud depended almost entirely on her own popularity. Forced to entertain endlessly, to use her powers of fascination in order to obtain partners for her gaping, giggling girls; verily her road was as hard as that of the most guilty transgressor.

Everything comes to her who waits, however, and with the ever increasing age of the debutante the glory of conquest has come to the now merry-hearted matron. The debutante of to-day is, as a rule, bidding farewell to her teens, and the promise of seventeen has waxed to the perfection of twenty; the angles of yesterday are delicately rounded curves, the blusnes have developed into a lovely bloom, the giggle into a deliciously modulated laugh—the bud emerges not seeking but commanding success, desiring merely fresh fields to conquer. And the end is not yet. When we hear of maidens who apparently have reached the zenith of their girlhood's glory seeking fresh charm in travel or change of scene, etc., and the fateful year of debutantage is put off season after season, we begin to wonder at what age the twentieth century damsel will begin her social siege.

After the fatigues of the summer campaign, September finds society dormant, resting and restoring itself, preparatory to bursting into life and action at the beginning of October. Seeking the services of the dressmaker, considering the question, an ever fateful one, of clothes, contemplating the needful rejuvenation of the toilet of yester-year, contriving curiosities out of the remnants of past successes, haunting the milliners, studying the fashion papers, discussing the feasibility of getting up fresh fads and foibles for the approaching season—that is how society occupies itself—and that is why no parties get into the papers.

Of the maidens whose anticipated debut has been deferred, several intend spending the season in New York and Washington. Among these are Miss Ethel Keeney and Miss Leontine Blakeman, who, under the chaperonage of Mrs. Blakeman, purpose visiting the various Eastern cities. Miss Mamie Polhemus, another of the popular Terpsichoreans, contemplates spending the winter at school in the East, and Miss Flora Dean has already left for Vassar.

The seductions of the circus have cajoled some of the more enthusiastic into getting up parties, which are more informal than the theatre party, yet do not partake of the soupcon of wickedness which lends attractiveness to the music-hall spree. During the past week the Spreckels, Hagers, Harveys and a half dozen others spent jolly evenings in this fashion. As to the etiquette of a circus party, it differs somewhat from the theatre affair. It is the rule to go in the cars and smart clothes are absolutely debarred. Then, the after-supper must be of the primitive order -the oyster for the nonce courts oblivion, while the succulent frankfurter and amber ale are evoked to regale the palate of the patricians. The circus is the Land of Canaan to the youngster, and hitherto undreamed of hordes of children are whirled from the quiet seclusion of their nursing to see the seals, the dogs, the clown and the divers delights of childhood's heart. Charming little ones they are, too, and their pleasure and shouts of rapture are delightful even to the blase ear of the matron trammeled with the trials of society.

There is quite a gathering of San Franciscans in Carlsbad at present. The Crocker-Green contingent, comprising Mrs. Green, Miss Julia Crocker and Miss Florence Ives, is there. The Dodges, Mr. and Mrs. Morton Mitchell, Mrs. Woolworth, Miss Helen Woolworth, Mr. and Mrs. Maurice Casey and Miss Katherine Dillon. It appears that after the fatiguing pleasures of travel, a fortnight at Carlsbad with the accompanying pine-needle baths and strengthening waters, recuperates the weary traveler and gives her fresh ardor to begin anew.

The wedding of Miss Jennie Catherwood and Dr. Grinnell is to take place a whole month sooner than was originally intended. Dr. Grinnell is an impatient suitor, and, yielding to his persistent importunities, Miss Catherwood has set the date for October 14th. The ceremony will be celebrated at Madrone Villa, Napa, and is to be in every way a most elaborate affair. There are to be six bridesmaids—Miss Young, Miss Zane, Miss Loughborough, Miss Rutherford, Miss Bee Hooper and Miss Helen Smith. Miss Ada Keys will be maid of honor and Master Hoyt and little Miss Ethel Hastings the train bearers. The groom's brother, Wm. Milne Grinnell, is to be best man, and Geo. Loughborough, Harry Pringle, Callaghan Byrne, Walter Dean, Jack Barnes and Seranus Hastings will officiate as ushers. The details of the affair are to be picturesque in the extreme. It is to be a blue and white wedding, blue being a delicate compliment to the Doctor, who is a great Yale man. The gowns of the bride's attendants are to be an artistic mingling of these harmonious colors, and as far as possible the effect will be carried out in the decorations. The ceremony is to be performed at 10 a. m., in the large drawing-room. This apartment is 35x40, and by the time the decorators get through with it its fine proportions will be displayed to admirable advantage. The bridal breakfast, weather permitting, is to be served at the canyon, a most picturesque and charming spot. Miss Catherwood is at present at the Villa, where an army of dressmakers and milliners are wrestling with the trousseau problem. Mrs. Darling, the fair bride's mother, is recuperating at Paso Robles, where she is rapidly regaining her usual good health, and will remain at the resort until the wedding.

Two carloads of furniture have already arrived from New York for the Whittier mansion. The last two consignments are expected daily. The decorations of this residence are really magnificent. It is said to have one of the finest and most artistic interiors in town.

Miss Rutherford has, previous to her visit to Del Monte, been entertaining lavishly in a quiet way. The young lady has presided at an unusual number of luncheons and informal afternoon teas, at which her guests were all young girls. Mrs. Crocker and Miss Rutherford expect to remain at Del Monte for some few weeks, and they propose a series of elegant luncheons and dinners before their return to New York.

Verily it was a pretty sight, the bridesmaids in their apple-green frocks covered with organdie and trimmed with love-knots of lace; the bride in her gorgeous costume of white satin and velours with Duchesse lace, and waist covered with tiny pleats of crepe lisse, and quaint panniers over the hips. It was an uncommonly springlike wedding for September, and Miss Maud Arques made a handsome bride, while her maidens, who comprised some of the most effective-looking girls of San Jose, lent the affair a spectacular effect. The ceremony, which was celebrated at the Hotel Vendome, was exceedingly simple. Merely the relatives of the young people were bidden to the breakfast. Miss Lizzie Carroll, who was to have been one of the bridesmaids, was detained in the Hawaiian Islands, owing to the delay occasioned by the Gaelic's accident in Japan. Dr. and Mrs. Frasse have gone to New York for their honeymoon, and will visit the groom's relatives in the East. They anticipate returning about November by way of New Orleans.

San Rafael has never proved so fascinating as at present. The paper chases, the tennis, etc., seem to have more than doubled its usual attractiveness, and the summer pleasure-seekers appear to find it difficult to tear themselves away from its charms. The Currys announce their intention of remaining there indefinitely, and neither the Thomas Spreckels nor the Webster Jones have as yet any idea of returning to town. Perhaps the knowledge that the Hotel Rafael will remain open during the winter may contribute in some degree to this unprecedented success.

The San Rafael Hunt Club has determined that its autumnal races will be memorable, both from the point of view of the sportsman and the society matron. The Hotel Rafael is offering special terms and coaching parties have been arranged. The railroad company has made a flag station near the track, which is situated some distance beyond San Rafael on the San Francisco and North Pacific line. Rudolph Spreckels is the president of the club; the indefatigable Mr. James Archibald and Mr. J. J. Crooks officiate as vice presidents; Baron von Schroder, Frank Johnson, Consul Artsimovitch, George Newhall, Walter Hobart and half a dozen more are deeply interested, and have promised to participate.

In Berkeley there have been several charming entertainments given in honor of Mr. and Mrs. Fred Yates. Perhaps the most delightful was the Clinton Day dinner last week to fourteen. On Friday, Mrs. Bonnell gave a reception in their honor, and on Saturday Mrs. Rosenstein gives a musicale.

Mrs. Joseph Austin chaperoned a coaching party of young ladies in Golden Gate Park one day last week, and closed the day with a dainty luncheon.

The Original Swain's Bakery, 213 Sutter St., stands without a rival and has stood the test for years. The most delicious meals are served by gentlemanly attendants, and the management takes pride in having everything orderly. It is just the place for business men and ladies out shopping to lunch.

Chew Adams' Pepsin Tutti-Frutti. It is sovereign for indigestion and agreeable to the taste

THE THEATRES

Steve Brodie and the Circus Contrasted.

There is a great deal of wet powder in "The Wife." It hangs fire. Something seems always about to happen, yet nothing ever does. We are given every reason to expect battle, murder and sudden death, for Frawley hisses through his teeth, "I will kill you!" at the villain, and Lackaye, the long-suffering husband, makes an appointment with his wife's calumniator—and keeps it—but nothing comes of either little episode except a falsehood and considerable dreary small talk.

Though the entire cast was tolerable, Hope Ross carried off the honors. She undoubtedly has caught the knack of playing foolish, sweet sixteen. Harry Clarke's "Major Putnam" would have been good if it had not borne such a striking resemblance to all the other "old fellows this clever young man has created. Tyrone Power filled a small part well, and Frawley, Leslie and Blanche Bates were just as usual. Lansing Rowan was again cast for the decollete female villain, and took an extreme view of the case.

O Tempora! O Mores! To what are we coming when across the stage of one of our most respectable theatres there struts a man who would still be washing beer mugs in a Bowery saloon if he had not made himself illustrious by dropping from the Brooklyn Bridge?

Think of it—to be educated for the stage by falling off bridges and keeping saloons, and, consider, oh ye patrons of the California, what an exalted opinion its managers must have of our public to thrust this Thing, this "On the Bowery," down its throat. One turns with eagerness from a show like this to the honest attractions of a circus, particularly one which can boast such trained animals as Sells & Forepaugh's and such a cowboy. Why, I had rather see that cowboy rider "Fly" once around the ring than the whole lot of "toughs," "bums" (I quote from the programme), "bouncers," and "swells" at the California.

Of course the greatest part of our enjoyment of a circus is sympathetic and reminiscent; we take our children or our little kinsmen with us and sit watching their shining faces, remembering dimly our own first circus—clouded now with years. Often we are disappointed, for many little people don't seem to enjoy it as we did, particularly if they have lived always in towns. For to really get the most out of a circus you must be a small child from the big plains. You must never have even seen a theatre, a "Punch and Judy" show, a tinsel crown, the glittering streets of a big city or anything which smacks of the world of shams. You must have passed your short life on a Western ranch, far from sight and sound of all civilization save that of your own home and the rough shanties which cover your distant neighbors. Your sight must have become habituated to faded blue jean overalls and sad-colored sunbonnets against a background of endless dun plains—plains which throb and shimmer under the mirage of long, hot mid-summer days and lie still and brown in the fall. You must have known only simple pleasures and have risen early, oh, so early, and wandered restlessly about in the cool gray morning until the time came when you could at least begin to begin to get ready for the long drive over level, baking plains to the circus—the long looked for, eagerly awaited, wonderful circus.

PEG WOFFINGTON.

DRAMATIC NOTES

"The Prisoner of Zenda" will be put on at the Baldwin for a fortnight's engagement, commencing Monday, October 5th.

"On the Bowery" commences the second and last week of its successful engagement at the California Theatre next Monday night.

The ladies attending the Saturday matinee of "The Wife," at the Columbia Theatre, will be presented with a photograph of Mr. Wilton Lackaye.

The Frawley Company will remain only three more weeks at the Columbia Theatre, after which the Australian Company will play "Trilby" for a fortnight.

The last performance of "Madame Sans Gene" will be given on Saturday evening, September 19th. The demand for seats for these last performances has been exceptionally heavy, and the audience will no doubt exceed in size those of the past week.

The date for the testimonial concert tendered to Miss Rosa Adler, prior to her departure for Paris, has been fixed for Wednesday evening, October 7th, at Native Sons' Hall. Miss Adler will be assisted by the leading professional talent of the city.

All of the elaborate scenery and stage effects for "Humanity," "The Cotton King," "The New South" and the other plays that Mr. Wm. A. Brady will produce at the Columbia Theatre, have arrived and are stored at one of the large warehouses in this city.

All doubt as to the appearance of Alexander Salvini this season has been set at rest by the announcement of Manager Wilkinson that the favorite young romantic actor will open his season in the latter part of this month. Mr. Salvini's illness was at one time quite serious, but he recovered most rapidly, and by the time the season opens he will be himself again.

"A Mathematical Maze," by Walter Craven, is the Frawley Company's new play to succeed "The Wife," at the Columbia Theatre Monday night next. It is a very amusing play and has been capitally staged. The cast will include all of the leading members of the Frawley Company, as well as two of the original members of the cast, Mr. Harry Corson Clarke, who was a tremendous success as the misused and meek professor, and Miss Madge Carr Cook as one of the charming housekeepers.

Robertson's great military comedy, "Ours," will be seen at the Alcazar Theatre, commencing on Monday night next. It is a comedy of dialogue and characterization rather than of situation, and while light, is funny in the extreme. An element of the spectacular is introduced in the shape of a parade, in which are horses, soldiers and a full military band, requiring the presence of about one hundred people. J. B. Polk will assume the character of Prince Perovsky; John T. Sullivan that of Hugh Chalcot and Frank Doane that of Sergeant Jones. Mrs. F. M. Bates will be seen as Lady Shendryn and Amy Lee as Mary Netley.

The list of new attractions at the Orpheum next week promises an evening of excellent amusement. First, there is Lew Hawkins, who is credited with being one of the funniest of monologists. Abdulliah does one of the most daring high-wire acts ever seen in a theatre. Mlle. Alma does a clever and beautiful act on an electric globe. Bellman and Moore have been retained for one week only. Filson and Errol, the quarreling couple, have a new phase of home life to present. Ferguson and Mack, the funny knockabout comedians, remain; so does Marguerite Ferguson, who is conceded to be the greatest contortionist ever seen at the Orpheum. Terry and Elmer will have new dances to introduce.

The Tivoli offers a veritable treat next week—the famous opera of "Hansel and Gretel," which has given to Humperdinck both fame and fortune. It is a setting of the dear old fairy story, and it abounds in charming melodies and delicious orchestration. Miss May Tunison and Miss Ella Prankard play Hansel and Gretel, Fraulein Mathilde Wille enacts the wicked witch who tries to transform the two children into gingerbread, Miss Katherine Krieg is "Sandman," the Sleep Fairy, and William H. West and Miss Zophiel Worth are Peter and Gertrude, the parents of the children. The opera has been carefully rehearsed; the orchestra has been enlarged for the occasion, and a first-class performance throughout is promised. There is in preparation at this house a supplementary season of grand opera, the initial production of which will be "Aida."

Dr. C. W. Decker, Dentist, 806 Market Street

When you are selecting a wedding or a birthday present, go to S. & G. Gump's, 113 Geary street. They have a magnificent variety, just arrived from Europe, from which to select.

Hotel St. Nicholas, corner Market, Hayes, Larkin and Ninth. American or European plan. Ira R. and James H. Doolittle.

The Maison Riche serves the best lunch in the city for 75 cents.

For health and strength: Damiana Bitters.

DR. H. G. YOUNG—Bridges and teeth without plates a specialty. 1841 Polk street.

Occidental Restaurant, 337 Bush street. Headquarters for tourists. Separate rooms for families. Meals a la carte. Lunch 50c. Best French Dinner in the city, 75c. Joseph Munier, proprietor.

Adams' Tutti-Frutti Chewing Gum for Indigestion

Few families drink such tea as you will have if you follow directions with Schilling's Best; and your grocer will pay you back your money, if you don't like it.

At grocers', in packages.

Hartwell, Mitchell & Willis

Successors to DODGE BROS.

FINE STATIONERY

Engraved Visiting Cards
Wedding Cards, etc.

225 POST STREET NEAR STOCKTON

The Maison Riche serves an elegant dinner at popular prices.

A GREAT ENGLISH JURIST

Lord Selborne Tells of Lawyers With a Pull — Interesting Memoirs

The most eminent English lawyer of the last generation was Roundell Palmer, Lord Selborne, whose memoirs have just been published by Macmillan, New York. In these two volumes there is much that will interest lawyer and layman, and very little that can be removed to the columns of a review. His success was due not only to wealth, engaging personality and genius, but to early hard work from his boyhood, together with an excellent family connection, which took care to place his abilities in the best possible light. His father was a fine old rector who put the boy at Latin at five years of age and Greek at seven. By the time he was nine years of age he was fairly well grounded in Virgil and Horace, and not unpracticed in verse and prose translation, and had begun the Greek Testament. Pope's Homer and Dryden's Virgil were familiar to him, and before he went to school he had made some progress in the original of Homer, and had read through the Prometheus of Æschylus. Neither was he ignorant of Shakespeare, Milton and some other English classics.

It cannot truly be said that the Palmers were interesting people. They were a serious, commonplace, well-to-do family of the upper middle class, painfully correct, and by consequence desperately uninteresting. If only one of the several sons had been ploughed in an examination or had got a little into debt it would have been an unspeakable relief. But all the brothers were prigs and all the aunts and sisters were patterns of parsonic womanhood. At thirteen young Roundell Palmer went to the great school of Winchester, preparatory to his university course. Perhaps it may be of interest to those whose memories do not run back seventy-five years to know the course of education a boy received at an English academy three quarters of a century ago, and this Lord Selborne gives as the ordinary curriculum for an ordinary boy, not the extra course of a genius.

The synoptic arrangement of the Greek text of the four Gospels, was read regularly, and sometimes, in Lent, would be read Grotius or some other Latin writer on the evidences of the Christian religion. The greatest pains was bestowed upon Homer, Virgil and Horace, the whole of whose works (with a few omissions of offensive matter in the case of Horace) were read over twice or ottener. Next to these came Cicero, Livy and Juvenal, to which were added in the upper part of the school Pindar and some of the tragedies of Æschylus, Sophocles, and Euripides, the Greek orators, and parts of the Greek historians. Of Ovid and the other elegiac poets very little was read. On the whole, it is evident that a boy, on leaving Winchester school sixty-five years ago, would have been much more conversant with the Greek and Latin classics than would a graduate of an American university. A peculiar and remarkable exercise in those days was called "standing up." This consisted of learning by heart, and repeating to the second master, as many lines of some Latin or Greek poet as each boy chose; construing, also, such parts of them as might be required. The best performances of this kind were rewarded by prizes. Extraordinary were some of the exhibitions of mnemonic power, especially when the age of the boys is taken into account. Roundell Palmer could remember more than one instance of a boy taking up the whole Æneid and passing successfully through every test of his memory or his intelligence which the second master thought fit to apply. This was the performance which had been thought so wonderful in the philosopher Leibnitz. The most surprising proof of memory given at Winchester school in Palmer's time was that afforded by Henry Butler, a son of the Earl of Carrick. He took up and passed well in the whole of the Iliad.

After graduating, Roundell Palmer, while engaging in preparing for the practise of his profession, became a leader writer for the "Times," of which he says: "I then acquired some experience of the practice, not without moral danger, of writing hastily, smartly, and perhaps censoriously, about matters of which I had no adequate knowledge." But Palmer pere perceived the error of this way before his son and wrote in the religious phraseology he affected, advising that he "give up an engagement so fascinating and intrusive, which may involve you in politics before the time, and in such a way as to make you less able to render service to the cause of good government, virtue and religion hereafter, should it please God ever to require your services as a public man in the regular way of your calling, which alone I think we should consider His."

The rapidity of Roundell Palmer's rise at the Chancery bar may seem miraculous to those who do not realize the advantages of family influence. He was called in 1837; in 1839 he was briefed by the great firm of Freshfields and made a hit in a legal argument before Baron Alderson. Indeed, he had the good fortune to make so favorable an impression on that judge that the latter privately handed down to Mr. James Freshfield, who was present in court, a few words on a slip of paper commending the part which Mr. Palmer had taken in the argument. It should be remembered, however, that the Freshfield's were then, as now, solicitors to the Bank of England, of which Roundell Palmer's uncle, Honshy Palmer, was governor. So the start at the bar of the great jurist was due to family interest. It is not astonishing that after this he obtained many another brief from that influential firm. Indeed, eight years later he was returned for Parliament in the Conservative interest, and in 1849 he was made a Queen's Counsel.

In politics Roundell Palmer could never divest himself from his legal manner. He had none of the arts which tell in Parliament or the platform. He had "a thin, bloodless face, voice slightly disfigured, with a lisp and continually rising into an unpleasant falsetto, limited and angular action and severe simplicity of style."

It may have been supposed that the "lawyer with a pull" was purely an American product, but Lord Selborne would have us believe—and his word is not to be doubted—that at least one of the most eminent judges of his day was the creature of the most prominent members of the bar. This was Sir Lancelot Shadwell, who occupied the most prominent position of Master of the Rolls. It seemed to be a necessity of his nature to be governed by somebody. So remarkable was that weakness in him that whenever the principal leader of the bar in his court happened to be elsewhere he surrendered himself to the nearest competitor until the leader came back and resumed the command. We are assured that the tyranny exercised by successive leaders over Shadwell would be inconceivable to those who did not witness it. First it was Sugden, then Knight Bruce, and subsequently Richard Bethel, who in the exercise of this distinction was more audacious and less ceremonious than either of his predecessors. Whenever things seemed to be going against him (as was liable occasionally to happen, when he was compelled by other engagements to leave cases for a time, in the hands of his juniors) he was not careful to preserve so much even as an appearance of respect toward the judge; which Knight Bruce had always done. And all this under the appointive system in respectable and dignified old England.

Sir Lancelot Shadwell was able in his way, too, but decidedly eccentric. A story was current of his answer to somebody who suggested that a judge must feel very anxious when he had to decide questions involving property of large value. "Not at all," he was reported to have said, "one or other of them must have it; what does it signify which?" It was in reference probably to this story that a humorist wrote his epitaph while living: "Here lies Sir Lancelot Shadwell, sometime Vice-Chancellor of England; what does it signify?"

There is much in these volumes of the proper attitude of a lawyer to his client. Lord Selborne was once asked: "How can a lawyer argue for a client whom he thinks wrong?" He tells us that to him this was never a practical difficulty. He recognizes, of course, that the duty of a lawyer under such circumstances has its limits. He should always, and then more than ever, be on his guard against offering to make himself witness as well as advocate, and against corroborating his arguments by any statement or insinuation of personal belief. On the other hand, it is the right, even of those who are most in the wrong, to have the benefit of a fair and public trial according to law, and to have their evidence properly laid before judge and jury, and to have the arguments, which can honestly be advanced on their side, skillfully and fairly stated. This it is the advocate's part to do. If he were to refuse to undertake any case of which, upon the materials before him, he might have formed an unfavorable opinion, he would not be a minister of justice, but the reverse. Lord Selborne recalls that it has happened to him, not very seldom either, that the outcome of a case has been contrary to his first impression of it; that he has, nevertheless, been satisfied that justice was done. Touching another question often mooted, Lord Selborne thinks it may be disputable whether the advocate gains or suffers loss, upon the whole, by the habit of looking round and dispassionately considering all that can be said on all sides of all cases. It is certain that the reputation of too much facility and flexibility in this respect tells against him in Parliament.

Fall Styles Neckwear and Hosiery at John W. Carmany's, 25 Kearny Street

LITERARY NOTES

Among the most interesting of the new magazines is the "Parisian," devoted to the reproduction in English of contemporaneous articles from leading French and other Continental periodicals. It is an excellent idea this, for we all know the "Figaro" and the various reviews of the French capital are full of clever stories and dialogues which can often be Englished without abridgment. For those who are not facile at French there is available in the magazine no little enjoyment and considerable fun. The last issue is a bright number, and contains among other articles a dialogue by Gaston Leroux and a witty and wicked little story by Collule Mendes, called "Platonic Lovers."

The MS. and illustrations of Mr. Du Maurier's new story, "The Martian," are now in the hands of the Harpers. The novel will run through ten numbers of their magazine. The story is more like 'Peter Ibbetson' than 'Trilby,' in that its main interest is centred in a single character. Like the earlier tales, it has a core of psychologic mystery, and its title was suggested by a recent talk about possible inhabitants of Mars. But Mr. Du Maurier does not lay his scene in Mars; Antwerp, Paris and London afford his characters their widest range. No trustworthy information as to details of the story's plot can yet be obtained.

Max Nordau announces that American literature has nothing better than Bret Harte. "He is a Columbus—he discovered a new world in fiction. He invented his own formula. He said to himself, 'I have the gift of telling a good story. Now how shall I best apply that gift? I shall apply it to telling the story of men placed amid absolutely new surroundings and subjected to entirely new influences and experiences.' And so Bret Harte discovered the California of fiction. He was the first discoverer."

Paul Verlaine's posthumous work, "Invectives," created a sensation in literary circles. Verlaine alive, had few friends and many enemies jealous of his talent; Verlaine dead, a scrimmage, who should cry out loudest who should be his bosom friend. The work has put an end to all this. We find satrical attacks against well-known editors, journalists, artists, theatrical managers, etc.; it seems as if he wished to bring to memory that proverb "Pas d'argent, pas de Suisse" is but too true.

The most talked of book which has appeared in Paris for several years is "Aphrodite," a curious study of antique morals by Pierre Louys. Within a short time of publication twenty-five editions were exhausted. The book purports to be a faithful picture of manners in the time of Alexandria, and the heroine, named in honor of the Goddess of Love, is a famous courtesan. Though admirably written, the book is untranslatable.

Two young women at Oxford have won special distinction in history this year. They are Miss A. M. Allen and Miss Lucy Papworth. They are placed in the "first class." If Cambridge or Oxford granted degrees to women, Miss Allen would be bachelor of arts of both, for she has won honors at both universities. Miss Papworth matriculated at the University of London.

The third volume of Henry Rochefort's memoirs describes how he and some companions escaped from the penal settlements in New Caledonia. It is fascinating reading.

Its Purity A Surety Of Its Excellence

Vina Brandy

Accept No Substitute None So Good None So Pure

Vina Distillery Co.

819 Market St., S. F.

MENNEN'S BORATED TALCUM

TOILET POWDER

Approved by Highest Medical Authorities as a Perfect Sanitary Toilet Preparation

For infants and adults

Delightful after shaving

Positively relieves Prickley Heat, Nettle Rash, Chafed Skin, Sunburn, etc. Removes Blotches, Pimples; makes the skin smooth and healthy.

Take No Substitutes. Sold by druggists or mailed for 25 cts. FREE

SAMPLE MAILED (Name this paper)

GERHARD MENNEN CO., Newark, N. J.

HEALTHFUL! INVIGORATING!

CRECIENTE

Imported Sea Salt for Bathing

SOLD BY DRUGGISTS AND GROCERS

ITO, SOTOMI & CO.

Successors to Japan Curio Trading Co.

Japanese .·. Art .·. Goods

116 SUTTER STREET

Wedding Invitations are properly engraved and in correct form, at ROBERTSON'S

FRANK K. LANE G. WHITFIELD LANE

LANE & LANE

Attorneys and Counselors

Room 202

Crocker Building, San Francisco

Union Iron Works

BUILDERS ELECTRICAL MACHINERY

AGENTS FOR STORAGE BATTERY

THE PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU

510 MONTGOMERY ST., S. F.,

Reads all papers on the Pacific Coast, and supplies clippings on all topics, business and personal.

Ziska Institute : 1606 Van Ness Ave.

School for Girls. English, French, German.

Thirtieth year begins August 3d.

MME. B. ZISKA, A.M. Principal.

Campaign Literature!

EVERBODY should study the great question. BOOKS of all kinds . .

Hartwell, Mitchell & Willis

Successors to Dodge Bros.

Formerly Beach's. 107 Montgomery Street

Gladness Comes

With a better understanding of the transient nature of the many physical ills which vanish before proper efforts—gentle efforts—pleasant efforts—rightly directed. There is comfort in the knowledge that so many forms of sickness are not due to any actual disease, but simply to a constipated condition of the system, which the pleasant family laxative, Syrup of Figs, promptly removes. That is why it is the only remedy with millions of families, and is everywhere esteemed so highly by all who value good health. Its beneficial effects are due to the fact, that it is the one remedy which promotes internal cleanliness, without debilitating the organs on which it acts. It is therefore all important, in order to get its beneficial effects, to note when you purchase, that you have the genuine article, which is manufactured by the California Fig Syrup Co. only, and sold by all reputable druggists.

If in the enjoyment of good health, and the system is regular, then laxatives or other remedies are not needed. If afflicted with any actual disease, one may be commended to the most skillful physicians, but if in need of a laxative, then one should have the best, and with the well-informed everywhere, Syrup of Figs stands highest and is most largely used and gives most general satisfaction.

J. F. Cutter

EXTRA

Old Bourbon

has been a staple family and medicinal whiskey for a quarter-century

E. MARTIN

—AND—

CO.

411 MARKET ST.

SAN FRANCISCO

BAJA CALIFORNIA

DAMIANA BITTERS

"Damiana" is a powerful aphrodisiac and special tonic for the sexual and urinary organs of both sexes and a great remedy for diseases of the kidneys and b'adder. For weak nerves these bitters are invaluable, and leading physicians recommend them as the greatest invigorator known. Long-winded testimonials are not necessary. "Damiana" Bitters are known on their merits. (Send for Circular)

NABER, ALFS & BRUNE, Agents
323-325 Market St., S. F.

REMOVAL

Rountrees English Chocolate, Kohlers Swiss Chocolates, and all brands of Foreign and Eastern Confectionery, imported by . . . .

W. L. GREENBAUM,

of 205 SUTTER ST., will, after December 1st, be found in large and commodious quarters at

128 POST ST., Bohemian Club Bldg.

S. F. CARPET BEATING AND RENOVATING WORKS

D. MACKINTOSH & CO.
Successors to S. S. Ferguson & Co.

Renovating, Laying and Refitting Carpets a Specialty
Telephone South 36 23 and 25 10th St., S. F.

SCOTT & McCORD

HAY AND GRAIN MERCHANTS

OFFICE, 615 SIXTH ST.

HER POINT OF VIEW

The papers are raising a loud hue and cry on the subject of women's waists. The wasp and the hourglass have been gradually disappearing during the last few years, but now, it is declared, the corset itself is to be cast aside. Grecian draperies and Mother Hubbards a la Milo are to be turned out by Worth and Doucet, and the feminine diaphragm is to expand to its full limit at every breath. And Paris—frivolous, tightly-girdled Paris—is said to be at the bottom of it all. Personally, I don't believe it for a minute, but if it should be true—if Paris has elected to have her women boneless—we shall have a hard fight to beat the movement. Let us boldly face the danger, gird up our strings and fight for our figures as we would for our homes. A great many people would interrupt me right here, if I were not protected by the stern "Private" on my office door, to explain all the dreadful evils that result from tight lacing. Of course they do. Tight lacing is as injurious as dress reform, and almost as ugly. I see no beauty in a figure that looks as if a breath could never get past the belt, nor do I approve of the kid-covered steel bands that make for roundness. But what has all this to do with it? I was talking of the use of corsets, not the abuse. Madmoiselle de Milo could perhaps carry off a Greek gown, though her sculptor very wisely did not try to make her. Most of us look like lumpy, overgrown children when we try it. Could anything be more ungraceful than the absurd little wad of material known as a Chinese woman? The solution evidently does not lie there. We cannot look well without a certain amount of trimness, and, as the Mother of Six once said to me, "It never hurt any woman yet to have a decent figure." Corsets keep everything ship-shape as nothing else can, and worn wisely, are an unmitigated blessing. What else can keep perfect the connection of shirt-waist and skirt, carry our burdens, and support us in our hour of weariness? To me the young and laced is just as unnattractive as the old and stayed; but wear a corset the size of your waist as it is, not as you'd like it to be, and all true American women will stand by you till Paris returns to her senses and her whalebones.

* * *

Is it all smoke and no—cigarette? Or has the little Turkish roll of tobacco come to stay in feminine fingers? When jewelers like Tiffany import decorated cigarette holders specially designed for women, and when the London tea rooms set aside for them special smoking corners, it looks as though the little weed meant business. Of course, the demi-monde always smokes, and the Bohemian class, and the women who want to be thought a tiny bit fast, but now the habit seems to have crept up into the holy of holies. One of the princesses of the royal blood is said to be an enthusiastic devotee of the cigarette, and many charming women, utterly unallied to the would-be-naughty class, thoroughly enjoy a comfortable little smoke after dinner. At an author's club dinner, where there were present such women as Frances Hodgson Burnett, Sir Walter Besant's wife, Miss Brook, author of "The Superfluous Woman," Elizabeth Robbins, Lady Lidsay and Blanche Willis Howard, a number are said to have joined in the after-dinner smoke. Though literary, these women do not represent Bohemia, and their move is a significant one. Gladstone is reported to have said that half the women in London smoke, adding that he preferred the half that did not. On the other hand, some private citizen is quoted as saying that he had found his wife twice as companionable since he had taught her to join him in a cigarette. It would be interesting to get the feminine opinion of a community on the subject. The first impulse of one who has never indulged is to declare it unfeminine, unwomanly, unladylike, and not to be tolerated for a second—a comfortable decision that nevertheless betrays a certain narrowness of view. How can we lose sight of the fact that some of our most everyday customs and actions would once have been condemned in terms far more bitter? When, in a certain bold church long ago, the custom of seating the men on one side and the women on the other was given up, and the two sexes were allowed to share the same pew, it was pronounced a scandal and a disgrace, and fearful consequences were predicted. In the face of instances like that, it is impossible to utterly condemn a new custom, for we don't want posterity to laugh at us, and, for our own sake we would not be Philistines. Moreover is only fair to remember that the women of Spain have smoked for generations, without losing any womanly charm in the eyes of their people. When done to show off, or to shock people, smoking is intolerable, like everything else done in that spirit. It cannot be forced, and if a community is opposed to it, it shows a great lack of breeding to puff smoke in its face. But if it is generally sanctioned, and done quietly and unostentatiously, the cigarette may prove a good and innocent addition to our list of pleasant things.

IN THE CURRENT

Contemporaneous with the announcement that Paris decides to relax the feminine waist measurement comes the intelligence that London society men propose to revive the old-fashioned habit of wearing corsets. For the first time in years, arbiters of correct dress have come out openly to defend and advise it. A writer in the London "Telegraph" the other day even went so far as to predict that men's corsets would soon be common both in England and America. Indeed, it is reported that nine hundred corsets have been sold this season by a single London firm. But this is exceedingly doubtful. One thing that would tend to contradict the statement is that the fall and winter styles of English clothes this year are looser and more baggy than ever. No one would be the wiser if men wore corsets beneath them or not. The accusation that many American men wear corsets is denied by the fashionable tailors. They admit, however, that the accurate manner in which clothes are fitted in this country may seem to give a basis for the assertion. The fact is that more attention is paid to the fitting of clothes here than in London. It is easy, an expert states, to produce the effect, if a man will only leave off suspenders, wearing instead a belt and tight underclothing.

* * *

The American leg, we are told, is much more shapely and more admirably moulded than the lower limb of her English sister. This pleasing information was gathered by a "World" reporter from the hosiery department of a New York dry goods store. It seems that stockings for the American trade have to be made according to particular measurements, as the British hosiery is too small round the calves and too long in the feet for the underpinning of our countrywomen. At the knees and ankles the English and American leg is about the same size, but between—what a difference! The average American girl will wear a stocking that measures nine inches around the ankle and fourteen inches around the calf. The English girl will have about the same ankle measurement, but will be only about eleven or twelve inches around the calf. For ready-made stockings it is necessary to send to Germany or France, the average leg of those countries having more rotundity than those of England, and therefore approaching the American model.

* * *

Not in limbs alone is the average American figure superior to the English product. An eminent painter applied to for information solaces our patriotic souls with his assurance that the models in New York excel those to be found anywhere in Europe. That is because New York is a cosmopolitan city and we get women of all nationallties here for models, the majority of them being foreign born. For all that, our very prettiest models and those nearest approaching the ideal are American girls. English girls are long-limbed and very effective in draperies and for classical subjects. Italian girls are short and stocky, but have fine head poses, due to generations of maternal peasant ancestors carrying baskets on their heads, as is the custom of the country. As a rule, though, Italian girls are too high-waisted and out of proportion around the hips. French girls are full of life and vivacity, and suggest to the painter an idea of spirit that is often very essential. A good model must not be too feminine. She should not have a small waist, broad hips, fat calves, and a big bust. Of course a girl who has the habit of tight lacing is entirely unfit to be a model, so far as the proportions of her body are concerned. It is a good rule in selecting models to avoid extremes of all kinds.

* * *

Although the guests at the Whitney-Vanderbilt wedding were so few in number that they were almost lost in the vastness of the salon and banqueting hall of The Breakers, yet those who were present are not likely to forget the grandeur as well as picturesqueness of the scene. Gilding, painting, and richness of ornamentation contrasted with the delicate loveliness of field and hothouse vines and flowers, which fell in cascades from railings and columns, and shed their fragrance in every corner and vacant spot in the rooms. In the midst of all this wealth of beauty the young bride, in her rich habiliments, stood to utter her marriage vows, while her father, whose illness had been a grief to all who know him, placed her hand in that of her chosen husband. It was a solemn and touching service, and tears were in the eyes of all the family circle, who alone were bidden to witness it. A few cheerful remarks from Bishop Potter and Mr. Depew, however, soon dissipated the momentary sadness, and the bride, with her cluster of bridesmaids, moved into the adjoining room, where a small reception took place. The bridesmaids were all pretty and attractive girls, most exquisitely gowned, and all daughters of fathers so rich that it is their misfortune to have their prospective millions appended to their names whenever they are mentioned. They are all far too clever, good, and pretty to have their value thus estimated by their bank accounts, or to be classed in the odious category of future heiresses.

* * *

Among other fads, Paris has just discovered that there exists near the Jardin des Plantes a matrimonial agency for dogs, and ladies of high degree are rushing there with their tou-tous to seek proper alliances. Here dogs of special breeds can seek out those of the same kind to mate with, and there is connected with the establishment an agency for the supply of nursing dogs to bring up those puppies who may unfortunately have lost their mothers. Photographs of the marriageable dogs are kept on hand for the inspection of matrons. The agency was founded some time ago by a kind-hearted lady who left a large sum of money for its maintenance, and it is now in a very flourishing condition, although it has only just become a popular fad.

* * *

One of the most injurious and disgraceful of new fashions is the tea cigarette, made of the unbroken leaf of green tea, slightly moistened. The feeling of a tea cigarette in the mouth is peculiar. The taste is not so disagreeable as might be supposed, but the effect on the tyro is a sense of thickening in the head and a disposition to take hold of something or sit down. If the beginner quits them, that settles it, he will not try tea cigarettes again. If, however, the smoker sits down and tries a second cigarette, inhaling it deeply, then the thickening feeling passes and is succeeded by one of intense exhilaration. The nerves are stimulated until the smoker feels like flying, skirt dancing, or doing something else entirely out of the common way. This stage lasts as long as the smoke continues, which is until the reaction of the stomach sets in. Words cannot describe the final effects of the tea cigarette. The agony of the opium fiend is a shadow to that of the nauseated victim of the tea cigarette. It will be hours before food can be looked at, yet the first step towards a cure is a cup of tea.

* * *

A South American lady is quoted as saying that some time ago, in the absence of water, of which there was a great dearth at the time, she washed her face with some of the juice of a watermelon. The result was so soothing that she repeatedly washed her face in this manner, and her astonishment was great, a few days later, on seeing that there was not a freckle left on her previously be-freckled face.

Two on a Tandem.

When all the tiny wheeling stars
Their cycle lamps have lit,
And, bending o'er their handle bars,
On roads celestial flit,

I trundle out my tandem fleet,
With Daisy at my side;
We mount, and then our flying feet
Propel us far and wide.

Along the smooth, secluded pike
We take our evening run,
Two souls with but a single bike,
Two hearts that scorch as one.

—Truth.

Daily Income of State Rulers.—The income of the Emperor of Russia for one day is £5,000; Sultan of Turkey, £3,600; Emperor of Austria, £2,000; German Emperor, £1,600; King of Italy, £1,300; Queen Victoria, £1,300; King of Belgium, £1,300; President of France, £1,000 President of the United States, £25.

FINEST ON THE MARKET

BEWARE OF IMITATIONS

EEL RIVER CREAMERY

SEE THAT THIS STAMP IS ON END OF SQUARE

A FINE GRAIN DELICIOUS FLAVORED BUTTER

If you appreciate a DELICACY
Ask your Dealer for the BRAND

BALDWIN THEATRE — AL HAYMAN AND CO. INCORP'D PROPS

Commencing Monday, Sept. 14th

First and Last Week of Sardou's Great Napoleonic Play

Madame Sans Gene

With Kathryn Kidder in the title role

Its most beautiful and complete production seen here in years. Last performance Saturday, September 19th

Next Attraction—THE PRISONER OF ZENDA

CALIFORNIA THEATRE — AL HAYMAN & CO. INCORP'D PROPS

Next Week—Second and Last

The Vivid and Picturesque Production of New York East Side Life

On the Bowery!

With the World-famous Bridge-Jumper

STEVE BRODIE

And an Excellent Company

Columbia Theatre

BELASCO & MAYER, GOTTLOB & CO. LESSEES AND MANAGERS

Another Genuine Laugh Provoker, the Very Funniest of Them All

Monday Evening, September 14th

First production by the FRAWLEY COMPANY of the Excruciatingly Funny Comedy

A MATRIMONIAL MAZE

Bright, Witty, Original, and Strictly American in Scenes

Tivoli Opera House

MRS. ERNESTINE KRELING : : Proprietor and Manager

Commencing Sunday, Sept. 13th

Initial Presentation of Humperdinck's Fairy Opera in Three Acts

Hansel and Gretel

Great Cast! Beautiful Scenery! Characteristic Dresses! Enlarged Symphony Orchestra!

In preparation, Supplementary Season of Grand Opera, Verdi's Magnificent Work, AIDA

Popular Prices : : : 25 and 50 Cents

Orpheum

O'FARRELL STREET, BETWEEN STOCKTON AND POWELL

Week Commencing Monday, Sept. 14

A BILL REPLETE WITH NOVELTIES

ABDULLAH

The Most Daring High Wire Performer in the World

Lew Hawkins, Negro Minstrel; Mlle. Alma, Queen of the Electric Globe; Bellman & Moore, Ferguson & Mack, Filson & Error, Marguerite Ferguson, Terry & Elmer, Vassar Quartette and others

Reserved seats 75c; balcony 25c; box seats and opera chairs 50c. Matinees Wednesday, Saturday, Sunday

Alcazar Theatre

O'FARRELL STREET, BETWEEN STOCKTON AND POWELL

BELASCO, DOANE & JORDAN, Lessees and Mgrs.

Week commencing Monday, September 14th, Robertson's Great Military Comedy

"OURS"

in which will be seen a parade—horses, soldiers and a full military band. One hundred people on the stage

"The twins as is the twinsey."

Prices, 15c, 25c, 35c and 50c. Matinees Saturday and Sunday: 15c, 25c and 35c.

Telephone Black 991. Secure seats in advance

BONESTELL & CO.

Dealers in PAPER

Fine Coated Papers a Specialty

401-403 SANSOME ST.,
San Francisco, Cal.

GEO. GOODMAN

Patentee and Manufacturer of Artificial Stone

Schillinger's Patent — In all its branches

SIDE WALK and GARDEN WALK A Specialty

Office, 307 MONTGOMERY ST. Nevada Block, SAN FRANCISCO

BAY STATE OYSTER HOUSE AND GRILL ROOM

15 Stockton Street

Oysters served in all styles. Orders for Theatre Parties given special attention

M. M. ADLER, Prop.

RE-TOLD TALES

A Narrow Escape.

An excited crowd had gathered around the the young man and there were cries of "Lynch him!" "String him up!" etc.

"What's the matter?" asked the tenderfoot on the outskirts of the crowd anxiously.

"Goin' to be a lynchin', I reckon," replied the old gray-whiskered man, who was intently watching the proceedings over the heads of the crowd. "Yes, that's the game," he added, after a minute or two. "Some of the boys has got hold of a young feller that has strayed from the straight an' narrer path, an' he's jest about to see the error of his ways."

The tenderfot stood on tiptoe, and his eyes seemed to stick out even with the tip of his nose, but he could see nothing but a determined-looking youth standing against a tree with his arms tied behind him and his feet tied together.

"Has he killed some one?" asked the tenderfoot at last.

"I reckon he has," replied the old man. "It looks like Prairie Pete from here, an' if it is he's got not less'n five notches on the handle of his gun."

"And in consequence I suppose he's been condemned to death," said the tenderfoot.

"What's that?" demanded the old man. "D'ye think he's goin' to be jerked up for killin' a few men?"

"Why, of course. Isn't he——"

"Not on your bowie! We don't hang men for that out here. We've got too much respect for a live man to shove him after a dead one."

"Then what has this fellow done?' asked the tenderfoot.

"He stole a bicycle," replied the old man, slowly and impressively.

Just then there was a movement near the center of the crowd, and the next minute the young man had been released and some one in the crowd was calling for three cheers for Prairie Pete.

The tenderfoot looked at the old man inquiringly.

"All a mistake," explained the latter, as he caught a few words coming from the center of the crowd. "Prairie Pete has squared hisself an' proved it wasn't no bicycle; nor yet a motocycle. It was nothin' but a hoss."—Chicago Evening Post.

He Was Inexperienced.

Some reporters were waiting for news after midnight recently of the condition of Cornelius Vanderbilt. It is no fun to kick your heels against the pavement until 3 or 4 o'clock in the morning, and the reporters grew restless. "This reminds me," said one, reflectively, "of the death watch on the old commodore. Things were quite different then from what they are now. When the old commodore was just taken ill he used to send for us every day and have us up in his room and tell us all about himself. He used to read the papers and he noticed that a great deal of space was devoted to him.

"'Well, boys,' he said one morning, 'I hope I have a little longer for your sakes. You seem to be making a lot of space out of me.'

"Finally, though, when he became too ill to see us, we had to camp out as we are doing now, and it soon became tedious. We used to camp about twenty feet from the front of the house in which the old gentleman lay, and sometimes you could hear what was said in the sick-room.

"Among us was a certain gentleman who is now the respected father of a family. He was rather impatient. It was late at night. He had a voice in him like a bull.

"'Oh, why don't he die?' he suddenly exclaimed, petulantly.

"We thought no more of this remark until a few minutes later, when a trim servant girl came out of the house. She looked us over and watched us for a few moments. Then Doc said something and she came over to him and handed him a note. He opened it, wondering what it could be. On the paper was a score or so of words written in the old commodore's well-known scrawl. They read:

"'I trust you will pardon me, but as this is the first time I have ever died I am a little inexperienced and don't exactly know how to go about it. If you will bear with me a little while, however, I will try to do my best.'

"The old gentleman had heard the pious remark and it had been too much for his grim sense of humor."—New York Press.

A minister, missing one of his congregation from church called on him one day to see what was the matter. "Well, Mr. M'Neb, I was wondering what was the matter that you were not at church these few Sundays back." "Oh, I have been at Mr. Dunlop's kirk." "Oh, I don't care for my congregation going to other churches. How would like your sheep to go into strange pastures?" "Oh, I wadna care a grain if they got better grass."—Tit-Bits.

"O'm all av a puzzle concernin' the next election," remarked Mr. Dolan plaintively.

"Are you confused on the financial question?"

"It's worse nor that. Oi gineraly take sides in the preliminary debatin', but O'm on the fince this year. Wid wan o' the min named 'McKinley' an' the other named 'Bryan,' bedad, it's difficult to have hard feelin's towards ayther av thim."—Washington Star.

"Some of the reports say that the women went wild over Bryan at different places along his route," remarked the Horse Editor.

"That's natural," replied the Snake Editor. "He is a bargain-counter candidate."

"How so?"

"He wants to mark the dollar down to fifty-three cents."—Pittsburg Chronicle-Telegraph.

"Did Mrs. Jones give up her bloomers to please her husband?"

"No; her pug dog wouldn't come near her when she had them on."—Chicago Record.

Ito, Sotomi & Co., the leading Japanese Curio dealers of this city, have succeeded the Japan Curio Trading Company. This combination means a great deal for the curio speculators of San Francisco, for the reason that they will now be in direct contact with the importers. The firm has the shrewdest buyers in Japan, who are constantly sending to this coast rare novelties. The firm has a retail store at 116 Sutter street, where many curios may be seen.

LATE VERSE

Hole in the Fence.

We could see the pitcher very well,
But not the man at the bat,
Through the hole we found in the left-field fence,
But we never minded that.
A part we saw and a part we heard,
And as regards the rest,
We used the imagination heaven
Has given to boys, and guessed.

The sun beat hotly upon my neck
And I knelt in a posture there
That would break my neck to attempt to-day,
But, of course, I didn't care.
There were two men out, a runner at first,
Score tied, and upon my ear
There fell "Strike two," from the umpire,
In tones like a foghorn clear.

Then a dandy drive that center muffed—
The sun shone in his face—
And I asked my surging, clamorous heart:
"Will he try to make second base?"
I saw the fielder when he threw,
The hurtling ball described,
And I heard the coachers hoarsely yell
To the runner there to slide.
And that was all I saw or heard,
I was swiftly lifted thence;
Another boy had claimed his turn
At the hole in the left-field fence.

As I sit in the grand-stand here to-day,
The conviction comes to me
That the game as a whole is far from what
Its fragments used to be.
A sated sight by indulgence dulled
Yearns for the continence
Compelled by circumstances like that
Of the hole in the left-field fence.
—Detroit Tribune.

The Blessings of Nightfall.

When the shades of night have fallen and
The peaceful hours have come,
The oarsman, sleeping, rests his skull,
The giddy girl her gum.

The wagon-maker rests his tongue;
The artist—pale and weak—
His palate rests at night; commercial
Travelers rest their cheek.

The hardware man doth rest his nails,
The watch his faint alarms;
The stovepipe man his elbows stiff,
The soldier rests his arms.

Coal miners rest their veins at night,
Indians their scalps do rest;
The packer his ribs and shoulders, while
The carpenter rests his chest.

And while we're resting let us all
This vote of thanks send in:—
"Praise Morpheus that woman, when She sleeps, must rest her chin!"
—Chicago News.

Bryan and the Angel.

Abou Bill Bryan, may his tribe decrease!
Awoke one night from a deep dream of peace,
And saw within the moonlight in his room,
Making it rich and silverlike in bloom,
An angel writing in a book of gold.
Exceeding gall had made Bill Bryan bold,
And to the presence in the room he said:
"What writest thou?" The vision raised its head,
And, with a look of what he might expect,
Answered: "Their names who'll get it in the neck."
"And am I one?" asked Abou. "I don't know."
Replied the angel. Abou spake more low,
But cheerily still, and said: "I pray, thee, sir,
Write me as one not liable to err."
The angel wrote and vanished. The next night
It came again with a great November light,
And showed the names of those knocked galley-west;
And lo, Bill Bryan's name led all the rest!

Looking for Information.

These queries oft occur to me;
Each proves a mental teaser:—
If Rome was so derned mighty, how Did she let Julius Caesar?
What cinch was it Bulwer Lytton had Anent "The Coming Race?"
Should every Alabamian
Possess a Mobile face?
Did the daybreak out in tears
Because the poor night fell?
Is a joke played on a convict
A regular prison cell?
If a country youth should visit France,
Is he bound to go to Rouen?
And is a bear a maltster,
Because he's always Bruin?
—New Orleans Times-Democrat.

The Picture in the Mirror.

From the corner of his mirror
A pictured face looks out;
The lips are slightly puckered
In a saucy little pout.
There she greets him night and morning,
As some dainty, watchful sprite;
There she guards him while he slumbers
Through the long and lonesome night.

She is not the tender sweetheart
He intends to wed some day;
She is not his little sister,
In the old home, far away;
She is not his boyhood's idol,
There to call up vain regrets—
She is just a fancy picture
From a box of cigarettes.
—Cleveland Post.

A Woman's Finger.

At blush of dawn upon the seventh day
God chose with patient care his purest clay,
And from it fashioned in His wondrous way
A woman's finger—rosy, fair and frail;
Whose velvet touch God gave the magic power
To charm with fond caress each troubled hour.
Then left the charm to woman as her dower—
A magic wand to smooth life's thorny trail.
His work complete, God sank to rest, and slept,
When from his black abode with stealthy step
And cunning leer the crafty devil crept,
And on that finger's tip he put—a nail.

Poodle Dog Restaurant, S. E. corner Grant Avenue and Bush street. Private dining and banquet rooms. Telephone 429. Blanco & Bruno, proprietors.

If you wish to look neat have your suits cleaned and pressed for $1.00. Bay City Clothing Renovatory, 221½ Geary, rooms 19, 20, 21. 'Phone Main 5859.

Maison Tortoni French Rotisserie, 111 O'Farrell street. Private dining rooms, banquet hall. S. Constantini, proprietor.

When the Eastern visitor reaches San Jose he is often at a loss to know where to go for a team. He will make no mistake, however, if he directs his steps to the Hotel Vendome Stables, headquarters of the Mount Hamilton Stage Company. From here the stage coach for the Lick Observatory sets out every morning, and there, too, you can find on call the fastest horses, the neatest and trimmest rigs and the tidiest equipments. F. H. Ross & Sons are proprietors.

THE OVERLAND LIMITED

"The Overland Limited," via Union Pacific, takes only three and a half days to Chicago, and only four and a half days to New York.

The Union Pacific is the only line running Pullman double drawing-room sleepers and dining cars, San Francisco to Chicago, daily, without change, and composite buffet smoking and library cars between Salt Lake City, Ogden and Chicago. Only one change of sleepers to New York; dining car service the entire distance.

Upholstered Pullman tourist sleepers San Francisco to Chicago daily without change. Personally conducted tourist excursions to St. Paul and Chicago every Friday.

Tickets and sleeping car reservations at general office, No. 1 Montgomery street, San Francisco. Reservations secured in advance by all Trans-Atlantic steamship lines. Tickets on sale to and from all points in Europe. D. W. HITCHCOCK, General Agent, San Francisco.

has an eagle on it;
and all good shirts

"STANDARD" SHIRTS

have this mark on them:

TRADE N.B. MARK.

MADE IN CALIFORNIA

NEUSTADTER BROS., Mfrs.

SAN FRANCISCO

THE CALIFORNIA STATE FAIR AT SACRAMENTO

THREE WEEKS.

SEPT. 1ST TO 19TH

GRAND PAVILION DISPLAY.

ELECTRIC MOTIVE POWER TRANSMITTED FROM FOLSOM

SEVENTEEN DAYS RACING

CASSASA'S EXPOSITION BAND.

DON'T FAIL TO EXHIBIT TO ATTEND

EXCURSION RATES.

CHAUNCEY M. DEPEW, the famous orator, statesman, railroad president and millionaire, in an interview said of his recent visit to Del Monte: "I visited Monterey, and I call it the most beautiful place in the world. Monte Carlo cannot compare with it. Its seventeen-mile drive is unparalleled for fineness."

When Mr. Depew says it is the most beautiful place in the world he knows what he is saying, and means it, for he has seen pretty much all the beautiful and interesting places in the world many times over . . . . .

The Tavern of Castle Crag, the most beautiful, attractive and accessible of all mountain resorts, will open for the reception of guests June 1, and will close October 1, 1896.

GEORGE SCHONEWALD, MANAGER

CAMPING

Season 1896

Reduced Rates for Campers' Excursion Tickets

To the following Resorts, situated on the lines of the Southern Pacific Co.

Santa Cruz Mountains

ALMA, LAUREL, FELTON
BEN LOMOND, WRIGHTS, GLENWOOD
BOULDER CREEK

Shasta Region

SWEET BRIAR CAMP
SHASTA SPRINGS SHASTA RETREAT
MT. SHASTA CAMP

For information as to Ticket Rates, Routes of Travel, etc., address or call at any Ticket Office of Southern Pacific Company, or at

General Passenger Office
No. 4 Montgomery Street, Second Floor

Or at City Ticket Office
613 Market Street, Grand Hotel, San Francisco

ILLUSTRATED FOLDER MAILED FREE ON APPLICATION

WM. H. MENTON
Excursion Passenger Agent

RICHARD GRAY
General Traffic Manager

J. H. GOODMAN
General Passenger Agent

Pacific Coast Steamship Co.

Dispatch steamers from San Francisco for ports in Alaska 9 a.m. July 3, 13, 18, 28, August 2, 12, 27.
For British Columbia and Puget Sound Ports, July 3, 8, 13, 18, 23, 28 and every fifth day thereafter.
For Eureka, Humboldt Bay, S. S. Pomona, 2 p.m. July 8, 12, 16, 20, 24, 28 and every fourth day thereafter.
For Newport, Los Angeles and Way Ports, 9 a.m. July 6, 10, 14, 18, 22, 26, 30 and every fourth day thereafter.
For San Diego, stopping at Port Hartford, Santa Barbara, Port Los Angeles, Redondo -- Los Angeles -- and Newport, 11 a.m. July 5, 8, 12, 16, 20, 24, 28 and every fourth day thereafter.
For Ensenada, San Jose del Cabo, Mazatlan, La Paz, Altata and Guaymas, Mex., S.S. Orizaba, July 3 and 25th of each month thereafter.
Ticket Office: Palace Hotel, 4 New Montgomery St.

GOODALL, PERKINS & CO.
General Agents
No. 10 Market Street, San Francisco, Cal.

A. K. DAGGETT

Drawing of Deeds and all Legal Papers a specialty

NOTARY PUBLIC
14 Montgomery St., S. F.
Telephone 305

Coolgardie Gold Fields

FREMANTLE, AUSTRALIA
First Class $220 Steerage $110
Lowest Rates to CAPE TOWN
S. S. "Australia," Honolulu only, Tuesday, Sept. 22, 1896, at 10 a.m.
S. S. "Alameda," via Honolulu and Auckland, Thursday, September 17, 1896 at 2 p.m.
Ticket Office 114 Montgomery St.
Freight Office 327 Market St.
J. D. SPRECKELS & BROS. CO., General Agents

The German Savings and Loan Society

526 California St., S. F.

Capital actually paid up in cash	$1,000,000 00
Deposits December 31, 1895	30,727,586 59
Reserve Fund	750,000 00
Guaranteed Capital	1,200,000 00

OFFICERS
President, B. A. BECKER
First Vice-President, EDWARD KRUSE
Second Vice-President, A. C. HEINEKER
Cashier, A. H. R. SCHMIDT
Assistant Cashier, WM. HERRMANN
Secretary, GEORGE TOURNY
Assistant Secretary, A. H. MULLER

DIRECTORS
B. A. Becker, Edward Kruse, A. C. Heineker, O. Shoemann, H. Horstmann, Ign. Steinhart, Dan'l Meyer Nic. Van Bergen, Emil Rohte
Attorney, W. S. Goodfellow

San Francisco Savings Union

532 CALIFORNIA ST

Deposits June 30, 1896	$23,657,219
Paid Up Capital and Surplus	1,594,085

ALBERT MILLER, Pres. E. B. POND, Vice-Pres.
LOVELL WHITE, Cashier

DIRECTORS
GEORGE W. BEAVER ROBERT WATT
THOMAS MAGEE GEO. C. BOARDMAN
W. C. B. DE FREMERY DANIEL E. MARTIN
ALBERT MILLER PHILIP BARTH
E. B. POND

Loans upon San Francisco and Oakland Real Estate, and Farms and Farming Lands in the country.
No charge is made for pass book or entrance fee.

Mutual Savings Bank of San Francisco

33 Post Street, below Kearny, Mechanics' Institute Building
Guaranteed Capital, $1,000,000
JAS. D. PHELAN, Pres. GEO. A. STORY, Cashier
S. G. MURPHY, JOHN A. HOOPER, Vice-Pres.

DIRECTORS—Jas. D. Phelan, S. G. Murphy, John A. Hooper, James Moffitt, C. G. Hooker, Frank J. Sullivan, L. P. Drexler, Robt. McElroy, Jos. D. Grant.

Interest paid on term and ordinary deposits.
Loans on approved securities. Deposits may be sent by Postal Order, Wells, Fargo & Co., or Exchange on City Banks.
When opening accounts, send signature.

ROYAL EXCHANGE ASSURANCE

OF LONDON
Incorporated by Royal Charter A. D. 1726
Capital Paid Up, $3,446,100 Assets, $21,584,413
Surplus to Policy Holders, $8,980,251
ROBERT DICKSON, Manager
B. J. SMITH, Assitant Manager
NATHAN & KINGSTON, San Francisco Agents
501 Montgomery Street

Aachen and Munich Fire Insurance Co.

of Aix La Chapelle, Germany
Capital, $2,250,000.00
Total Assets, $6,854,683.65
United States Department
204 Sansome Street
VOSS, CONRAD & CO., General Managers

When You Leave Town

place your valuables in the

SAFE DEPOSIT VAULTS
OF THE
FIRST NATIONAL BANK
CORNER OF BUSH AND SANSOME STREETS
Office Hours, 8 a. m. to 6 p. m.

BIDS

FOR

Concessions and Privileges in Yosemite Valley

OFFICE OF THE YOSEMITE COMMISSIONERS,
San Francisco, August 11, 1896.

In accordance with Rule XXXIV of the Rules and Regulations governing Yosemite Valley and Mariposa Big Tree Grove, adopted July 13, 1896, sealed bids are hereby invited for the for the following concessions and privileges in the Yosemite Grant for the year beginning November 1, 1896, and ending October 1, 1897, viz.:

First—For keeping a livery stable and conducting a general livery business in the Valley, and also for the rental of the Royal Arch Farm and Stables.

Second—For rental of stable and coach house on Georgia Avenue for stage headquarters.

Third—For rental of hotel, outbuildings and grounds at Glacier Point and privilege of conducting a hotel business at that point.

Fourth—For rental of store building and privilege of conducting a general merchandise business in the Valley.

Bids must be presented to the Secretary on or before

Monday, October 12, 1896

at 12 o'clock M., at office of Commissioners, San Francisco.

Bids must be accompanied by sufficient guarantee that contract shall be carried out by bidders to the satisfaction of the Commissioners. The Commissioners reserve the right to reject any and all bids.

JOHN F. SHEEHAN,
Secretary and Treasurer,
Room 25, Tenth Floor, Mills Building, S. F.

NOTICE TO CREDITORS

ESTATE OF OSCAR J. PETERSON, DECEASED

Notice is hereby given by the undersigned, A. C. Freese, Administrator of the Estate of Oscar J. Peterson, deceased, to the creditors of and all persons having claims against the said deceased, to exhibit them with the necessary vouchers, within four months after the first publication of this notice, to the said Administrator, at room 35, Chronicle Building, the same being his place for the transaction of the business of the said estate in the City and County of San Francisco, State of Califofnia.

A. C. FREESE,
Adm'r of the Estate of Oscar Peterson, deceased.
J. D. SULLIVAN, Attorney for the Administrator.
Dated at San Francisco, August 12, 1896.

NOTICE OF ASSESSMENT. — BULLION Mining Company. Location of principal place of business, San Francisco, California. Location of works, Virginia Mining District, Storey County, Nevada.

Notice is hereby given that at a meeting of the Board of Directors, held on the 14th day of August, 1896, an assessment (No. 42) of ten cents per share was levied upon the capital stock of the Corporation, payable immediately in United States gold coin to the Secretary, at the office of the Company, room 20, 331 Pine street, San Francisco, California.

Any stock upon which this assessment shall remain unpaid on the 15th day of September, 1896, will be delinquent and advertised for sale at public auction; and unless payment is made before, will be sold on THURSDAY, the 8th day of October, 1896, to pay the delinquent assessment, together with the costs of advertising and expenses of sale.

By order of the Board of Directors.
R. R. GRAYSON, Secretary.
Office—Room 20, No. 331 Pine street, San Francisco, California.

NOTICE TO CREDITORS

ESTATE OF FRED LARSEN, DECEASED

Notice is hereby given by the undersigned, A. C. Freese, administrator of the Estate of Fred Larsen, deceased, to the creditors of, and all persons having claims against the said deceased, to exhibit them with the necessary vouchers within four months after the first publication of this notice to the said Administrator, at room 35, Chronicle Building, San Francisco, California, the same being his place for the transaction of the business of the said estate in the City and County of San Francisco, State of California.

A. C. FREESE,
Administrator of the Estate of Fred Larsen, deceased.
J. D. SULLIVAN, Attorney for the Administrator.
Dated at San Francisco, August 21, 1896.

ASSESSMENT NOTICE

Alta Silver Mining Company

Assessment No. 53
Amount per share, 10 cents
Levied September 7, 1896
Delinquent in office, October 12, 1896
Day of sale of delinquent stock Nov. 2, 1896

J. E. JACOBUS, Secretary
Office, room 33, Nevada Block, San Francisco

ASSESSMENT NOTICE

Gould & Curry Silver Mining Company

Assessment No 79
Amount per share, 15 cents
Levied September 1, 1896
Delinquent in office, October 5, 1896
Day of sale of delinquent stock, Oct. 27, 1896

A. K. DURBROW, Secretary
Office, room 69, Nevada Block, San Francisco

ASSESSMENT NOTICE

Occidental Consolidated Mining Co.

Assessment No. 24
Amount per share, 10 cents
Levied September 2, 1896
Delinquent in office, October 8, 1896
Day of sale of delinquent stock, Oct. 29, 1895

A. K. DURBROW, Secretary
Office, room 69, Nevada Block, San Francisco

Pacific Towel Co.

Telephone 1780 No. 9 Lick Place, San Francisco
GEO. E. MOORE, Proprietor

Good Appetite

Is restored and the disordered Stomach and Liver invigorated by taking a small wineglassful, before meals, of the celebrated . . . . . .

Peruvian Bitters

CHARLES S. WHEELER ERNST H. LUDWIG

Ernst H. Ludwig & Co.

THE MODEL AMERICAN CATERERS

Supply Wedding Breakfasts, Luncheons, Dinners, Matinee Teas and Receptions on shortest notice. Also Terrapin Entrees Luncheons and Dinners. Ice Cream, Cake, &c.

Telephone 2388 1206 SUTTER STREET

We Have Appointed

Coburn, Tevis & Co.

OUR AGENTS FOR

CHOCOLATE MENIER

MENIER & CO

HIRSCH-KAHN & Co.

MANUFACTURING OPTICIANS

IMPORTERS OF OPTICAL GOODS

PHOTOGRAPHIC APPARATUS & SUPPLIES ETC.

333 KEARNY STREET

SAN FRANCISCO CAL.

COTTON SAIL DUCKS

22-inch, in all numbers. Medium, Soft and Hard

ALSO

Heavy Naught, Wagon and Draper Ducks From 30 to 120 inches wide

Monumental and Imperial Ounce Ducks

Manufactured by Mount Vernon Company Baltimore

Murphy, Grant & Co. Pacific Coast Sole Agents

It Makes the Hair Grow

Canadian Vegetable Tonic

MRS. F. E. MCLEAN, Physician for the Hair

Hours 9 to 12 and 1 to 4

St. Ann's Building, San Francisco

COMET OOLONG

The richest and most reliable brand of Tea on the market. Sold only in 1 lb. papers at 50 cts. per paper.

ALL GROCERS KEEP IT

Removal Sale The wholesale and retail 1212-18 Market Street

Now for a big sale at an immense reduction from the usual prices before removal to

New Store, 721 Market Street

in the Emerson Building

Suits to Order from $15 Trousers to Order from $5

CHAS. LYONS, London Tailor

STORIES OF THE DAY

In the September "Metropolis" there are some good stories of Whistler. The great painter loves to say startling things, and the root of many of his witticisms is the unexpected. An admirer once said to him, "Mr. Whistler, there are only two great painters, yours it and Velasquez." Whistler slowly winked his left eye, and asked, "Why drag in Velasquez?"

An old lady landing up the Thames estuary, said to Whistler, "The whole trip along the river was like a series of your superb etchings." "Yees," he rep'ied, "nature is creeping up."

Whistler is without financial ability, and in spite of the large sums he receives for his pictures is continually in debt. It is by no means an uncommon experience for him to have a bailiff in his house. However, he knows how to manage them, and one man who commenced his occupancy very inauspiciously was trained subsequently to act as butler at one of the artist's dinners. This man grew impatient after a bit and asked for his money. Whistler told him he could not pay him, whereupon the fellow covered the front of the building up with posters announcing a big sale. The painter took the affair as a joke and sent out invitations to all his friends to a luncheon party adding, "You will know the house by the bills of sale stuck up outside."

On another occasion a bailiff demanded what is known in the profession as "possession money" it being customary for a debtor to pay the hire of the deputy sheriff who is put in charge of his effects. Whistler said he had no means, whereupon the fellow began to snivel. "I have my own family to keep, and my own rent to pay." "You should do as I do," said Whistler, "and have a man in yourself."

The "Youth's Companion" tells a story of a British showman who was making a prolonged stay in a town in the north of England. In the audience his attention was attracted to a youngster who came to the performance every night and always fell asleep. He addressed the boy: "I say, my little man, what do you go to sleep for when you come here?" "Can't keep awake," said the youngster. "You see it is a beastly bore looking at them doing the same thing every night." "Why do you come then?" "I can't help it," replied the youth dolorously; "I have to; I have got a season ticket."

H. C. Bunner was doing London with Lawrence Hutton, and conceived a violent form of Anglophobia. They were in Westminster Abbey, in the Poets' Corner. Bunner, in the presence of the immortal dead, ceased railing at their countrymen. "There are some good and great Englishmen, after all, Harry," said Hutton. "There are three kinds of Englishmen whom I can endure," said Bunner: "the Scotch, the Irish, and the dead."

In "Human Documents" Mr. Byers tells a story of Sherman on the way to Richmond reviewing his army at Goldsborough. The men were in rags; many were bare-legged, and some of them almost hatless. "Only look at the poor fellows with their bare legs," said an officer. "Splendid legs," returned the General, with a twinkle in his eye. "Would give both of mine for any one of them."

On the way to Richmond Sherman paid but slight attention to dress, but when he did the staff knew something was going to happen. "There is going to be a fight today, sure," said Colonel Audenreid of the staff one morning. "How can you tell?" asked a comrade. "Why, man, the General's over there by the fire putting on a clean collar." That day Cheraw with forty cannon fell into the hands of the army.

The difficulty of catching the Speaker's eye in Congress is illustrated by a story about Congressmen Burrell of Illinois and Speaker Reed. For many months Burrell had been trying to get through the House a private bill which he had in tow for one of his constituents. Finally the Speaker agreed at a certain time to take it up. Next morning at the first opportunity Burrell was on his feet waving his hand. The Speaker announced, "The gentleman from Illinois is recognized." A page started frantically up the aisle, but Cannon, also of Illinois, interposed himself, and handed the Mercury a bill which he hastily took back to the Speaker's desk. Reed was angry, but reiterated "The gentleman from Illinois." Another page started to follow the direction of the Speaker's eye and ran into Mr. Graff, also of Illinois, and he too had a bill which the page took. By this time Reed was boiling over, but determined that Burrell should get his chance, again announced, "The gentleman from Illinois." This time Mr. Burrell's bill reached its destination, but there was much merriment among the other twain whose measures had received unexpected attention on the strength of their colleague's good luck.

A SAVING OF ONE-HALF

Baggage transferred to trains or steamers and return. Trunks, 50c each for the round trip. Morton Special Delivery, 650 Market street and 408 Taylor street.

Among the many great Financial Corporations on the Pacific Coast, none rank higher than the

FIREMAN'S FUND INSURANCE CO.

Its Agents are found throughout America, and its Record for Prompt and Equitable Settlement of All Honest Losses is Firmly Established

D. J. STAPLES, President WM. J. DUTTON, Vice-President B. FAYMONVILLE, 2d V.-Pres., Sec'y
J. B. LEVISON, Marine Sec'y LOUIS WEINMANN, Asst. Sec'y STEPHEN D. IVES, General Agent

THE GRILL ROOM SERVICE OF THE

PALACE HOTEL

Has been extended to what was formerly the City Restaurant. This immense room, which has a direct entrance from Market Street is known as

"THE LADIES' GRILL ROOM"

NEW DEPARTURE—CHARACTERIZED BY PROMPT SERVICE—MODERATE CHARGES

Three days' wonder

Mr. F. Siefke writes that he went to Byron with the gout in its most severe form, and was COMPLETELY CURED in three days. Those mineral springs have become famous for such cures, and have secured many a testimonial for the efficiency of Byron as a sanitorium.

Byron Hot Springs

Contra Costa Co., Cal.

The California Hotel

SAN FRANCISCO

ABSOLUTELY FIRE-PROOF

HOTEL RAFAEL

SAN RAFAEL

Open All the Year Round

Fifty Minutes from San Francisco

Average winter temperature 64 degrees. Both hotels strictly first-class. Modern, Exquisite and Home-like. Both under the personal supervision of General Warfield.

R. H. WARFIELD & CO. Proprietors.

For those who appreciate Comfort and Attention

A QUIET HOME CENTRALLY LOCATED

OCCIDENTAL HOTEL

SAN FRANCISCO

WM. B. HOOPER, MANAGER

Golden Eagle Hotel

GRAY & TITUS, Proprietors

A MODERN FIRST-CLASS HOTEL

SACRAMENTO, CAL.

Marshall F. Jones

Merchant Tailor

Room 113 and 115, Phelan Building

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.

THE LICK HOUSE

Occupies the block bounded by Montgomery, Post and Sutter Streets

IT IS—

——scrupulously clean;
——accessible to all street car lines and places of amusement;
——conveniently situated for business men;
——a quiet, model place for a family to spend the winter;
——moderate in price, yet first-class in every particular.

AMERICAN OR EUROPEAN PLAN

K. B. SOULÉ, Manager

CRESTA BLANCA WINES

AWARDED THREE HIGHEST AWARDS AT

THE ATLANTA EXPOSITION

OF SIX MEDALS AWARDED TO CALIFORNIA

Cresta Blanca Wines

OBTAINED THREE

WETMORE-BOWEN CO.

140 Montgomery Street

Under Occidental Hotel

Ask your Blacksmith to shoe your horse with

PHŒNIX HORSE SHOES

GIVE THEM A TRIAL

ORDER YOUR CARRIAGES AND COUPES OF THE

PACIFIC CARRIAGE CO.

At Baldwin Hotel
200 Sutter Street, corner Kearny
48 Eighth Street, or
St. Nicholas Hotel, Market and Ninth Streets

Steamer and Train Service a specialty 'Phone 1950

H. S. BRIDGE & CO.

Merchant Tailors

Many Novelties in Imported Wear. Shirts to Order a Specialty.

622 Market Street, San Francisco

(Upstairs, opposite Palace Hotel)

Brushes For barbers, bakers, bootblacks, bathhouses, billiard tables, brewers, bookbinders, candlemakers, canners, dyers, flour mills, foundries, laundries, paperhangers, printers, painters, shoe factories, stablemen, tar roofers, tanners, tailors, etc.

BUCHANAN BROS.

TEL. 5610 609 SACRAMENTO ST.

BRUSH MANUFACTURERS

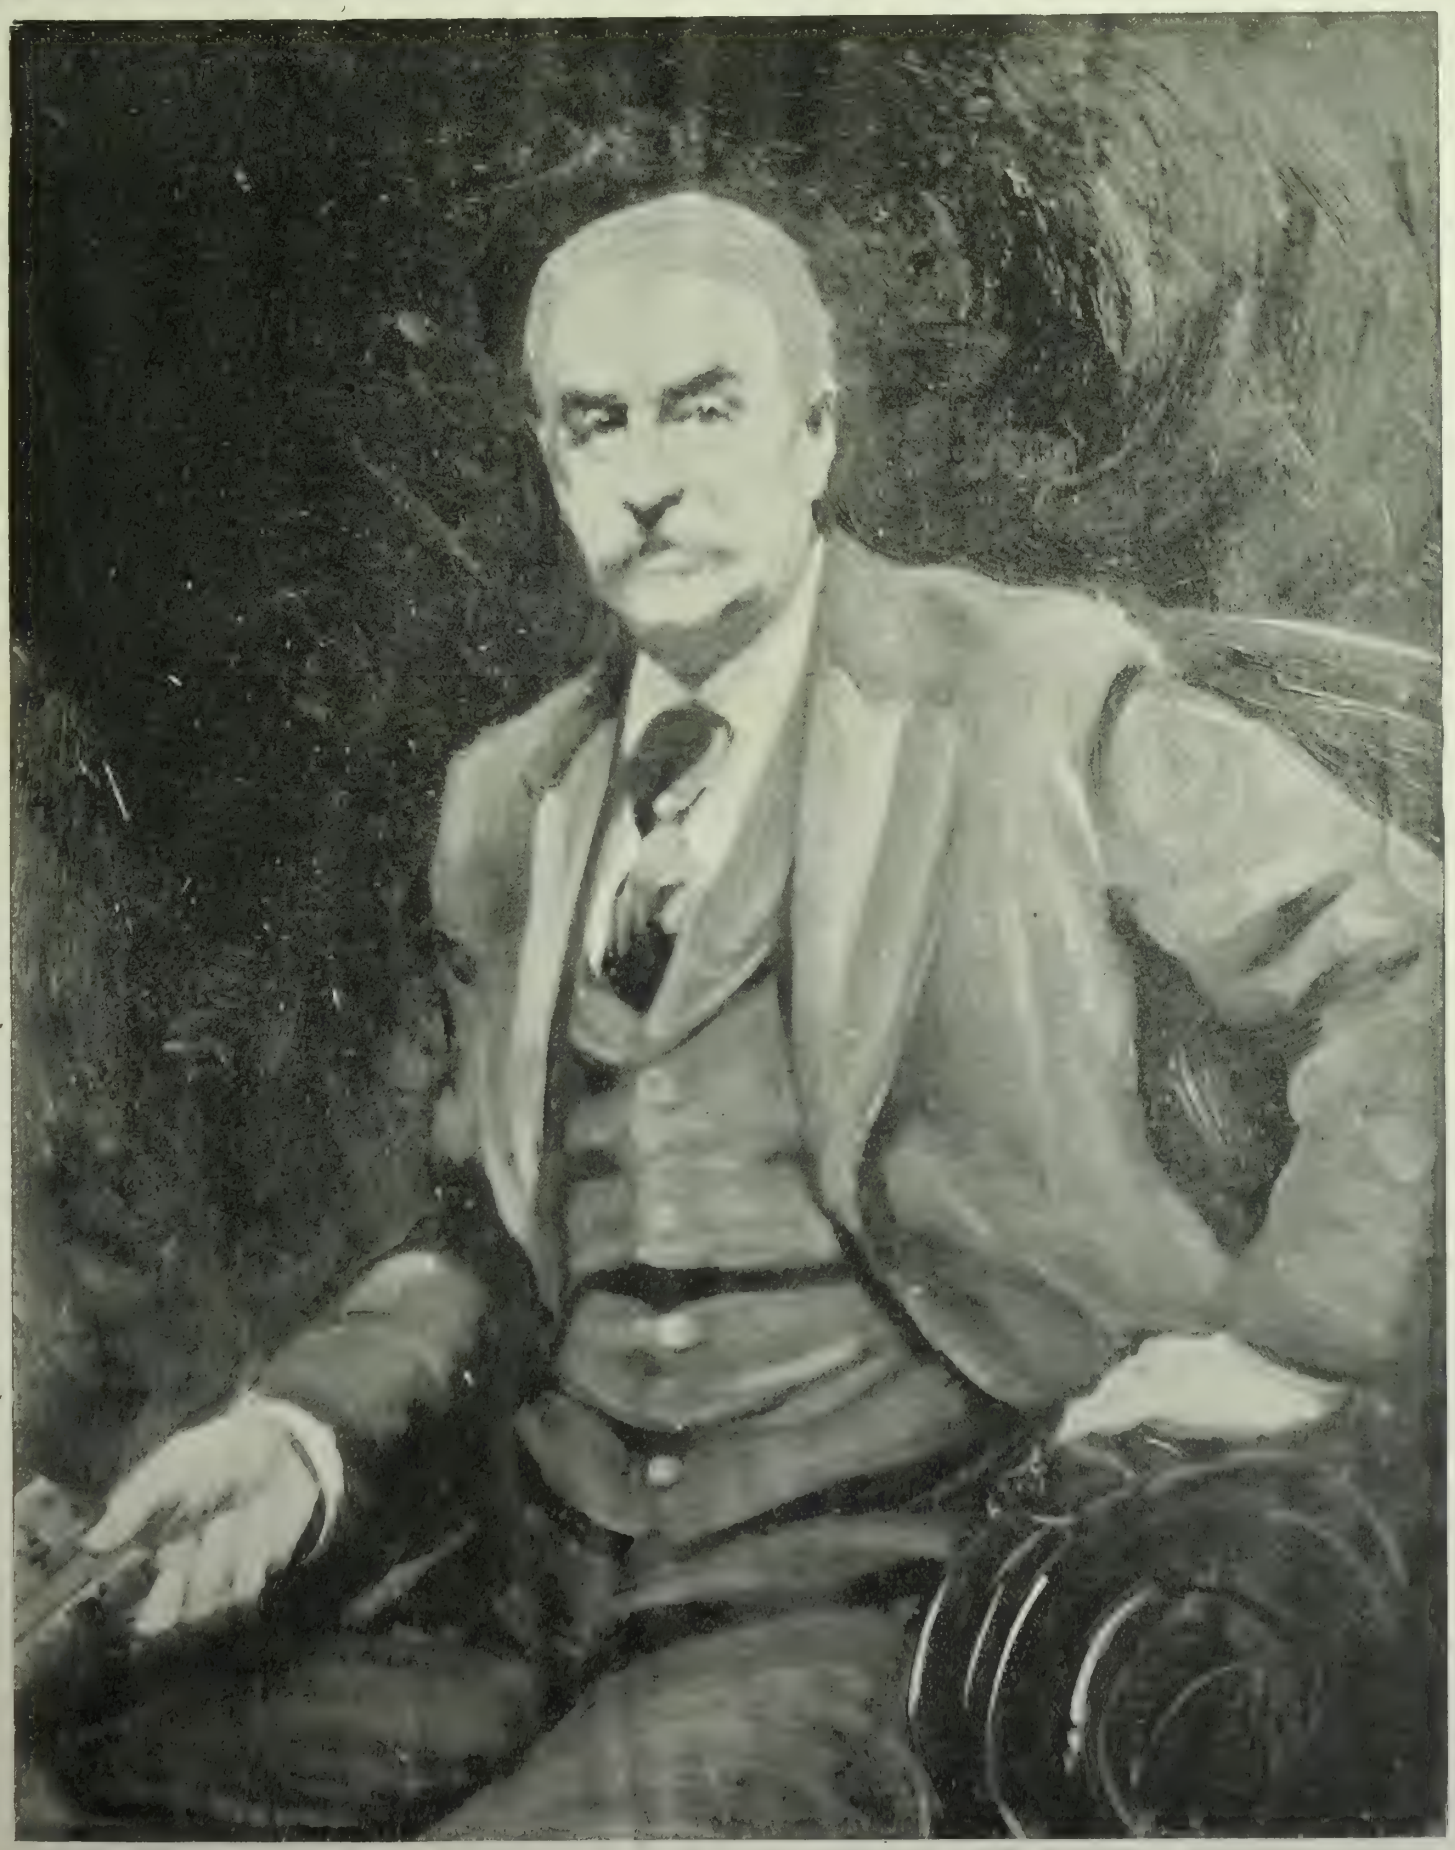
TERRA COTTA PRESSED BRICK FIRE PROOFING

GLADDING, McBEAN & CO. 1358-1360 MARKET ST. WORKS, LINCOLN CAL.

CALIFORNIA STATE LIBRARY
This Paper not to be taken from the Library.

THE WAVE

VOL XV. No. 38 SAN FRANCISCO, SEPTEMBER 19, 1896 PRICE 10 CTS.



LUCIUS HARWOOD FOOTE

FROM THE PORTRAIT PAINTED FOR THE BOHEMIAN CLUB BY FRED YATES

Photo by Marceau

THE WAVE

Is published every Saturday, at THE WAVE Building, No. 24 Montgomery Street, San Francisco.

Subscription, $3.00 per year, $1.50 six months, 75 cts. three months. Foreign subscriptions—countries in postal union—$5 per year. Sample copies free on application. The trade is supplied by the San Francisco News Co., 210 Post Street; east of the Rocky Mountains by the American News Co., New York.

THE WAVE is kept on file and is for sale at Brentano's, 17 Avenue de l'Opera, Paris, France; 31 Union Square, New York City; 1015 Pennsylvania Avenue, Washington, D. C.; and 206 Wabash Avenue, Chicago.

Advertising rates and all other matters pertaining to the business of the paper, address THE WAVE, 24 Montgomery Street. Eastern Agent, E. Katz, 230-235 Temple Court, New York.

HARRISON M. PARKER, Business Manager

Entered at the San Francisco Post Office as second-class matter

THE WAVE PUBLISHING COMPANY

SAN FRANCISCO, SEPTEMBER 19, 1896

CONTENTS

Editorials	2	An Orchard Cannery	8
Heroes and Several Horses, by P.W.	4	The Hunt Loom	9
The Untolding of Lobanoff	5	At a Baby Show; by D. C.	9
Things and People	6	Society Gossip	10
"Rosette": a Poem by Lucius Harwood Foote	7	The Theatres; by Peg Woffington	11
The California Yachtsman; by W. B. Tyler	7	"March Hares": a Review	12
Portrait of Mrs. Thorndyke Boucicault, by Thors	7	The Mahatma and the Princess	13
The Inter-Club Regatta	7	"Matrimony"	14
		Putnam's Poetry	14
		Stories of the Day	16

"THE SLIPPERY SILVER-MAN."

The silver man is a slippery individual in an argument. His tongue, like Mr. Bryan's oratory, is burdened with contradictions and glaring inconsistencies. One moment he will enthusiastically affirm that free coinage will give us more money and a cheaper dollar, and so lift up the price of goods and increase the rewards of toil. Another time he will tell us we need a cheaper money to permit the manufacturer to compete with the cheap labor of Japan, and in the next breath he will be equally decided in declaring that with Bryanism silver will inevitably rise to the price of gold and be worth $1.29 per ounce.

Take the "Examiner" of Wednesday last. Side by side are two articles advocating free coinage of silver for diametrically opposite reasons.

The Chairman of the State Silver Convention, speaking, not as an individual, but authoritatively as the highest officer of the silver organization in this State, gives voice to some statements well worthy of closest scrutiny. He violently declares that Japan has an enormous advantage over us, from an industrial point of view, because it is on a silver basis, and because its workingmen are "oblivious of the fact that the metal out of which their money is made has fallen 50 per cent as measured in gold in the money centres of Europe and America." And then, from this condition of affairs, he reasons that the American workingman, whose dollar, he affirms, is a 200-cent dollar, cannot compete with the "oblivious Japanese workingman. Clinching his argument on the other side, he announces that "It is at once apparent that the American manufacturer," Mark you! Manufacturer! Not workingman! "will be driven to the same extremities" as the the farmer. Then the gentleman, having pronounced our manufacturer very sick, proposes a remedy for his frightful impending ills. What is it he proposes? Is it a high protective tariff against Japanese cheap labor? Not much. His friends have no mines out of which they may dig protective tariffs. This is what he proposes, and we must credit him with being perfectly serious in the matter.

He says:

"The remedy will not be found in tariff schedules, but rather in changing our financial system so as to scale down the purchasing power of our dollar and raise the purchasing power of theirs."

The author of this statement is the Chairman of the Silver party in the State of California. His language takes on something of an official character that must not be overlooked. Reduced to plain Anglo-Saxon, he means, if words have any meaning, that our dollar must be scaled down in value and pass current from our manufacturers to our laborers as a full value dollar. This means, if it means anything, a surreptitious and cunningly devised reduction of wages to compete with Japan. It means that we will deceive labor by giving it the same number of dollars we are now paying, but the dollar we will then be giving out will be one that has been "scaled down" and is a cheap and debased dollar. It means that we must inject a little of the Japanese microbe of "oblivion" into the brawny arm of the man who works. Mark well the remedy, and the physician who prescribes it. Paraphrased, this is what he proposes:

The American manufacturer cannot afford to pay his laborer in a coin as valuable as the American dollar so long as the Japanese are able to pay their labor in a 50-cent dollar. To permit the American manufacturer to compete with Japanese labor we must scale down the value and purchasing power of our dollar and raise the value and purchasing power of the money that the Japanese manufacturer is paying to Japanese labor.

Of course, the physician prescribing this nostrum cannot mean that American and Japanese wages will be readjusted to harmonize with the new money values. He cannot mean that the Japanese laborer would then receive a less number of his Japanese dollars with an increased purchasing power, and that the American laborer would then receive a larger number of his depreciated American dollars; because, if this were so, the American manufacturer would gain nothing, and the competitive conditions would remain unchanged.

We have been advised that "The Wave" ought to emphasize the fact that the silver movement is merely a great scheme to reduce wages. The Chairman of the Silver party of California has emphasized this point to such an extent that it will be unnecessary for us to dwell upon it.

Now look upon the other side. Take the editorial in the column parallelling the article just referred to. There you find another reason for favoring Bryan, which cannot be true if the contention of the other gentleman is true. There we are told that under free coinage silver will jump to $1.29 an ounce and things will go humming along without any disturbance or panic. "Silver will go to $1.29," says the "Examiner, "because of the new demand for it." The idea, then, is not that we are to have cheaper money, because if silver rises to $1.29 it will be equal to gold. Perhaps, then, the "Examiner's" idea is that we shall have more money. An examination of the files of that paper discloses that it has already editorially announced its belief that "there is not a stock of silver bullion anywhere in the world sufficient to raise our money supply by even 10 per cent." Then the "Examiner" is favoring silver, not because it will give us cheaper money, not because it will give us more money; but for some other reason.

Perhaps a few extracts from this same article will better explain the astounding attitude of that most astounding journal. After attempting to illustrate the modus operandi by which silver will rise to $1.29, it says, with some suggestion of delightful sarcasm:

"If the contemplation of silver and gold is too confusing to the gold monometallists, suppose we illustrate the matter by taking wheat. Suppose the Hanna Syndicate had its $550,000,000 in cash in hand and took a notion that it would put wheat up to $1.00 a bushel. If then it was found that the surplus wheat in the world all told was only 200,000,000 bushels, could there be any doubt of the ability of the syndicate to carry out its wish? If the 200,000,000 bushels were dumped on it all at once it would buy them, pay for them, and call for more on which to spend the remaining $350,000,000 of its capital. Under such conditions would there be any wheat in the world selling for less than $1.00? Certainly not."

"Suppose the Hanna Syndicate took a notion to put wheat up to one dollar a bushel," says the "Examiner." Then Hanna & Co. would be "bull operators" on the wheat market. We do not "bull" a market for fun. The little transaction, pictured by the "Examiner" as being on all-fours with the silver movement, might, in mercantile circles, be known as a "corner." "Corners" are generally regarded by the great public as being illegitimate and reprehensible. The "cornering" of commodities is at best a practice which tends largely toward monopoly pure and simple. But the illustration is most apt, and gives an insight into the "Examiner's" idea of the silver question that is indeed surprising and instructive. The article continues:

"And when the United States" (which has taken a notion to "bull" silver up to $1.29) "has taken all the silver in the world and paid $1.29 per ounce for it in goods or securities or gold, and has goods and securities and gold in sight to pay for hundreds of millions more, will it be possible to get silver anywhere for less than $1.29 per ounce? To suppose so is to suppose that men sell goods for 50 cents when they know they can get a dollar for them—which is not a common principle of human action."

The idiocy of the "Examiner's" imaginary transaction is plain, for it assumes that it is a "common principle of human action" to pay more for a thing than it is worth. It proposes that our Government shall indulge in just such an idiotic policy, however. It proposes that we shall coin silver at the ratio of 16 to 1, when its real ratio is 32 to 1. It proposes that the Government shall offer an ounce of gold for 16 ounces of silver, when it can now obtain 32 ounces of silver for an ounce of gold. It proposes that the Government shall "take a notion" to "corner" silver by offering to purchase the entire stock and output of the world at double its market value. It proposes that the Government shall assume the attitude of an operator in silver bullion, who has "taken a notion" to "bull" the market up 100 per cent.

Perhaps one may not be charged with inquisitiveness if he inquires, For whose benefit is the Government to assume this most astonishing attitude? Strip down the "Examiner's" proposition, and it is simply this, and nothing more:

First, Free coinage of silver will not increase the circulating medium of America 10 per cent.

Second, Free coinage will cause silver to jump in value from 69 cents to $1.29 per ounce, and, therefore, will not give us a cheaper dollar than we have to-day.

Third, Free coinage will place the United States in the position of a mad operator in bullion, who will take all the silver offered him at $1.29 per ounce, despite the fact that he can purchase it for 69 cents, and will keep on taking it at this inflated price until he has absorbed the stock and output of the entire world, and so forced the metal to double in value.

Now, if we are not to have more money, and if we are not to have cheaper money, who would be benefited by this transaction? Is the Government or are the people benefited by doubling the price of a thing they have to buy? The farmer is told by the "Examiner" that the throwing open of the mints will not "raise wheat to $1.00 per bushel, or double the price of hogs," and that he will not have any more money, and that he will not have any cheaper money than he has now.

We run a great risk in making this free silver experiment, for it may mean disaster, and it may mean complete financial chaos; and we ought to know upon whose behalf we are to so generously assume such a grave responsibility. The farmer has no silver bullion for sale. We know of no laboring man, or merchant, or clerk, who has any silver bullion for sale. Then who has? Here is a list of worthy people who are generally credited with having large quantities of bullion for sale, and opposite their names will be found a rough, imperfect, and perhaps overestimated statement of their wealth, taken from an Eastern paper:

The Hearst estate, $75,000,000; the Fair estate, $50,000,000; John Mackay, $40,000,000; Wm. M. Stewart, $40,000,000; Francis J. Newlands (Sharon estate), $35,000,000; Senator John P. Jones, $25,000,000; Flood estate, $25,000,000; Charles E. Lane, $20,000,000; Marcus Daly, $15,000,000; Senator H. M. Teller, $2,000,000.

Perhaps these gentlemen can say how much they will be benefited by this silver movement. Perhaps some of them can state to the fractional part of a day how long this Government can continue to take on the load of silver that will then vomit from the bowels of their abandoned mines. Perhaps they have even figured out just how much profit they will take unto themselves before we become a bankrupt, impoverished and crippled people, not able to bear the burden of another ounce of silver.

The "Examiner's" theory is the confession of the scheme of a silver-mine owner who has a stock of bullion for sale. It is common knowledge that the great wealth of the Hearst estate came from the silver mines of Nevada, and that much of its wealth is still locked up in silver interests. It is common knowledge that the "San Francisco Examiner" and the "New York Journal," both owned by Mr. Hearst, are the most rabid advocates of free silver in America. Perhaps no importance should be attached to this fact, but in view of its editorial confession, the suspicion forces itself upon one's mind that its advocacy of free silver is not dictated altogether by unselfish motives.

In the same article from which we quote, the "Examiner" states that "Free coinage would not in itself increase the supply;" and yet it declares that it will increase its value to $1.29. Some one in the "Examiner" office has been guilty of a plain and deliberate falsehood, for this very statement is completely contradicted in its own columns, by it own statistician, Mr. Charles G. Yale, a Democrat and an able man. Mr. Yale declares in the "Examiner's" Silver Edition that the miners "do not care to produce large quantities of silver for which they can only get about 60 cents. They prefer to wait until the people declare for free coinage" and the Government can take silver at $1.29. "Great numbers of silver mines," says Mr. Yale, "have closed altogether, while others have limited their output."

Who is telling the truth? The "Examiner" editor, who has an argument to make and must invent conditions to support his conclusions? Or the "Examiner" statistician, who has no argument to make, but is simply called upon to tabulate facts as they exist?

If it were only possible to pin all the advocates of silver down to a comprehensible statement of facts setting forth their side of the controversy, it is safe to say an analysis of their manifesto would fail to discover a shred or patch of reason in its composition. But, as we said in the opening lines of this article, "The silver man is a slippery individual in an argument."

SOME BITS OF GOOD NEWS.

Encouraging news is plentiful for honest money men. Every day brings some bit of information from the Eastern States to make glad the hearts of those who have been fighting a patriotic fight against great odds on this coast. Following the unprecedented Vermont majority comes one greater and more to be remarked in the State of Sewall. Not even in the days of the war between the States did Maine give such a Republican vote. And, as in the Vermont case, the result was altogether unexpected. It was thought Mr. Sewall's personal following would be sufficient to bring out the normal Democratic vote, and that State pride would add considerably to this. But the farmers, merchants and fishermen of Maine were not to be influenced by any narrower motive than that of patriotic duty.

It is now reported that Mr. Sewall, having failed to show any such strength in his State as was expected, will be induced to withdraw from the Presidential ticket, and, by agreement with Watson, a new man will be given both Populist nominations, for both are Populist, though one calls itself Democratic. This sort of juggling is to the liking of the Populist heart. In less than sixty days the election will occur, and yet their ticket is not completed. It is not unreasonable to expect that some other contingency will arise before election time which will drive the Populists to change their ticket again. It is anything for votes, and they will keep on "playing the machine" in the hope that sometime a good pair will turn up.

Bryan has already had more running mates than any candidate for the Presidency ever had before, and now the promise is that he will beat his own record.

Both wings of the Populist party treat the Vice-Presidency as if it were some county office to be traded off as Buckley would a Police Court Judgeship. Never was there anything more undignified in our history than this trading, and dickering, and plotting and counterplotting about the election of Bryan plus Sewall, or Bryan plus Watson. Only a party that felt itself dismembered and hopeless would resort to such township politics. A stranger in our country would think on reading the dispatches of each day that the Vice-Presidential nomination was a sort of political football tossed into the dirty ring of practical politics to be booted about by every trading, scheming politician who happened to be nearest to it. Mr. Sewall is to be taken down, not because he is less of a statesman than he was when nominated two months ago, but because he has failed to carry his State for crazy money. He was named originally because he was supposed to be rich and respectable. Wealth and respectability were to this extent recognized in the Chicago convention. But now, finding that the wealth is not to be turned into the trough, and that respectability is a handicap in making the only sort of campaign now possible, Mr. Sewall is to be thrown overboard. We hope, for the Maine man's sake, that he will be relieved of his embarrassing position soon. He must realize by this time that to be a candidate for office on the Chicago platform is about the most inconsistent and altogether unsatisfactory position a gentleman could occupy. A man may be a believer in free silver and yet a very worthy citizen. Every man has some little knob on the round surface of his brain and a silver knob is not as bad as many another kind. But a man of property and intelligence, of patriotism and influence, cannot endorse Tillmanism and Altgeldism without declaring himself a demagogue and an enemy to public order. Mr. Sewall, private citizen, must shudder every time he reads a Bryan speech, almost every sentence of which contains an inspiration to the low and lawless to destroy those things which Mr. Sewall must regard as even more precious than his individual life. To get off the Bryan ticket and have done with the whole anarchistic business ought to be a great relief to Mr. Sewall. And if he does so escape without going down in disgraceful defeat in November he will come to teach his children to regard the day of the September election in Maine as one of thanksgiving.

Another good piece of news is that Senator Jones of Arkansas, the Chairman of the Democratic National Committee, is tired, very tired of his job. He would give it up if he only knew anyone on whom he could drop his robe. But no Elisha is conveniently near. He pretends that he is unfitted for the position, and perhaps he is, but it takes no wise man to see that the plan is too big for any man. Mr. Jones would like to save himself the humiliation of leading his forces to annihilation. With that same chivalry which characterized Artemas Ward, who was willing to sacrifice all his wife's relatives in the war, Senator Jones is willing that the great honors and powers of the National Chairmanship of Amalgamated Populism should be given over to some one else. He has seen the cloud of National disapproval growing larger and larger until now it overspreads the sky. The people who could be fooled in July are open-eyed in September, and with the growth of their information their indignation increases against those who tried to lead them into such criminal injury to themselves. Senator Jones hopes to live some years yet, and if he could find some one to take up his task he would be happy. He finds, too, that the Arkansas returns have fallen off 25 per cent from those originally given out and this he takes as a bad omen. For if big returns cannot be held in Arkansas, what hope is there in Kentucky, West Virginia and Maryland?

The great demand within Populistic ranks at present is for cushions, soft and easy cushions, on which gentlemen who wish to drop out may fall without being hurt. Sewall wishes one, Jones another, and Bryan will wish he had been a little anticipatory a very few weeks hence. All the word that comes from the East is full of cheer to honest money men, and not an incident, event or bit of gossip gives courage to the weakening heart of the silverite.

PERKINS OR CATOR.

Undoubtedly, if the question was squarely put to the people of this State as to whether George C. Perkins or Thomas V. Cator should represent California in the United States Senate, the former would receive the honor by an overwhelming majority. To think otherwise would be to insult the intelligence and decency of the people of this commonwealth. As between Cator and the gentleman named there would not be the slightest doubt as to who would be selected by a popular vote. Yet there is a very lively possibility that Cator may be juggled by the trickery of politics into the place and sent to Washington to shamefully misrepresent California for six years. The startling possibilities that lie on the other side of fusion between the Democrats and the Populists in the matter of congressional and legislative candidates are entitled to and should receive the immediate and earnest attention, not only of Republicans, but of every respectable Democrat as well. Decent Democrats cannot afford to have it said they have contributed toward putting the State in the pitiable position of being represented by a Cator. The Senatorial contest is narrowed down to Mr. Perkins or Cator, surprising as it may seem. California must not disgrace herself; she must not fall in line with the middle western States that acknowledge Peffer and Mary Lease as political deities; she must not become the laughing stock of the nation. Her citizens should not be made to feel a shame at being called Californians. With Cator, Monteith, McGlashen, and the like of them, standing sponsors for this great State in the national legislative halls, there will come to us disgrace so deep that years of repentance will not obliterate the shame. There is not the slightest doubt that Mr. McKinley will be the next President of the United States. California may not have the felicity of sharing in the honor of assisting him to that exalted office, but she must not disgrace herself entirely at the polls. The next legislature will elect a United States Senator, and it is most important that his politics should be harmonious with that of the incoming administration. Certainly, the communities of this State interested in Protection, for which Mr. McKinley stands sponsor, are not to permit the election to Congress of men who stand upon a platform diametrically opposed to their interests. The raisin-growers of Fresno and of the great San Joaquin Valley, the sheep-herders and wool men scattered through almost every county in this State, should not need instruction as to where their interests lie. The borax and quicksilver industries, and the thousands of men to whom they give employment, owe the present prosperity of their several industries to the work of a Republican Senator from this State. A Democratic Congress had placed these products on the free list. Senator Perkins, after a hard struggle, succeeded in having the duty restored and the industries saved from certain destruction. The farmers of Santa Cruz, San Benito, Monterey, San Bernardino and Alameda, who have found profit in the sugar beet industry, are all vitally interested in the complexion of the next Senate and House of Representatives, and should need no instruction or advice as to what their course should be. The Democrat who takes any pride in Democracy, or has any love for his State or respect for its honor, should resent the imputation cast upon his party, that it must needs embrace a Cator to defeat a Perkins. The political scheme now being hatched by Mr. Cator and some renegade Democrats is this: By some arrangement, apparently with Senator White, or some other ambitious truant, it has been agreed that the Populist and Democratic parties shall fuse on legislative offices. In the matter of State Senators, Mr. White selects the nominees, and in the matter of Assemblymen, Mr. Cator assumes the role of dictator. The Populist party endorses Mr. White's Senatorial selection, and the Democrats of the several Assembly districts endorse Mr. Cator's Assembly selection. This programme contemplates that the endorsed Populistic Assemblymen shall vote for Mr. Cator for United States Senator in January next, and as many Senators as Mr. White can control shall follow suit. The twenty State Senators elected this year will two years hence have a vote in selecting Mr. White's successor. That gentleman is apparently willing to use the Democratic party this year on behalf of the Populistic Cator, if it will but serve to assist him two years hence. How does this pitiful performance strike the "Examiner" and Messrs. Foote, Maguire and other aspiring Democrats? Under this arrangement, the next legislature cannot by any possibility be Democratic, and it is possible the selection of a United States Senator will fail altogether and California be deprived of its quota of Senatorial representatives. There are twenty hold-over Senators to-day, only three of whom are Democrats. Conceding that all the Senators nominated by the Democracy and endorsed by the Populists are elected, still Cator, who has the naming of the fusion Assemblymen, of whom there are eighty to elect, need only seat thirty-eight of his henchmen to block all efforts at a senatorial selection unless he be chosen. This itinerant politician will have it in his power to declare that California shall not have two Senators at Washington unless he be selected as one. An examination of the figures of two years ago, printed in another column, will demonstrate how dangerously close we are to the unfortunate situation here outlined.

DANGER OF A POPULIST SENATOR.

An examination of the vote cast two years ago in the various Assembly Districts develops a dangerous and threatening condition of affairs, a condition that makes it possible for Thomas V. Cator to disgrace California in the United States Senate for six years. The figures are dry but they are eloquent as well.

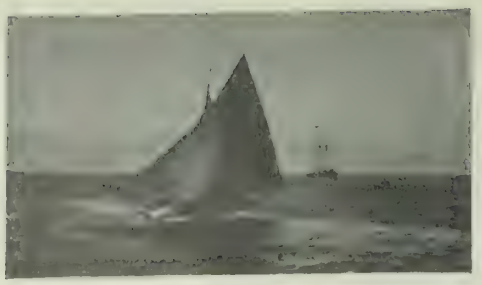
Two years ago the Republicans were successful in 63 Assembly Districts, the Democrats in 14, the Populists in 1, and the Independents in 2. In the districts comprising the counties of Alpine, Eldorado, Inyo, Lassen, Mono, Plumas, San Mateo and Sierra there were but two tickets in the field, no Populist nominations having then been made. In Mariposa and Tuolomne the Republicans made no contest, and in Orange, Riverside and Ventura, and in the Eightieth District in San Diego, the contest was between the Populists and the Republicans. In the Seventy-fifth District of Los Angeles, and in Santa Barbara, the Populists and Democrats also fused. In all the remaining Districts of the State three tickets, Republican, Democratic and Populist, were nominated, and in but fifteen of those districts did the Republican nominee receive a clear majority over his two opponents.

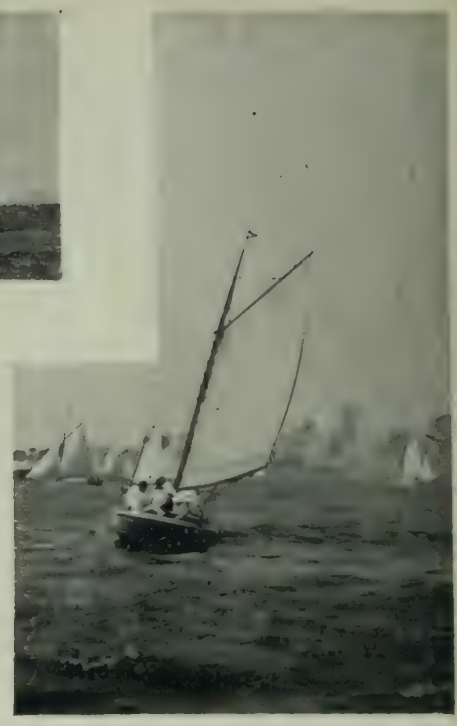
Here are the figures by counties, showing to what extent the combined Democratic and Populist vote exceeded that polled by the Republican party.

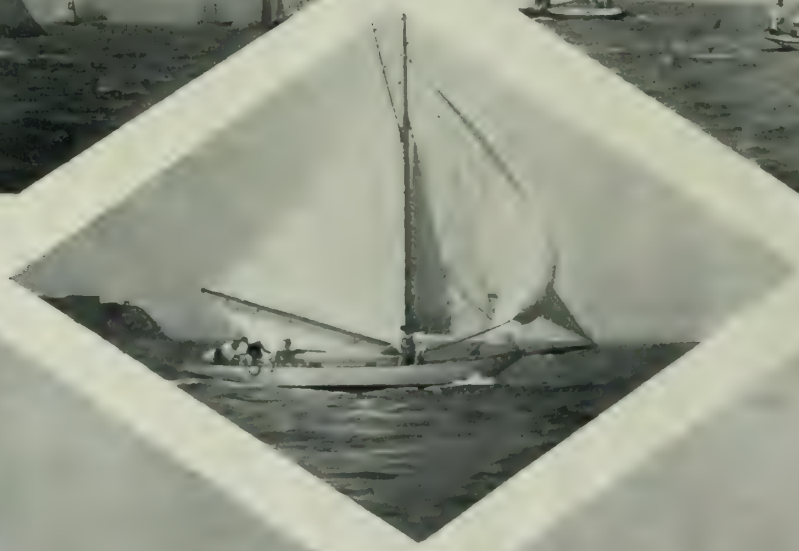
In Alameda, the banner Republican county, the combined votes of the Democrats, Populists and Independents in the six Districts was 12,661, while the Repblican vote was 7,975, and not a single District gave a clear majority to the Republicans.

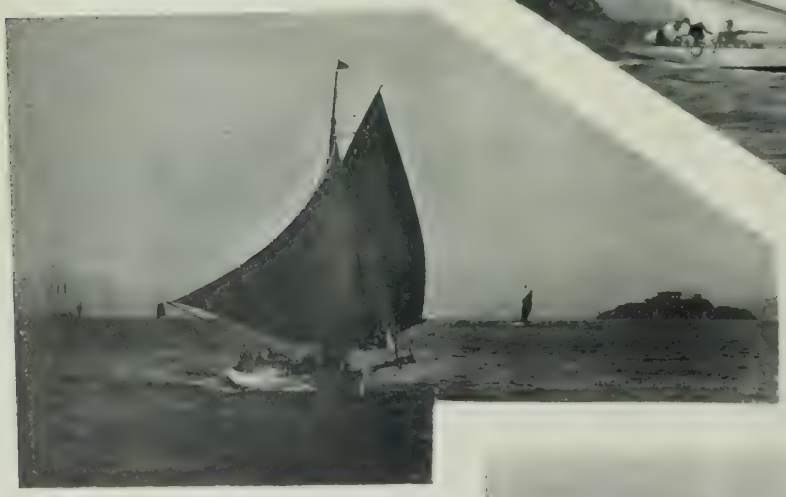
In Amador the vote was, Democratic and Populist, 1,311; Republican, 1,242. Butte, Democratic and Populist, 2,333; Republican, 1,989. Colusa, Democratic and Populist, 1,155; Republican, 828. Contra Costa, Democratic and Populist, 1,785; Republican, 480. Del Norte, Democratic and Populist, 455; Republican, 214. Fresno, Sixty-second District, Democratic and Populist, 2,212; Republican, 1,546. Sixty-third District, Democratic and Populist, 1,826; Republican, 849. Glenn, Democratic and Populist, 872; Republican, 559. Humboldt, Second District, Democratic, Populist and Independent, 2,226; Republican, 1,456. Third District, Democratic and Populist, 1,098; Republican, 865. Kern, Democratic and Populist, 2,012; Republican, 1,233. Kings, Democratic and Populist, 1,016; Republican, 673. Lake, Democratic and Populist, 1,003; Republican, 449. Los Angeles, Seventy-second District, Democratic and Populist, 1,909; Republican, 1,425. Seventy-third District, Democratic and Populist, 1,969; Republican, 1,800. Madera, Sixty-second District, Democratic and Populist, 443; Republican, 320. Sixty-third District, Democratic and Populist, 513; Republican, 236. Marin, Democratic and Populist, 1,298; Republican, 891. Mendocino, Democratic and Populist, 2,506; Republican, 1,344. Merced, Democratic and Populist, 1,212; Republican, 660. Modoc, Democratic and Populist, 706; Republican, 375. Monterey, Democratic and Populist, 2,079; Republican, 1,706. Nevada, Democratic and Populist, 2,506; Republican, 1,726. Placer, Democratic and Populist, 1,900; Republican, 1,539. Sacramento, Twentieth District, Democratic and Populist, 1,576; Republican, 1,307. Twenty-first District, Democratic and Populist, 1,821; Republican, 1,463. Twenty-second District, Democratic and Populist, 1,401; Republican, 1,137. San Benito, Democratic and Populist, 1,001; Republican, 770. San Bernardino, Democratic and Populist, 2,726; Republican, 2,538. San Diego, Seventy-ninth District, Democratic and Populist, 1,819; Republican, 1,441. San Francisco, sixteen Districts, gave the Democratic and Populist and Independent candidates 30,819, and the Republican, 18,449. San Joaquin, Twenty-fifth District, Democratic and Populist, 1,779; Republican, 1,592. Twenty-sixth District, Democratic and Populist, 1,777; Republican, 1,573. San Louis Obispo, Democratic and Populist, 2,226; Republican, 1,575. Santa Clara, Fifty-fourth District, Democratic and Populist, 1,940; Republican, 1,753. Fifty-fifth District, Democratic and Populist, 2,081; Republican, 1,396. Fifty-sixth District, Democratic and Populist, 1,856; Republican, 1,645. Santa Cruz, Democratic and Independent, 2,174; Republican, 2,025. Shasta, Democratic and Populist, 1,821; Republican, 1,050; Siskiyou, Democratic and Populist, 1,581; Republican, 1,354. Solano, Democratic and Populist, 2,510; Republican, 2,330. Sonoma, Sixteenth District, Democratic and Populist, 2,119; Republican, 1,745. Seventeenth District, Democratic and Populist, 1,887; Republican, 1,411. Stanislaus, Democratic and Populist, 1,381; Republican, 1,042. Sutter, Democratic and Populist, 887; Republican, 778. Tehama, Democratic and Populist, 1,315; Republican, 883. Trinity, Democratic and Populist, 596; Republican, 359. Tulare, Democratic and Populist, 2,325; Republican, 803. Yolo, Democratic and Populist, 1,866; Republican, 1,407; and Yuba, Democratic and Populist, 1,254; Republican, 981.

While in the following counties the Republican candidate has a majority over the Democratic and Populist candidates together: El Dorado, Republican, 1,179; Democratic, 1,114. Inyo, Republican, 530; Democratic and Populist, 290. Mono, Republican, 361; Democratic and Populist, 134. Lassen, Republican, 604; Democratic, 369. Los Angeles, Republican, 2,535; Democratic and Populist, 1,726. Seventy-first District, Republican, 1,706; Democratic and Populist, 1,578. Seventy-fourth District, Republican, 2,405; Democratic and Populist, 1,975. Seventy-fifth District, Republican, 2,202; Democratic and Populist, 1,468. Plumas, Republican, 596; Democratic, 528. Sierra, Republican, 646; Democratic, 603. Napa, Republican, 1,796; Democratic and Populist, 1,651. Orange, Republican, 1,765; Populist, 1,182. Riverside, Republican, 1,942; Democratic, 1,527. San Francisco, Thirty-ninth District, Republican, 1,929; Democratic and Populist, 1,706. Forty-third District, Republican, 1,420; Democratic and Populist, 1,281. San Diego, Eightieth District, Republican, 1,682; Populist, 1,590. San Mateo, Republican, 1,224; Democratic, 1,134; and Ventura, Republican, 1,498; Populist, 1,080.









THE INTER-CLUB REGATTA

ADMISSION DAY, SEPTEMBER 9, 1896

WEIGHING IN

THE START OF THE CUP RACE

THE HUNT CLUB'S MEET AT SAN CLEMENTE

HEROES AND SEVERAL HORSES

The San Rafael Hunt Club Meet, and the Joys and Sorrows Thereof.

The girls whose noses did not turn red, Mr. Hobart and the man who sold gin, etc., doubtless consider the Race Meet of the San Rafael Hunt Club a great success. But the rest, the pink-nosed, the defeated, the horseless, the ginless and the unimportant can hardly have enjoyed the afternoon—unless to be in the midst of a fashionable crowd constitutes happiness—for the day was chilly, the little "grand stand" was swept by a cold wind, and the time between each race unheard of—they broke the record.

Personally, I was much disappointed to see so few of San Francisco's carpet knights on the race course. The Horse Show and the paper chases seem, after all, to have done but little towards developing the true appreciation in them, that spirit which makes a man long, first, to be on the back of any fine animal he sees, and, next, to race him against another horse if possible, if not against a bicycle, a steam-car or, nothing better being at hand, a cyclone. Probably this spirit, which must eventually develope horsemanship, is born, not made, and must pass through several generations of equine lovers to reach its ripe perfection. If so, it is evident that a man had better race and fall off—like the club's vice-president—than not race at all, for then even if he himself never learns to ride straight his children may. It is, of course, quite impossible to suspect the aforesaid vice-president of any consideration for posterity in his efforts Saturday, and it is equally impossible to praise either his horsemanship or the wisdom of his attempt to ride in a race when one of his legs was injured, but, nevertheless, I cannot help feeling a twinge of respect for the courage, or rather recklessness, which prompted him to mount and try. Discretion so often goes hand in hand with cowardice that we look askance at the old dame, set Folly on high and find her more attractive—particularly when on horseback. For my own part, anything is interesting when on a horse, and the man who sits one well is charming—so long as he stays there.

From a spectacular point of view the day was not a great success, as the horses were poor in sires and grandsires and the sane women enveloped in capes, coats and even carriage-robes. It is not well at races to have all the blue blood on the grand stand and none on the track, particularly if this blue blood is muffled in unbecoming wraps. The little fresh wooden structure set in the midst of low hills would have been pleasing on a warm day, crowded as it was with young women in pretty summer frocks, but a pique skirt and shirt-waist looses all its charm when shrouded about the shoulders in a dark cape, and a grass linen or a lawn makes us shiver when we are thinking tenderly of buffalo robes and a fur store. Moreover our San Francisco women are rather weak as a rule in wraps and in theatre, racing and house dresses. The California girl has always been resplendent at balls, and recently she has become quite correct on the street, but she still shows the cloven foot in her demi-toilettes—the truest test of the wardrobe.

The first race was very unsatisfactory, as it was but for a quarter, and the bunching of the horses was very bad. Mr. Hobart's "Lady Greensleeves" started a length ahead, and came in first, with Mr. Carolan's "Juicy Peach" (ridden by Mr. Farnsworth) second, and "Mollihini," one of the Spreckels' gray mares, third. The second event was more interesting, as it was for a mile, and there was a pretty finish between "Irma" and "Burt." The little bay mare won, however, with "Burt" second (he was almost left at the post) and "Johnny Payne" third. In the next race "Maurice D.," owned by Mrs. Johnson, ridden by Mr. Hobart, and "Cricket," the property of Miss Thomas, had it all to themselves at the finish. "Cricket" was tolerably well handled by Mr. de Long, who, I hear, rode her for the first time, but "Maurice D." won cleverly without the whip. It was easy for even the most casual observer to see that Mr. Hobart deserves his splendid stable and no horse-lover can begrudge it to so good and judicious a rider.

After this came the most exciting finish of the day, with "Brandy," ridden by Hobart first, Mr. Archibald's "Sugar Cane" second and "Bay Rum" third. Almost all of the ingredients of this race were something to eat or drink; let us hope that this signifies nothing as to the condition of our young men when they named their horses, for it is dreadful to picture the tastes of an individual who would sober up on bay rum, and I don't think much of ginger ale. In the fifth race, Mr. Farnsworth distinguished himself by showing his ignorance of how many half-miles there are in a whole. Mr. Ackley's "Antrim" carried him around the first half in fine style, and wanted to keep it up for the second, but Mr. Farnsworth wouldn't have it that way, until the crowd assured him that one and one make two, then he gave "Antrim" his head, but it was too late for the gallant little horse to win more than the third place, with "Billy Robertson" first and "St. Brandon" second.

The last race was a half-mile dash for the Hotel Rafael cup and $100. Hobart had both "Ginger Ale" and "Gold Coin" in, and won on "Ginger Ale" amid the noise of departing crowds and the snapping and squeaking of the camp chairs which were being packed up.

On the whole the instigators of the affair may consider that they met with encouragement if not with enthusiasm, for the mere fact that the major part of the crowd stayed through it all in that bitter wind showed interest and approval.

P. W.

THE UNFOLDING OF LOBANOFF

A Dilettante Nobleman Whose Statescraft Nearly Altered the Map of Europe.

Lobanoff is dead. Therefore a British fleet is steaming for Stamboul; the grand Turk sees midnight visions of daggers and the poisoned cup, and all Europe trembles as it knows not what is to come.

Possibly you have never heard of Lobanoff. When a great man arises in Europe, we who sit here on the outer edge of civilization only realize him dimly until, perhaps, he has grown old. Yet Lobanoff was the White Czar, and his death leaves an interregnum. When the Mikado stopped making war and gave up control of Corea, which he had conquered, and almost all the advantages Japan had won in the war with China, people wondered how it was done. That was the work of Lobanoff, foreign minister of Russia. It was a magnificent triumph of diplomacy, a great victory won without striking a blow, and the advantage all on Russia's side. In his short eighteen months of power, ended by his sudden and untimely death two weeks ago, he had completed his plans to push England off the board of European diplomacy, and proceed to dismember Turkey without reference to the island bully. England would have been quietly shouldered out of the way, given a parting kick in the rear and told to mind her own business.

For the time is ripe to do something with the Sublime Porte. It has been the custom, when his predecessors got too troublesome to tie them up in a sack and drop them in the Bosphorus in a quiet way or, in fact, to put them out of the way in the most comfortable and convenient manner. Abdul Hamid understands perfectly that his time has come, and he is now pleading insanity like a common American murderer. What they will do with him is unimportant. It is what they will do with Turkey and Asia Minor and Crete that interests. The train for all this was laid by Lobanoff, but the partition, if there is a partition, will be made without him, and there is left upon the European board no man to take his place. The old sea pirate that sits on the white cliffs of Albion, forever looking for new worlds to steal—England is glad that Lobanoff is dead. She had no man fit to cope with him while he lived. Now that he is dead, she has mustered up courage to make one of her time-dishonored bluffs. The big Mediterranean fleet is speeding hotfoot for the Golden Horn. Russia's fleet at Cronstadt is hurrying after as fast as it can get around the ugly corners of the Baltic, and the pillars of Hercules, Italy and France, will be there. The dogs of war are gathering. Even Uncle Sam is sending a couple of husky cruisers to the Bosphorus, as a measure of safety for the universal and all pervasive American who may be found doing business anywhere from the Golden Gate to the Golden Horn.

An inimitable combination it was the clever Russian had engineered. He had so maneuvred the European chess board that Austria alone dared interfere between the eagle and his prey. So he placated Francis Joseph with the promise of a slice of the Albanian seacoast. Having arranged a marriage between the beauteous Helma of Montenegro—the handsomest princess in Europe—and the Prince of Naples, he had assimilated the interests of Italy and the little Kingdom of Prince Nicholas, whose sway was to have been extended over leagues of the Sublime Porte's territory. He suggested also the possibility of extending to Italy the markets of France and the assistance of the latter power in Abyssinia. All this to check the friendship of the Southern Kingdom for the British Lion, which had aided the supremacy of Queen Victoria in the Mediterranean. But Lobanoff is dead, and there is no one powerful enough or sufficiently astute to take up the strings of his policy, unless indeed it be Aginor Golochowski, the Austrian foreign minister, who is the one Continental figure of magnitude left on the board.

It cannot truly be said Lobanoff was a saint. It lay within his power to have stopped the terrible massacres in Armenia at any moment in the past eighteen months, by lifting his finger, but, in fact, the slaughter was part of his plan and he encouraged it. He was preparing the way for a complete and convincing demonstration of the Porte's unfitness to govern, and a few thousand Armenians made no particular difference, except in the way of assisting the manifest destiny of empires. The strange thing is that he contrived to keep secret from the young Czar the frightful condition of things in Armenia, and Nicholas would have known nothing about it had not his English relatives recently apprised him of the massacres. He was so greatly horrified at the discovery that he almost broke with Lobanoff, and the minister was in disgrace for a time—only for a time, because Nicholas found he had no other staff on which to lean.

Now the Czar has lost his mainstay. Not much is known of Nicholas. He is a young man, puny of physique, nervous, diffident and deeply superstitious. The awful calamity that attended his coronation when thousands of his subjects were crushed to death on the plains of Moscow, has always seemed to him an evil omen. Lately he has seen the one man on whom he could rely die unexpectedly before his eyes. He sent for Shouvaloff to take his place, and Shouvaloff was there and then stricken with paralysis. No wonder the mind of the young monarch is oppressed with deep forebodings and the dread responsibility placed upon his shoulders.

It is altogether uncertain whom the Czar will call to his side in Lobanoff's place. Nelidoff, the Russian ambassador at Stamboul, is next in line, but he is what diplomats call a negligeable quantity. He only exists in virtue of his wife and his complaisance as a husband. Shishkine is the ablest of Lobanoff's lieutenants, but it is doubtful if he is big enough for the place. There remains M. De Witte, the present Minister of Finance. A few years ago he was a village station-master on the railraod from Kieff to Odessa. He made a reputation by disobeying orders at a critical time and being able to prove later that he was right. Two years ago he was ennobled, and his general appearance is that of a man who has slept in his clothes.

Lobanoff was "grand seigneur." Possessed of an enormous fortune he kept up a style of oriental and barbaric splendor in his establishment. His pages were the sons of Caucasian chiefs; the horses he rode were shod with silver. His lineage was not inferior to the Romanoffs themselves, and his position as well assured. He knew it and was independent accordingly. Once when he was ambassador at Vienna, the Grand Duke Vladimir telegraphed him, "I arrive to-morrow night. Prepare apartments for me at the embassy." Lobanoff telegraphed back, "Your Imperial Highness must go to a hotel. Cannot place rooms at your disposal." The Grand Duke arrived and went to his hotel and Lobanoff purposely neglected to meet him at the railroad station or at the hotel. His life was that of a sybarite. He cared for nothing but luxury and ease, apparently. His distinctions he owed to rank and family rather than diplomatic triumph, though in the maneuvres of Europe in his embassadorial capacity he had ever shown skill and astuteness. But, being appointed Foreign Minister, his manner changed. The sybarite became a demon of industry. He slaved day and night manifesting an enormous capacity for work. The development of Cromwell from a country squire into a great general and ruler, was not more sudden than the sudden alteration of this dilettante embassador into a great statesman and a great statesman he was, as England would have learned to her cost but for the sudden illness that carried him into oblivion, his life work planned but unachieved.

Something Lobanoff did in literature, and his "History of Paul I." is well known. He never married and was not known to have ever admired a woman, save Mary, Queen of Scots, who has been dead some time.

His name he took from one of his ancestors, Loban, which is the High Forehead.

In Paris the first woman's club in France "Le Ladies' Club," has just been organized. Married women may become members if they have their husband's written consent, but widows are preferred. Political and religious discussions are forbidden. Sixty members have already joined, and the club is organizing entertainments to which men will be invited.

The Baltimore Race Standard says that a new thing under the sun has just happened in that city, when Charles Lee, a Chinaman, was defended in a criminal action by William H. Daniels, "one of our brightest and most aggressive colored lawyers," and was acquitted.

THINGS AND PEOPLE

Fred Yates, on returning from London to San Francisco, his old home, offered to paint for the Bohemian Club, the portrait of any one of its members the directors should designate. They selected for this honor General Lieutenant Harwood Foote, and the picture is reproduced in this issue. The canvas is something of a tour de force, being admirably handled, a successful likeness, and executed at a sitting. General Foote is one of California's most distinguished citizens. He graduated from law into politics, and thence into diplomacy, having been a judge and then Collector of the Port of Sacramento,—this in the early sixties—later Adjutant-General of California, subsequently United States Consul at Valparaiso, and, in the early eighties, Minister to Korea, where he rendered brilliant services. Otherwise, General Foote is a poet of some genius and great cultivation, and an accomplished and scholarly writer. His personality is admirably expressed in the sonnet which follows, addressed to the portait by Louis A. Robertson:

When Art's apt fingers almost show the mind,
And Genius doth unto the canvas lend
The look of life, the colors thus combined,
In an immortal masterpiece do blend;
Though skillfully and well, hereon are laid
The magic pigments, yet when Time shall stain,
And dust bedim, a voice from out the shade,
Shall echo on in an undying strain.
We know, white-souled and loyal-hearted man,
That unto them, who shall this picture scan,
Though it should be in some far distant year,
Thy face will be familiar, for the fame
Which now thy modest heart bids thee disclaim,
Shall still endure, and ever bright appear.

***

The coinage question leads in the most trivial conversations. Sixteen-to-one is a colloquilism of the clubs, the ferry-boats and the corner groceries. It is not a cheering, a humorous or an interesting topic, however important, and whatever gleam of fun it is possible to shed on its solemnity, is welcome. Here is one coinage story which seems new and is good. Two Gas Company Irishmen, seated on a length of pipe eating lunch, are discussing silver.

"Till me, Pat, fwhat do they mane by this 'sixteen to wan?' " asked the first.

"Shure sixteen to wan is the free coinage of silver, Moike," responded his friend.

"An' fwhat does that mane?" pursued the other.

"Why, free silver, me boy; it manes that silver will be free and we'll all get rich."

"Free silver, yez say?" grunted the first. He ruminated a while.

"Do they bring it to us, or do we have to go and get it?"

***

The capture and conviction of Oliver Winthrop is the consummation of an extremely clever piece of detective work. So adroit and suspicious a scoundrel as the ex-cemetery superintendent does not succumb to the ordinary devices of thief-taking. He must be stalked with other quarries, and there must be brains in the scheme of seizure. Of the guilt of the ruffian Captain Lees made no doubt when he heard the story of Millionaire Campbell. That was a step in itself. There comes, then, the question of discovery. In the capable brain of the Chief of Detectives a subtle scheme was conceived and put into execution with the assistance of a clever young woman who had never previously been employed by the department. The day after the abduction a pleasant but business-like young lady called on Mrs. Winthrop and asked for a private interview. She explained that Mr. Campbell had sent her to say that he cherished no ill-feeling against Winthrop, and had only disclosed what the papers had told to avoid scandal. All he desired was to hear no more on the subject, and to the speaker he had given a thousand dollars to assist Winthrop's flight—would she communicate, and if the husband was willing to fly, the gold would at once be forthcoming. Mrs. Winthrop said she knew nothing of his whereabouts, but sent the visitor to a mutual friend—a widow — who demanded, on the message being told her, to see the color of the Campbell coin. At the next call the diplomatic maiden was properly provided with a store of twenty dollar pieces, at the sight of which there was at once a change of demeanor. She left her address, and was assured, though Winthrop's whereabouts were uncertain, communication would be established and she notified as soon as possible.

There is the plot. The next step was to watch the brother-in-law of the suspect—a postoffice clerk, F. Craumer by name, whom Lees shrewdly imagined would be the medium of communication between his quarry and Mrs. Winthrop. A few days later, Craumer received a letter and summoned a messenger boy to carry it to his sister-in-law. The youngster was hardly round the corner when the myrmidon swooped down on him, confiscated the epistle, brought it and the bearer to the District Telegraph office, appropriated the contents and sent the missive on in the hands of another bearer, whose smartness could be depended upon. The letter did not disclose the whereabouts of Winthrop, though it was from him. He asked his wife to restrict her intercourse to the personal columns of the "Chronicle," and that she sign certain initials which he prescribed. Next day there appeared a line, with the specified initials, asking for a meeting, as she had some money. He responded through the same medium, suggesting Oakland, a certain corner and the time. There were other details consummating the scheme which succeeded beautifully, for instead of his wife and the money two officers were there with handcuffs, and the scoundrel nabbed like a rat in a trap, disguised beyond possibility of recognition. Altogether it was a cleverly worked scheme and its success is decidedly a feather in the cap of Captain Lees.

***

How the Captain has scored these latter months. Consider the Durrant case; it was admirably worked up. Not a thread missing nor a clue neglected. The conviction of the murderer was a carefully calculated climax. More noticeable even was the capture of Becker and Creegan, the most daring forgers in the country, who after plying undetected their nefarious schemes for years, shifted the field of their operations to San Francisco, and fell into the clutches of Lees. Winthrop, a careful and subtle villain, imagined himself safe from the police, but he too had to succumb. All this is excellent work that Captain Lees has done and reflects undoubted credit on his judgment and ability.

***

It is customary to attribute the saving of California to the Union to Thomas Starr King. The eloquent oratory of that patriotic divine undoubtedly contributed materially to the cause, but there are other observers who contend that his honors ought to be divided with the minstrel, Ben Cotton, who was at that time singing at Platt's Hall. A staunch Union man, Ben chose for his solo every night some national melody, "The Star Spangled Banner" or "Columbia." These were received with shouts of delight. Every night the audience, which grew larger as the excitement and feeling waxed more profound, thundered out the choruses and it became the proper thing among men and women, wrought up by the events of the hour, to flock at night to Platt's Hall and participate in the patriotism current there. I am sure that these swelling choruses and the strong enthusiasm they engendered decided many a waverer and made public opinion for Lincoln and the North in a way and degree no oratory could. I was reminded of this condition by the reception recently accorded a performer at the Orpheum, whose imitations of the Presidential candidates evoked outbursts of feeling apparently frank and sincere. In the range of his characters he came finally to Sewall and Hobart, who were very quietly received. He followed with Bryan whose appearance was greeted with an outpouring of cheers mingled with hisses. At the next appearance the artist is McKinley, and then the house comes down. Wild, tumultuous and rapturous applause greets him. If such an outburst may be regarded as signifying anything, surely it must mean the popularity of McKinley is greater here than anyone supposed. It is certainly a showing of strength that cannot but determine waverers. I believe this man during his visit made thousands of sound-money votes, just as he would have strengthened the cause of Bryan had the trend of feeling taken the other direction.

***

Now that the Supreme Court has decided that the County Government Act applies to San Francisco as well as to the State in general the municipal elections are shorn of much of their glory. There are offices to fill, it is true, but minor ones only. The exclusion of the county clerk, assessor and sheriff removes from the control of the nominators the patronage departments, so there are few rewards to offer the faithful. Some months ago when the question of application was first mooted certain of the officials met in conclave and devoted to the solution of the question some 5 per cent of their salaries. The resolution of assessment was generally acquiesced in, but several of the most prominent bureaucrats declined to put up. Curious to say, most of those who contributed are left out in the decision and the men who had laughed at the proceeding and refused contributions are benefited.

***

County Clerk Curry has aspirations. He feels himself a politician of consequence and proposes to utilize the unexpected two years of sway, which the Supreme Court has granted, to convert himself from an office-holder into a boss. The assumption that Curry is absolutely bound to the Spreckels chariot, so generally taken for granted, is without basis. It seems he is a party to the general disaffection which pervades Republican ranks, and it would surprise me not at all if the henchmen of the Sugar Boss were in the course of the next few months discharged from office. Curry would then devote himself to the acquirement of power, making his office force the nucleus of a political organization. It is not impossible that he will associate Phil Crimmins with his aspirations, and the twain together would certainly make themselves felt in Republican politics. Considering his wealth and standing it is peculiar so slight a degree of success and so little favor should have rewarded Mr. Spreckels' participation in politics. He is certainly not popular with his allies. It is doubtful if he really enjoys their loyalty, and no one would be surprised if his adversaries wrested from him the control of his Convention. I believe Mr. Spreckels to be an excellent friend and true to his own convictions, but it is certain he does not evoke loyalty in his followers.

***

The ascendancy of the Bimetallic League in the counsels of the Democracy is an achievement which rivals the Creation. This was the signal occasion of the conversion of an idea into a universe. The leaders of the League have followed suit in transmuting their ambitions into a party. The League is founded on expectations connected with the discovery of Charles D. Lane of the Utica mine. It inspired him with designs on the senatorship and anticipated the political assimilation of his dividends. With memories of the late Senator Hearst in the minds of its projectors it proposed incorporating the "good thing" to keep it in the family, but they found it more profitable finally to let out an interest in their expectations to the Democracy in return for a voice in the management of the party. Thus far no one has observed the dividends of the Utica swerving in their allegiance to Mr. Lane. Nor has he contributed his or any other mine-owners' money to the Democracy. In fact, the followers of Chairman Alford have had nothing for their submission to the League save the pleasure of unrestricted intercourse with the Calaveras Croesus who has proved the most moderate and conservative "good thing" ever issued to an unsuspecting party. Apropos of the League and its pretensions a prominent politician has drawn attention to the futility of its title. "Bimetallic, indeed," he said, "why, those fellows only represent brass."

***

In the good old days when George Hearst descended with his sack into the political arena no erudite, subtle or complicated plots were necessary to divert the flow of his simoleons. Indeed, he divided without loss of time or unnecessary ceremony and thought nothing of giving $25,000 to a campaign fund. But Uncle George had a princely generosity. His was a character beyond the scope or comprehension of this generation. His political operations were conducted on as broad a scale as his mining enterprises, and no one ever accused him of being "penny wise and pound foolish." The attempted raid on Lane reminds one, by way of antithesis, of the manner in which a former Democratic committee persuaded George Hearst into animating a procession. It was in the second Cleveland campaign and the Republican committee, plentifully supplied with protective funds, had organized and brought off with flying colors and an abundance of music a great parade. It was a tremendous affair and the Democracy gazed at the unrolling of its legions green with envy. Nothing availed but its duplication under more gorgeous auspices, and Bill English, who was then at the head of affairs, undertook to consummate the patriotic project. A pageant on the grandest scale was arranged—floats, bands, uniformed guards, banners and transparencies galore. All these cost money, and George Hearst was elected marshall in the hope that he would foot the bills. He did, but the time and manner of his settlement proved a serious embarrassment to all concerned. The day prior to the event, a Machiavellian Republican circulated among the bands and float-makers a rumor that the Democracy had not money enough to liquidate its liabilities. Considerable money was already owing instrumentalists for past services, and the leaders were persuaded to refuse to participate unless paid in advance. This ghastly suggestion created so much trembling among the musicians that when aligned ready to march a delegation was sent to English at the Palace

LI HUNG CHANG
FROM A PHOTOGRAPH PRESENTED BY THE CHINESE STATESMAN TO [illegible] BROUGHT BY M. TIENTSIN

Hotel with an ultimatum. It announced briefly, "No money, no music." Attempts to prevail on the good nature of the committee were unavailing. The pageant trembled in the balance. At the last moment they thought of Uncle George, who had just sauntered in, in battle array, to know what the delay was. It required $6000 to liquidate that procession, but Hearst was equal to the occasion. An hour was lost gathering in the gold, but it was the grandest, most enthusiastic political pageant ever witnessed, though it was noticed that Uncle George's head hung rather heavily as he rode in the van, and he was singularly deaf to the flattering congratulations which subsequently poured in upon him. It is said the night cost Hearst, all told, the sum of $12,000. He could have been an Italian Duke for half the sum.

***

Though the Exploration Company is diverting to California a certain per cent of the British capital frightened out of South Africa, I fear most of it is directed British Columbiawards. In the Rossland and Trail Creek countries, in which such rich discoveries of precious metal have recently been made, there is a veritable boom and much gold from London is arriving. A similar condition exists in the Kootinay district, already exploited, where some excellent dividend paying mines have already been developed. At the headwaters of the Frazer River, where Prentiss Maslin, well known in San Francisco, has located himself, there has been opened a splendid territory for placer mining, and the several men who have gone there from California are already wealthy. It is but natural that the Londoners should prefer to invest in their own colonies rather than build up regions in which sooner or later they may find themselves at a disadvantage. One never knows in California what new raid on exterior capital a hungry legislature may make, a condition which the shrewdest Englishmen have had good reason to realize already.

***

California is becoming the happy hunting ground of conventions. We have had Knights Templars, Hotel Men, Dentists, Doctors and Veterans. It is proposed now to persuade the Photographers to visit the Coast. Possibly the fact is not generally known, but there is a national organization of portrait makers, which meets annually at various Eastern cities. As they have never been to California, it would not be difficult to persuade them to visit us, and I think they would be generously welcomed. Louis Thors has the project in hand, and he will summon the local organization to participate. The gathering means an interesting exhibition of photographs.

***

An amusing predicament is that in which the Tulare county Republicans find themselves. Having gathered for the County Convention it was proper to go through the usual rigmarole of resolutions and endorsements. It seems, however, that the members were much pushed for time, and in order to accelerate things decided to endorse the platform which had been adopted two years before. The wiseacres in charge of the organization did not take the trouble to read its various clauses through to the bitter end—hence the story. The consequence is that the McKinleyites of Tulare county are positively pledged to free silver at the ratio of 16 to 1, for it seems the platform in question was put through when the State thought it wanted that metal at any price. The rest of the valley is laughing at these remarkable politicians and demanding they announce where they are at.

ROSETTE

AFTER BERANGER

In this, the heyday of your youth,
How can you sit and prate, my dear,
Of love and faith to one, forsooth,
Whose forty years are in the sear?
Time was, when my fond heart could pay
Its vows to one obscure grisette;
Ah, me! if only I, to-day,
Could love you as I loved Rosette.

Your grand equipage serves to show
The silks and diamonds which you wear;
Rosette, Rosette, her cheeks aglow,
Tripped by with roses in her hair;
Her eyes, despite my jealous "Nay,"
Provoked a word from all we met;
Ah, me! if only I, today,
Could love you as I loved Rosette.

In your boudoir, with satin lined,
The mirrors show your smiling face;
In her wee glass, I used to find
The image of a new-born Grace.
No curtains barred the morning ray,
And stars peeped in when sun had set;
Ah, me! if only I, today,
Could love you as I loved Rosette.

Your wit and fancy flash, until
The poet's heart is somehow stirred;
I do not blush to own it, still,
Rosette could scarcely read a word.
Her simple speech sufficed, alway,
To tell her love, and yet, and yet,
Ah, me! if only I, today,
Could love you as I loved Rosette.

Her charms were less than yours, God wot,
She may have loved me more, although,
I must confess her eyes had not
The fire of passion yours can show;
But then she had, I fain must say,
My youth, which I perhaps regret;
Ah, me! if only I, today,
Could love you as I loved Rosette.

LUCIUS HARWOOD FOOTE.

THE CALIFORNIA YACHTSMAN

Wind and Weather Conditions That Rule in San Francisco Bay.

A yacht race is generally a success in San Francisco Bay, when sailed in the summer months. In the channel a calm is almost an unknown quantity, and it is seldom that the boats do not finish within the time limit. There are none of those disheartening drifting matches so common in Eastern waters, for a twenty-mile breeze is the average, and thirty-mile zephyrs are not at all unusual. Our yachts are built and sparred for just these conditions. Even the little twenty-footers can go to windward under full sail in weather that would compel the Eastern crack forty-footers to double reef or run for it. The truth of these observations is proved by the fact that certain small Eastern yachts brought to this coast around Cape Horn on the deck of sailing ships have proved useless in California waters until their spars were cut down and their sail area reduced nearly a half. As for the big racing "single-stickers," with main booms a hundred feet long, we have no use for them. All of our yachts are of moderate size, singly sparred and rigged. It is not customary either to employ hired crews—not to any extent, at least. Our yachtsmen sail their own craft, generally cook their own meals and are their own captains, pilots, stewards and crew.

The yawl is the distinctive California rig. Although of late years many sloops and schooners have been built, nothing compares with the yawl for comfort, safety and ease in handling. Yachting, however, will never be the sport on this coast that it is on the Atlantic. The reason is the circumscribed area available for cruising. However extensive the San Francisco Bay one gets tired of sailing round and round its inlets and outlets, and few care to venture outside the Golden Gate. Generally the conditions prevailing there are rough and uncomfortable, and the harbors are few and far between. Here is where the Eastern yachtsman has the advantage. On the Atlantic one can cruise all summer and anchor each night in a different port. The prevailing summer winds, both here and there, are westerly, which makes an off-shore wind for the Atlantic and an on-shore wind for the Pacific. That this makes all the difference in the comfort of yachting any expert will tell you. It is an ideally luxurious and delightful sport there, and the New Yorkers know how to obtain out of it the highest degree of luxury and comfort. When it comes to seamanship, however, give the palm to California, for the wind and weather have made sailors of our young men.

The page of illustrations are all from snap shots made during the Inter-club Regatta on Admission Day. Possibly there are reasons, but it is curious that so few of the yachts used their gaff-topsails, even when going to leeward. Seldom, it is true, it is that a big club gaff-topsail is seen on any of our boats. In fact our yacht races are never so picturesque as in the East, when the prevailing light winds allow a huge cloud of light canvas to be carried.

Commodore Pero carried off the honors with his sloop Triumph. She was well sailed and owes her victory to speed and good seamanship. She rounded the windward stake-boat and broke out her spinnaker in excellent style. The Catherine got away with the Fawn, which was a surprise, as the latter had defeated the Catherine in the race for the Perpetual Challenge Cup, but I heard afterwards that the Fawn had strained herself and was leaking badly. She seemed out of form and loggy. It will be in order now to match the Catherine and Fawn over the Channel course. The Encinal course is not at all satisfactory. The element of luck enters too largely into conditions, and the wind is never steady.

There were the usual number of casualties. For instance, the Harpoon carried away her balloon jib sheet. The Aeolus, which had been carefully made ready for the race, black-leaded to the rails, and in perfect trim, lost her topmast. This put her out of the race, and she hove away for her moorings to make repairs. I remember one race some years ago, when General Payne, in the schooner Halcyon, in a contest off Marblehead, carried away both topmasts at the beginning of a race and yet came out a winner. There were no fouls or protests, and, after all is said, the race was one of the prettiest ever witnessed on the bay.

It is curious there has been so little yacht racing this summer. There are several new boats that have as yet had little chance to show what they can do. The new Pappoose, for instance, looks like a goer. She went over the course, but was not entered in the race, and as she has not yet been measured, it is impossible to give her corrected time. None of the larger schooners turned out. In fact, the larger boats, with the exception of the Chispa, have done little racing or cruising this summer, and the Corinthians with their little twenty and thirty-footers have had most of the sport to themselves.

The recent Inter-club race ends the regular season. Most of the yachts will now go into winter quarters. Sailing on San Francisco Bay is not either safe or enjoyable after October is out of its teens.

W. B. TYLER.

MRS. THORNDYKE-BOUCICAULT
FROM A PHOTOGRAPHIC STUDY BY THORS

1. Washing the fruit. 2. Packing peaches. 3. The drying yard. 4. Gatering prunes. 5. Peeling peaches. 6. Splitting peaches. 7. Ovens for cooking fruit in glass. 8. Dipping prunes.

VIEWS OF THE FLICKINGER COMPANY'S CANNERY AND ORCHARD

AN ORCHARD CANNERY

Facts and Details of Fruit-Packing in a San Jose Establishment.

Tons of fresh fruit spoil every week on the wharves of San Francisco at this season of the year. Tons lie and rot in the orchards. From all over the State comes the wail of the producer that he cannot harvest his crop at a profit, that with the cost of cultivation, picking, packing, boxing, freight, hauling and commission, he is out of pocket at the end of the autumn. This is doubtless true in many cases, for with present transportation facilities and other existing conditions, the fresh fruit market is almost sure to be congested just at the height of the season when the crop must be marketed or lost.

There is, however, a steady and increasing demand for canned and dried fruit of all kinds, and the fruit grower awake to his interests will see to it that he is prepared for the market that is least likely to be overstocked, and where his goods find ready sale at all times and months. Herein, I believe, lies the remedy for many of the ills of the fruit-grower. But the work of canning is not all that it should be, and in this, as in all other branches of the business, success or failure is attained through the minor things—constant care and attention to every detail, above all to cleanliness.

In my visits to certain of the large canneries of San Francisco, I have often been impressed and oppressed by the foul odors and unkempt fly-flavored surroundings, by the poor condition of much of the fruit, leaving with my appetite for canned peaches and pears fully appeased for that day at least, wondering, at the same time, if these are necessary accompaniments of the industry. It had occurred to me that the city is not the place for a fruit cannery; that if the grower could but arrange to can his own cherries and apricots, paying special attention to the quality of each package, he must command higher prices, and at the same time escape the consequences of a glutted market. This method would not only result in immediate profit, but would tend to raises the standard of the industry.

It was with much interest that, on a recent tour of the Santa Clara Valley, I saw my Orchard Cannery idea practically demonstrated, and that with most satisfactory results. It was in the establishment of the Flickinger Orchard and Canning Company, located three miles northeast of San Jose. Here is freshly packed fruit in abundance and an atmosphere of wholesome cleanliness, in striking contrast to the city institutions. A force of bright-faced girls were working on Lemon Cling Peaches, and it was most interesting to watch the process of transforming the luscious, ripe fruit just from the orchard into a table delicacy, and that with but slight loss of its original flavor. It is the rule here to can fruit on the same day it is picked, except Bartlett pears which improve by ripening off the tree. The main buildings are of two stories, 90 by 160 feet, and so arranged that the freshly gathered fruits pass in at one end and come out at the other packed ready for market. The peaches are hand-graded, according to size and quality. It is the rule to can only the "extra dessert" sizes, measuring two and a half inches in diameter. The smaller sizes are reserved for drying. Those selected are split in halves, pits and all, by a little machine carrying two circular knives, and are peeled by nimble-fingered girls. It is surprising to see how quickly and neatly the rich yellow fruit is denuded of its velvety coat. The best peaches are canned in "halves," while others are sliced. The next step is the packing, which is performed by another force of girls, each of whom is provided with a scale to determine quantities. Thence the cans pass on to the washer—a contrivance invented by Mr. Flickinger, which, it seems, is the best appliance yet invented for this purpose. A syrup made from fine white granulated sugar is added and the tops are set on. The cans are now ready for soldering, and are placed on revolving discs. Solder of approved quality is quickly applied. Boiling next. The tins are immersed in iron baskets in huge vats of boiling water, where they remain a varying length of time, carefully calculated according to the kind and character of the contents. A tiny vent hole is then made in each can; they pass back into the vats for a second, are quickly removed and the vent holes soldered up. This completes the process except labelling and packing, the tins being put up in cases holding twenty-four. The product is then ready for shipment.

About one million cans of the finest fruit is thus prepared each year. The Flickingers also put up a portion of their finest fruit in glass. This, that I have described, is but a section of the establishment. The drying is an important department, for there are dried in the orchard some fifteen hundred tons of fruit, for the most part prunes, peaches and apricots. It is interesting to learn that the care and attention lavished on the product is not wasted, as the fruit, both canned and dried, has gained first prizes and gold medals wherever exhibited. It has had awards at the World's Fair in Chicago and the Midwinter Exposition in San Francisco, among other honors. It is marketed in Europe, especially in England, where the brand is highly appreciated.

From the cannery I made a tour of the orchard, which embraces about 600 acres and contains some 50,000 trees, including Yellow Crawford and Lemon Cling peaches, Moorpark and Hamskirk apricots, Royal Ann and Black Tartarian cherries, Bartlett pears, Gages and French prunes. Some forty hands are employed throughout the year. In the harvest season there is a force of 500 at work—girls for the most part—from San Jose and the environment. When the fruit is thoroughly set on the trees in the spring, the thinning process begins. This means the removal of as much as 75 per cent of the green crop, leaving only the most promising specimens to mature. On an average upwards of $150,000 worth of canned and dried fruit is produced annually. No irrigation is necessary, a deep and constant cultivation being deemed sufficient, with the utmost care in spraying, grafting and pruning.

While this establishment may be on too large a scale to serve as a model for the ordinary Orchard Cannery, the process and the methods employed are worthy of study and of imitation. If every large orchard had its cannery, governed by the same methods, it would be an excellent thing both for the grower and the State.

THE HUNT LOOM

A California Invention Which Simplifies the Weaver's Art.

The importance of the Hunt Loom invention has at last obtained general recognition. The San Francisco dailies have described the device at length, and attention has been called to its valuable characteristics. Certain modifications in the machine made recently, have added to its value, and justify a more extended illustration of its merits.

With all the improvements that have been made in the weaving of cloth, one little point has till now successfully baffled every inventor, a little point which has cost the weaving industry of the world millions of dollars a day, and whose solution has taken almost as much time and money as would be needed to build a city. The difficulty lay in the method of placing in the filling or cross threads of the web. The old method of shuttle and bobbin involved an enormous loss of time and material, for whenever the bobbin became empty a certain amount of material was wasted, and its refilling meant stopping the loom hundreds of times every day. In this way three to four hours were lost out of every ten.

CARRIER

The great necessity, as every weaver in the world knows, has been for some method of obtaining a continuous supply of filling thread, and this is what the Hunt Loom and Fabric Company of San Francisco has just perfected. By means of their new attachment, all the filling thread is placed in the web, so there are no ends to waste, and no stoppages to lose time. The thread-carrier crosses the loom three and a half times a second, and will run without stopping. The invention has been thoroughly tested, and has proved that it can run constantly day and night, with one man to do the work which formerly required the services of at least ten. The reduction it insures in the cost of weaving makes its universal adoption a certainty.

It is hard to realize of what vast importance the weaving industry is to the world. Millions of tons of wool and silk and cotton are annually turned into cloth, involving millions of men and looms. For several hundred years, men have made every effort to find the cheapest and best methods. One hundred and ten years ago M. Joseph Marie Jaquard invented an appliance which disposed of the warp threads of the web so that figures and patterns could be formed. Paris recognized the importance of this by erecting a statue to his memory. Among all the improvements, however, the old shuttle and bobbin have until now remained unchanged.

BACK VIEW OF ATTACHMENT

The Hunt invention promises to be a source of enormous profit to the company, for the mechanism is so simple that the attachment can be placed on any loom at an outlay of less than ten dollars. There are not less than a million fabric looms in the United States, and some fourteen millions in Europe, and competition will eventually compel every one to adopt this device or go out of business. The company has received many bids for the construction of the loom from various machine shops throughout the country. The Bigelow Works of San Francisco proposes to construct the attachment by the thousand at $5 each, which enables the sale of the device at such a price as will command a profit of from $15 to $30 each. Already orders from Eastern factories for the attachment are being received. The attachment will soon be taken to George Draper & Sons, in Hopedale, Massachusetts, and as fast as possible introduced into all the weaving countries of the world.

Herewith is presented a photograph of the carrier, and a front and rear view of the attachment. When it is desired to set it on an old loom, the crossbeam of the lay (just under the reed) is taken out, and a new beam, to which the several parts of the device have been attached, is substituted. This operation can be performed in the space of a few minutes.

FRONT VIEW OF ATTACHMENT

Apropos of the company (a San Francisco corporation, by the way, with offices at 24 Montgomery street), it is interesting to learn that it has sold sufficient stock to form a working capital. The prospects certainly offer generous returns to the investors, which should ensure thousands for their small outlay. It is promised that there shall be no assessments, and also that the headquarters will remain in San Francisco.

AT A BABY SHOW

The Melancholy Misadventures of a Good-Natured Young Man.

"Madam," I observed, courteously, "your boy's ribbon is coming off."

"The child's a gurrul, sorr," was the indignant response, "the boys are a-wearin' pink, but mebbe yer culur bloind."

I stammered out an apology and backed away from the irate mother of a native daughter, in the direction of the weighing scales. A howl of distress at my shoulder caused my heart to leap up a couple of inches, and an icy voice broke on my ear:

"Only cripples and dudes carry canes, an' most of them knows enough to keep 'em out of folks' eyes. Or maybe you're an oculist working up a practice."

A hasty glance sufficed to show the lady's babe more scared than hurt, and I marched off as mad as a March hare. A bout of repartee with this female meant billingsgate, so with burning cheeks I beat a hasty retreat.

"Huch-a-bye, huch-a—Now, Voorsanger Levi you jusd quid your sneezin', don'd you see dad your clo'ses vill be ruined?"

I trembled. Hadn't I escaped the babies after all! Surely not! A watery-eyed infant of marked Hebraic features was busily engaged in catching a cold, while its keeper remonstrated. I inquired:

"What children are these, madam?"

"Dese vas the poys, de liddle gals vas on the oder side of de stand."

A spruce young man, wearing a look of fatherly solicitude was busily engaged in weighing tots of all sizes, colors and ages.

"Twinty-three pounds is it, ye sneak; don't yer dare lie to me. Wasn't it meself that weighed him at the fruit store on Folsom street five minutes before I come here—and nary a pound has it lost since then; yer can't fool me, young fellar."

The young man looked tired and bit his lip. His adversary was a swarthy Amazonian Hibernian, with eyes that glittered like steel.

"The scales don't lie, madam," he quietly rejoined. "See for yourself. Will I fill out the card?"

"Naw, yer fool; me husband was a stroiker, and the rascally railroad is runnin' this loike it runs iverythin' else," and snatching up her pride and joy she elbowed her way out of the crowd, pouring down maledictions on the unfortunate weigh r's head.

"A pretty boy, Miss," said I, pleasantly, as a rosy-cheeked infant very sociably stuck a greasy finger in my eye.

"Oh, yes, sir," she replied, "and oh, soo good. Won't petzie kiss oo gentleman?" she added to the rosy-cheeked babe. It happened, and after successfully removing a few stray golden locks from my mouth, I continued, "Pray what is his name?"

"Martin Luther Clancy, and his little twin sister's name is Princess Louise Clancy. They're nineteen months old, and I'll have me wages raised if they get prizes."

"Indeed! And where is their mother?"

"Well, sir, herself and their papa and Danny, that's the eldest son, went to Stockton, and I was told to bring the children out here. They're awful good, and never cry; does oo tootsy?"

"His face would be prettier were it washed," I ventured to suggest.

"Sure it would, sir. Would you mind holdin' him while I wet me handkerchief?"

I had just noticed two most estimable girl friends of mine eyeing me quite suspiciously, and I was preparing to withdraw, but ere I could collect my senses I had a burden of nineteen pounds of native son in my arms, and my friends had passed on without bowing.

"Won't you take the child up to the platform before the rush commences?" said a pleasant male voice beside me.

"Not mine," I managed to gasp out.

"No matter, as long as you have brought him here—"

"I didn't bring him here—I'm only holding—" but the man had escaped. Then a new danger threatened me. A certain youth whom I knew to be connected with one of the dailies was coming toward me with a something that looked like a kodak. I was penned in on every side by mothers and babies—click! It's over.

"I hope I haven't been long, sir, but I couldn't find no water. Oh, sir, what's the matter? Please don't swear—Martin Luther cryin', too—mean thing to hurt the poor little fell—"

But I heard no more, and if I did drink more than I usually do that night, who that has the least bit of sympathy will wonder. I'm keeping in doors to-day, in my present state of mind, for I'm sure the sight of a baby would set me insane.

D. C.

Frenchmen consume more alcohol than other Europeans, according to figures put before the Basel Congress for Alcoholism. In the computation the amount of alcohol in light wines and beer is included. The average annual consumption of alcohol per head of population is 13 quarts in France, 10 in Switzerland, Belgium and Italy, 9 in Germany and England, 4 in Sweden, 3 in Norway, and 2 in Canada.

ABOUT PERSONAGES

Li Hung Chang, the Chinese statesman, is of humble origin. His father was an ignorant woodchopper, and his mother spent her girlhood as a servant.

A French author, M. G. Deschamps, is trying to find out how far the character of modern fiction has affected the marriage rate.

An epilogue to the sensational trial of the Marquis de Nayve, who was accused of doing away with the legitimate son of his wife by throwing him from the cliffs near Castellamare, is the decree of judicial separation between him and the Marquise pronounced by a French civil court.

Lord Salisbury hates traveling and abhors the jolting of a carriage. For that reason he proposes to spend his vacation at Dover, in Walmer Castle, of which he has recently been appointed warden. He refuses all invitations which necessitate a trip, and though he spends his leisure studying electricity, he has never ridden in a motor-car.

"Coin" Harvey drew $2,500 out of the Metropolitan National bank of Chicago the other day, and insisted on receiving gold. After he had deposited the gold in a strong box in the safe deposit department he went home, feeling that at least some of the money he had made by his free silver book was secure in case the free silver ticket won.

The stories which have made Luciena Premelie Hirsch, the Baron's adopted daughter, the richest heiress in the world, are authoritatively denied. She was left but $200,000, and the Baron's executors control the capital. Her guardians being Hebrews, she will doubtless grow up a Jewess, though directions were given by her adopted father that his daughter should be allowed to follow the dictates of her own conscience.

The late Sir John Millais was a graceful speaker, but his speeches cost him a great deal of time and labor. A dinner was given at the Arts Club on Leighton's appointment as President, and Millais was in the chair. He made an admirable speech—so frank, so sympathetic, so eloquent, so unstudied. They congratulated him on it, saying they had no idea he had that gift of oratory, or could speak so well and so spontaneously. "Spontaneous," he said, "why, that wretched speech has kept me awake for the last five weeks!"

M. Thome, a millionaire, who began life as a journeyman stone mason, has just died in Paris, leaving a fortune of fifty million francs. He became intimate with Baron Haussman when he was reconstructing Paris, obtained large sums of money by giving information to speculators as to how the streets were to be laid out, and employed the money in buying up land along the line of the coming improvements, especially in the Marbeuf and Trocadero districts. His granddaughter married President Carnot's son, Ernest, two years ago.

Mrs. Zola, wife of the novelist, is a tall, dark, stately woman, who is devoted to her gifted husband. They have no children, and this has been advanced as the chief explanation of Zola's extravagances in money matters. His house at Midan cost a million francs, and the objects of art which it contains are worth three million more. One table in his drawing room cost two thousand dollars. Zola rises at 6, and spends all the morning at his desk, often writing six thousand words a day. After luncheon, he goes for a walk, and enjoys himself in the evening.

The new Shah of Persia, Mazaffar-ed-din, is most highly educated. He knows most of the Oriental languages, and is deeply read in the classical literature of the East. Besides, he is a great theologian, has studied Aristotle and Plato, knows French well, has a big telescope set up in his palace, is an excellent shot, and defers to the opinion of his wife — a princess of the royal blood of the Kadjars, who is all-powerful at the capital. On ascending the throne, Mazaffar-ed-din's first step was to abolish the taxes on bread, meat and other necessities of life.

There is but one monarch in Europe who can show the scar of a wound received in war. It is King Humbert. The latter, at the Battle of Custozza, which resulted so disastrously for the Italians, endeavored in vain to stem the tide of defeat, throwing himself repeatedly into the thick of it, and giving evidence of a courage that can only be described as heroic. Bleeding from a severe sabre cut, he was at length literally swept off the field of battle by his father's officers and by his own friends, who fully realized the irreparable injury that would be sustained by Italy in the event of the popular heir to the throne (as he was then) being either killed or captured.

Booker T. Washington, the colored principal of the Tuskegee Normal Institute, on whom Harvard University recently conferred a degree, lectured about the race question before a fashionable audience at the Channing Memorial Church in Newport. He was subsequently tendered a tea by Mr. Richard White, ex-Secretary of the Legation at London, where he met any number of prominent people — ex-Secretary Whitney, Senator Calvin S. Brice, Mrs. E. J. Phelps, and many more. To keep his school going Mr. Washington has to raise $100,000 per annum. Upwards of one thousand students are educated at Tuskegee.

Prince K. S. Ramjitsinji, the Indian cricketer, who heads the list of batters in England this season, both in the number of runs made and in his average, recently made one hundred and one hundred and twenty-five runs in the two innings of the match between Sussex and Yorkshire in one day. He has now made ten centuries in first class cricket in one season, a feat that only Dr. W. G. Grace had accomplished before him. Up to 1892 two separate hundreds in one match had only been made by Dr. Grace, in three different seasons; since then the feat has been performed once each by Mr. Brann, Mr. Stoddart, and by Storer, a professional, this year.

IN SOCIETY

Entertainments and Happenings In Town and Out.

With the exit of September the summer season may be said to end, and it were well, perhaps, to consider its success and incidentally to reflect upon what constitutes the harvest of a summer campaign. Is it the triumph of bud, belle, matron or modiste, and who may be said to reap the benefit?

Matrimonially speaking, which to the majority means winning one's spurs, the season may be accounted a failure of the direst nature, for not only are there no engagements to record, but if rumor boasts any truth, two have been ruptured. To the bud who flits on the wings of pleasure with few thoughts other than the enjoyment of the moment, the season has brought much bliss. The prizes of the paper chase, the triumphs of tennis have been hers, but the belle who regards her prospects seriously must groan over the inefficacy of her efforts, while the society matron sighs over the frustration of her dearest hopes. In the long run I fancy the modiste holds the trump card, for pretty gowns will always charm the eye of the beholder, even if the wearer receive but a scant measure of attention and are the one necessary adjuncht to the least fruitful season.

An interesting possibility is mooted. Certain Country Club men having given way to the pony races at Del Monte, talk of bringing off their annual "Shoot" at San Rafael. This would add much to the gaiety prevailing there this season. The question, I am told, is not settled, but it has been suggested and seriously entertained. Should it occur, there will be the usual pigeon shoot, together with horse races on the San Clemente track and the other familiar features, terminating with a ball in the evening. Should arrangements be entered into, undoubtedly the affair will take place before the end of September.

It is asserted that ,until the results of the elections be announced, there will merely be a feint at entertainment, for no one actually knows what the outcome may be. The Friday night parties are all to be cotillions this year, the assembly balls of a year ago being neither so popular nor so successful as the germans. This week has, if possible, been more utterly lacking in incident than its predecessor. At least there was the circus then, and the Eyres, Louis Parrotts and Goads gave box parties and the younger set were greatly in evidence. I noticed the Howard boys, Miss Blakeman, Miss Mamie Polhemus, Miss Ethel Keeney, Miss Charlotte Ellinwood and Miss Cathro Burton in a party one evening, chaperoned by Mrs. C. Jouett, displaying the deepest interest in the antics of the various freaks. On Saturday the Misses Helen, Edna and Georgie Hopkins gave a jolly yachting party to Benicia. There were twelve young people invited, among them Miss Therese Morgan, Miss Crockett, Messrs. Howard, Macondray and Jack O'Sullivan. They lunched on board, and as the afternoon progressed the wind sprang up, causing the girls to contemplate upon the story of Jonah and the whale and decry the pleasures of the briny.

Another affair for sweet charity is the Poster Show at Mrs. Duprey's, corner Laurel and Clay streets, on Saturday next. The exhibition is well worth a visit, as several of the local artists have sent originals, and there are some excellent productions by Eastern and foreign men. The entrance fee is very reasonable—ten cents only.

Mrs. Oelrichs and Miss Virginia Fair have gone out but little since their arrival here. It is easily seen their hearts are now in Newport, and that California to them is purely business, and disagreeable business at that. They were over with the O'Connors at San Rafael before the Hunt Club races, and have gone round a little among some of their old friends.

Another annual election at Burlingame. In spite of the maleficent predictions of disaster under the regime of the new board, the twelve months of its management have passed without injury to the institution. Instead of administering its affairs at a loss they have steered the institution safely through the rapids and currents and have brought it out with a profit of some $1,500—and that in the face of some sixty-five resignations. Considering the situation and various other things, it is an achievement to be proud of. It is the result, of course, of strict attention to economy. Nowadays at Burlingame there are no loose ends, no horses eating their heads off, no wild extravagances in any department, save, perhaps, the restaurant, in which the only serious loss was made. This department ran behind $3,500, and it now behooves the new board to devise means for ending the waste and converting this outgo into a surplus. The new board differs from its predecessor in that it includes F. S. Douty, A. B. Ford and Henry Scott. Joe Tobin and Will Crocker were re-elected, and the rest are holdovers. The new directors are decidedly acquisitions, having that business ability which is so valuable a factor in club management.

Polo is being persistently played at Burlingame these days, and preserves its pristine popularity. The heroes of the field are experiencing the effect of competition in that quite a number of the younger men have begun to play, notably certain young Howards, Tobins and Brewers, all of whom show considerable promise, and have all the requisite daring.

MISS EFF HOYER

Who has won three times in succession the annual tennis meets the handsome trophy awarded the winner of the Ladies' Singles.

The retirement to England of Talbot Clifton has made rather a change in conditions at the club house at Burlingame. The bachelor atmosphere which then pervaded the place has been dissipated, and it seems now as though the pretty rustic mansion on the hill would be allowed to subserve its original purpose. There is no reason why the comfortable rooms connected with it should not be used by the lady members as well as by the gentlemen. Just at present Mr. and Mrs. Joe Crockett and Mr. and Mrs. Frank Carolan are installed there, and their leading will doubtless be followed by other people next season. There is no reason why the club should not be as free as a hotel, and why all the rules governing such an institution should not be enforced there.

If Frank Newlands could be persuaded to remain long enough in California a number of improvements would doubtless be carried out at Burlingame. His latest idea is the construction of a number of cottages along the boulevard, between the station and the club house. Here are some delightful sites for small villas, which could be erected at a minor cost and rented at low figures, and they would undoubtedly be tenanted the summer through. He has about decided, I believe, to erect a series of rustic bungalows, framed on artistic lines, comfortable but simple, and Willis Polk has furnished a design to meet these exigencies. They will cost but little, and cannot fail to prove an excellent investment.

Among the events in anticipation is an informal tea to be given on Saturday by Miss Mabel Reed. Miss Reed is to leave for the East in about a month, and expects to spend the winter with relatives there.

Mr. Ernest Peixotto also announces his intention of wintering in New York. Before leaving, however, he will have an exhibition and sale of black and white studies at Vickery's, and canvases at his studio on Sacramento street.

Another of the peregrinators is Mr. Everett N. Bee, who leaves next week for Guatemala, where he will remain until the spring.

Major Hooper, who went south to recuperate after his severe attack of pneumonia, has been seriously ill in Los Angeles. He had been feeling in excellent health, and had sent for Mrs. Hooper to join him and Miss Hooper in Los Angeles. The weather suddenly changed, however, becoming exceedingly hot, which completely prostrated the Major and brought on an attack of enteritis. He is now convalescent and will return probably to town next week.

There is more or less of a glamour around an artist's life, but seldom in these fin de siecle days does one have an opportunity of coming across a veritable romance. Miss Jane Houston has, however, saved the Sketch Club from the annals of the commonplace and been married in most romantic fashion.

Some few years ago while studying in Europe she met a very talented architect who hailed from Boston, Mr. Kilham by name, who took prizes and distinguished himself in various ways. He fell in love, proposed, and was accepted conditionally, and a year passed by. He again urged Miss Houston to name a day, but she said perhaps in another year or so, and he was again put off. Last year she returned from abroad, exhibited some of her sketches at Vickery's, and later at the Fall Exhibition in the Hopkins Academy of Art, and received much praise, her Holland sketches being especially commended. Later she gave a most original luncheon, to which none but red-haired maidens were invited. Miss Houston has hair like burnished copper and dresses daringly in curious combinations of salmons, corals and all shades avoided by the ordinary red-haired damsel—but then Miss Houston has not the every-day complexion associated with red hair, and can afford to dress accordingly. But to return to the marriage. Some few weeks ago Mr. Kilham came out from Boston and insisted on being wedded immediately. As of yore Miss Houston persisted in postponing the day. At last he was obliged to return to the East, and said he would not go alone. The day came; he urged her to marry him. She consented; her mother went out and bought a wedding cake; she invited a few of her friends to lunch; the ceremony was performed, and they left by the evening train for Boston.

Talking of matrimony, the great event in Oakland is the Requa-Long wedding, which is to be a most elaborate affair, and to take place in St. Paul's Church. It is to be a regulation army wedding, with gaily colored uniforms, gold lace epaulettes and swords in abundance. The wedding dress is a gorgeous confection, the bridesmaids' gowns things of beauty, the trousseau, chosen by Mrs. Mackay in Paris, an exquisite affair.

I hear that the Deux Temps Club is to be reorganized and combined with the younger class, known a year ago as the "Little Ducks." It is to be hoped that there will be more discrimination shown with regard to admitting members than there was last season, when a rather mixed element was introduced, much to the disgust of the original members. Mrs. McElrath, the president, has plenty of executive ability and the enthusiasm necessary to make a successful club. Of the original Deux Temps Club, the girls are gradually being married. A few months ago Miss Claire Tucker became a bride; next month Miss Amy Requa, and a little later Miss Myra Prather will join the benedicts.

The Rosenstirn garden party at Berkeley was a jolly affair, about fifty young people being invited. The programme was especially interesting. Messrs. Beel and Bendix played, first the Kreutzer Sonata, then Mr. Bendix gave the Schubert-Liszt "Hark, Hark, the Lark," and "Margareth at the Spinning Wheel," and was greeted enthusiastically. Mr. Thomas Rickard sang Massenet's "Visions Fair." The most enjoyable number was Mr. Beel's solo, one of Liszt's Rhapsodies, which was played superbly. Afterwards the guests went into the grounds and refreshments were served beneath the trees. Mrs. Rosenstirn was assisted in receiving by Mrs. Clinton Day, Mrs. Ben Morgan, Mrs. von Ettlinger, Misses Edna and Ida Robinson, Miss Fox, Miss Delaney, Misses Emily and Francis Rosenstirn and Miss Carroll Day.

There is great excitement in Berkeley at present over Mrs. Morgan's German Fete which is to take place on Saturday, the 26th inst. The girls who are to assist are to wear German peasant costumes. There is to be a play, and altogether the event should prove interesting to a degree.

The new regime at the Hotel Rafael is highly successful. There is much rejoicing over the success of the Hunt races, and I am told another week is promised in the future. Contrary to the rule at such gatherings, there are no regrets. It is admitted that though Hobart preempted most of the prizes, there were other reasons for his success than the possession of the best horses. Rudolph Spreckels announces himself an active opponent of Prince Fortunatus, and will henceforth contest equine honors with him seriously. I am inclined to think that his Mohini would have given a better account of herself but for the unfortunate mishap of Mr. Archibald. He has purchased Gold Coin, and announces himself on the lookout for rapid ponies. Mrs. Spreckels is very comfortably installed at San Rafael, and will probably remain there until after the Horse Show. This week she has Miss McKinstry as her guest. I don't believe from all accounts that the kangaroo hunt will occur. For the success of this form of sport there must be open country. Of grounds of that nature there is nothing any nearer than Santa Rosa Valley, and there fences and ploughed fields would interrupt the chase. There is another hunt on the tapis for this afternoon.

A Teutonic dairyman delivering the morning's milk to a Washington lady remarked as he ladled out the fluid: "Dere vas anoder man shot last night." In what part of the city?" questioned the lady as she handed him a milk ticket. "I shust heard a doctor tell der policeman it vas between der duodenum und dot ilium—up in der northwest, I subbose. Vat kveer names der Commissioners are giving dose new streets up dere, ain'd it?"

DR. H. G. YOUNG—Bridges and teeth without plates a specialty. 1841 Polk street.

When the Eastern visitor reaches San Jose he is often at a loss to know where to go for a team. He will make no mistake, however, if he directs his steps to the Hotel Vendome Stables, headquarters of the Mount Hamilton Stage Company. From here the stage coach for the Lick Observatory sets out every morning, and there, too, you can find on call the fastest horses, the neatest and trimmest rigs and the tidiest equipments. F. H. Ross & Sons are proprietors.

Dr. C. W. Decker, Dentist, 806 Market Street

The Maison Riche serves an elegant dinner at popular prices.

The Original Swain's Bakery, 213 Sutter St., stands without a rival and has stood the test for years. The most delicious meals are served by gentlemanly attendants, and the management takes pride in having everything orderly. It is just the place for business men and ladies out shopping to lunch.

Chew Adams' Pepsin Tutti-Frutti. It is sovereign for indigestion and agreeable to the taste

Dainty and Refreshing

PAR EXCELLENCE

"THE UNIVERSAL PERFUME"

For the Handkerchief, the Dressing-table and the Bath.

Murray & Lanman's

FLORIDA WATER

Its fragrant, lasting sweetness exerts a subtile charm and never tires or cloys.

Ask your Druggist for the genuine Murray & Lanman's.

THE THEATRES

The Frawleys in "A Matrimonial Maze" at the Columbia.

"A Matrimonial Maze' is an uncommonly amusing little farce. There is just enough of it, and the spectator is left feeling pleasantly human and virtuous, for he is, or ought to be, flooded with gratitude to the author, as the matter which generally makes the fourth act (that tiresome and affronting appendage) is tucked away so deftly in the end of the third and last that one does not even notice it. In addition to this, the action of the play is rapid and continuous, the events fairly tumble over one another in their efforts to get out, and nobody is permitted to speak who cannot do so briefly and to the point.

The story is that of two young men, their tutor and other encumbrances in the shape of fathers, wives and would-be mothers-in-law. These two boys, "Dick Raddleston" and "Percy Tyndal," were left in New York under the care of a "Mr. Muggeridge" (full brother to "The Private Secretary," I fancy), who was to instruct them in most things except girls —they were to remain as unknown to his charges as Sanskrit. How clever Mr. Muggeridge was as instructor I can't say, but as a "sheep-dog" he was not what even the most charitable could call a great success. In fact, both of the boys took unto themselves wives, and brought them to the flat which parental affection and coin had provided for their monastery. In order to secure the continuance of their allowance, their wedding ceremonies were performed quietly, not to say secretly, and there were no cards. There were, however, numerous little things which men and the vulgar call lies. Mr. Muggeridge was lodged across the street where he drew his salary just as well as ever and enjoyed life much better. In the flat, you know, he was liable to fall over a bride and a neglected duty at any moment.

All went well until one day a letter arrived announcing that the old gentlemen intended to visit their dutiful celibates, and then Muggeridge's troubles began. He was warned that all feminine appurtenances were to be laid to his door, particularly hair-pins. "Gentlemen," he protested, "I will not have my reputation punctured by hair-pins." Poor man, he little knew his precious reputation was to be disfigured by an unmistakably feminine laundry-list and then utterly obliterated by two pretty wives. For, as luck would have it, Mrs. Dick Raddleston, encountered Papa Raddleston in the celibates' flat, and was necessarily introduced to him as Mrs. Muggeridge. Ten minutes after this painful deception, Mrs. Percy Tyndal bowed before her father-in-law as the same mythical Muggeridge.

Quite astonished at Muggeridge's luck the two old fellows leave with the sons for their villas in Yonkers full of a very natural admiration for Mrs. Muggeridge —blonde and brunette—and a strange desire to marry their children to their housekeepers' daughters, Ethel and Polly. The housekeepers were bribed (quite unnecessarily) to consent by offers of marriage from the old gentlemen themselves. For a time young Tyndal's and Raddleston's paths were strewn with girls and kisses, which they found very agreeable, in spite of the superior articles they had left in New York. The arrangement perhaps had a peculiar charm from the fact that the girls wanted to marry two unseen rivals, and walked in the primrose path of dalliance only temporarily and to deceive. Finally the two elder men grew tired of waiting for "Old Mugg's" pretty wife (blonde and brunette) to accept their invitation to visit them, so they went to New York separately, secretly and in great glee, returning to their respective villas with a Mrs. Muggeridge apiece. "So it fell on a day, on a bonny summer day" that "Mrs. Raddleston-Muggeridge" beheld her adaptable husband kissing Polly, the fiance so kindly provided for him by Providence and a thoughtful father, while "Mrs. Tyndal-Muggeridge" discovered her other half embracing Ethel. Of course the versatile young men declare that stern parents and not inclination are at the root of the matter, and Tyndal is rash enough to say there was nothing between him and Ethel. "No," replied Mrs. Tyndal-Muggeridge, "No, not even daylight."

This little difficulty is hardly adjusted before Messrs. Tyndal and Raddleston Sr., meet and confide to one another the object and result of their visits to New York. Each claims the pleasure of having escorted Mrs. Muggeridge to Yonkers with the persistency and choler characteristic of stage country gentlemen, the color of her hair nearly bringing them to blows. At last each produces his Mrs. Muggeridge and poor "Old Muggs" flies, coatless and forlorn, at the sight of the bigamy about to be thrust upon him. When asked later on why he ran away like that, he replied with a discreetness worthy of a pencil-will witness, "I was in a hurry." The "Matrimonial Maze" which ensues is not disentangled by the housekeepers' unaccountable desire to marry the old boys. I say unaccountable, for one is a "mush of concession" and the other an old autocrat.

The play is judiciously cast, with Clarke, Arbuckle and Worthing in the principal roles. At last Clarke has ceased to imitate himself. He may be imitating someone else, but that isn't so bad. To tell the truth, his Muggeridge is very funny, but suggests Gillette's Private Secretary. However, that fault lies quite as much with the playwright as with him. Perhaps no one else in the company could have made the monosyllabic elder Tyndal so natural as Power does. To walk about on a stage for two hours, say nothing but "Yes, Bob" and "No, Bob," and not look like a supe isn't as easy as it looks.

The boyish, immaculate Wingate was back again, enlivening the stage with his freshness and enthusiasm and doing very fair work. Mr. Arbuckle as "Bob Raddleston" had his usual role, that of a boisterous, apoplectic old chap with his heart in the right place and his brains in the wrong one. Blanche Bates had a small part with a fainting fit, and made the most of them both, but why did she wear a shirt-waist with a silk skirt? It is an incongruous combination and makes a woman look as if she were in a divided frame of mind as to her day's occupation. The black silk skirt is a bad idea with anything, but with the shirt-waist—the shirt-waist which shrieks for serge duck, mohair or cloth—it is dreadful. Hope Ross was as dainty and big bonneted as usual, with only Alice Pixley's muslin to rival her.

PEG WOFFINGTON.

dams' Tutti-Frutti Chewing Gum for Indigestion

DRAMATIC NOTES

Charles Walcot comes with "The Prisoner of Zenda" Company to the Baldwin, as do also Howard Gould, Walter S. Hale and others.

The Holland brothers will begin their tour of the coast next month. They have decided to produce "A Social Highwayman," among their other plays.

The financial success of the engagement of "Madame Sans Gene" has been far above the average of any attraction now playing in the East, West, South or North.

"On the Bowery" at the California Theatre to-morrow (Sunday) night for the last time. Steve Brodie and his play have been better received than either deserved.

The "Trilby" Company is expected to arrive here on the 24th inst. from Australia. The entire scenery arrived on the last steamer and is now stored at the Columbia Theatre.

Commencing with the engagement of "The Prisoner of Zenda" at the Baldwin the regular prices will prevail at the evening performances, while the afternoon presentations will be given at popular matinee prices.

Quite a number of pupils have made application to enter the new operatic department of the Columbia Theatre School of Dramatic Art. The first class will be limited to thirty members so as to make a complete chorus.

In order to play "Rosemary," John Drew has had his moustache shaved off, and the Rialto wonders if it will alter his popularity with the matinee girl. Rosemary is pronounced by Alan Dale a charming play and well worth seeing.

"The Pilgrim's Progress" is being burlesqued in London, and Christian, the hero, figures as a spry bachelor, and the progress is to be properly illustrated with modern temptations. Miss Grace Hawthorne, not unknown here, is to do Christian in tights. Surely, this is a sign of moral decadence.

The Frawley Company produce "In Spite of All" at the Columbia Theatre next week. It is an adaptation of Sardou's "Agnes" by the late Steele Mackaye. The motive is the effort of a wife to retain the love of her husband who is infatuated with a prominent dancer. There is a happy ending, though much in the way of trial and tribulation between.

The subscription lists for the Hinrichs-Beel symphony concerts are now open at Sherman & Clay's, Pacific Coast Music Co.'s and the Baldwin Theatre. The musical world is greatly interested and it looks as if the season is to be a great success. The idea of giving the concerts at a first-class theatre was a very happy one. Great care is being taken in the selection of the performers, and it is promised we shall have a better orchestra than has ever before been gathered together here.

A revival of Augustin Daly's comedy, "Divorce," with correct scenery and details is promised at the Alcazar Theatre on Monday night next. The cast is an excellent one and includes Mrs. Henry Vandenhoff as Mrs. Ten Eyck, Beatrice Lieb (her first appearance with the Alcazar stock company) as Fanny Ten Eyck, Amy Lee as Lu Ten Eyck, May Buckley as Flora Penfield, Mrs. F. M. Bates as Mrs. Kemp, Anita Bridger as Grace, and John T. Sullivan as Alfred Adriance. "Divorce," while affording much and hearty laughter, tells a story, and tells it well and carries a moral.

Some excellent specialties are promised at the Orpheum next week. Among them is Walter Leon, who though only nine years of age is as an actor the rival of the best of them. The Carpos brothers do some very clever acrobatic work, both on the stage and on pedestals. Riley and Hughes will be the new comedy feature. Many of the best acts from this week's bill are retained. Bellman and Moore, and Filson and Errol remain for next week, together with Abdullah, whose thrilling work on the high wire attracted so much attention, Ferguson and Mack, and Marguerite Ferguson and others.

Mr. Gustav Hinrichs, whose name has long been connected with the operatic history of the United States, has opened a studio in the Emporium Building, for the cultivation of voices, and for the finish of advanced vocalists. Mr. Hinrichs' career has been most successful, he having been for many years the leading vocal teacher in Philadelphia. In New York he was principal of the opera class at the National Conservatory of Music, of which Mrs. Jeanette M. Thurber was president and Anton Dvorak was director. The efficiency and thoroughness of his method is shown by the number of the most celebrated operatic singers on the American stage who were his pupils. The voice trial will be three dollars, which will be refunded when lessons are engaged. Mr. Hinrichs can always be seen at room 441, Emporium Building, on Mondays and Thursdays, between ten and twelve.

The supplementary and final week of grand opera at the Tivoli Opera House will be devoted to a presentation of Verdi's "Aida," commencing on Wednesday evening, Monday being devoted to a revival of "The Huguenots." Tuesday "The Bohemian Girl," with a grand double company. It will be the occasion of the first appearance of the celebrated young tenor, Mr. Rhys Thomas, late of the Carl Rosa and Mapleson opera companies. Mr. Thomas is a man of fine presence and possesses a splendid voice of excellent quality, range and cultivation. This is not the first presentation of "Aida" at the Tivoli. It was produced there as a Christmas performance in 1889, and had a run of twenty-one nights. Aida, the Ethiopian princess, will be sung alternately by Mme. Natali and Mlle. Ida Valerga; Ameris, the Egyptian princess, by Miss Bernice Holmes; Radames, the young soldier, by Sig. Fernando Michelena and Rhys Thomas alternately; Amonasro, the King of Ethiopia, Aida's father, by Sig. De Vries and John J. Raffael; Ramfis, the high priest, by Sig. Abramhoff. An enlarged chorus, orchestra and ballet will assist. Following "Aida," Balfe's "Satenella," with the talented soubrette, Elvira Croix Seabrooke, will make her first appearance, to be followed by Ferris Hartman's new burburlesque, "The Babes in the Woods."

Opening Day at Adcock's, the milliner of 10 Kearny street, partakes of the character of a social event. You see there any number of fashionable people in their newest gowns, and the deepest interest is evinced in the superb display of new hats. This year the gathering was very swell. The store has just been renovated and the taste shown in the selection of the decorations is characteristic of Mrs. Adcock. The ceilings are in white and gold; in the walls are set large French plate glass mirrors, and the general effect is brilliant.

The hats shown on Opening Day were very stylish and handsome. They are the newest Parisian models, chosen with the greatest care and indexing the excellent taste which Mrs. Adcock always displays. Those who were not fortunate enough to be present Opening Day should make an opportunity of visiting this charming and beautiful establishment, if it only be to see the decorations, which are superb.

MRS. PATRICK CAMPBELL

The distinguished English actress, whose representation of Paula in "Mrs. Tanqueray" made her a reputation. She is a woman of unusual fascination and personal charm.

Photo by Alfred Ellis, London

All we know about tea is in Schilling's Best Blend — a union of a few picked gardens from various parts of the world. It is roasted here in San Francisco.

$1.25 a pound — other flavors cost less. All flavors at grocers'.

THE MAHATMA AND THE PRINCESS,

Or the Modern Palace of Aladdin.

The thousand years had elapsed and the Princess Fatima was turning uneasily on her pillow, for the time during which the spell cast over her by the wondrous magic of the sage Mahatma was well nigh drawing to its close. And the sage Mahatma himself, according to the conditions imposed upon him by the casting of the spell, sat there silently awaiting the moment of her awakening.

It was a weird and wonderful story that of the Princess Fatima. Sprung from the royal race of the Caliphs of Bagdad, the blood both of the Abbasides and the Omayades coursed through her veins. She was in fact the direct descendant of the great Harona Alraschild, who had built the very palace in which she was lying scarce a hundred years before; for the thousand years during which the fair Fatima had been doomed to an enchanted sleep, measured from the spring of the year 896.

And it was on this wise that the spell had fallen. The Princess had been reared to a life of luxury and pomp. Each whim that she expressed, even her almost unuttered thoughts, had been ministered to by her attendants since the days of childhood. She had only to utter a wish, no matter how extravagant or impossible it might seem, but it was responded to by willing hands, no matter at what pains or at what expense. Lands and seas were ransacked and scoured, the air itself was called into requisition to minister to her wants, which grew ever more exacting day by day.

THIRTY MUSICIANS PLAYING SWEETEST MELODIES

But notwithstanding the care and anxiety of her ministers to do her bidding, there were certain demands that she gave voice to that could not be compassed by mere mortal means. She longed for the power to evoke the assistance of the genie, whose services were at the command of the possessor of the wonderful lamp of Aladdin, so that her behests of whatever nature might be instantly obeyed.

In an evil hour one of the palace courtiers, an old man, who had traveled much, spoke thus:

"Lady, in a distant land, many days journey to the North and East, there stands mountains of snow which no man had scaled. Hard by these mountains there dwell a strange community of men, who bend the forces of nature to their will, and who accomplish the marvels accredited to the possessor of the wonderful lamp. Mayhap if thou canst obtain the aid of one of these mystic dwellers on the mount, thy wishes may be fulfilled. But I warn thee a dread penalty attaches to him who invokes the aid of these strange people. There be ruthless conditions imposed upon those who seek the help of the Mystic brethren."

"I care not what the conditions be," replied the Princess Fatima. "Bring unto me one of the Mystic beings—what call you them? Speed to that far land—I perish while I wait!"

"Lady," responded the aged courtier, "they are nearer than you wot. It needs not to go to them, they come to you."

With that he commanded all the other attendants to leave the chamber, and when they had done so he cast a portion of incense upon a brazier which stood by, and therefrom arose a whitish smoke wherein, after he had muttered some strange words, there appeared the form of an ancient man of venerable aspect.

"Daughter, what wouldst thou with me?" inquired the strange visitor.

"I would have," replied the Princess, "in one palace and under one roof all that the heart can desire, the eye be satiated with, and the senses pleased. I would have textures from the looms of all countries upon earth, curtains and carpets, tapestries and cunningly devised upholsterings. I would have porcelain from the sunny Orient and vases and upholstered utensils from the cunning folks that have their workshops in the West. I would have rich viands, rare flowers, choice sweetmeats and delicious strains of music to cheer the heart withal. I would have the splendor of myriads of lamps to cast their glamour over me."

"And suppose I said," responded the sage, "that all this can be thine. Hast thou no distant friends?"

"I would annihilate space," replied the Princess imperiously, "and converse with my distant friends as though they were by my side."

"This and more shalt thou have, O daughter," answered the Mahatma impressively. "But by the rules under which I work there is one condition I must impose on thee, and if thou agreest thereto, then thou hast also one more wish to make."

"I agree!" exclaimed the Princess impetuously.

"The condition is that thou must wait a thousand years," replied the sage—"And thy wish?"

"Is that I may sleep sweetly till it come to pass."

The Mahatma waved his hand and and straightway sleep fell upon the Princess, and she and the chamber where she was reposing vanished from the ken of men. The palaces and the gardens of Bagdad likewise mouldered and faded during the centuries that slowly passed. Only the Princess and the Mahatma survived, the one in unconscious slumber, the other in ceaseless thought and vigil upon the Himalaya Mount.

At length the period arrived when it become incumbent on the Mahatma to redeem his promise, toward the accomplishment of which he had been bending his energies during the time the Princess slept. And this is how it came about that he was sitting by her side awaiting her awakening.

The Princess turned again uneasily upon her pillow and opened her eyes. The chamber was empty save for the presence of the white bearded sage who sat near.

"Azesba! Zelica! Zara! Where are my handmaids?" she exclaimed.

"Thou wilt not need them, Daughter," the old man replied. "Dost thou remember thy wish?"

"My wish of yesterday about the Palace that should contain all that heart can desire or senses crave? Aye, verily, do I," returned the Princess.

"Thy wish of a thousand years ago," replied the Mahatma, gravely. "It has needed the thousand years during which thou hast been slumbering, together with the deep thought and earnest labor of many men to accomplish thy desires. Come and see. We have far to travel, but what matters it when we travel with the speed of thought."

Then it seemed to the Princess Fatima that she rose into the air, with the Mahatma by her side, up through the Palace roof, and the white streets of Bagdad gleamed beneath her for a moment in the gaslight and were then left far behind them in the distance. And passing swiftly over land and sea and snowy mountain tops, she saw at length a great city beneath her, and together they descended in its midst, finding themselves upon a fair broad street, lined with stately buildings and thronged with a great concourse of people, clad in strange raiment, and on the further side of the street there stood a fair white building, fairer and noble and more beautifully fashioned than any that were around it. Then said the Princess:

"What is that great white building with the spacious windows and the vast entrances, towards which all these people dressed in holiday attire are flocking?"

And the Mahatma made answer:

"That is thy Palace, O Fatima, which contains all the marvels that thou speakest about and desired to possess. Let us enter in and view them."

So they straightway joined the throng, and Fatima perceived that she was now attired in raiment which pleased her much; the Mahatma too had strangely altered his appearance, and scarce would she have known him but for his flowing white beard. And together they passed through the spacious doorway and entered the vestibule of the palace.

Then did the Princess clasp her hands in glee, for stretching far away in front of her were fair rows of tall pillars, snowy white, while on either side, far as the eye could reach, there extended vast apartments filled with long counters, before which stood and walked groups of men and women, admiring the rich and beautiful wares that were spread before them by smiling and polite attendants. Then said the Mahatma:

"Herein thou seest the realization of thy wish, O Fatima! Name what thy heart desires, either of apparel for the head or for the feet, or whatsoever portion of thy person thou desirest to adorn, and in one or other of these apartments thou canst compass thy desire. Dost thou crave gloves for the hands, or shoes for the feet, silks from the looms of the Orient, splendid with Izrian dyes, jewels for thy neck, or for thy arms or for thy fingers; thou hast but to say and I will conduct thee thither."

And so they wandered on, moving from one vast hall into another, and much the Princess marvelled, and great was her delight to see the throngs of people who stood at the counters and bought goods for pieces of gold and silver money, some small some great, for it mattered not whether the article was great or small, it was supplied to the purchaser with equal ease and facility, each at its own price. And they went to and fro together, the Mahatma and the Princess, passing leisurely up and down the long apartments, and going from side to side viewing the wares upon the counters, till they reached the center of the building, which was fashioned in the form of a great white dome, having a cupola of crystal glass, through which the blue sky and bright sunlight shone, the dome being a hundred feet high and a hundred feet in diameter. And in the center of the dome stood a great circular structure, fashioned of costly and beautifullly polished wood, and decorated with cunningly designed railings and ornaments of bronze. And on a raised platform in the center of the structure sat thirty musicians playing sweet melodies on all kinds of instruments, and around it on the pavement were counters whereat were sold flowers and sweatmeats and cooling beverages for the women and cunningly devised preparations of fragrant tobacco for the men. And in a separate place wherein were tables and seats so that whosoever was weary might regale himself and be refreshed with an aromatic infusion of the berry of Arabia, or the leaf of China along with such light viants as his stomach craved.

"Art thou hungry, O Princess?"

"Not so, O Sage," she made answer, "but much traveling and sight-seeing of new things have made me somewhat weary and I fain would rest."

"'Tis well said," returned the Mahatma "for of a sooth we have covered much space already in our travels. Wottest thou that the halls through which we have passed cover eight acres of ground? Prithee ascend with me these marble stairs and I will conduct thee to some pleasant chambers, where thine eyes may begladdened with the sight of beautiful things, while thy limbs enjoy repose."

With that the Sage led the way to the upper region of the building, where were separate but open apartments, devoted to the exposition of all and sundry, the diverse articles of household use. One of these apartments was fitted up as a reception chamber, wherein were displayed tapestries and hangings of the rarest beauty and excellence. Another was in the similitude of a dining-room, the polished tables of which shone resplendent with cunningly wrought silverware and crystal goblets and glasses of most fine and delicate workmanship, representing the quality and beauty of the articles that could be obtained in the departments. Stil another was appointed as a library and reading room, where whoso listed might improve the mind with various forms of literature.

But the apartment in which the Princess Fatima took most delight and wherein she lingered longest, consisted of five chambers wherein were model figures of ladies arrayed in every style and fashion that the most experienced artists of the world have produced in these later days, and of these the chamber containing the silken fabrics of apparel was especially to her liking.

And so the hours passed on, and the Princess Fatima was so engrossed in the beauty and novelty of the sights that on all sides met her gaze, that she wot not that the shades of darkness were stealing over the Palace.

"Fear not," said the Mahatma, divining her thoughts, "neither be in haste to go. Presently thou wilt see a marvelous thing."

And lo! Even while he yet spake, the whole interior of the Palace was lit up with a radiance as bright and dazzling as the day. The dome alone, with its four thousand lights, was a veritable blaze of glory.

"In this Palace," explained the Sage, "there is no such thing as night. But methinks we should hearken to the calls of appetite."

"I would have thee know, O Princess, that the culinary department of the Palace cannot be excelled in any of the great cities of the world. And if thou desirest to make thy toilet first, lo! here is a handmaiden who will do thy bidding and assist thee thereto. I myself will also perform my customary eventide ablutions in the sanctuary set apart therefor, and we will meet anon."

When the repast was completed, greatly to the satisfaction of the Princess and her guide, they again listened to the entrancing strains of melody that filled the dome and watched the mirthful groups or sentimental couples who promenaded up and down the building.

"Much, verily, hast thou seen to-day of the marvels and splendors of the Palace, and yet thou hast not seen one tithe of the wonders it contains."

Full well has it been named EMPORIUM, for it is the repository, not only of all the good and necessary things which our nature craves, but of all the marvelous intentions and scientific appliances which this advanced age produces. Hereafter I will show thee where thou canst converse, with what men call the telephone, to all the quarters of the land. I will show thee the powerful engines which drive the machinery that supplies the tens of thousands of lights with which the Palace is lighted and explain to you the uses of the many miles of wire which are necessary to the proper performance of its functions. I will show the manner in which all moneys that pass across the counters are shot instantly through pneumatic tubes to a common receptacle, where each amount is automatically registered and stored. I will show thee where the army of eight hundred clerks and employees have all their daily wants attended to in the most attentive fashion. But the evening wears apace and we must return to Bagdad."

"NAME WHAT THY HEART DESIRES"

Maison Tortoni French Rotisserie, 111 O'Farrell street. Private dining rooms, banquet hall. S. Constantini, proprietor.

If you wish to look neat have your suits cleaned and pressed for $1.00. Bay City Clothing Renovatory, 221½ Geary, rooms 19, 20, 21. 'Phone Main 5859.

Hotel St. Nicholas, corner Market, Hayes, Larkin and Ninth. American or European plan. Ira R. and James H. Doolittle.

Once when Miss Geraldine Jewsbury, the writer, was staying with the Carlyles at Chelsea, a caller inquired for her. "Miss Jewsbury is here," said Mrs. Carlyle, "but she is in her room with a bad cold, and is reviewing a novel." Then she added, "I am sorry for the novel that is reviewed by Geraldine when she has a bad cold."

General Harrison's views on gold are so vigorous that Chairman Mark Hanna is afraid to entrust to him the answering of Bryan's speech. The ex-President will not be dictated to, though there is no question of his intention to take the stump for McKinley.

Dashaway—What is your idea of happiness?

Toperly—Continually satisfying a thirst you are unable to quench. Life.

"MARCH HARES"

A Strange Story of Life in London Town.

The heroine of "March Hares" (D. Appleton & Co.) appears to the hero as he sits idly on the parapet of Westminster Bridge contemplating suicide. It is his thirtieth birthday; he is the victim of a thirst for liquor, and he contemplates the years of an ill-spent life. At the crucial moment she is revealed—tall, with "much yellow hair of a noticeable sort, pale flaxen in bulk, but picked with lemon in its lights, about her brow. He mastered the effect of her fine face, with its regular contour, its self-conscious eyes, its dainty rose-leaf of a chin thrust reliantly forth above a broad, white throat." It is the heroine, of course.

Mosscrop recognizes her as a young woman he has seen in the reading-room of the British Museum, and he salutes her without the formality of an introduction. They converse, and the story that ensues reveals the career of both, with side developments of great interest, and a climax.

The story is an inspiration—at least the delightful first half of it, up to the return of the Earl of Drumpipes. This conclusion is obviously fitted to the events of the prefatory scenes which have the charm of a real spontaneity. One cannot imagine Harold Frederic spending years in the compilation of the episode of the meeting, as we are told he did in the construction of "Theron Ware." Surely it drifted into his mind, this story, or re-incarnated itself, out of some early memory of his own. However, the flavor and the essence of the story are in the manner of telling. The art of it may be gathered from a few extracts. It must be explained that Vestalia, the yellow-haired maiden, when she encounters the hero, Mosscrop, on the bridge, is destitute and almost hopeless. She has failed to find employment, and expelled from her lodgings, vainly searches for a place to rest. He notices the condition of her shoes, and invites her to breakfast.

"I tell you what we'll do," he broke forth. "We'll decree that it's your birthday, too, so that we can celebrate them together. That will be much more fun. And before we go into breakfast, I must get you a little present of some sort, just to mark the occasion. Come, you haven't anything to say about it at all. It's my affair, entirely."

He led the way along past several shops, and halted in front of a narrow window in which a small collection of women's boots was displayed. A man in shirt-sleeves and apron had just taken down the shutter, and stood now in the doorway, regarding them with a mercantile yet kindly smile.

"It is the best Parisian of make," the shoeman affirmed, to help forward Mosscrop's decision.

"You can see how different they are from ordinary English things," said David, argumentatively. "The leather is like a glove, and the workmanship—observe that! I don't believe any lady could have a more unique present than a pair of real French boots."

The girl had come up, and stood close beside him, almost nestling against his shoulder. He saw in the glass the dim reflection of her pleased face, and moved toward the door as if it were all settled. Then, as he stepped on the threshold, she called to him.

"No—please!" she urged. "I think we won't, if you don't mind."

"Of course we will?" he insisted, turning in the doorway. "Why on earth shouldn't we? It's your birthday, you know. Come child, you mustn't be obstinate; you must be nice, and do what you're told."

As she still hung back, shaking her head, he went out to her. "What's the matter? You liked the idea well enough a minute ago. I saw you smiling in the window there. Come! don't let a mere trifle like this spoil the beginning of our great joint-birthday. It's too bad of you! Won't you really have the boots—from me?"

"Well," she made answer, falteringly, "it's very kind—but if I do, I'd rather you didn't come into the shop—that is, that you went out while I was trying them on—because—well, it is my birthday, you know, and I must have my own way—a little. You will stop outside, won't you?"

This struck him as perhaps an excess of maidenly reserve. He smiled impatiently. "By all means, if it is your whim. But—but I'm bound to say—I suppose different people draw the lines at different places, but feet always seemed to me to be relatively blameless things, as things go. Still, of course, if it's your idea."

"No, if you take it that way," she said, "we'll go and get our breakfast, and say no more about it." She found the fortitude to turn away from the window as she spoke.

"If I take it that way!" The perverseness of this trivial tangle annoyed him. "Why, I consented to stop outside, didn't I? What more is demanded? Do you want me to pass a vote of confidence, or shall I whistle during the performance, so that you may know I am cheerful, or what? Suppose I told you that I had been a salesman in a bootshop myself, and had measured literally thousands of pretty little feet—would that reassure you? I might come in then, mightn't I?"

"No, you never were that—you are a gentleman." She stole a perplexed glance up at him, and sighed. "I should dearly love the boots; but you won't understand. I don't know how to make you." Looking into his face, and catching there a reflection of her own dubiety, she burst suddenly in laughter. "You are a gentleman, but you are a goose, too. My stockings are too mournful a patchwork of holes and darning to invite inspection—if you will have it."

"Poor child!" He breathed relief, as if a profoundly menacing misunderstanding had been cleared up. "Here, take this and run across to that fat Jewess in the doorway there. She will fit you out."

Presently she returned, with beaming eyes, and an air of shyness linked with complacent self-approbation which he found delightful.

"Oh, I should simply insist on your coming in now," she cried gaily, at the door of the boot-shop, in answer to his mock look of deferential inquiry.

After this episode the oddly-met twain go to breakfast together in an out-of-the-way Italian restaurant. Later on lunch follows. As they are subtle meals, and fitting so idyllic an occasion, this reproduction is most excusable:

"There surely was never such another breakfast in the world?"

She spoke with frank sincerity. Upon afterthought she added: "I don't believe any woman could order a meal like that. You men always know so much about eating."

Mosscrop leant back in his chair, crossed his knees, and took a cigar from his pocket. His mind ran in pleasurable retrospect over the dishes—a fragrant omelette with mushrooms, a sole Marguerite, a delicate little steak that had been steeped in oil over night, a pulpy Italian cheese which he never got elsewhere than here. The tall-shouldered, urn-shaped green bottle on the table still held a little Capri, and he poured it into her glass.

"Yes," he assented, "I find myself paying more attention to food as I get older. It is the badge of advancing years. It is a good little restaurant, isn't it? I come here a great deal."

"And that is how you are able to order such wonderful breakfasts for hungry young ladies. It comes of practice. Do they all enjoy it as much as I have?"

Luncheon hour came, and presented itself to Mosscrop as a welcome pretext to take a hansom. A certain formless apprehension of meeting some one he knew, though why this should be dreaded he could not for the life of him have told, had alloyed the pleasure of his ramble. They drove to another restaurant, this time a larger place in a more pretentious quarter, and though they had a little table to themselves, the room was full of others.

David knew about luncheons as well as breakfasts. He gave the waiter very minute instructions about having a grouse split and grilled, and he ran his eye over the list of champagnes with the confident discrimination of an expert. "I will give that number 34A one more trial," he said to the butler. "Cool it to 48, and we will see what it is like then."

Vestalia noted that he spoke to waiters in a soft, grave tone, with shades of gentle melancholy and of affectionate authority subtly blended in it, which he used to no one else. He produced the impression upon her of being at his very best at a table. She particularly liked him when he took the cork from the butler, and tenderly pinched with thumb and finger as he scrutinized it, and then smiled courteous approbation to the servant. This person wore a chain round his neck, and the bottle he brought was swathed in starched napery, and the girl observed both with the interest that attaches to novelty. But it was even more interesting to see how perfectly her companion presided over everything.

Next to the happy twain, who are, of course, merrier in the climax, the most interesting personage in the book is the Earl of Drumpipes, an economical and eccentric Scotch nobleman, who has a habit of wandering round the world in search of adventures, and returning after an absence of eigteen months, thus recounts to his friend Mosscrop the story of his travels:

"Where have you been the long year-and-a-half, Archie?"

"Just looking about me," replied the other, with nonchalance. "Bechuanaland for a time, but it's sore overrated. Then I had a shy at the Gaboon country, but there's a conspiracy among the niggers to protect the gorilla—I think he's a sort of uncle of theirs—and a white man can do no good by himself. I thought there might be some decent sport over in Brazil, where they advertised a revolution on, and I tried to travel around with the rebels for a while, but it wasn't up to much. You brought down an occasional half-breed Portugueser with epaulettes on, but you couldn't eat 'em, and you didn't want 'em stuffed at any price; and besides, when you came to find out, the whole war was merely a fight between two firms of coffee-traders in New York, and that wasn't good enough. I tell you what, though," he went on, with more animation, "Arizona is damned good fun. I haven't seen anything better anywhere than a good square cattle-lifter hunt. They got up three or four, just on my account, I imagine, after they found I could ride, and shoot at a gallop. The charm of the thing is that there's no close season for cattle-thieves, and they're game to the death, I tell you. I got potted twice, and once they let daylight straight through me. I had to lie up for repairs for nearly three weeks. They went and hung the fellow while I was in bed. We had words about that. I insisted it wasn't sportsmanlike, and that they ought to have given him a horse, and then sprung him out of a trap or something of that sort, and let him have a run for his money, the same as we do with rabbits that the ferrets bring up. But they couldn't see it, and so I turned it up and came north. They'll ruin the whole thing, though, if they don't chuck that foolish hanging business. The first thing they know, everybody'll stop running off cattle, just as a protest, and then their place won't be worth living in. It'll be a pity, because a cowboy gone wrong is really the best thing there is. He's as good as a Bengal tiger and a Russian wolf together, with a grizzly bear thrown in. You may quote me as saying so."

"I shall not fail to do so," said David. "And are the Americans so daft about lords and titles as they're made out?" he asked. "Did they humble themselves before the handle to your name?"

Drumpipes sat up. "Do you suppose I'm such an abandoned ass as to travel with a title?" he demanded. "Man, if you knew what it cost me, even without it, it would turn your hair grey. Ten dollars here, twenty dollars there, seven and a half somewhere else—one steady and endless drain on the purse, till the marvel is I was able to get out at al! And there's no third class on the railways whatever. It's just terrible, Davie! And as ill-luck would have it, I couldn't even come home steerage on the steamer. There were passengers that I knew in the first cabin, and so I had to throw away more money there."

Of course, from an orthodox, matrimonial point of view, one does not entirely approve of Mosscrop. He had been very drunk the night before, and though he seems to have given it up under Vestalia's influence, worldly wisdom teaches us that he is very likely to be so again. And she, poor little innocent outcast with the fairy-tale ancestry, might not be altogether welcome as a daughter-in-law. But why reduce it to real life? Why bother about the commonplace, unlovely future that might have resulted if it had not been a story? In real life Jack the Giant Killer would have had to stand a trial, and possibly a hanging, and Cinderella's lack of chaperonage would have been severely criticized. "March Hares" is a fairy tale with youth and love for the good fairies, and idleness and temptation for the bad, and poverty for the old witch that turns the princess into a waif of the streets. Of course the good ones triumphed, and the prince and princess lived happily ever after.

(For sale by William Doxey.)

LITERARY NOTES

It seems that the sole monument to Stevenson will be the fountain in the Plaza of this city. Lord Rosebery's movement for a Scotch Memorial meets considerable opposition. Andrew Lang objects because he alleges Stevenson is rather the idol of literary men than of the public, and besides, that, his gaunt figure offers no inspiration to sculpture. Robert Wallace of Edinburgh urges that Stevenson deserves not well of Scotchmen since he attacked Burns; besides, he urges that literary monuments should be postponed until posterity appraises the real worth of the artist.

Mrs. Craigie, whose new novel, "The Hunt Moon," has just been published, obtained the erudition with which her tales are so plentifully sprinkled at the London University. She explained recently to an interviewer that her nom de plume, by its plainness and crudity were intended as a sort of blow to my supposed sentimentality. "It has always been rather a joke," she added.

Thomas Hardy indicates an intention of converting "The Pursuit of the Well Beloved" into a full-sized novel. However risky this might prove for some authors it is no experiment for "the master," whose volumes have ere this appeared in sections.

A change in the management of that eminent publication, the "North American Review," is announced. David A. Maurs, who has so long been associated with General Lloyd Bruer, has become chief owner and editor, the latter having sold his stock to a company.

The heroine of "The Martian," Du Maurier's new novel, does not appear in the novel though she plays the leading role. There are other women, however, and the hero is introduced to the reader as a boy whose story is told by a friend and edited by Du Maurier.

George W. Smalley has gone to Europe to gather material for a short series of articles for "The Ladies' Home Journal." He will spend the two months' holiday granted him for the purpose by the "London Times" in England and Germany. Ian Maclaren's new short story, "The Minister of St. Bede's," the last he will write until after his American visit, will be published in the October and November numbers of that magazine.

Mother (to her boy sliding down the banisters)—Fritz, what are you doing there?

Fritz—Making trousers for orphan boys.—Fliegende Blatter.

When you are selecting a wedding or a birthday present, go to S. & G. Gump's, 113 Geary street. They have a magnificent variety, just arrived from Europe, from which to select.

Poodle Dog Restaurant, S. E. corner Grant Avenue and Bush street. Private dining and banquet rooms. Telephone 429. Blanco & Bruno, proprietors.

Fall Styles Neckwear and Hosiery at John W. Carmany's, 25 Kearny Street

Its Purity A Surety Of Its Excellence

Vina Brandy

Accept No Substitute None So Good None So Pure

Vina Distillery Co.
819 Market St., S. F.

MENNEN'S BORATED TALCUM

TOILET POWDER

Approved by Highest Medical Authorities as a Perfect Sanitary Toilet Preparation

For infants and adults. Delightful after shaving. Positively relieves Prickley Heat, Nettle Rash, Chafed Skin, Sunburn etc. Removes Blotches, Pimples; makes the skin smooth and healthy. Take No Substitutes. Sold by druggists or mailed for 25 cts. SAMPLE MAILED (Name this paper) FREE

GERHARD MENNEN CO., Newark, N. J.

HEALTHFUL! INVIGORATING!

CRECIENTE

Imported Sea Salt for Bathing

SOLD BY DRUGGISTS AND GROCERS

ITO, SOTOMI & CO.

Successors to
JAPAN CURIO TRADING CO.

Japanese .·. Art .·. Goods

116 SUTTER STREET
SAN FRANCISCO

Wedding Invitations are properly engraved and in correct form, at ROBERTSON'S

ELECTRIC..

Supplies
Construction
Repairs

CALIFORNIA ELECTRICAL WORKS
409 MARKET STREET

FRANK K. LANE G. WHITFIELD LANE

LANE & LANE

Attorneys and Counselors

Room 202
Crocker Building, San Francisco

Union Iron Works

BUILDERS ELECTRICAL MACHINERY

AGENTS FOR STORAGE BATTERY

Ziska Institute : 1606 Van Ness Ave.

School for Girls. English, French, German. Thirtieth year begins August 3d.
MME. B. ZISKA, A.M. Principal.

FINEST ON THE MARKET

BEWARE OF IMITATIONS

EEL RIVER CREAMERY

SEE THAT THIS STAMP IS ON END OF SQUARE

A FINE GRAIN DELICIOUS FLAVORED BUTTER

If you appreciate a DELICACY
Ask your Dealer for the BRAND

Columbia Theatre.
FRIEDLANDER, GOTTLOB & Co., LESSEES AND MANAGERS

SOMETHING NEW BY
THE FRAWLEY COMPANY
And the last week but one
Commencing Monday, September 21st
Sardou's

NOT SENSATIONAL, NOT MORBID, NOT VULGAR, NOT STUPID, NOT HARMFUL — IN SPITE OF ALL — A REVELATION, A TRUTH, A STUDY, A WARNING, IRRESISTIBLE

Adapted by Steele Mackaye

September 28th, Farewell Week. Secure your seats now

Tivoli Opera House
MRS. ERNESTINE KRELLING : : Proprietor and Manager
The Grand Opera Season!
Monday, The Huguenots. Tuesday, The Bohemian Girl. Wednesday and every evening during the rest of the week, Verdi's Divine Opera
AIDA
Spectacular Grand Opera in Five Acts
The Casts include Mme. Natali, Mlle. Valerga, Bernice Holmes, Michelena, Thomas, DeVries, Raffael, Abramoff, Boyce, Napoleoni, etc.
Gorgeous Scenery! Elegant Costumes! Grand Accessories
Next SATANELLA
Look out for THE BABES IN THE WOOD
Popular Prices : : : 25 and 50 Cents

Orpheum
O'FARRELL STREET, BETWEEN STOCKTON AND POWELL
Week Commencing Monday, Sept. 21
MORE GREAT VAUDEVILLE STARS
WALTER LEON
The Child Actor, Mimic and Vocalist
Riley & Hughes, Plantation Comedians and Dancers
The Carpos Bros., Wonderful Acrobats
Abdullah, Mlle. Alma, Lew Hawkins, Bellman & Moore, Filson & Errol, Ferguson & Mack, Marguerite Ferguson, and others
Reserved seats 25c; balcony and box seats and opera chairs 50c. Matinees Wednesday, Saturday, Sunday

Alcazar Theatre
O'FARRELL STREET, BETWEEN STOCKTON AND POWELL
BELASCO, DOANE & JORDAN, Lessees and Mgrs.
Last performances of the Great Military Comedy, OURS
Commencing Monday, September 21, an elaborate revival of Mr. Augustin Daly's Famous Comedy
"DIVORCE"
With a Great Cast, Magnificent Costumes, New Scenery, Handsome Furniture, Correct and Perfect Details
Prices: 15c, 25c, 35c and 50c. Matinees Saturday and Sunday: 15c, 25c and 35c.
Telephone Black 991. Secure seats in advance

THE : CHUTES, : CASINO
And Greatest Scenic Railway on Earth
Open Daily from 1 to 11 p.m.
EVERY EVENING AT TEN O'CLOCK
ANTONIO PIRRI
Will COAST THE CHUTES and Land in the Lake on a Safety Bicycle
A Great Bill in the Casino
QUENNA DE REIN, from Koster & Bial's; BELLE KIRBY, Queen of Sword Walkers; THE ROYAL JAPANESE ACROBATS; A MILE BICYCLE RACE ON THE STAGE; and a Host of Attractions.
ADMISSION 10 CTS.
Children, including Merry-Go-Round Ride, Five Cents

BONESTELL & CO.
Dealers in PAPER
Fine Coated Papers a Specialty
401-403 SANSOME ST.,
San Francisco, Cal.

AMERICAN OIL AND PAINT CO.
19 Spear St., San Francisco
MANUFACTURERS OF
High-Grade Lubricating Oils
Compounds and Grease
DEALERS IN PAINTS AND PAINT OILS
Estimates Given on Lubricating or Painting Work

BAY STATE OYSTER HOUSE AND GRILL ROOM
15 Stockton Street
Oysters served in all styles. Orders for Theatre Parties given special attention
M. M. ADLER, Prop.

MATRIMONIAL TALES

The Question Solved.

They were coming away from the theatre, and they fell to discussing the young couple who sat in front of them.

"They are evidently married," said the girl in the Persian waist. "I noticed that they didn't exchange a word while the curtain was down."

"Nonsense; they are merely engaged," said the girl in the black gown. "I heard him tell her that he did not consider the leading lady even pretty."

"Perhaps they are merely brother and sister," suggested the young man of the party.

"No, they weren't," said the girl in the Persian waist; 'he'd have gone out between the acts if he was only her brother, while an engaged man wouldn't want to leave her, and——"

"And a newly married man would not dare to," broke in the black gown.

"She took off her hat as soon as she came in," remarked the young man. "That looks as if she was married and in the habit of consulting the feelings of some one else."

"Or that they were not really engaged yet and she wanted to show him how considerate she could be," said the girl in the black gown.

"Or that she was merely conscious of having pretty hair," said the girl in the Persian waist. "Will you wager a box of chocolates that they are not married?"

"I—I'd rather you ladies would settle it between you," said the young man hastily. "You have so much more insight in such matters, you know."

"There they come now," said the girl in the Persian waist. "Let us notice what they do, and perhaps we can decide. If they are merely friends, they will stop for cream, soda and——"

"If they are engaged, she will tell him how hungry she is, and they will stop for supper," said the young man bitterly.

"While if they are married," went on the girl in the Persian waist, "he—there, what did I tell you?"

The couple paused before a cigar shop, and he went in, while she waited at the door.

"You were right," said the girl in the black gown; "they are married."—Chicago Times-Herald.

A Cincinnati "Enquirer" reporter was sitting in a cable car behind two colored women. "Why, Sal," said one of them, "whar has you been dis long time? How is the old man?"

"Didn't you hear de news?" was the answer. "I's done leave my ole man. He and me am part and dat settles de matter. I's going to get a divorce."

"How you do talk, Sal. Bill was de third husband you left. What's de matter wid you, anyhow?"

"Well, you see," answered the injured wife, "I might want to marry again. I's tried three. Bill was good before we married, but you can never tell how dem men will act after dey get you. But I's agoing to try once more."

The last the reporter saw of the two was their entrance into an office building whose occupants were largely lawyers.

Mr. Kuhe, the eminent pianist, tells in his "Musical Recollections" of being asked to play at a large London "squash," in the mansion of a duchess, at which the talking entirely drowned the music. He proceeded to amuse himself by practicing three times over a work he was to play at a concert the following day. No one was any the wiser, and the hostess made the most complimentary and "discriminating" remarks to the artist in drawing distinctions between his various "pieces."

Ill-Tempered Babies

are not desirable in any home. Insufficient nourishment produces ill temper. Guard against fretful children by feeding nutritious and digestible food. The Gail Borden Eagle Brand Condensed Milk is the most successful of all infant foods.

THE OVERLAND LIMITED

"The Overland Limited," via Union Pacific, takes only three and a half days to Chicago, and only four and a half days to New York.

The Union Pacific is the only line running Pullman double drawing-room sleepers and dining cars, San Francisco to Chicago, daily, without change, and composite buffet smoking and library cars between Salt Lake City, Ogden and Chicago. Only one change of sleepers to New York; dining car service the entire distance.

Upholstered Pullman tourist sleepers San Francisco to Chicago daily without change. Personally conducted tourist excursions to St. Paul and Chicago every Friday.

Tickets and sleeping car reservations at general office, No. 1 Montgomery street, San Francisco. Reservations secured in advance by all Trans-Atlantic steamship lines. Tickets on sale to and from all points in Europe. D. W. HITCHCOCK, General Agent, San Francisco.

Occidental Restaurant, 337 Bush street. Headquarters for tourists. Separate rooms for families. Meals a la carte. Lunch 50c. Best French Dinner in the city, 75c. Joseph Munier, proprietor.

REMOVAL
Rountrees English Chocolate, Kohlers Swiss Chocolates, and all brands of Foreign and Eastern Confectionery, imported by . . . .
W. L. GREENBAUM,
of 205 SUTTER ST., will, after December 1st, be found in large and commodious quarters at 128 POST ST., Bohemian Club Bldg.

THE PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU
510 MONTGOMERY ST., S. F.,
Reads all papers on the Pacific Coast, and supplies clippings on all topics, business and personal.

PUTNAM'S POEMS

There is announced a volume of poems by Frank Putnam, a Chicago poet, whose verse as originally published in the Chicago "Times-Herald" has been extensively copied through the country. There is feeling and strength of expression in the following extracts from the advance sheets:

The End of It All.

Ah! the end of it all—
Of this life that we live;
Of the blows that we get
And the blows that we give;
Of the joys and the griefs
That to each of us fall—
Blind humanity dreams
Of the end of it all.

The lover who yearns
For affection denied;
The prince in his hall
And the pauper outside;
The parent whose darling
Lies under the pall—
Each mournfully dreams
Of the end of it all.

Since God in his love
For his children denies
This glimpse of the end
To humanity's eyes,
Let each bravely answer
Life's manifest call,
And rely on the Lord
For the end of it all.

The Coward Kings.

A sultan sat on a crumbling throne—
And the Christian kings took stock of his lands.

The sultan's troops slashed right and left
With sword and dagger. A Christian fell
At every sweep of a pagan blade.

Old England's long, slim fingers curled
Lovingly over the sultan's gold.

The sultan's soldiers snatched wee babes
From mothers' breasts and dashed their brains
Ferociously out on the frozen earth.

Austria, Germany, Italy, France,
Saw and were silent. The sultan sneered.

Where maids and matrons shrieking ran,
The sultan's hirelings struck them down
And ravished and slew them where they lay.

The word passed over the shuddering earth,
But never a nation raised its hand.

God! for a year of the brave old days
When Christian sword smote pagan lance,
Swung by the knight of the snow-white cross!

The Rich and the Poor.

The room was narrow and mean and bare
Where the baby gasped for breath;
The mother murmured a hopeless prayer
That died in the hell of the blazing air
For the fields of her girlhood, cool and fair,
While the infant fought with Death.
A wee form lay on the ragged sheet
That was wet with a mother's tears;
But its white soul rose through the blinding heat
That sank like a pall on the squalid street—
Ah! Death took all that her heart held sweet
And left her the lonely years.

O, you that in purple and silks abide,
Had the babe no claim on you?
Had the mother's prayer at her darling's side
No power to pierce through the walls of pride?
Do you owe no debt to the Man that died?
Did He leave you naught to do?
Add not God's wrath to the human hates
That fester in garrets dim;
I tell you the rage of the ages waits
And crouches low at your mansion gates;
God's brotherhood only its thirst abates—
Go forth in the name of Him!

Old Journeyman Days.

Those days were the days when a cooper knew
He was more than a cog in a wheel;
Then he merrily traveled the country through,
And he flaunted the rose but never the rue,
As the shops had plenty for all to do
Wherever we made appeal.
His wage was good and his arm was strong,
And his soul was free from care;
So he sang at his toil the whole day long,
The happiest heart in a rollicking throng,
Doing nor thinking no mortal a wrong,
And finding the whole world fair.

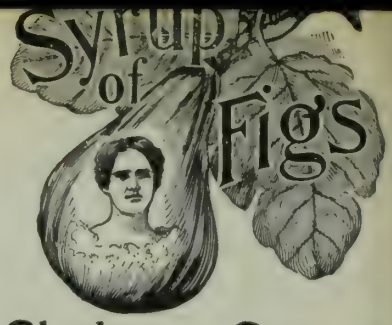
And on Saturday night,
With the lasses bright,
And the glasses clinking gay,
The hours sped by
Till the dawn drew nigh,
Ere he sought the homeward way—
The dawn drew nigh
In the eastern sky
Ere he homeward bent his way.

He had no wife and he had no child,
Nor never a home for long;
And the parson told him his course was wild—
That his age would taste like a stream defiled,
If he wandered on like a fool beguiled
By the voices of drink and song.
But his years were few and his blood was hot,
And the lasses were fair and kind;
So he heard the parson but heeded him not,
And I venture to say that he clean forgot
The good man's praise of the pious lot
And the joys of a holy mind.

For on Saturday night,
With the lasses bright,
And the glasses clinking gay,
The hours sped by
Till the dawn drew nigh
Ere he sought the homeward way—
The dawn drew nigh
In the eastern sky,
Ere he homeward bent his way.

—Frank Putnam.

The Maison Riche serves the best lunch in the city for 75 cents.



Gladness Comes

With a better understanding of the transient nature of the many physical ills which vanish before proper efforts—gentle efforts—pleasant efforts—rightly directed. There is comfort in the knowledge that so many forms of sickness are not due to any actual disease, but simply to a constipated condition of the system, which the pleasant family laxative, Syrup of Figs, promptly removes. That is why it is the only remedy with millions of families, and is everywhere esteemed so highly by all who value good health. Its beneficial effects are due to the fact, that it is the one remedy which promotes internal cleanliness, without debilitating the organs on which it acts. It is therefore all important, in order to get its beneficial effects, to note when you purchase, that you have the genuine article, which is manufactured by the California Fig Syrup Co. only, and sold by all reputable druggists.

If in the enjoyment of good health, and the system is regular, then laxatives or other remedies are not needed. If afflicted with any actual disease, one may be commended to the most skillful physicians, but if in need of a laxative, then one should have the best, and with the well-informed everywhere, Syrup of Figs stands highest and is most largely used and gives most general satisfaction.

—No—
Tariff
No freight on
"STANDARD" SHIRTS
They're made here and they'll stand comparison with any other shirt under the sun.
TRADE N.B. MARK
Standard
NEUSTADTER BROS., Mfrs.
SAN FRANCISCO

BAJA CALIFORNIA
DAMIANA BITTERS
"Damiana" is a powerful aphrodisiac and special tonic for the sexual and urinary organs of both sexes and a great remedy for diseases of the kidneys and bladder. For weak nerves these bitters are invaluable, and leading physicians recommend them as the greatest invigorator known. Long-winded testimonials are not necessary. "Damiana" Bitters are known on their merits. (Send for Circular.)
NABER, ALFS & BRUNE, Agents
323-325 Market St., S. F.

S. F. CARPET BEATING AND RENOVATING WORKS
D. MACKINTOSH & CO.
Successors to S. S. Ferguson & Co.
Renovating, Laying and Refitting Carpets a Specialty
Telephone South 36 — 23 and 25 10th St., S. F.

SCOTT & McCORD
HAY AND GRAIN MERCHANTS
OFFICE, 615 SIXTH ST.

CHAUNCEY M. DEPEW, the famous orator, statesman, railroad president and millionaire, in an interview said of his recent visit to Del Monte: "I visited Monterey, and I call it the most beautiful place in the world. Monte Carlo cannot compare with it. Its seventeen-mile drive is unparalleled for fineness."

When Mr. Depew says it is the most beautiful place in the world he knows what he is saying, and means it, for he has seen pretty much all the beautiful and interesting places in the world many times over . . . . .

The Tavern of Castle Crag, the most beautiful, attractive and accessible of all mountain resorts, will open for the reception of guests June 1, and will close October 1, 1896.

GEORGE SCHONEWALD, MANAGER

CAMPING

Season 1896

Reduced Rates for Campers' Excursion Tickets

To the following Resorts, situated on the lines of the Southern Pacific Co.

Santa Cruz Mountains

ALMA, LAUREL, FELTON
BEN LOMOND, WRIGHTS, GLENWOOD
BOULDER CREEK

Shasta Region

SWEET BRIAR CAMP
SHASTA SPRINGS SHASTA RETREAT
MT. SHASTA CAMP

For information as to Ticket Rates, Routes of Travel, etc., address or call at any Ticket Office of Southern Pacific Company, or at

General Passenger Office
No. 4 Montgomery Street, Second Floor

Or at City Ticket Office
613 Market Street, Grand Hotel, San Francisco

ILLUSTRATED FOLDER MAILED FREE ON APPLICATION

WM. H. MENTON
Excursion Passenger Agent

RICHARD GRAY
General Traffic Manager

T. H. GOODMAN
General Passenger Agent

Pacific Coast Steamship Co.

Dispatch steamers from San Francisco for ports in Alaska 9 a.m. July 3, 13, 18, 28, August 2, 12, 27.
For British Columbia and Puget Sound Ports, July 3, 8, 13, 18, 23, 28 and every fifth day thereafter.
For Eureka, Humboldt Bay, S. S. Pomona, 2 p.m. July 5, 8, 12, 16, 20, 24, 28 and every fourth day thereafter.
For Newport, Los Angeles and Way Ports, 9 a.m. July 2, 6, 10, 14, 18, 22, 26, 30 and every fourth day thereafter.
For San Diego, stopping at Port Hartford, Santa Barbara, Port Los Angeles, Redondo -- Los Angeles -- and Newport, 11 a.m. July 5, 8, 12, 16, 20, 24, 28 and every fourth day thereafter.
For Ensenada, San Jose del Cabo, Mazatlan, La Paz Altata and Guaymas, Mex., S.S. Orizaba, July 3 and 25th of each month thereafter.
Ticket Office: Palace Hotel, 4 New Montgomery St.

GOODALL, PERKINS & CO.
General Agents
No. 10 Market Street, San Francisco, Cal.

A. K. DAGGETT

Drawing of Deeds and all Legal Papers a specialty

NOTARY PUBLIC
14 Montgomery St., S. F.
Telephone 305

Coolgardie Gold Fields

FREMANTLE, AUSTRALIA
First Class $220 Steerage $110
Lowest Rates to CAPE TOWN
S. S. "Australia," Honolulu only, Tuesday, Sept. 22, 1896, at 10 a.m.
S. S. "Mariposa," via Honolulu and Auckland, Thursday, October 15, 1896 at 2 p.m.
Ticket Office 114 Montgomery St.
Freight Office 327 Market St.
J. D. SPRECKELS & BROS. CO., General Agents

The German Savings and Loan Society

526 California St., S. F.

Capital actually paid up in cash	$1,000,000 00
Deposits December 31, 1895	30,727,586 59
Reserve Fund	750,000 00
Guaranteed Capital	1,200,000 00

OFFICERS
President, B. A. BECKER
First Vice-President, EDWARD KRUSE
Second Vice-President, DANIEL MEYER
Cashier, A. H. R. SCHMIDT
Assistant Cashier, WM. HERRMANN
Secretary, GEORGE TOURNY
Assistant Secretary, A. H. MULLER

DIRECTORS
B. A. Becker, Edward Kruse, Daniel Meyer, H. B. Russ, H. Horstmann, Ign. Steinhart, D. N. Walter, Nic. Van Bergen, Emil Rohte
Attorney, W. S. Goodfellow

San Francisco Savings Union

532 CALIFORNIA ST

Deposits June 30, 1896 - $23,657,219
Paid Up Capital and Surplus - 1,594,085

ALBERT MILLER, Pres. E. B. POND, Vice-Pres.
LOVELL WHITE, Cashier

DIRECTORS
GEORGE W. BEAVER ROBERT WATT
THOMAS MAGEE GEO. C. BOARDMAN
W. C. B. DE FREMERY DANIEL E. MARTIN
ALBERT MILLER PHILIP BARTH
E. B. POND

Loans upon San Francisco and Oakland Real Estate, and Farms and Farming Lands in the country.
No charge is made for pass book or entrance fee.

Mutual Savings Bank of San Francisco

33 Post Street, below Kearny, Mechanics' Institute Building
Guaranteed Capital, $1,000,000
JAS. D. PHELAN, Pres, GEO. A. STORY, Cashier
S. G. MURPHY, JOHN A. HOOPER, Vice-Pres.

DIRECTORS—Jas. D. Phelan, S. G. Murphy, John A. Hooper, James Moffitt, C. G. Hooker, Frank J. Sullivan, L. P. Drexler, Robt. McElroy, Jos. D. Grant.

Interest paid on term and ordinary deposits.
Loans on approved securities. Deposits may be sent by Postal Order, Wells, Fargo & Co., or Exchange on City Banks.
When opening accounts, send signature.

ROYAL EXCHANGE ASSURANCE

OF LONDON
Incorporated by Royal Charter A. D. 1726
Capital Paid Up, $3,416,100 Assets, $21,584,413
Surplus to Policy Holders, $8,980,251
ROBERT DICKSON, Manager
B. J. SMITH, Assistant Manager
NATHAN & KINGSTON, San Francisco Agents
501 Montgomery Street

Aachen and Munich Fire Insurance Co.

of Aix La Chapelle, Germany
Capital, $2,250,000.00
Total Assets, $6,854,683.45
United States Department
204 Sansome Street
VOSS, CONRAD & CO., General Managers

When You Leave Town

place your valuables in the

SAFE DEPOSIT VAULTS
OF THE
FIRST NATIONAL BANK
CORNER OF BUSH AND SANSOME STREETS
Office Hours, 8 a. m. to 6 p. m.

BIDS

FOR

Concessions and Privileges in Yosemite Valley

OFFICE OF THE YOSEMITE COMMISSIONERS,
San Francisco, August 11, 1896.

In accordance with Rule XXXIV of the Rules and Regulations governing Yosemite Valley and Mariposa Big Tree Grove, adopted July 13, 1896, sealed bids are hereby invited for the for the following concessions and privileges in the Yosemite Grant for the year beginning November 1, 1896, and ending October 1, 1897, viz.:

First—For keeping a livery stable and conducting a general livery business in the Valley, and also for the rental of the Royal Arch Farm and Stables.

Second—For rental of stable and coach house on Georgia Avenue for stage headquarters.

Third—For rental of hotel, outbuildings and grounds at Glacier Point and privilege of conducting a hotel business at that point.

Fourth—For rental of store building and privilege of conducting a general merchandise business in the Valley.

Bids must be presented to the Secretary on or before

Monday, October 12, 1896

at 12 o'clock M., at office of Commissioners, San Francisco.

Bids must be accompanied by sufficient guarantee that contract shall be carried out by bidders to the satisfaction of the Commissioners. The Commissioners reserve the right to reject any and all bids.

JOHN F. SHEEHAN,
Secretary and Treasurer,
Room 25, Tenth Floor, Mills Building, S. F.

NOTICE TO CREDITORS

ESTATE OF OSCAR J. PETERSON, DECEASED

Notice is hereby given by the undersigned, A. C. Freese, Administrator of the Estate of Oscar J. Peterson, deceased, to the creditors of and all persons having claims against the said deceased, to exhibit them with the necessary vouchers, within four months after the first publication of this notice, to the said Administrator, at room 35, Chronicle Building, the same being his place for the transaction of the business of the said estate in the City and County of San Francisco, State of Califofnia.

A. C. FREESE,
Adm'r of the Estate of Oscar Peterson, deceased.

J. D. SULLIVAN, Attorney for the Administrator.
Dated at San Francisco, August 12, 1896.

THE CALIFORNIA STATE FAIR AT SACRAMENTO

THREE WEEKS.
SEPT. 1ST TO 19TH
GRAND PAVILION DISPLAY.
ELECTRIC MOTIVE POWER TRANSMITTED FROM FOLSOM
SEVENTEEN DAYS RACING
CASSASA'S EXPOSITION BAND.
DON'T FAIL TO EXHIBIT TO ATTEND
EXCURSION RATES.

ASSESSMENT NOTICE

Alta Silver Mining Company

Assessment No. 53
Amount per share, 10 cents
Levied September 7, 1896
Delinquent in office, October 12, 1896
Day of sale of delinquent stock Nov. 2, 1896

J. E. JACOBUS, Secretary
Office, room 33, Nevada Block, San Francisco

ASSESSMENT NOTICE

Gould & Curry Silver Mining Company

Assessment No 79
Amount per share, 15 cents
Levied September 1, 1896
Delinquent in office, October 5, 1896
Day of sale of delinquent stock, Oct. 27, 1896

A. K. DURBROW, Secretary
Office, room 69, Nevada Block, San Francisco

ASSESSMENT NOTICE

Occidental Consolidated Mining Co.

Assessment No. 24
Amount per share, 10 cents
Levied September 2, 1896
Delinquent in office, October 8, 1896
Day of sale of delinquent stock, Oct. 29, 1895

A. K. DURBROW, Secretary
Office, room 69, Nevada Block, San Francisco

Pacific Towel Co.

Telephone 1780 No. 9 Lick Place, San Francisco

GEO. E. MOORE, Proprietor

Good Appetite

Is restored and the disordered Stomach and Liver invigorated by taking a small wineglassful, before meals, of the celebrated . . . . . .

Peruvian Bitters

CHARLES S. WHEELER ERNST H. LUDWIG

Ernst H. Ludwig & Co.

THE MODEL AMERICAN CATERERS

Supply Wedding Breakfasts, Luncheons, Dinners, Matinee Teas and Receptions on shortest notice. Also Terrapin Entrees Luncheons and Dinners. Ice Cream, Cake, &c.

Telephone 2388 1206 SUTTER STREET

We Have Appointed

Coburn, Tevis & Co.

OUR AGENTS FOR

CHOCOLATE MENIER

MENIER & CO

HIRSCH-KAHN & Co.
MANUFACTURING OPTICIANS
IMPORTERS OF OPTICAL GOODS
PHOTOGRAPHIC APPARATUS & SUPPLIES ETC.
333 KEARNY STREET
SAN FRANCISCO CAL.

COTTON SAIL DUCKS

22-inch, in all numbers. Medium, Soft and Hard

ALSO

Heavy Naught, Wagon and Draper Ducks
From 30 to 120 inches wide

Monumental and Imperial Ounce Ducks

Manufactured by Mount Vernon Company Baltimore

Murphy, Grant & Co. Pacific Coast Sole Agents

It Makes the Hair Grow

Canadian Vegetable Tonic

MRS. E. E. McLEAN, Physician for the Hair

Hours 10 to 12, 1 to 6

St. Ann's Building, San Francisco

COMET OOLONG

The oldest and most reliable brand of Tea on the market. Sold only in ½ lb papers at 20 cts. per paper.

ALL GROCERS KEEP IT

Removal Sale

The whole of my stock at 1212-18 Market Street is now for sale at an immense reduction from the usual prices, before removal to

New Store, 721 Market Street
in the Bancroft Building

Suits to Order from $10 Trousers to Order from $3

CHAS. LYONS, London Tailor

STORIES OF THE DAY

The late Mr. Allingham used to walk with Carlyle in the evening, when Carlyle would "rave at everything and propose nothing." One evening, on returning to the gate, Mr. Allingham ventured to say, "I have listened to you with great pleasure, Mr. Carlyle, but I do not entirely agree with you." "Allingham! Allingham!" returned the injured sage, "you always will have the last word!"

An aged man sauntering across a Cleveland street was rudely jostled by a youthful wheelman. The collision tumbled the rider off and the old gentleman promptly grabbed him by the ear. "Durn you," he said with considerable asperity. "I've a great mind to take you across my knee and spank you good." But he did not do it. He just held the young fellow a minute and then let him go. "Why didn't you spank him, uncle?" said a bystander. "Well," replied the old man, "I certainly would, if I hadn't been a leetle afraid that mebby it was a girl."

* * *

In his "Travel and Talk," Rev. H. R. Haweis tells a story about the levees held at Government House, Adelaide, in the early days of South Australian prosperity. "The Adelaide nob of the period—a very early one—regulated that all those who presented themselves at his 'Court' should wear a dress coat. The number who aspired to the honor of presentation was small in those days, and only one possessed a tail-coat. So, after he went in, made his bow, and came out, it was arranged that he should hang the coat on a tree for the next one, and so on. But this took time. The Governor got impatient, and, on inquiring the cause of delay, it is said he burst out laughing, and suspended the oppressive regulation until such time as the colony advanced to live more generally up to tail-coats.

* * *

A story is told by "Le Figaro" of the first performance in Rome of Offenbach's "Orphei au Enferno." It was in 1868 and all plays had to be inspected at the dress rehearsal by an ecclesiastical commission presided over by Monsignor Randi. The well-developed actress who took the part of Venus had begun her first song when she noticed the censors whispering and expressing disapproval. She stopped, asking what was wrong, and was informed that her dress was cut too low in the neck. She was confused, and at once threw a shawl over her shoulders, when Monsignor Randi called out in French, "Oh, not now, Mademoiselle; you need cover them only at the public performance."

* * *

A numoer of clergymen gathered to hear testimony to the life and influence of a departed colleague. One after the other they rose in their places to tell what they owed to his genius, his high spirit, unswerving loyalty to duty, splendid courage, rare scholarship, and philosophic insight. At the door listening stood a slender woman, who had been during his life nearest to him of whom they spoke. They were all silent. She looked at them, her face full of pathetic regret, and her voice trembling with reproach, and said: "Oh! if you loved Edward so, why didn't you tell him of it while he lived?"

* * *

Sargent S. Prentiss, the lawyer and orator, while on the stump was engaged in a political discussion with an opponent who was dull and spoke "against time" so that Prentiss might be at a disadvantage. It was late when he desisted, and as Prentiss rose, a jackass in a neighboring pound began to bray. When the animal grew tired and ceased, Prentiss, casting a comical look at his unfair opponent, said: "I did not come here to-day to reply to two equally eloquent speeches." Then he sat down amid the cheers of his friends.

* * *

While making a stump speech in favor of Henry Clay's election to the presidency, says the "Youth's Companion," Mr. Prentiss was interrupted by a rude fellow's advance toward the stand with a banner, on which was inscribed, "Hurrah for Polk." No sooner did the orator see the motto than with a comical smile he exclaimed: "Fellow-citizens, you have now before you the sum and substance of all the arguments of the opposite party—'Hurrah for Polk!'"

* * *

An American lady had secured Italo Campanini, the Italian tenor's, signature for her birthday-book, and wrote under it, "First tenor in the world." Later on she met Ravelli, another Italian tenor, and begged for his, which he gave to her; but he was so wounded at the unqualified eulogy of his rival that he wrote, "Luigi Ravelli. Me too," under Campanini's name.

For health and strength: Damiana Bitters.

A SAVING OF ONE-HALF

Baggage transferred to trains or steamers and return. Trunks, 50c each for the round trip. Morton Special Delivery, 650 Market street and 408 Taylor street.

Among the many great Financial Corporations on the Pacific Coast, none rank higher than the

FIREMAN'S FUND INSURANCE CO.

Its Agents are found throughout America, and its Record for Prompt and Equitable Settlement of All Honest Losses is Firmly Established

D. J. STAPLES, President WM. J. DUTTON, Vice-President B. FAYMONVILLE, 2d V.-Pres., Sec'y
J. B. LEVISON, Marine Sec'y LOUIS WEINMANN, Asst. Sec'y STEPHEN D. IVES, General Agent

THE GRILL ROOM SERVICE
—OF THE—
PALACE HOTEL

Has been extended to what was formerly the City Restaurant. This immense room, which has a direct entrance from Market Street is known as - - - - -

"THE LADIES' GRILL ROOM"

NEW DEPARTURE—CHARACTERIZED BY PROMPT SERVICE—MODERATE CHARGES

Health Seekers are Byron Seekers

Byron Hot Springs

Contra Costa Co., Cal.

Seven springs—seven different kinds of mineral water—cure seven times seven different diseases. Ho! ye rheumatic and dyspeptics!

The California Hotel

SAN FRANCISCO

ABSOLUTELY FIRE-PROOF

HOTEL RAFAEL

SAN RAFAEL

Open All the Year Round
Fifty Minutes from San Francisco

Average winter temperature 64 degrees. Both hotels strictly first-class. Modern, Exquisite and Home-like. Both under the personal supervision of General Warfield.

R. H. WARFIELD & CO.
Proprietors.

For those who appreciate Comfort and Attention

A QUIET HOME CENTRALLY LOCATED

OCCIDENTAL HOTEL
SAN FRANCISCO

WM. B. HOOPER, MANAGER

Golden Eagle Hotel

GRAY & TITUS, Proprietors

A MODERN FIRST-CLASS HOTEL

SACRAMENTO, CAL.

Marshall F. Jones
Merchant Tailor
Room 113 and 115, Phelan Building
SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.

THE LICK HOUSE

Occupies the block bounded by Montgomery, Post and Sutter Streets

IT IS—
——scrupulously clean;
——accessible to all street car lines and places of amusement;
——conveniently situated for business men;
——a quiet, model place for a family to spend the winter;
——moderate in price, yet first-class in every particular.

AMERICAN OR EUROPEAN PLAN

K. B. SOULÉ, Manager

CRESTA BLANCA WINES

AWARDED
THREE HIGHEST AWARDS
AT

THE ATLANTA EXPOSITION

OF SIX MEDALS
AWARDED TO CALIFORNIA

Cresta Blanca Wines

OBTAINED THREE

WETMORE-BOWEN CO.

140 Montgomery Street
Under Occidental Hotel

Ask your Blacksmith to shoe your horse with

PHŒNIX HORSE SHOES

GIVE THEM A TRIAL

ORDER YOUR CARRIAGES AND COUPES
OF THE
PACIFIC CARRIAGE CO.
At Baldwin Hotel
200 Sutter Street, corner Kearny
48 Eighth Street, or
St. Nicholas Hotel, Market and Ninth Streets
Steamer and Train Service a specialty 'Phone 1950

H. S. BRIDGE & CO.

Merchant Tailors

Many Novelties in Imported Wear. Shirts to Order a Specialty.

622 Market Street, San Francisco
(Upstairs opposite Palace Hotel)

Brushes For barbers, bakers, bootblacks, bathhouses, billiard tables, brewers, bookbinders, candymakers, canners, dyers, flour mills, foundries, laundries, paperhangers, printers, painters, shoe factories, stablemen, tar roofers, tanners, tailors, etc.

BUCHANAN BROS.

TEL. 5610 609 SACRAMENTO ST.

BRUSH MANUFACTURERS

TERRA COTTA PRESSED BRICK FIRE PROOFING

GLADDING, McBEAN & CO.
1358-1360 MARKET ST.
WORKS, LINCOLN CAL.

This Paper not to be taken from the Library
CALIFORNIA STATE LIBRARY

THE WAVE

VOL XV. No. 39 SAN FRANCISCO, SEPTEMBER 26, 1896 PRICE 10 CTS.

JAMES D. PHELAN

NOMINATED BY THE DEMOCRATIC MUNICIPAL CONVENTION AS ITS CANDIDATE FOR MAYOR OF SAN FRANCISCO

FROM A FLASHLIGHT PHOTO BY B. C. TOWNE

THE WAVE

Is published every Saturday, at THE WAVE Building, No. 24 Montgomery Street, San Francisco.

Subscription, $3.00 per year, $1.50 six months, 75 cts. three months. Foreign subscriptions—countries in postal union—$5 per year. Sample copies free on application. The trade is supplied by the San Francisco News Co., 210 Post Street; east of the Rocky Mountains by the American News Co., New York.

THE WAVE is kept on file and is for sale at Brentano's, 17 Avenue de l'Opera, Paris, France; 31 Union Square, New York City; 1015 Pennsylvania Avenue, Washington, D. C.; and 206 Wabash Avenue, Chicago.

Advertising rates and all other matters pertaining to the business of the paper, address THE WAVE, 24 Montgomery Street. Eastern Agent, E. Katz, 230-235 Temple Court, New York.

HARRISON M. PARKER, Business Manager

Entered at the San Francisco Post Office as second-class matter

THE WAVE PUBLISHING COMPANY

SAN FRANCISCO, SEPTEMBER 26, 1896

CONTENTS

Editorials	2-3	Serenade: by L. H. Foote	9
The Making of a Dollar	4	The Street Singer: by H. S. Kirk	9
A Sporting Leander	5	In Society	10
About Personages	5	Dramatic Notes	11
Things and People	6	Library Notes	11
The Ingot and the Dollar	7	Bourget's New Book	12
"O'Bryan, O'Kagen, O'Kimm"	7	As the World Wags	13
In an Apple Orchard: by Juliet Wilbor Tompkins	9	The Newest Hats	14
A Trio of Western Waterfalls	9	Late Verse	14
Yellow Book Pictures	9	New Stories Re-Told	16

"THE SHRINKAGE IN GOLD."

A friend of silver told us early in the campaign that our arguments were "all right," except in so far as we lost sight of the fact that "silver will go up to a parity with gold." This theory having received such an unmerciful pounding he now tells us that "gold will go down ad silver will go up until they reach a ratio of 16 to 1," just as though this alleged shrinkage in gold made the matter any easier of performance. The ratio of 16 to 1 having been reached, both silver and gold, according to our friend's theory, will cease to fluctuate and will remain fixed and immovable. A belief in this theory involves a rare degree of credulity and bespeaks for its authors a wonderful power of prescience. Why 16 to 1? Why not 15 to 1, or 17 to 1, or 20 to 1? The commercial ratio today is 32 to 1. Why should the advocates of silver select 16 to 1 as the future ratio and stick to that as though it had been ordained by some mysterious power that 16 to 1 should ever remain the ratio between these two metals? True, that is the present coinage ratio in America, but it is an artificial and fictitious ratio, which it would be impossible to maintain, without the gold support of the Government and the exercise of extreme care and caution on its part. A silver dollar is worth to-day but 53 cents. The remaining 47 cents is fiat money. When the bullion in the silver dollar which is in your pocket was purchased by the Government it was paid for at its bullion value, which at the time amounted probably to about 75 cents. When it was coined by the Government at 100 cents it was coined on Government account, and when it was paid out by the Government it was paid out on Government account for 100 cents in service or goods, and the Government is therefore bound in honor to maintain it. Under free coinage the Government will not buy the bullion. The Government will not make any profit on its coinage as it has since 1878. The profit, if any, will go exclusively to the owner of bullion. Some silver noisemakers claim that the honor and credit of the Government will be behind the silver dollar of free coinage, just as well as the dollar of to-day. That would be a pretty hard proceeding on the Government and on the people. It is the ability to redeem with gold that gives the Government credit value to-day and nothing else. There seems to be an idea abroad that the Government has the ability to disregard the law of values in coinage matters, and by some superhuman power suspend the ordinary laws of trade and of values. According to this theory, it is only necessary for a Government to say that this or that thing shall be full legal tender money and thereupon the matter is definitely settled. This is a very sad mistake. If the reader will admit that he would not favor free coinage of leather, and accept a piece of stamped leather, which bore the imprint of a dollar, at 100 cents, he admits the principle that is involved here, and confesses that it is impossible for the Government to coin freely and at the same time sustain the value of a disc of metal containing 53 cents worth of silver and make it pass current for 100 cents. The Government might coin leather or paper or anything else for that matter, but to sustain its value there must be something besides the Government stamp and its legal tender qualities to maintain it above its intrinsic worth. Our dollar being a good dollar at the present ratio of 16 to 1 does not prove that the dollar of free coinage would be likewise a good dollar. We have been astounded to ascertain how necessary it is to get down to first principles in the discussion of the silver question. Let us compare the conditions of to-day with the conditions that will exist under free coinage.

The silver bullion now in the possession of the Government and the silver which is in the dollar of present circulation was purchased under acts of Congress which directed the Secretary of the Treasury "to purchase from time to time silver bullion at the market price thereof * * * and cause the same to be coined * * * as fast as purchased." Under that act the Government purchased silver at bullion values and obtained whatever benefit there might be in the low state of the silver market by saving the difference between bullion and coinage values. To-day if the Government should authorize its Secretary of the Treasury "to purchase silver bullion at the market price thereof, and cause the same to be coined" he would be able to obtain 32 ounces of silver for one ounce of gold, and when this bullion was sent to the mint for coinage the amount of silver in a dollar of 100 cents would have cost the Government but 53 cents. The Government would have a balance of 47 cents in hand and to its credit so that it would be measurably protected. In paying out this dollar the Government would receive in return a full 100 cents in service or in goods or what ever it might purchase, so it is bound in honor not to permit the value of that dollar to diminish. It is bound to redeem that dollar with gold and not to treat that dollar as being of less value than a gold dollar, and it is bound to accept that dollar at a full 100 cents if brought to it in the course of business. The Government is amply protected under our present system, but the free coinage plan does not contemplate any such protection to the Government. The plan proposed by free coinage is that the owner of 32 ounces of silver, worth one dollar, may take the same to the mint and, without cost to himself, have it coined into two silver dollars of 100 cents. The Government is to have nothing to do with the operation except in so far as it permits its employees in the mint to place the stamp upon it. The bullion-owner then takes the place of the Government. He takes the place of the Government in making a profit on the coinage, receiving more money than is justified by the value of his silver, and he is also given the privilege of paying out that dollar at a full 100 cents. It would be ridiculous to suppose that the Government would support that dollar to the slightest extent. It could not do so and remain solvent.. If there is a moral obligation anywhere to maintain the value of that silver dollar it rests with the silver miner, under this condition of affairs, and a merry time of it we would have in making him do so even if we had the ability.

We have never heard any advocate of silver state whether or not the increase in the value of sliver and the decrease in the value of gold would take place at once, or whether it would be a matter of slow growth and slow shrinkage. One may be pardoned for expressing some curiosity as to the hour when this most wonderful change in values will be consummated. It is beyond argument that a $20 gold piece will not under free coinage be used to pay a $20 debt when silver dollars worth intrinsically $10.60 will pay the same debt. The two moneys cannot circulate concurrently as equal in value.

Suppose for a moment that free coinage went into effect to-morrow ; the withdrawal of gold from general circulation would be the immediate and inevitable result. The banks would no longer exchange silver for gold, nor would the Government do so. Gold and silver would be primary moneys. Gold would cease to be the coin of ultimate redemption, and the value of the gold coin would be determined by its bullion value in the markets of the world. We would not be able to dictate and set values for other countries to follow.

Suppose we had free coinage to-morrow and you had 50 ounces of gold and 50 ounces of silver. Would you take them both to the mint for coinage, and afterwards pay out the gold and silver indiscriminately? There would be a profit of nearly 100 per cent in having your silver coined, but if your gold coin does not pass current at any higher valuation than your silver money, it would profit you more to have it remain bullion and send it to the market where it would be best appreciated.

Professor Laughlin in the "Review of Reviews" plainly sets forth the conditions that will follow free coinage, and explodes the "shrinkage in gold" proposition completely.

If butter in tubs brings 25 cents a pound, and the same butter in stamped pats brings 50 cents a pound, what will happen? Of course the butter will all be stamped to be sold at the higher price. So, also, with silver. If the same silver, when stamped at the mint, will exchange for twice as much gold, to the stamp it will go. All silver will rush to the mint, so long as it can exchange for twice the gold it can buy as bullian. But how about gold? The situation is just reversed for gold. As ordinary bullion without a stamp, one grain of gold buys thirty-two grains of silver; as coined gold, one grain of gold buys only sixteen coined grains of silver. What will happen to gold? Just as the owner of silver sold his silver where he could get the most gold, so the owner of gold will sell his gold where he can get the most silver. By melting his gold coins, or selling them by weight, the owner of gold can buy 32 grains of silver in the open market. He would certainly be a fool to keep his gold in coins and let them pass for only sixteen grains of silver coin. Then what is the result? There is an enormous profit on rushing silver to the mint to be coined and exchanged for gold, as long as any gold coins circulate; and likewise an enormous profit on withdrawing gold coins from circulation to be sold by weight for silver, or else exported. But mark this further result: The profit of coining silver ceases the moment no gold coins can be found in circulation to be exchanged for silver coins. Just that moment the silver will have no value beyond its own intrinsic value. But the owners of gold will be quick as a flash to see a profit in withdrawing gold, therefore there will be absolutely no chance to get the profit on coining silver and exchanging it for gold. Will silver coins keep the value of 16:1? That will, of course, be impossible. For, since there are no gold coins in circulation, how can sixteen grains of silver buy one grain of gold? The only place to buy gold with silver is in the bullion market, and there it takes thirty-two grains to buy one grain of gold. So long as the silver coins are kept in circulation at par with gold coins (as is the case now), the silver is kept up in value by being exchanged readily for gold in all dealings. But with the unlimited free coinage of silver, when its market value is one-half its coin value, the silver dollar will inevitably be valued at one-half its present purchasing power. About this there cannot be a shadow of a doubt. Such results have happened again and again in monetary history.

The trouble is that the gold we drive away from us by free coinage would be rapidly absorbed by the Russians and Austrians who are now preparing to go to a gold standard. It would not be surprising, indeed, if, after we have driven gold from us, Mexico entered the ranks of the gold countries. Then our humiliation would be most complete. The American dollar with our eagle and goddess of liberty emblazoned upon its face would then be the depreciated money, and the Mexican dollar would be the thing for which we would grasp with greedy eagerness, where now it is despised. The great volume of European gold which has gone so far and done so much toward the development of the interior resources of America would then be diverted to the development of our sister republic, and she would prosper and outstrip us while the shambles of silver would retard our progress in the race of nations and bring us down to the financial level of Mexico.

"THE CRIME OF '73."

If you have never attempted to discover the awful effects that have been brought about by the infamous "Crime of '73," it is worth investigating. Of course, the basis of the silver man's arguments must be that the "Crime of '73" has resulted in a diminution of the circulating medium, but the facts refuse to bear out this contention. If it can be demonstrated, and the advocates of silver do show it, that during the twenty years just preceding 1873, this country was blessed with an era of unexampled prosperity because of free coinage and a plentitude of silver money, then, by the same rule, a showing that our silver circulation per capita has doubled, tripled and quadrupled, since the "Crime of '73 ' ought likewise to prove that our prosperity is similarly affected. If the silver man's theory is good, then we stand ready to prove by his theory that we are having good times now, and that we are five times more prosperous than were our forefathers, who lived too soon to secure all the advantages of the "Crime of '73."

If the "Crime of '73" did not have the effect of lessening the amount of silver coined as compared with the years preceding the "Crime," then, manifestly, we have nothing to complain about, for it has wrought no contraction of the currency. In 1878 the silver circulation per capita was $1.38. It steadily grew, until in June, 1896, the silver circulation per capita reached $6.21.

The mere fact that the mine-owner can only convert his silver into coin by selling it to the Government or to individuals at its bullion value is a pretty good thing for the Government, and the people, too, for that matter. Indeed, the "Crime" was a much wiser piece of legislation than Congress in those days imagined it to be, for they never dreamed of the great over-production and diminishing values to follow. By the operation of the "Crime" the Government and the people are permitted to make a profit on silver bullion equal to the difference between the coinage stamp and the actual commercial value. Just now, the difference between the values in favor of the Government and the people is 47 cents on the dollar. It is a wide margin, and one may hardly blame the mine-owner for making a struggle to secure it to himself.

Under the Bland-Allison Act of 1878 and the Sherman Act of 1890, the Government purchased about 460,000,000 ounces of silver, for which it paid $463,000,000. This amount of bullion will coin into $593,000,000. So, apparently, by this transaction, the people of the United States made a profit of $130,000,000. Under free coinage and Mr. Bryan's theory of finance, this profit would have gone to the bullion speculator and the silver-mine owner, and they would have been $130,00,000 richer by the transaction. We would, under Mr. Bryan's plan, have turned over to the bullion-owner 593,000,000 of silver dollars. In point of fact, this profit would have been completely lost to the people. They would have paid the difference to the mine-owner. Now, Mr. Bryan tells us if we forego the privilege of making this profit and let the mine-owner make it, everybody will grow rich and prosperity follow.

Since the Government's purchase of this bullion, its value as bullion has depreciated nearly $140,000,000. The Government paid for this silver at about 75 cents on the dollar; but it could purchase the same amount of bullion to-day for 53 cents; so that without the Government's support behind the present dollar the people would have had to suffer a still further loss of nearly $140,000,000. The value of their dollars would have shrunk while in their possession to 53 cents.

We will not insult your intelligence by pointing out the idiocies of this kind of a performance. The mere statement of the case is sufficient. One of Mr. Bryan's noisiest protests is levelled again "class legislation." He announces that he is unalterably opposed to legislation calculated to enrich the "classes" and favor "individuals." It would seem pertinent to inquire if anyone, anywhere, at any time in all the world, ever proposed any legislation that could better be indelibly stamped "class legislation" than the unfortunate and unhappy silver policy that Mr. Bryan proposes to inflict upon us.

MUNICIPAL POLITICS.

The Australian ballot has worked a revolution in municipal politics. It is now recognized universally by men acquainted with political affairs that a party nomination for a municipal office is worth little more than an independent nomination. The man whom the people want can triumph over any party machine, and no party machine can compel the support of a man whom the people do not want. San Francisco is now in the midst of political conventions, two Democratic, two Republican, a Populist and a non-partisan, and yet on all sides it is recognized that under our present system of voting a partisan nomination carries with it little more than would a set of resolutions indorsing a candidate's fitness and integrity.

Where a Boss cannot elect, he finds it of litte benefit to nominate. Under our old ballot law, it was possible to vote men in blocks, and to see that they stayed bought until their ballots were put into the boxes. But now no guarantee can be given that a man will vote the way he is told to, and the only reliance the Bosses have is on a fictitious and fraudulent count. As soon as we adopt the automatic voting machine, by which votes are registered without the interposition of any human agency other than the voter himself, we will have a voting system that will defy the political manipulator and tend still further toward the extinction of the Boss.

The regular Democratic organiaziton, made up of the anti-Buckley forces, has nominated Mr. James D. Phelan for mayor; while the so-called regular Republican organization, that which is led by Kelly, Spear and Ruef, has placed Mr. Horace Davis at the head of its ticket. Two better men have never run against each other in this city. Whichever one wins, the city will know that it has a gentleman as its chief magistrate. But to discuss their relative merits is not our intention at this time. We call attention to these nominations made by political conventions controlled by practical politicians to show the wisdom of that provision of the New Charter which centers in the mayor a great part of the responsibility for the government of the city. We can always get a good man for mayor; even the worst of Bosses feel compelled by the exigencies of their situation to name such men. It would be running no risk to give such extended power as the New Charter gives into the hands of either of the two gentlemen we have named; for neither could be controlled, bullyragged or bamboozled into the appointment of incompetent or dishonest men, knowing as they would that the eyes of the city were upon them and that they would be held to strict accountability for the character of the city's administration. It is not to be supposed that of their own motion the gentlemen controlling the Republican convention and the Democratic convention would have named either of these candidates for mayor, for they are both representative of the cleaner, more respectable and dignifid, non-political portion of the community, and they were nominated only out of necessity. No municipal ticket could hope for success which had at its head a candidate for mayor only up to the level of a nominating convention, which is almost universally without moral character or intelligence.

The anti-Spreckels leaders have been attempting to show by means of detectives that the Spreckels primaries were dishonest, in that more ballots were found in the ballot boxes than there had appeared voters at the polling places. It was useless for Mr. Burns or Mr. Kelly, or whoever the gentleman may have been who hired these detectives, to prove that a primary in this city was not a square thing. No intelligent politician who has the slightest regard for the value of his own word, pretends that primaries are held to do anything else than register the will of whichever faction or Boss may be in control of the party organization at that time. Under our present law holding primaries is a farce. Spreckels primaries are bad; Kelly primaries are bad; Buckley primaries are bad; all kinds of primaries are bad, as they have been conducted in this city from time immemorial. Even when managed by the most intelligent and honorable men within the party organizations, time and again in both parties the Bosses have been overthrown in triumph by the medium of corrupt primaries. There was probably never a better instance of how evil could be done that good might follow than that furnished by the reorganized Democrats when they overthrew Buckley; and it seems to us that no matter how strict the law which pertains to primaries they must be either corrupt or useless. Business men, conservative citizens, will not attend primaries. Not once in a decade can 50 per cent of the voters of this city be brought to a primary. The club organizations, through which the parties are supposed to speak, are mere paper; the club rolls are all stuffed; the men who manage clubs are placed in control to do what they are told, not to further good government. A successful political Boss needs less than twenty-five hundred men to control the organization of a party containing twenty times as many voters. Perhaps the idea of the non-partisans in this city is the correct one after all—a select body of respectable men who choose from year to year their associates and leave successors to continue the organization, a local party without clubs, without primaries, without ward meetings, and representative, not of party districts, but of the whole city. This is all the organization that is necessary to get a place on the printed ballot for its candidates, and that after all is about the only thing that any kind of political convention or organization can do for a candidate.

As between two eqally good men the duty of the non-partisan convention seems clear; they should declare that between these two there was no choice, and should decline to indorse either, or should indorse both. This is true non-partisanship. The object of a non-partisan convention is to insure good municipal government. If our regular parties nominated clean, capable men, there would be no necessity for such a movement, and it is to insure to the people the opportunity of voting for such men that the non-partisan convention holds over the heads of all political parties the threat that they will nominate independently if the regular parties do not make proper nominations. When both of the old parties have named eqally representative men for the offices, it is certainly unfair for a body of citizens whose only aim is good government to choose as between these party nominations. Therefore, we urge that in such cases, when there is no choice between the regular nominees, both should receive the indorsement of the non-partisan convention. If this policy is not followed, a non-partisan convention easily degenerates into an assistant to one of the old parties and loses its distinguishing characteristic, that of non-partisanship. When a community is aware that two men equally good are running for an official post, and one of these men receives the non-partisan indorsement because he happens to have more friends in that convention or more influence with the delegates to it, or because more of its members are also members of his regular party, the non-partisan convention becomes discredited in the eyes of the people and its influence is very seriously diminished. The people at once realize that its action in choosing between the two was unfair, unmanly and really dishonest, because it did an injury to an equally good man. It is therefore for the best interest of the movement itself, as well as for the best interest of the people, that it should follow the plan here laid down and indorse both or all equally good men who have been nominated, and not discriminate except as between good and bad.

JAMES D. PHELAN'S CAREER.

It may be interesting for the public to know something about the gentleman who has been nominated by the Democratic and the non-partisan parties for the mayoralty.

To begin with, he was born in San Francisco, is thirty-five years of age, and has therefore arrived at the time of life when one ceases to be guilty of "the atrocious crime of being a young man." Thirty-five is the youth of old age, and also the old age of youth. He descends from a worthy sire, who came to this country from Ireland when he was but six years old, and arriving in California, as a Pioneer, established one of the largest mercantile houses of the period as early as 1849. When he wound up his commercial career he entered upon one of finance, establishing the First National Bank of San Francisco, of which he was its first president. His wealth was all honorably acquired without any of the taint which sometimes attaches to its acquisition in these modern days, and the legacy of character which he left his family was not less large than his ample estate. In 1882 Mr. Phelan graduated with the degree of Bachelor of Arts from Saint Ignatius College in this city, and then turned to the study of law at the University of California. Then he traveled in Europe for a year and a half, writing home letters which were published in the "Examiner," and contributing one or two valuable articles to the "Overland Monthly." Returning to San Francisco, Mr. Phelan soon became interested in public affairs, and took a prominent part in the movement in California for the establishment of the Australian ballot system, which was adopted. He is now making an equally strong plea for civil service reform, believing that these two great measures will eliminate most of the corrupt practices from political life.

Concurrently with all this he was given charge of his father's estate, representing that interest in many commercial enterprises, and finally rounded an active career of finance as President of the Mutual Savings Bank, succeeding to that office on the death of the late James G. Fair. He was an intimate friend of the late Governor Washington Bartlett, and served on his staff. When the Columbian Exposition was projected he was again drawn into public service by being appointed World's Fair Commissioner for California from the Fifth Congressional district, and was elected Vice-President of the body, performing ably its important functions. This commission, it may be remembered, did what is most remarkable in the history of public concerns—it returned twenty thousand dollars and more of the appropriation to the State treasury.

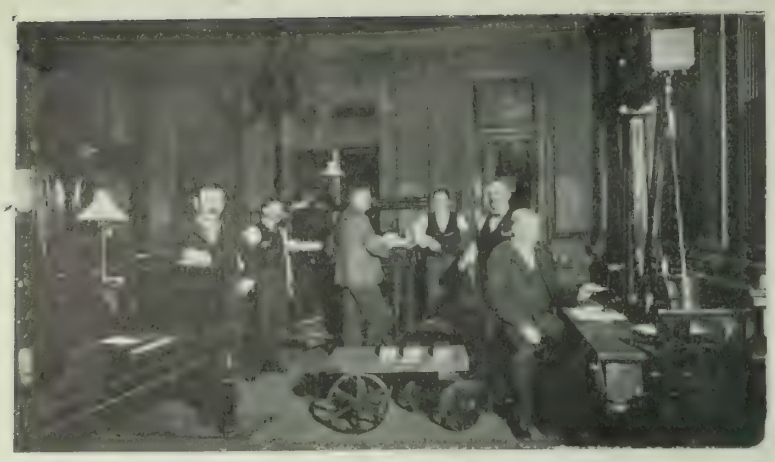
In these times when public officials are not what they should be, there have sprung up in all parts of the city organizations called Improvement Clubs and Defence Associations, to worthily guide the minds and influence the actions of public bodies, and to stamp out corruption where it exists. At the great public meeting at Metropolitan Hall, called after the Wallace Grand Jury had been declared illegal by the Supreme Court, Mr. Phelan was called upon to preside ;and the originators of that movement declared that they had previously appealed in vain to half a dozen prominent citizens to take the stand. The Citizens' Defence Association sprang from the loins of that monster demonstration. Joseph Brittan and John P. Young were President and Secretary of the body, and Mr. Phelan himself was an active member. It accomplished wonderful results, engrafting on the law of the State wise measures, not the least of which was the Purity of Election Law. It offered rewards for the apprehension of all offenders against the election laws, and succeeded in terrifying malefactors into passive decency.

The Improvement Clubs, which represent every district of the city, last year consolidated, making the Association of San Francisco Improvement Clubs, and they came to Mr. Phelan with a tender of the Presidency of that body, which seems to be wisely guided, and out of which has come much in the way of street improvement and reform in the public service.

When the Native Sons wanted to erect a hall to house the numerous orders in this city, Mr. Phelan was chosen to lead them in that enterprise, and as the result of the confidence, perhaps, which he inspired, and his own activity, they have their finished building now on Mason street. It is well known that he is a Trustee of the Valley Road, a body created by the subscribers to act for them, so that when the road is constructed it may be kept sacred for the purpose for which it was built—to be a competing road, in fact, as well as promise. This promise has been quickly followed by the performance of its projectors.

On all questions affecting the public interest Mr. Phelan has expressed himself from time to time, and in a letter to the Board of Supervisors in August, 1894, published in all the city papers at the time, he gave some valuable hints based upon his study and observations abroad, and which if elected, he will have an opportunity of carrying into effect. He dwelt upon the necessity of a sewer system, and how to obtain it; upon the pavement of streets, and how to do it; upon the removal of telegraph wires and other offensive obstructions, and where to put them; upon the desirability of fine streets and roads for wagon and bicycle, and where to establish them and how to maintain them. And only a few weeks since in his oration upon the opening of the Mechanics' Institute Fair, entitled "The New San Francisco," he gave the secret of a city's prosperity as a manufacturing and trade center, which is to be found in artistic environment and the technical education of the people. Though we have technical schools, the value of this form of education is not realized by our citizens. In the European centers technical teaching is recognized as playing the most important part in the economy of a nation. It is because of Germany's inimitable educational system that her merchants are invading the markets of the world. It is because of technical training that the manufacturers of France crowd out the products of domestic looms. He spoke of the power of beauty in the education of a people, and in the attractiveness of a city. And then he dwelt upon the necessity of an organic law which would fix responsibility and promote efficiency, while it granted power. The nomination of Mr. Phelan for Mayor seems to be the logical culmination of a career devoted to the public interest. If elected he will be in a position to carry out his well matured views. He has served in many capacities—as President, for instance, of the Bohemian Club, and of the San Francisco Art Association. As President of the latter organization he certainly put new life into the dry bones of art in this city, and the men of the brush are his best friends. The great picture of Arthur Matthews, which illustrates so faithfully the discovery of the Bay of San Francisco, was produced under the stimulus of the prize he offered. Only the other day we noticed that he contributed towards the Chair of Argumentation in the University of California, a favorite study of his.

And yet the story is but half told. It seems to be beyond question that the election of James D. Phelan as Mayor will mean more than the political regeneration of San Francisco. It will set the citizens thinking on the possibilities of making San Francisco, whose imperial position by the Golden Gate and under the bright skies of California has attracted already universal attention, the seat of the highest civilization, with theaters, parks and universities, to which will flock the brightest minds and the gayest spirits of the world. San Francisco has in her the germs of a great metropolis, and it is only for her citizens by sedulous care to her interests, to see that she blossoms forth as a flower.



The Silver Arrives

Here alloy is added and the silver cast into ingots

Annealing

Its first melting

Hardening the blanks

The ingots are rolled

The Great Scales

Milling and Stamping

A supplementary process

Every new dollar is weighed here

Silver bricks

Ready for delivery

THE MAKING OF A DOLLAR

VIEWS OF THE INTERIOR OF THE U. S. BRANCH MINT, SAN FRANCISCO

FROM FLASHLIGHT PHOTOGRAPHS MADE BY B. C. TOWNE

SWIMMING THE GOLDEN GATE
SNAP SHOTS AT CHARLES CAVILL ON HIS JOURNEY FROM LIME POINT TO FORT POINT

A SPORTING LEANDER

The Career of Charles Cavill, who Swam Across the Golden Gate.

For a great many years Englishmen have been claiming in song, and everywhere else, that the sea is their own. We must admit that they have a right to the major part of it, for certainly no other nation has sent so many fine ships and gallant men out on its waters or used the ocean so freely as a burial-ground. But now there comes here a young English-Australian who seems to be trying to prove that he is more at home in our own bay of San Francisco than are any of the men who live on its shores. Last Sunday at half-past three he sprang from the rocks above Lime Point into the cold, dark flood which was rushing to the sea, and fought his way across the Golden Gate to Fort Point.

This has never been done before, that is, to the knowledge of civilized man, for the currents are icy and innumerable. At times they run out like a millrace. It took Cavill just an hour and twenty minutes to cover the mile and a half of water which lies between the two points, and he swam about six miles in doing it. The struggle at first was terrible. He swam (the tide drifting him out) about a mile and one-half, was caught in a current and swept almost back to the shore, fighting undaunted every inch of the way. Then, still drifting out to sea, he struck a favorable bit of water and made considerable headway. By this time he had swum nearly five miles and was about half across. For a time he stuck midway in the channel, swimming steadily, but making no perceptible headway. Then gradually he crept nearer and nearer the shore. When Fort Point was about three hundred yards away his trainer plunged from the accompanying boat into the water. Cavill made a spurt, and they reached the beach at the same instant. The swimmer did not vary his stroke at any time, nor did he rest. The crowd on the beach rushed forward to shake hands, but the Sausalito impatiently tooted her whistle, and the men quickly swam out to the small boat and were taken aboard the steamer.

Cavill now announces he will swim any one, any distance, any where—from the Farallones here or from here to the Farallones, just as we please, but so far nobody pleases; so he goes about San Francisco with a big man with a big neck to the right of him, a little man with a big neck to the left of him, a trail of big-necked admirers in the rear and is cock of the walk. Strange to say, his head is quite a modest size—all things considered.

When I first saw Charles Cavill he was flanked on one side by his trainer, Adolph Kahn—the man who does the high diving at Sutro's baths—and on the other by Charles King, the president of the California Swimming Club, of which Cavill is an honorary member. They all have rather a nautical twist to them, but the champion looks like something between a sailor and a sublimated prize-fighter. He has the broad, strong neck and the pronounced jaw of a pugilist, but the ocean seems to have washed away the bestiality which pervades most ringmen, and left there something sounder, simpler and more austere.

Cavill is a young man—only twenty-five—is five feet ten inches in height, weighs one hundred and eighty pounds, is erect, sinewy, active-looking, with clouded gray eyes, a salt-water complexion and a chest expansion of nine and three-quarter inches. Mr. Kahn says Cavill is a "human fish," and owes his prowess to heredity. He referred not to our far-away finny ancestors, but to Fred Cavill, who swam the English Channel in eleven hours and is the father of our visitor. Mr. Cavill, however, remarked that a "good teacher and hard work" had more to do with it though heredity was well enough in its way, as it indirectly provided a boy with the above good things in the shape of a father to keep up with and watch. His theory put in America would be something like this, plenty of work, water and "sand" is what makes a champion swimmer. He himself, as he was born in Brighton (England), had as much af the last two commodities as the heart of a swimmer boy could wish, and his brothers gave him the stimulus of competition, as they are acquatic wonders. His sister, too, is a very bold and powerful swimmer for a woman. Cavill is married and has a little girl two and a half years old, who can already swim about a block. "She is the only child I have—alive," he said with a shadow in his voice and an unseeing gaze out the window at the chimney pots.

"I don't do much of what is called training," he said, presently. "I have been swimming all my life nearly and have learned about all that I ever will, so now I simply try to keep in good condition. No, I don't take long swims. I'm in the water every day at the baths, and I never get in a street car except when I come in from the cliff. I walk everywhere I go."

"He doesn't train any," interjected Kahn, "and he's a heavy cigarette smoker."

Cavill didn't seem particularly pleased at this remark, so I asked him what he ate when preparing for a trip like that of Sunday.

"Oh," he said, "I had soup, roast beef and stout about three hours before I started.

"Don't you ask him what he had afterwards," said Kahn.

"A man needed something after that trip," muttered the C. S. C. president.

"Yes," said Cavill, "for my feet were blue just like a dead man's when I came out, and my right elbow was almost paralyzed. No, I didn't change my stroke. I used the overhand side stroke (left hand over) all the way across without any change and without floating an inch, and I had nothing on but an ordinary sized bathing suit of silk—unless the mixture of alcohol, whisky, rum and vita oil which I sponged off with before dipping in can be called clothing."

"It's a great deal better," said Kahn.

The New York Supreme Court has decided that a Board of Health is a final authority in certain instances, says "The Youth's Companion," regarding the fitness of dwellings for occupancy. The soundness of this decision seems apparent in the face of the fact that in crowded parts of great cities the public safety depends often upon immediate action. It is better that real estate owners should obtain compensation through the slow process of the law, than that the health or lives of the occupants of houses should be endangered through lack of legal authority to act quickly and with effect.

Of the seventeen Trans-Atlantic cables only seven are in use, the others having given out from various causes. The total cost of the cables which are now useless was £6,000,000.

ABOUT PERSONAGES

Two of the richest spinsters in the United States are Southern women. The richest, Miss Garrett, plain, sixty, and unassuming, is a Baltimorean. The second richest, Miss Caldwell, has about twelve millions, and the bad taste to eschew her old Kentucky home.

Augy Belmont pays more for his trainer and jockey than any other man in America. Although he has won something like $60,000 this year it will not cover his expenses. It is stated that every year he puts aside $100,000 for his stables, and thinks he is doing well if that proves sufficient.

Most people have some characteristic gesture. The Prince of Wales, when annoyed, winks his left eye rapidly: the Emperor of Austria puffs out his cheeks: the Czar lays his hand flat on the top of his head: Mr. Gladstone turns swiftly on his heels, as if executing a volte face, and the Sultan of Turkey grasps his throat tightly with his hand.

Cardinal Ricard has forbidden the priests of the diocese of Paris to ride bicycles. The reason is because priests in France wear cassocks reaching to their heels, and the Cardinal regards the spectacle of a man in such a costume mounted on a lady's wheel as undignified, not to say ridiculous.

It is said that Lord James of Hereford once presented a very fine set of diamonds, which had caught his eye in a shop window, to the late Sir John Millais' eldest daughter, on the occasion of her marriage. When the bill was sent in it came to thousands of pounds, and on hearing of this Millais insisted on painting the portrait of the then Sir Henry James for nothing.

Queen Henriette, of Belgium, born an Austrian Archduchess, and a horsewoman, still continues her wonderful performances in spite of her age and station. The latest story is that Her Majesty jumped her pet horse over a dinner-table covered with flowers and lighted candelabra. She has often leaped through burning hoops and flaming hedges, and driven a twenty-in-hand.

Counts are costly creatures. When Anna Gould became the Countess Castellane she had twelve million dollars; to-day she has five millions less, as two millions went to the Count on her wedding day, a million and a half in his horse and stock speculations during the past year, and one and a half million in buying property, at fancy prices, on the Bois de Boulogne and the Avenue de Maiakoff, for the purpose, it is said, of reproducing the Grand Trianon and the Petit Trianon, and ultimately conquering fashionable Paris by their magnificence.

Czar Nicholas probably didn't "mean anything" when he said that he wanted to "see a little of Paris life," but 'tis said this speech made the Czarina reflect on what used to happen in the days of Napoleon III., when a director of "Petits Plaisirs" was a recognized official, and assisted her to decide for one day in Paris instead of five. However autocratic this young woman may be in her conjugal relations, her political tendencies are rather democratic. She hopes that Russia will soon have a constitution, and that Siberian horrors will be abolished.

First a model, next a living picture and finally a drunkard — this is the career of Caroline Louise Beach, the woman who posed for the figure (the face is Ada Rehan's) of the silver statue sent by Montana to the World's Fair. She was selected from a vast number of applicants by Sculptor Park. Mrs. Beach's figure was Grecian in its proportions. In size she was almost heroic, for she was five feet nine and a half inches high, and weighed one hundred and seventy pounds. Grace and strength were as happily combined in her as in the Venus de Milo.

On her recent visit to Austria, Russia's young and handsome Czarina made an interesting contrast to the well-known form of the Empress Elizabeth. The height of the two august ladies, when they stood together, appeared nearly the same. The youthful freshness and charming way of speaking and amiable smile of the Russian Empress, who, by the way, looks far more English than German, were as much admired as the unconventional modesty of her whole bearing, by which, it was easy to observe, the Czarina at once won the heart of the Austrian Empress, and, indeed, of all who saw her. The young Czar, who has not been in Vienna since the autumn of 1892, it was generally noticed, has since grown in manly physique, but he still retains his earnest demeanor and benignant look.

CHARLES CAVILL

THINGS AND PEOPLE

There is little to choose between the oratory of the Republicans and of the Democrats in municipal convention gathered. In the latter convention I heard but one speech worthy the name. It was that delivered by James D. Phelan thanking the delegates for nominating him. This was neither a brilliant nor an eloquent effort, but it had significance and point and was imbued with tact and humor. Indeed, the future mayor has a real capacity in the direction of talking on his feet, which time and opportunity ought to develop into oratory. His successors and predecessors, however, offered excellent examples of the things one would wish left unsaid. Charles Wesley Reed, from whom great things were expected, almost set the crowd by its ears through alluding to "certain influences" and "previous errors," which referred, of course, to the selection by the Raineyites of young Reynolds as temporary chairman. Reynolds, who is a pleasant young man, with a deep-toned, important voice, had some two years before obtained a Populist nomination for Justice of the Peace, and his name figured also on the "A. P. A." ticket. The "Monitor," which cut an important figure at the second meeting, demanded an explanation, suggested conspiracy, and so frightened the Rainey contingent that they abated their controlling hand and were content to leave the gathering to its own devices. It is interesting to note, however, that it was Reynolds and the outcry the papers made over him which made Phelan the nominee. Colin M. Boyd would otherwise have headed the ticket.

***

It is unfair to select Mr. Reed as the shining example of oratorical inadequacy. Alexander Voglesang, who seconded the nomination of Phelan, did not relieve the situation, though the subject was by no means exhausted. Neither alluded to the peculiar fitness of the candidate for the place, nor touched on the capacity he had demonstrated. Neither was familiar with his career, and both were awkward in statement. Nor were the frequent addresses of Mr. Deuprey, who was one of the most conspicuous figures of the convention, by any means spellbinding. His voice rang out, it is true. A young lawyer named O'Donnell had a dozen chances to win clients, but his periods halted and of ideas his sentences were barren. Osgood Putnam arose with several points of order and a nomination or two, and though he was to the point, he was also both cold and dry. An Assemblyman named Mulgrevy, who had been nominated by the Buckley forces, made a better talk the second night than any of the men who could have excelled him. So of oratory the convention was barren. A similar condition existed in the Republican gathering, though there was a show of enthusiasm for the national ticket, which was lacking in the Democratic body. Indeed, I have rarely seen a less enthusiastic body. It had cheers neither for men nor causes.

***

Of the old time Bohemians whose exploits made the gossip of journalism Robert Duncan Milne is the sole survivor. He is before the public again after a long eclipse, and though still engaged in the manufacture of weird stories he preserves that characteristic thirst which, if it keeps him poor, preserves his happiness. It is not indelicate to comment on the superiority of Milne's alcoholism, for the indulgence of that thirst is the object of his existence. He writes for its gratification; it inspires his muse and his moods, for sober he is duller than darkness and as melancholy as an owl. Innumerable yarns are still current of his peculiarities. Some newspaper men discussing him in the Grill Room told two which are worth reproducing. "On an important anniversary of the Caledonia Club I met Milne looking more disconsolate than usual," said one of the group, "and asked him what the trouble was. 'Some Scotchmen have commissioned me to write a poem to the memory of Bobbie Burns for to-night,' he said, 'and it happens that I have not had a drink for two days. Strange as it may seem, I cannot think of a line. Will you lend me a dollar?' I knew better than to do that, so I told him I had no money. 'Then get me a drink somehow,' he stammered. So I led him into a neighboring saloon and ordered liquor. 'It's all I want' my boy—just a little lubrication,' he said, 'then I scribble you off the best ode you ever heard.' Well, we sat down, and Milne, under the influence of two stiff whiskies, on some paper borrowed from the saloon keeper, set to work. Four verses tripped easily off. He threw himself back contentedly, and asked for more whisky, which I refused. 'Not another drop, Bob,' I said, 'till you finish some more poetry.' But he had evidently drained his inspiration, as well as his glass, for not another line could he produce.

" 'Come down town with me to Pixley's office,' he said at last, 'I want to consult his copy of Burns, as there are certain lines about which I find my memory needs refreshment.'

"So down town we went, and I left Milne at the 'Argonaut' office. What happened there I learned later. The poem was finished, however, and was a great hit, and Milne was several days recovering. When he emerged I asked how he had finished the verses.

" 'Take my word for it, my boy, there's precious little gratitude in the world,' he continued in his sententious way. 'You know what I've done for Pixley—how I've written for his paper. Yet, will you believe it, sir, when on that occasion I demanded the loan of two beggarly dollars, the brute refused me. I demeaned myself to explain the circumstances and my necessity, but he was obdurate. Then I borrowed from the library a copy of Burns to finish my verses. Reluctantly he consented. It was a fine leather-bound volume, and at the moment I felt myself commissioned to avenge his ingratitude, so I carefully read over the lines I wanted, and then I took the volume to a certain vender of second-hand literature, sir, and with the dollar it yielded me I finished my ode. It took me exactly eight whiskies to finish four verses, my boy, but they were well worth doing.

***

When the branch Keeley Institute was established at Los Gatos, the "Examiner," to test the value of the gold cure, decided to subject certain illustrious drunks to its process. This was one of Willie Hearst's grim jokes, for he has a curious and profound sense of humor under his quiet exterior. Milne, as the most conspicuous example of alcoholism in town, was selected as the first test. He was dispatched under proper chaperonage to the little town in the Santa Cruz mountains, and tells his experiences somewhat after this fashion: "I have nothing to say against Mr. Keeley. He treated me with proper and even tender consideration. There was whisky whenever I wanted it, which for the first day or two was pretty often, my boy. Then, as the week advanced, I found my thirst was diminishing. The beverage seemed to have lost its finer flavor. Then, strange to say, I began to dislike it, and when my term was up I did not care if all the stills in the world went out of action. To whisky I was as indifferent as I am to champagne. I returned to town sober. Yes, absolutely sober, sir. Certain of my friends wanted me to drink, but I had no inclination. For two weeks not a drop of alcohol passed my lips. I wrote some stories, but they were no good; they had no ginger or flash to them. I wrote poems that were flat as photographs. But early one morning I woke from what had been a profound sleep, with the impression of an idyllic dream in my mind. It seemed to me I had been drinking steam beer. From that moment, sir, the idea of steam beer haunted me. Every sentence I constructed ended in steam beer. I tried to dismiss the subject, believing that steam beer was impossible for me; but late that night, with some learned, intelligent and distinguished gentlemen, who were discussing with me the latest theory of flying machines, I dropped into a certain nameless saloon on Market street, and there the legend 'Steam Beer' caught my eye. Forthwith I ordered a glass and drank it. It rolled down my throat like oil, producing a delicious sensation. Then I ordered a schooner, and it went the same way, then a third. I will spare you a further recital of my happiness in finding myself unimpaired. Then I realized that Mr. Keeley had only cured my thirst for whisky; he had forgotten about the steam beer, my boy. If Keeley had only known that I liked steam beer as well and even better than whisky, there is no doubt that he would have cured me of steam beer. But he did not, sir, thank the Lord.' "

***

Editor Bunker of the "Report" rather carried off the oratorical honors at the banquet of the Sons of the American Revolution the other night. It was quite an important gathering of prominent citizens. Judge McKinstry presided; a variety of speeches were made, including Mr. Bunker's reply to the toast "The Spirit of the Times." We all know that post prandial oratory is an art, that it is not necessary to say much, but the little must be neatly phrased, amusing and pointed. It was a bright and telling little speech, in which there was an appropriate mingling of gravity and gaiety, a story or two, an allusion or so, a quotation and a bit of sentiment to close with. Mr. Bunker is to be congratulated.

***

As an orator, Judge Campbell makes no pretensions. His delivery is forcible rather than graceful. It seems he went to Stockton on Admission Day with the boys, and wandered into a big gathering of Natives that night. As soon as his presence was known around there instantly arose shouts of "A speech, Campbell! A speech!" to which the Judge failed to respond. Finally, however, some of the daring spirits gathered around him and carried him, body and whiskers, to the platform. The old gentleman shook his head at the audience.

"Boys," he responded, "you know I can't make a speech. None of you have ever heard me, and if I can help it you never will. Now that I'm up here before you, however, I want you to answer me a question, boys. Will you tell me the truth if I ask it?"

He leaned forward confidentially.

There were shouts of "Yes, yes, we'll tell you true, Judge."

"Listen, now," he continued. The audience was silent in expecation.

"Have you ever, ever seen my Angeline?" he sang, and in the confusion and laughter than ensued, he retired.

***

The vicissitudes of politics are curious. It is amusing to hear of the nomination of ex-Congressman Caminetti as Assemblyman from Amador County. Having failed of a nomination and yet yearning for political distinction, he entered the fight and has won. The social and political gap which divides the House at Washington and the House at Sacramento requires an effort of the imagination to bridge, but it seems there is rather more in Caminetti's mind than he has yet disclosed. He does not propose his degradation shall be without solace, for he is slated to be the next Speaker of the Assembly. This is a post of some distinction, and Mr. Caminetti's Congressional experience ought to enable him to fill it with power and pathos. Another legislator of distinction is E. W. Chapman, who has been nominated for Senator in the district which includes Placer and El Dorado counties. He is the owner of the Fancraft and Taylor mines, which yield him a splendid income. Indeed, he is one of the many successful miners of the State to-day.

In olden days it was proper to select for schoolmaster some unfortunate, who had failed in all lines of endeavor. It was assumed he could teach the young idea, if only by force of his failures. The Populists seem to find their candidates on the same basis. I was told recently of a certain gentleman, whom the Cator party has nominated for the Assembly from a country district. But a few years ago he was a lawyer in good practice in the same county. Unfortunately for the continuation of his prosperity he accepted two fees in one case $50 from the plaintiff and $100 from the defendant. His duplicity was discovered. He was tried and disbarred. Deprived of a means of livelihood he proceeded to take the episode as a warning from Providence; he had himself converted, became a Methodist exhorter, developed into a Populist, and quite recently was nominated by that body in his district as candidate for the Assembly. In due course the Democrats indorsed his aspirations, and doubtless he will figure among Cator's supporters when they gather at Sacramento in January. Of such material, alas, are our legislators too often made.

***

In Bohemia there is talk of an autumn Jinks to be given over to the army and navy. The 31st proximo has been selected as the date, and Lieutenants E. Runcie and T. F. Ruhm will officiate as Sire of the High and Low Jinks respectively. An amusing and instructive entertainment is promised. Some good talking should be evoked on so patriotic a theme, and Mr. Ruhm should have no trouble in finding talent among his compatriots to befit the occasion.

***

The importance of being properly nominated was emphasized at the recent Democratic municipal convention. Several promising aspirations were nearly nipped in the bud by misguided oratory. A well known delegate told an amusing instance of an unfortunate nomination which occurred years ago at the State convention over which Governor Downey presided. John Finlay, a prominent and capable Democrat, was the leading candidate for Governor. William Irwin was opposed to him. It was a splendid gathering of able and clever men, and in his opening speech Governor Downey alluded particularly to the distinguished character of the assemblage, and to the number of brilliant orators within its ranks. He prophesied memorable and historical speeches, and sat down after announcing that nominations for Governor were in order. A certain eminent lawyer known throughout the State had arranged to nominate John Finlay, but ere he could rise Michael Joseph Kelly was up, bobbing his head, and obtained recognition. He began in the way sacred to nominations, the world through. "I rise to place before you a man who," he commenced, and in his droll and peculiar way proceeded to recite a list of virtues, winding up finally with the name of John Finlay. The astonished audience had listened silently through this curious rhodomontade, but as Kelly concluded a groan went up from the candidate's supporters. The other orators attempted to save the situation, but to no avail. An hour later Irwin was put in nomination, and was elected by a large majority, and Finlay ever afterwards attributed his defeat to the wicked mischance of his nomination.

MADAME LE VANWAY
A PHOTOGRAPHIC STUDY BY MARCEAU

THE INGOT AND THE DOLLAR

Impressions of a Progress Through the Mint with Reflections on Gold.

It is the largest Mint in the world. That the guides tell you. Certainly it is a huge structure, of the Grecian temple order, with the regulation "public building" facade, thick Ionic columns, granite steps and a ribbon of greensward between it and the pavement of Fifth street. It exudes permanence and ponderosity. It is as respectable as a monument; prosperous as the tomb of a millionaire. Indeed, it actually succeeds in looking conscious of the fifty-five millions of gold and silver dollars in its vaults, and seems to defy you to capture a dime of it.

Time out of mind my way has taken me past the Mint. I have speculated about its treasure vaults, richer than the precious stores of the Arabian Nights. I have pondered over the process of coin-making—the conversion of common-looking and dirty bricks of gold and silver into shining dollars and "halves," into glittering "twenties" and "tens" and "fives," each round disc representing I know not what of attainment, of gratified desire, of opportunity and ambition. The appeal of the ponderous portals to enter and gaze on the riches within I resisted. After all, one paints better with one's imagination than with one's eyes, and what is the use of dissipating an aureate dream with realities. But a country cousin bent on sight-seeing set my renunciations at naught, and together we ascended into the bare stone hall and were confided to the tender mercies of the guide.

If you have never been in the mint it is impossible to realize the character and importance of the several aged, reverened and tremendously well-informed gentlemen who perform the service of conductors to sightseers. The one who piloted us — we had also three men and a small boy, making quite a party—possessed a fraternal and commanding manner and a wealth of statistics which tripped off his tongue in a manner to embarass the memory of a phonograph. He gently patted the red cheeks of my cousin, reminded us all of the great importance of the institution, of its functions, of the occasion, and of himself. He admonished us of his responsibilities, and talked of the "Governor," that is Superintendent John Daggett, as though he were the Pope or the Shah of Persia. I am sure there is no better guide anywhere than the "Colonel," as it is proper to call him; his voice and manner are a respectful tribute to the precious metals, the distinction of which you begin to realize after a few moments in his company.

Along the bare, resounding hallway you go down an iron stairs into the furnace room, which, I hesitate to say, though it be the truth, is not any different from other apartments of its kind, with grimy stokers and a coal-dust atmosphere. Next a small, dusky apartment in which the dust and sweepings of the great institution are melted, washed and treated with quicksilver and acids to gather the gold they contain. Yes, the process in this little room is similar to that in a gold mine and it recovers for the establishment some five thousand per annum,—quite a little sum to begin housekeeping on,—as the "Colonel" explained to the small boy, lookingly knowingly at my cousin and winking at me. I did not reciprocate, however. From here we ascended a staircase and were ushered into the melting-room, where the gold and silver are turned into ingots. Each individual deposit, be it the white metal or the yellow, is set in in its own crucible and subjected to the fervid heat which loosens and liquifies its molecules so they glow and run in a glistening and fiery stream into the mould from which it emerges, a chunky symmetrical mass, and passes into the assaying department, where the fineness of the metal and its exact value are determined. All this so that the man with ten ounces or a thousand ounces of gold can have next day the equivalent in eagles and double eagles of the bullion he has deposited the previous morning. What happens in the assaying room is a secret. You should have seen the "Colonel's" face as he informed us the "public" were denied the privilege of admission. I felt like Vanderbilt for a moment, but not for thousands would I have shocked our guide with an expression so disrespectful.

From here we followed our leader into the alloy department, full of moulds and ingots of gold and silver, and a picturesque array of workmen in blouses leaning over the furnaces or lounging in the windows. A pile of thin ribands of orange metal piled carelessly on a table, was pointed to by the "Colonel." "Gold," he said, with an indescribable inflexion. In order to better lecture the party he stepped inside the iron chain, which through the various rooms regulate the pathway of the visitor, inviting my cousin to stand beside him. The small boy attempted to follow, but this he prevented, peremptorily but courteously. "No, no, young man," he insisted, "against rules—can't allow that." So the youngster, a bit shame-faced, stepped out again, and we were told of the difference in value between gold bricks and silver bricks, of the precautions taken to recover the infinitesimal small shreds of precious dust which the impact of ingot on ingot scatters. As for me, I gazed at the force of men, big, strapping fellows, who hung around so carelessly, not a bit impressed with their importance as manufacturers of coin. Then I listened to the "Colonel" discriminating subtly between slabs of gold and of silver. I know I missed much of what he said, but I was duly impressed by the big nickle-plated engine in the next department—its huge fly-wheel weighs nine tons, made in two castings. An aristocratic engine of the old school this, with a walking beam attachment, admirably preserved like an old beau and polished until you could see your face in its mouldings. Annealing next; thence to the rolling department, where the ingots are flattened into ribbons under an enormous pressure. That was an operation we were permitted to witness at closer range, and my cousin, as a great concession, was allowed to finger the gold bars as they fell from the mighty rollers. Perhaps I looked a bit alarmed as she gaily slipped under the chains, but the old gentleman reassured me.

"They're hot," he whispered; "she cannot pick' em up."

Indeed they were hot and looked pale and dirty and as much as possible like brass. The fact is, alas, that gold en masse, when it is not for you, when it is a mere commodity like flour or sugar arouses in you only the same feelings which might be suggested by the view of a peach orchard, whose trees are bent under a rosy and glowing burden of ripened fruit. You eat one peach, perhaps two, and the rest are as nothing in your eyes. So it is with the gold and silver strewn around here. It arouses no longings, nor desires; its potentiality is veiled; it is but the marble ere the sculptor's chisel has fashioned it—mere yellow dross on its way to annealing in the next room, where it is softened in copper tubes; next dipped in water; then handed over to a new set of operators. Here the slender strips of metal, after undergoing finishing touches in a species of planer, are slipped under a machine which stamps out discs or "blanks," as they are professionally termed, and these, in their turn, are heaped into trucks and wheeled across the hall to the coining room, where the lady and the eagle are stamped on their smooth flat surfaces.

It was in this room our guide became most impressive. He prescribed the precise number of coins the discs could stamp in a minute, and really was a bit disappointed because our faces expressed no new shade of wonderment. We saw, too, the device which smooths the edges of the newly-milled dollars, and then emerging into the cold, barren corridor, the jingle of silver and gold in our ears, he told us of the other courses to which the beautiful shining coins are subjected ere they are ready to graduate. Each individual disc must be weighed, a service the ladies perform in a great long room upstairs. There are sixty weighers who do nothing the day through, but test the virtue and standard of these millions of dollars and eagles and dimes. I have not time to transcribe all the "Colonel" told us of the precautions for the safety of every dollar. Each disc is guarded as carefully as a crown jewel and every grain of it is computed and accounted for. My cousin listened, open-mouthed, to the recital and told the old gentleman she would not work in a place in which they suspected everyone of being after their money. He laughed good humoredly at her scruples, remarked he knew many maids just like her, who would give their eyes—pretty blue eyes like hers—to be up dollar-weighing every day at $2.65 per diem.

"Much better, Miss, than being supported by your father or your brother or knitting or even storywriting for a living. Isn't it?" he nodded the question to me, and of course I nodded back an affirmative head-shake.

No, the "Colonel" would not usher us into the presence of the Superintendent. That great man, he gave us to understand, was much too important and awful to be stared at by ordinary visitors at the Mint. You must have political influence ere being admitted into the Superintendent's sanctum. But if you penetrated the anterooms you would meet the most interesting and most potent man under the roof-tree—a man of some distinction of aspect and manner, bearded, strong featured, unpretentious of manner, a man who has known the vicissitudes of fortune and has had most of the honors of politics. Perhaps there is no quality so fascinating as steadfastness and will power, and these John Daggett possesses in a marked degree. Read out of the Democratic party in the Stockton Convention, he has seen the men who had scorned him, rise to petty elevations, then drop back and disappear, others develop into demagogues, more go under the political surface unwept and unhonored. He has moved quietly onwards, dealing a blow whenever the chance has offered, manipulating his revenges cautiously, elaborately and effectively.

I was thinking of all this and more when the "Colonel" interrupted the train of my thoughts with a tap on the shoulder.

"Here we're back again, sir. You've been through the mint and I've discharged my duty. A pleasant duty it has been," the old gentleman added, gazing approvingly at my cousin. "Young man"—this to the small boy—"never forget you have seen the vaults where fifty-five millions of Government money is lodged, which you own just as much as Governor Daggett or even the President—just as much, indeed."

Then the party of us flitter down the granite steps back again into the unpretending atmosphere of Fifth street.

"O'BRYAN, O'KAGEN, OKIMM!"

A Nebraskan's Reminescences of Candidate Bryan, with Some Dialect Verses.

Six years ago, when William J. Bryan closed his first Congressional campaign, an obscure country rhymer wrote a few stanzas of him and his political colleagues, which were then intended as burlesque, but might now, so far as the hero of the hour is concerned, be considered a sort of dialectic prophecy. I lived in Nebraska at the time, and clipped the verses from the Lincoln "Daily Call."

Although the politics of Mr. Bryan differed widely from that of many of us who admired his ability, the people, almost as a unit, believed in his capacity and sincerity, and have expected to hear of him in the high councils of the nation, but perhaps not so soon as this year of grace, 1896.

With the exception of McShane's one term, Nebraska had been represented in Congress by Republicans for a quarter of a century. In 1890 the organization of the Farmers' Alliance throughout Nebraska was most thorough. Hard times and threatened failure of crops menaced Republican victory. The time was ripe for a change. Jerry Simpson, the "sockless Socrates," had made his debut in Kansas politics, and was sure of election. By fusion with the Farmers' Alliance, the Democracy foresaw success. This oft-times difficult feat was happily accomplished by giving the Farmers' Alliance one candidate for Congress, the Democrats retaining two. (The State sent but three representatives to the lower house at that time.) Mr. Kem of Broken Bow was the member of the Alliance upon whom the honors fell. Mr. McKeighan, Democrat, was nominated in the other western district. The election of those two was virtually conceded, as their districts embraced the rural communities where the Farmers' Alliance dominated in local politics, and where the long-continued drouth of that summer added to the people's dissatisfaction with existing political conditions. But in the district that embraced the cities of Omaha and Lincoln, as well as prosperous rural communities, who should be the fusionist Moses? Had they not heard young Bryan at Omaha, two years before, and had he not swayed a convention of Bourbon Democrats with his eloquence? Was he not a brainy, clear-headed and energetic young lawyer? But, said many, he is only thirty years old, and has been in the State but three years; what do the people know of him? Trust him to put himself in touch with the people, said Bryan's friends. And so they did. And so he did. Mr. Bryan made a personal canvass of every nook and cranny of his district, attended Farmers' Alliance picnics far and near, —often speaking at several different places in one day. He entered into and enjoyed the amusements of the country people, and proved himself as much a champion on the ball ground as in the field of oratory.

The result of this campaign has become history. Mr. Bryan kept still in Congress until he had something to say and found a time favorable for saying it. His first effort earned for him the sobriquet "The Boy Orator of the Platte." He proved himself a ready debater, quick at repartee, and his fund of fact and circumstance seemed limitless. There was but one man in Congress anywhere near his equal, who could fight him with his own weapons, and whom Mr. Bryan might have feared. That man is John P. Dolliver of Iowa, a man about Mr. Bryan's age, who had served one term in Congress when the Nebraska statesman took his seat,—a Republican and a pronounced Protectionist and gold money advocate. And, by the way, Mr. Dolliver rose from the people in much the same way as did Mr. Bryan. There is this difference, however, Mr. Dolliver is not a classical scholar. He received a common school education, studied law and became famous in the town, where as a youth he had carried a hod,—Fort Dodge, Iowa.

But if Mr. Bryan feared Dolliver, the latter apparently reciprocated the feeling. We who had read Dolliver's brilliant speeches in campaign and on the floor of the House, knowing well their diametrical opposition to the views of our idol Nebraskan, expected daily to read of a clash between these two young intellectual giants. Only once they appeared to feel each other, and both seemed willing to quit. I imagine a debate between them would remind one of the fight between the two rams that had long striven for mastery. The farmer set them fighting at sunset, and at sunrise, on going to the scene of the encounter, found nothing but two tails and they butting away at each other.

Just after the election in 1890, J. W. Johnson wrote the verses referred to, and they were first published in the Sutton, Neb., "Advertiser." To make the names of the successful candidates accord with the dialect, a slight change was necessary in their orthography. I have thought these verses might be the authority of some misguided people, who insist that Mr. Bryan's original family name was O'Brien. I know of no other or better authority for such a statement. Everybody ought to know that Bryan is Scotch, while O'Brien is Irish as is the shamrock.

But here are the verses:

O'Bryan, O'Kagen, O'Kimm,
Bedad, will you now look at thim?
A 'atin' an' dhrinkin' an' dhrawin' their pay,
An' wearin' biled shirruts an' foine clothes ivery day,
An' a shlingin' on stoile in a new-fashioned way.
Be gorry, the 'lection was lucky for thim—
O'Bryan, O'Kagen, O'Kimm.

There's Misther Mike Agen, the chice o' the lot,
He was fifty years livin' on mush from the pot,
But now he's a Congressman, lives at hotels,
Ates wid the nabobs, an' dhrinks wid the swells,
He's now growin' fat where he used to be slim,
Be jabers, the 'lection was lucky for him.

The servant girrul raises the windies up high,
For a sight o' Mike Agen as he passes by.
An' phwen young Mishter Bryan do walk on the strate,
His smoile is so plazin', his manners so nate,
For a squint at him Zachias would shtraddle a limb,
Be jabers, the 'lection was lucky for him.

An' the mild Misther Kimm,
Wit' his elderly face
A gazin' so innicent-loike into space,
He's aten shtuff now that will shtick to the ribs,
To say that he's dacent is tellin' no fibs;
Be the powers the lection wor lucky for thim,
O'Bryan, O'Kagen, O'Kimm.

J. S. M'GINNIS.

German anti-Semitic students at Vienna, having declared that they would refuse all challenges from corps students who are Jews, the Jewish students appealed to the rector of the university to interfere, and allow them to have their faces slashed like Christians. He refused, but has been forced by the Minister of Public Instruction to punish the students who presided at the meeting where the declaration was made. The Jews are all taking fencing lessons.

A railway improvement is reported from Germany which would be very much appreciated in this country, especially by the traveling journalist. It is in the shape of a swinging writing desk, which is fastened to the roof of a carriage by elastic bands. Those who have tried to write in a train during even a normally rapid journey will recognize at once the advantage of such a contrivance.

A doctor in the highlands of Scotland, whose patients are scattered over a wide district, takes carrier pigeons with him on his rounds, and sends his prescriptions by them to the apothecary. He leaves pigeons, too, with distant families, to be let loose when his services are needed.

Ireland has had a year of unexampled prosperity, if the deposits in banks are any indication, the increase in those in joint stock banks being over six million dollars and in saving banks also over six million dollars. The traffic receipts on the Irish railroads, too, were the largest on record.

THE TWIN FALLS OF SNAKE RIVER, IDAHO

YELLOWSTONE FALLS

YOSEMITE FALLS

A TRIO OF WESTERN WATERFALLS

IN AN APPLE ORCHARD

By JULIET WILBOR TOMPKINS

"The wall isn't so very high," suggested the Tempter.

"No," assented Betty, measuring it with her eye.

"And it isn't stealing to take fruit," the Tempter went on. "Everybody does it."

"Y-e-s," more doubtfully, "only Aunt Selina might not like my doing it the second day of my visit. She'd feel uncomfortable if I got arrested."

"She wouldn't mind; she'd think it was funny. If you had been here longer, it would be different, but of course a stranger can't be expected to know which is private property and which public!"

"But the wall—" Betty put in rather faintly.

"Oh, there are walls and fences everywhere. They don't mean anything," said the Tempter, reassuringly. "Did you ever see such glorious apples—I beg pardon, I mean peaches. What a stupid mistake! When you are warm and thirsty, there is nothing like a great, cool Crawford."

"I'd give my eye teeth for one!" said Betty out loud.

"Better keep them for one," whispered the Tempter. "Here, let me help you. Now jump down. No, there isn't a soul in sight. There you are."

"I suppose it is wrong," said Betty, peeling off the furry skin in long strips. "Why do they have to be so wet! Oh, how good! Oh, my goodness!" The peach dropped from her fingers and she jumped back, though there wasn't even one policeman in sight; only an unofficial young man, seated rather uncomfortably on one of the branches above her.

"I beg your pardon for startling you," he said, lifting his hand to his head and looking vaguely surprised, as he found nothing removable there. "I didn't know you were coming, you see!"

"Neither did I," said Betty apologetically. "It really wasn't my fault. I mean the peaches looked so good I simply couldn't get by, and I am a stranger here, so, of course, I did not know whether this was private property or not." The young man grinned a little.

"They're apt to be, peach orchards," he said reflectively. Betty turned red.

"I only took one, and I didn't eat all of that," she stammered. "It's down here in the grass somewhere."

"Don't bother to look for it," he said kindly. "They are not much good for market after they have been peeled and bitten into, and I dare say one won't make much difference in our returns."

"Oh! You send them to market!" murmured Betty, wondering if she ought to offer to pay for it, and what she should do if her offer were accepted, not having a cent in her pocket.

"Yes, we market them," said the young man, swinging himself down to the grass beside her, and picking up his cap. "There have to be just so many, to pack the boxes exactly even. They wouldn't take a box that was one short, of course, so we have to be rather particular." Betty cast down her eyes, and saw some fresh-looking stones near the trunk of the tree.

"Some one else has been eating them, too," she said, pointing to the stones.

"Yes," he answered composedly. "I saw there would be several left over, so I ate them myself. If I had only left one, it would have been all right."

"Do you really count them beforehand?"

"Oh, no, that isn't necessary. A person who has been in the business as long as I have can tell just by looking at a tree how many it holds."

"I am dreadfully sorry," said poor Betty.

"It is not a very prosperous year for us farmers," he went on. "Woolly aphis got into the sheep, and there was an epidemic of pip among the oranges last winter; but we have lost more money by having our fruit stolen than in any other way. You have no idea how unscrupulous people are about fruit! People that wouldn't steal your chickens for anything will walk off with your fruit by the basketful." Betty was on the verge of tears.

"I haven't any money with me," she faltered, "but if you will give me your address, I'll send a check or a money order as soon as I get back to my aunt's." The young man looked a little abashed.

"I didn't mean you for a moment," he explained. "One peach won't amount to anything. I only wish I might offer you another. I was thinking of boy thieves when I spoke. The neighborhood is full of them."

"I am not in the habit of being called a thief!" Betty's spunk was rising a little.

"I dare say you never were one before," he answered soothingly. "It is so easy to slip into wrong doing without noticing it. Often a kind word of warning at the time will save one from years of regret. I am glad for your sake that I happened to be here this morning. Was that the gate clicking? Good heavens, there he comes!"

"Who?" demanded Betty.

"My—uncle. He owns part of this orchard, you know; he and I own it together. I think, if you don't mind, we had better get up into this tree."

"Can't I climb over the wall?"

"No, he is coming that way. Quick!"

"You might introduce me as a friend."

"He would see right through it, and, besides—here, let me help you up—he is a peculiar old duffer, and he doesn't like women. He might be rude to you. Are you comfortable? I'll sit here and keep a lookout."

"I'm dreadfully frightened. Why don't you go and make him walk in the other direction? Then I could slip away."

"Well, to tell the truth, we are not on very friendly terms just at present. We had a little tiff yesterday—relatives do, you know—and we aren't speaking to-day. I didn't want him to prosecute a fellow who had helped himself to some peaches; not more than half a dozen, and he really wasn't a bad sort of a fellow. It seemed a pity to arrest him, but my uncle was determined, so we nearly came to blows."

"Oh!" gasped Betty.

"If I were to try and turn him the other way, like as not he'd insist on coming to this very tree, he is so pig-headed. Sh! Here he is. Are you sure your gown doesn't show from below?" Betty gathered up her skirts in nervous haste, displaying two well-shaped little tan shoes and—but you can't stop to be prudish when your life is in danger, and they were silk, anyway.

"If I had only known it was going to happen," she whispered, "I'd have worn a green gown instead of this pink and white dimity. It wouldn't have been half so noticeable."

"With pink polka dots to represent peaches, and brown ribbons for stems," he added cautiously. "Then no one would have known you were not a tree. I could have got myself up like a bluejay to escape notice."

"Or a scarecrow," murmured Betty. "Sh! Here he is."

The part owner of the orchard paced slowly along, scowling up at the trees, and paused, leaning on his stick, not thirty feet away from them. It was a terrible moment. He looked around suspiciously, as though saying, "Fe, fi, fo, fum!" to himself.

"Be him in skirts or be him in breeches, I'll have his bones for stealing my peaches," murmured the young man in Betty's ear. She sent him a warning look, then they both gave way to noiseless laughter. The old man went slowly on his way and his nephew drew a deep sigh of relief.

"Is the worst over?" said Betty.

"We must stay up here till he gets to the end of the row."

"Won't he come back this way?"

"No; he always goes all around the orchard in his tours of inspection. I know, because I've often—" he paused abruptly.

"Often what?"

"Accompanied him, of course."

"Oh!"

"Yes, we have very pleasant strolls, my uncle and I!"

"He looks rather cross and disagreeable. Oh, I beg your pardon, I didn't think about your being related. It was very rude of me."

"You musn't misjudge him. Really, there is only one thing in the world that puts him out of temper, and that is having his fruit stolen. I think he is a little unreasonable about that."

"I am sure it is very natural, when they have to pack the boxes so exactly. If you put a sign up explaining that to people, I know they wouldn't take it any more."

"Some rows of barbed wire above the wall would be equally effective, I imagine. I'm glad it wasn't up this morning, though."

"I ought to be going. Do you suppose he is out of the way yet? My aunt will wonder what has become of me."

"Wait till I look. Yes, the coast is clear. Let me take you down; it is too far to jump." Betty shook out her crumpled skirts and repinned her hat.

"I'm very grateful to you, I'm sure," she said, holding out her hand. "I didn't deserve your kindness. I wish you would let me make it up to—your uncle some way for the peach I took. I shall feel uncomfortable about it if you won't."

"Really, it is no matter," he protested. "Don't think about it again." He swung himself to the top of the wall and held down both his hands to her. "Use the crevices as steps. Now, when I say three! One, two—" But the young man never said three.

"At it again, are you?" growled a surly voice alarmingly near them. "I thought I'd catch you. You may think that bringing your girl will save you from arrest, but, by Golly, it won't! I'll run you both in for stealing my peaches. Just you wait—" But they were not waiting. With a quick movement the young man had jerked Betty up beside him and let her down on the other side, and by the time the old man had reached the wall they had both vanished around a bend in the lane.

"You were making it all up!" said Betty indignantly, when she got her breath. "You were stealing fruit yourself, and making fun of me! I knew it all the time, any way."

"It's a pity we couldn't have brought a few peaches with us," said the young man composedly. "Running always gives one such a thirst."

And the Tempter smiled and curled himself up for a nap, feeling that he had done a good morning's work.—

WESTERN CATARACTS

A description of our own Yosemite Falls,—the greatest in the world, almost half a mile high, and described and pictured times innumerable, is certainly superflous, but the other Western waterfalls are not so well known.

The Twin Falls on the Snake river in Northern Idaho are visited by few tourists, as a twenty-mile stage ride over a hot alkali desert is necessary to reach them. These falls are some miles above the main Shoshone Falls, but are more picturesque. They are about 175 feet in height, and separated only by a huge mass of volcanic rock which looks as if it might have fallen bodily from the cliffs above. The whole canyon of the Snake River is of volcanic origin, and abounds in huge obsidian cliffs and black and yellow rocks. It is nearly perpendicular, and is entirely destitute of vegetation.

The Grand canyon of the Yellowstone has two water falls; the Upper Falls at the head of the canyon and the Grand Falls, about three miles below. The Grand Falls are 260 feet in height, and are the more noticeable by reason of their surroundings. Just here are the most gorgeous cliffs, the steepest precipices and the most stupendous gorges of the canyon. No painter can, or, if he could, would dare give a truthful picture of this wonderful spot. Even the untrammeled Hills' strange paintings look faded and tame beside the vivid hues of the original.

"YELLOW BOOK" PICTURES

New Expressions of the Beardsley Cult in "The Savoy."

Since the "Yellow Book" is in its tenth volume and there have been five "Savoys," it is safe to regard both periodicals as past the transitory and experimental stages. Both have created their own public, which insures to each a circulation, if not extensive, at least discriminating. Now that the "Yellow Book" has eschewed Beardsley, the "Savoy" presents itself as the expression of his theory of black and white effects. The earlier issues of the orange quarterly were filled with the strangest effects by the clever young Englishman. But now it has grown dignified; it has Henry Harland for editor, and is full of photographs illustrating schools of art, which, if new, are not abnormal, and are certainly respectable. It retains an important distinction, however. Its stories are more gracefully phrased and constructed than those you find in any of the other London periodicals, except perhaps "The English Illustrated," which in its latest developments gives us George Gissing and Hubert Crackenthorpe as often as possible, and these, as the average reader knows, are the leaders among the younger generation of novelists.

"BARREN LIFE"
BY LAWRENCE HOUSMAN
From "The Yellow Book"

In the current volume there is little to suggest decadence. More excellent typography you will find nowhere out of editions de luxe, with fine hand-made paper and a pleasing excellence of press work. Here are the usual features, the names now grown agreeably familiar. There are some new people in this volume, but the old writers are not omitted. Among the younger generation of writers who entered literature in the first "Yellow Book" is Ellen D'Arcy, whose claims to distinction rest on a volume of short stories, "Monochromes," which displayed a first-rate talent and an unusual capacity at expressing feelings and effects. In the current number are "The Death Mask" and "The Villa Lucienne," rather studies than stories. The first is a remarkable piece of work. Presumably it is Verlaine's mask that is so strikingly described and used to illustrate the strange character contrasts the French poet offered the world. There are two masterly pages, which actually project both the mask and the man before the eye and into the brain of the reader with a strength that reminds one of Balzac. The second is a species of ghost study done with the dexterity of a real talent, attaining the cold, weird and uncanny effect which is the impression Miss D'Arcy aims at.

After recovering from the depression which these admirable but morbid studies had planted in me, I turned to the "Invisible Prince," Henry Harland's contribution to the number. It is a fascinating and delightfully written story, inimitably graceful, full of esprit and delicate charm, light and airy, but as unsatisfactory in its termination as "The Lady and the Tiger." It tells the story of a prince who had resigned his privileges and become a poet, and a lady presumably noble, who has penetrated his disguise and his identity. They meet first at a ball in the castle of an Australian princess, the dialogue that ensues has a delicious spontaniety and breathes the atmosphere of dainty frivolity. Tney are separated, but meet again on a London street. I cannot refrain from transcribing this clever passage:

"Castle Ennui is the Bastille of modern life. It is built of prunes and prisms. It has its outer court of Convention, and its inner court of Propriety; it is moated around by Respectability; and the shackles its inmates wear are forged of dull little duties and arbitrary little rules. You can only escape from it at the risk of breaking your social neck, or remaining a fugitive from social justice to the end of your days."

As the hero remarks, it is a decent little image, but it does not compensate for the uncertainty the climax leaves one in. Indeed, it is the unknown that has most fascination for all of us. However, successful conclusions are not the order of this latest "Yellow Book." There is not a happiness in the set.

The drawing reproduced here is by Lawrence Housman, who has been in several of the periodicals and is well known for his artistic book plates. It is called "Barren Life," but wherefore the writer declines to explain. That is a task for the reader's imagination.

The illness of Aubrey Beardsley accounts, doubtless, for the absence of his signature from the latest "Savoy." The frontispiece is an excellent imitation of his curious Japanesque effects by Guilio Floriana, and, inside, there is a drawing by A. Kay Womrath, which the apostle of pen and ink art might himself have composed, and certainly would not have scorned to sign. "Le Chanson," reproduced below, is the first appearance in the decadent magazines of Mr. Womrath, who has certainly unusual dexterity and a fine sense of artistic effect, as the composition with its graceful lines and excellent decorative quality, proves. What is portrayed makes little matter, as long as the effect is clever and startling, and a certain sensationalism of effect is obtainable by the bold and curious contrast of this picture. I presume that is the "Savoy's" gospel and precept. The third picture, "A Dryad," by M. Dearmir, is open to being termed strangely graceful. The editor, Arthur Symons, may cavil at the definition, being a purist, but one must be of the "illuminati" to understand decadent art. Otherwise the number is interesting and undoubtedly clever, though the stories are not as satifactory as the verse. The most valuable feature of the number artistically is the is the reproduction of a wash-drawing by Beardsley, "The Woman in White," the original of which must be a treasure.

"LE CHANSON"
BY A. KAY WOMRATH
From "The Savoy"

Paris, which has already witnessed bicycle wedding processions, was recently the scene of the first bicycle duel. A party of young men had been out on the wheel all day, and had been drinking too much, when two of them quarreled. A companion suggested that they fight it out with sword bayonets; the weapons were procured, and they charged on each other on their bicycles. The result was four wrecked machines, the principals coming together with great force, while the seconds, who were following close behind, fell over them. One man was wounded in the groin by tumbling on his own sword in the smashup.

The drought under which New South Wales languished in 1895, as measured by the official tables, may be said to have cost the Colony two million bushels of wheat, eighteen thousand horses, nearly four hundred thousand cattle of various kinds, more than ten million sheep, and five million lambs. If to these figures be added the natural increase which, under ordinary conditions, the flocks and herds and wheat lands of the Colony would have known, the mischiefs of the drought take still more tragical dimensions.

SERENADE

BY LUCIUS HARWOOD FOOTE

From the French of Theophile Gautier

To the casement where she stands,
I would mount and kiss her lips;
But alas, my outstretched hands
Cannot touch her finger tips.

Bid thy old duenna leave,
Drop thy silken girdle, sweet;
Or a ladder deftly weave
From thy lute-strings, for my feet.

Loose thy comb, discard the rose,
Lean, until the tawny hair,
Which around about thee flows,
Makes for me a magic stair.

Quickly then to thee above,
Will thy lover lightly rise;
He, though not an angel, love,
Knows the way to paradise.

"A DRYAD"
BY M. DEARMER
From "The Savoy"

THE STREET SINGER

From what province far away
In the land of dreams and day,
Contadina hast thou come?
Was it Venice in the sea,
Or the fair land Tuscany,
Where the vines hang in the sun?
Was it Capri's rock-wrought spell
Where the blue waves sing and swell
With the winds in ecstacy,
Or adown where olive trees
Rustle in the sighing breeze
In the groves of Sicily?

O, it must have been somewhere,
In some garden wondrous fair,
Filled with blossoms and the sun,
In some land of fairy dreams,
In some land where singing streams
Ripple sweetly as they run.
O, it was somewhere away,
In the realm of perfect day.
Maiden thou wert meant to be,
Carolling a sylvan air,
Plaiting jasmine in thy hair,
In the vales of Arcady.

Bella, with the eyes so brown,
Dreams that might the stars call down,
Why those traces of a tear.
Is that longing in thine eye,
Is that saddened wistful sigh,
All since thou art exiled here?
O, then may some fortune kind
Bear thee back on wings of wind
Where thy heart is, cross the sea,
To the land of cloudless skies
Where the sunlight never dies,
In thine own loved Italy.

HENRY SEBASTIAN KIRK.

APART.

I.

While sunset burns and stars are few,
And roses scent the fading light,
And like a slim urn, dripping dew,
A spirit carries through the night,
The pearl-pale moon hangs new—
I think of you, of you.

II.

While waters flow, and soft winds woo
The golden hearted bud with sighs ;
And, like a flower an angel threw,
Out of the momentary skies
A star falls burning blue—
I dream of you, of you.

—Madison Cawein.

IN SOCIETY

Entertainments and Happenings In Town and Out.

October with its falling leaf and fading tree, its brilliancy of coloring and its [illegible] vies with June as to popularity for weddings. No less than four important ceremonies are set for October. Unlike the spring or summer wedding, which suggests fairy-like fabrics, "dreams of dimity, fresh as dawn," one associates gorgeous brocades, luxuriant flowers and rich colorings with the sere and yellow leaf. Filmy fluffiness is inappropriate at fall weddings, for primroses and apple blossoms are gone, and a setting of gorgeous chrysanthemums (or other late flowers) demands magnificent figures in the foreground. Autumn's bride should be clothed in the heaviest of satins and laces. She should be a woman rather than a girl, stately rather than sportive, dignified rather than demure. As for the bridesmaids—well, a wise virgin will select becoming contemporaries for her wedding train, for her wedding day is the day of days for a woman, and she owes it to herself to look her best.

Of the recently announced weddings, Miss Mercado's is among the most important. She is small and dark, with slightly Spanish eyes (her father's people were of the old aristocrats of Mexico), a very sweet low voice and a face which is a faithful index of her gentle and generous heart. Miss Margaret Salisbury is to be her very charming maid of honor and her bridesmaids are chosen from her numerous cousins (Miss Scott and Miss Kate Salisbury being two) and from Mr. Boardman's family. Only the intimate friends of the family are to be invited to the wedding breakfast.

Miss Jennie Catherwood, the attractive daughter of the more attractive mother, is to be married in her country home—the best of all places, according to Southern notions, to be married in, as well as the prettiest.

Miss Requa will have an army wedding, and Miss Myra Prather will be married at home with only her most intimate friends about her. She will undoubtedly make a very handsome bride with her brilliant eyes and complexion and her black, black hair. Of the other entertainments society has merely roused itself momentarily to bid a farewell to Justice and Mrs. Field, who left for Washington on Thursday. On Saturday last Mrs. Homer King gave a big reception in their honor, and on Tuesday Mrs. Alvord entertained Mrs. Field at a married ladies' luncheon. Of the teas, Miss Mabel Reed's farewell tea was a jolly gathering, informal and enjoyable. Miss Foulkes is to give a farewell tea to Miss Reed next Saturday. Apropos of teas, young Mr. Louis Bruguiere has instituted the "Brownie" tea, and is "at home" every Tuesday to his girl friends. His entertainments are highly popular among the buds, for besides having the charm of novelty Mr. Bruguiere is an artist at the tea table and brews a capital brand of "the cup that cheers but does not inebriate." It is a pleasing occupation for the youthful Brownie, who hitherto has been unable to find a suitable field for his abilities, which are largely of the social order.

There was considerable excitement at Burlingame last Sunday. In the morning Mr. Joe Tobin and Mr. Taylor played a tennis match with the Whitney brethren. The game was very closely contested, and some very good plays were made. Mr. Tobin's service was especially sharp, and although the Whitneys carried off the honors they had to work hard for their victory. What I noted about their game was the smoothness, the uniform evenness of their play. There is no fluke work; every stroke is calculated; every ball reaches its mark. In the afternoon a gay crowd witnessed the polo. The Tobins were accompanied by Mrs. Oelrichs and Miss Virginia Fair; the Hobarts, Baldwins, Henry Crockers and the Henry Scotts were all enjoying the game which was an unusually good one. Mr. Walter Hobart and Mr. Joe Tobin were the more fortunate and won the laurels of this occasion.

Very sad, indeed, was the sudden death of young Henry Sharon, the only son of Mr. and Mrs. Fred Sharon, who died of membraneous croup recently in Paris. He was a bright little chap, only eleven years of age.

The invitations to the Friday-night cotillions are out. The first is to be led by Miss Kate Salisbury and Mr. Ed. Greenway; the second, a fancy dress affair, by Miss Alice Hager. The list of the Friday Fortnightly is also completed, and no further additions will be made. Owing to the inadequacy of Lunt's Hall, which was frequently crowded to an extent that made dancing an impossibility, last year, Mrs. Blanding and Mr. Monroe Salisbury decided to limit the number of invitations.

The newest addition to the list of debutantes is Miss Laura Scott, one of the prettiest of Mrs. Monroe's Salisbury's nieces. Miss Scott is a dainty little brunette with exceedingly delicate coloring and bright, laughing brown eyes—she rather resembles her sister, Miss Mamie Scott, whose engagement to Mr. Neville Castle was announced some months ago. Miss Scott has been quite delicate for some time past, but is now restored to health.

The topic of conversation over in Oakland at present is the Requa-Long nuptials. The wedding is to be quite the swellest event of its kind ever given there. Three hundred invitations have been issued to the breakfast and still a larger number to the church. The breakfast is to be given in a huge marquee, which will be erected in the grounds at "Highlands," Piedmont. Miss Requa's trousseau is indeed a thing of beauty, and already several of the wedding gifts have arrived. The house at the Presidio, to be occupied by Captain and Mrs. Long, is being most luxuriously fitted up by Mrs. Requa. Miss Lucy King, who is a cousin of the bride, will be maid of honor. She is a very young girl, just passed her sixteenth birthday. The bridesmaids are Miss Belle Mhoon, Miss Jessie Glascock, Miss Lulita Booth and Miss Ella Morgan.

Invitations to the Deux Temps Club are out. The organization is to meet once a month, instead of every second week, as has been the custom. The character of the club has changed somewhat. There has been an infusion of new blood, and the lady patronesses have chosen Tuesday instead of Saturday night for their meets. Among the directors are Mrs. Prentiss Selby, Mrs. A. A. Moore, Mrs. George Wheaton, Mrs. Knight and Mrs. Dunham. Contrary to all anticipations, the Friday Fortnightly or "Little Ducks" is being reorganized. A meeting was held during the week at Mrs. Belden's, when it was decided to admit merely boys and girls between the ages of sixteen and twenty-one.

One of the jolliest entertainments of the autumn was the card party given by Miss Mona Crellin to Miss Smith last week. The young people, some forty in number, played six-handed euchre, and afterwards the refreshments, all representing cards, were served. The ices were in hearts, diamonds, spades and clubs, the sandwiches cut in similar fashion. Among the prettiest of the girls I noted Miss Marietta Havens and Miss Coralie Selby. After supper guessing games were played; pictures of celebrities, advertisements, were handed round, and the solver of the greatest number won the prize.

A delightful little dinner was given by Mr. Fred Magee at the Beta fraternity house on Wednesday evening. Among the girls, who were chaperoned by Mrs. Prentiss Salisbury, were Miss Kate Salisbury, Miss Belle Mhoon, Miss Florence Dunham, Miss Jessie Glascock and the Misses Selby. Afterwards they all went to Shattuck Hall to see "Brick" Morse's minstrel show.

Berkeley is all agog preparing for Mrs. Ben Morgan's German Fete, which takes place this afternoon. The girls have been busy evolving piquant peasant costumes and making fancy work for the booths. Several members of the Sketch Club, under the direction of Mr. Hausman, have decorated the grounds and house in most artistic fashion. The programme is full of interest; the play, the music and, above all, the German luncheon, with its varied menu. Outside of the Fete and the minstrel show the college town has been rather dull of late. Mr. and Mrs. Kellogg gave a large reception to a hundred and fifty students last week, which I hear was rather enjoyable.

Miss Bessie Wall announces a concert for the evening of October 8th at Hamilton Hall. She is to make her debut as a vocalist on this occasion. Her voice is a rich, sweet contralto, and she uses it charmingly. Mr. Sigmund Beel is to assist Miss Wall.

There has been quite an exodus of prominent Oaklanders in the past few weeks. Mrs. Knowles and her family went to New York last week. Mrs. Knowles anticipates placing the two youngest children in Miss Eely's school. Miss Anita Whitney left for Washington with Justice and Mrs. Field on Thursday, where she will remain during the winter. Mr. and Mrs. Hubbard will also winter in Boston with their daughter, Mrs. Swan, and Mrs. Coleman and Miss Jessie Coleman go to Philadelphia early in October.

MRS. HERMAN OELRICHS
WHOM THE FAIR WILL HAS BROUGHT BACK TO SAN FRANCISCO
Photo by Taber

A member of our bar who is as stout as he is prominent, tells a good story of a footpad. "Last month," says he, "when the city was economizing in gas I was stopped by a man who demanded my purse. I did not strike him; I did not call for the police; I simply fell upon him. I never saw that man again. I weigh two hundred and fifty pounds."

When the Poor Law was first introduced, a Dublin beggar woman, whom a gentleman referred to the poorhouse, said: "This Poor Law's a grand thing for the sowls of the gintlemen." "Why so?" "Bekaise now when we axes for alms they only say go to the poorhouse, but before there was a poorhouse they used to say, 'Go to the divil!'"

When the Eastern visitor reaches San Jose he is often at a loss to know where to go for a team. He will make no mistake, however, if he directs his steps to the Hotel Vendome Stables, headquarters of the Mount Hamilton Stage Company. From here the stage coach for the Lick Observatory sets out every morning, and there, too, you can find on call the fastest horses, the neatest and trimmest rigs and the tidiest equipments. F. H. Ross & Sons are proprietors.

That air of elegance and harmony which characterizes the home of refinement depends largely upon the selection of furniture. Tinsel and glitter are not sufficient; a certain modest richness is necessary, and nothing lends more to this effect than articles of rare design in pure antique. The dealer realizes this and hence the plaster imitations which alas so soon tarnish. I spent a delightful hour recently inspecting the exquisite workmanship displayed by the P. Rossi Co., who have enlarged their business and located at 117 Sutter street. This establishment with branches in Paris and Venice, makes a specialty of designing and manufacturing the finest antique furniture. Mr. Rossi is himself a sculptor of talent and does the designing while the work is executed by the firm's artisans either here or abroad.

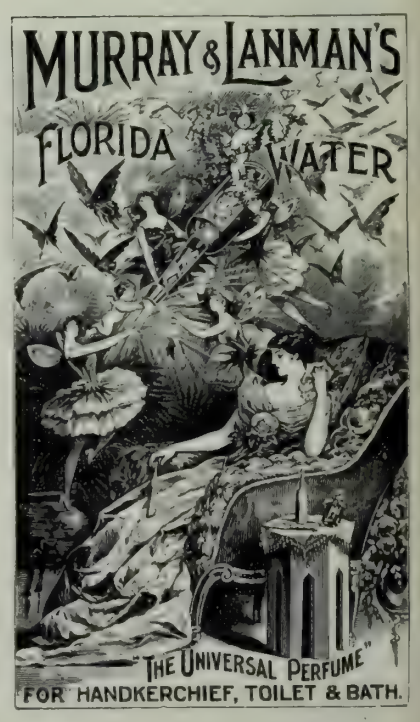
An elaborate Roccoco mantle and frame and a Renaissance mantle designed by Mr. Rossi and hand carved—the latter made to order for a lady in this city—attracted my special attention. Several hand-carved arm chairs of original shape and pattern, daintily upholstered, are displayed, also cabinets, sideboards, etc. Parlor suites are executed to order in pure antique style. Goods of this class are sure to be much sought after by those of refinement and artistic taste and are the more desirable since they never go out of style and take on an added beauty with age.

Dr. C. W. Decker, Dentist, 806 Market Street

The Original Swain's Bakery, 213 Sutter St., stands without a rival and has stood the test for years. The most delicious meals are served by gentlemanly attendants, and the management takes pride in having everything orderly. It is just the place for business men and ladies out shopping to lunch.

Reduce your obesity by taking Brooks's Phytolacca. Pleasant to take. Makes walking a pleasure. No diet necessary. Trial size 50 cts. Try it. Get it at 119 Powell street. Mailed free on receipt of price.

Adams' Tutti-Frutti Chewing Gum for Indigestion



DRAMATIC NOTES

Beginning with next Monday there will be a matinee every day at the Orpheum for that week at least. The special attraction will be the Famous Royal Hawaiian Band and Glee Club. It is an unique combination of clever musicians and enjoys an excellent reputation. The leader, Professor J. S. Libornio, is perhaps the greatest saxophone soloist in the world. The band and glee club perform every afternoon and evening in addition to the regular vaudeville show, which includes Annie Suits in her songs and dances, and many other clever people.

Edward Rose's dramatization of "The Prisoner of Zenda" will be seen here for the first time on Oct. 5th at the Baldwin. The company is headed by James Hackett, who has been well spoken of by the critics in New York and is considered very promising. His father was the famous Falstaff of his time. The advance notices state that the stage settings are "rich and tasteful and require two cars to transport them," so we may expect something very fine, indeed.

"Divorce" has been capitally staged and capitally played at the Alcazar this week. The capable stock company has buckled down to business and is doing very creditable work. There will be a "rose matinee" this afternoon, when every lady will be presented with a beautiful La France rose. On Monday evening "School" will be produced on an elaborate scale, and with a competent cast. Ten pretty young ladies from Belasco's school of acting will help to make the piece attractive, and a number of catchy songs will be introduced.

Monday ushers in the farewell week of the Frawley company. They go from here to Los Angeles, then to Honolulu to open the new opera house, returning here for the holidays. They will give "The Lost Paradise" next week, one of their old plays, which deals with the labor question and is chiefly remarkable for the huge wheel—which is the piece de resistance of the factory scene—and for Blanche Bates Cinders.

Things are humming out at the Chutes. This evening the grounds will be turned over to the Plumed Knights, who give an exhibition drill. To-morrow afternoon there will be a baloon ascension and parachute drop, the first in some weeks, by C. W. Vosmer, an aeronaut who has just arrived from the east. Antonio Pirri continues to make his thrilling rides down the Chutes and into the lake on his bicycle.

Opera at the Metropolitan in New York will be much the same as usual next winter. Mr. Grau has secured the prime favorites—Melba, Calve, Eames, Nordica, Jean and Edouard de Reszke and Plancon, with Seidl, Mancinelli and Bevignani as conductors. The season will open November 16, and continue through thirteen weeks.

Society will be out in force at the Hinrichs-Beel Symphony concerts ,to be given at the Baldwin. Among the long list of subscribers we noticed the W. Mayo Newhalls, Hoffmans, James D. Phelan, Lilienthals, Gerstles, John Parrot, Mrs. Phoebe Hearst, Mrs. Horace Davis, Mrs. L. L. Baker and many others.

"In Spite of All" does not suit the Frawley Company. The cast is a short one, having but nine people in it. Frank Worthing was good as a bad man of the world; Hope Ross was an admirable waiting maid; Miss Bates had Minnie Maddern Fiske's old part, and Lansing Rowan was a ballet-dancer.

There is already a demand for seats to see "Trilby," which is the next attraction, when the Frawley Company close their season at the Columbia Theatre. The play will be produced here by A. M. Palmer's Company, direct from Australia.

Julia Marlowe commences her tour in the latter part of this month, and will play towards the Coast direct. Her engagement at the Baldwin follows "The Prisoner of Zenda."

The sale of seats for "The Prisoner of Zenda" will begin on Wednesday morning, instead of the usual Thursday, so as to accommodate the patrons of the Baldwin.

Marie Wainwright will play the leading role in Wilton Lackaye's production of "Dr. Bellgraff."

Fall Styles Neckwear and Hosiery at John W. Carmany's, 25 Kearny Street

THE LORING CLUB CONCERT

Always the same, those Loring Club concerts; and always in the same sweltering, out-of-the-way hall. Never would the Loring people change anything—even the musical director—for the world. Under Mr. Hughes the works of all composers sound alike. Choppy little notes, spasmodic accents and mistaken tempi are wearing, as well as unmusical. These qualities seem to be Mr. Hughes' unvarying stock in trade. His beat, moreover, is neither decisive nor inspiring. In short, the elements that make a musical director are wanting in Mr. Hughes. The voices in the club are mostly fine, and excellent results might be obtained, all things being equal.

Miss M. Adelia Brown, soprano, was the singer at the first concert of the season, and Mr. John Marquardt the violinist. Miss Brown has an unusually mellow, musical voice and she knows how to use it. While there is room for improvement in her interpretations, Miss Brown's singing is, on the whole, very enjoyable. Her first number, the waltz song from "Romeo and Juliet," was very prettily sung. It is doubtful if Mr. John Marquardt has ever played better in San Francisco than on this occasion. The difficult "Faust" fantasie was extremely well rendered technically, and was given with far greater spirit than this artist usually displays in his solo performances. He was deservedly recalled.

Mr. Bretherick's accompaniments might have been better. He spoiled Miss Brown's first solo and played too loud for Mr. Marquardt. Mr. Bretherick was better in the numbers with the club.

P. C. ALLEN.

MISS MAUDE MILLET

A FAVORITE LONDON ACTRESS, WHOSE ROLE AS COMEDIENNE DOES NOT BAR AN OCCASIONAL EXCURSION INTO THE REALMS OF SENTIMENT

Photo by Barrauds, London

STAGE STORIES

The late James Lewis of the Daly Company used to say that he "stubbed his toe and fell on the stage." He was a very young man and he lived in Troy. It happened that an actor in a theatre there took it into his head to visit New York without his manager's permission, but he did not have quite the heart to go without leaving a substitute behind him. He applied to a friend of his who was not an actor to be the substitute. The friend refused. It happened that Lewis was present and the actor then asked him to take his place. Lewis suddenly took it into his head to try. He took the part and studied it and the actor played truant, according to the programme. When the time came for beginning the play, Lewis was the only person present to play the part, and it mattered not how little the manager liked it, there was nothing else to be done. The actor stayed in New York longer than he had expected, and when he came back he found himself discharged and Lewis hired in his place. The other members of his family did not know that Lewis was an actor till some time later, and it was found out at last only by his sister's visiting the theatre and seeing him on the stage. In the barnstorming days that fell to his lot Lewis had a few adventures. Once he asked the landlord of a country hotel to direct him to the theatre. "Waal," the landlord replied, "we ain't ezactly got no theatre, but there's a buildin' up yonder where they give performances. It used to be Temperance Hall, but they call it Grand Opera House now."

Presently the actor came to a marble yard and asked a man who was cutting stone to direct him to the Grand Opera House. "Right back of the marble yard," the man said.

"Where is the stage door?"

"You'll find it just behind the third tombstone to your left."

When the actor found the stage door and the carpenter, and had attracted the attention of that tradesman by throwing a tenpeny nail at him, the carpenter said: "Is your name Lewis?"

He admitted it, and the carpenter said: "Oh, yes, I've been warned about you."

"Why so?" the actor asked.

"Why," said the carpenter, "they tell me you're first rate."

In a certain scene in "Moths," the hero strikes the heroine with his gloves. One night when Macklyn Arbuckle was playing the part, a German, who had perhaps been indulging a little, leaped up in the audience with a shout of "Shame! Shame!" and wanted to fight the brutal wielder of the gloves on the spot. With some difficulty he was quieted, but after the play he grimly lay for the actor. "There comes Arbuckle now," said a bystander. The German squared himself, but after one look at the actor's good-tempered, open countenance, he dropped his fists again. "No, no, that isn't the one," he said regretfully. "That man's got a good face. He couldn't strike a woman." And Arbuckle passed on unchallenged.

Chew Adams' Pepsin Tutti-Frutti. It is sovereign for indigestion and agreeable to the taste

The Maison Riche serves an elegant dinner at popular prices.

When Lackaye was performing in an Examiner benefit last winter, a certain actress of Hebrew lineage, for whom he had a profound dislike, was making herself very conspicuous in one of the boxes. In the course of a small speech he was called on to make, Lackaye spoke of "a little boy who went to Sunday school on Sunday." This was more or less of a break, and there was a sudden laugh, led by an exasperating giggle from his black-haired enemy. "Of course everybody goes to Sunday school on Sunday," he floundered on. Again the laughter. The Jewish actress leaned over the edge of her box, conspicuously convulsed. Lackaye eyed her squarely. "Except those who go on Saturday," he finished.

LIBRARY NOTES

In a recent "Critic," Frederick Kippel offers for the use of translators a list of words which are identical, or nearly so, in French and English, but have different meanings. It often happens that a term identical in the two languages is rendered with its English equivalent and in consequence curious errors are made. For instance, "agrement" means pleasure and enjoyment, not an agreement, "amusant" is interesting not funny; "carcasse" the framework of any construction and not a dead body; "figure" is face, not the form of the body; "lecture" is the act of reading. A lecture in the English sense would be "une conference." The list is valuable and worth the attention of those who speak as well as those who try reproducing French in English.

Herbert Spencer, who is now living at Wantage, England, is completing for autumn publication, says the London "Daily Chronicle," the third volume of "The Principles of Sociology," which, we hear, is to include "Progressive Institutions," "Industrial Institutions" and "Ecclesiastical Institutions." The last-mentioned has already been issued in "part" form. In the first volume of this great work are included "The Data of Sociology," "The Inductions of Sociology" and "Domestic Institutions," and in the second, "Ceremonial Institutions" and "Political Institutions." Mr. Spencer in the winter proposes to revise "The Principles of Biology."

Jimmy Whistler has taken to designing artistic book covers and has made a beauty for a "Book of Scoundrels," by Charles A. Whiteley. A gallows is delicately outlined, around which the letters of the title are grouped in idealized type, while underneath is a minute seal showing a skull and crossbones. The design reveals the power of the artist in making a repellant subject attractive.

The increasing influence of George Meredith is shown by the fact that three-fourths of the new collected edition of his works has been bought in advance of its publication, the demand from America being large. It is a good sign of improved literary taste. Sir Richard Temple's autobiography will soon appear in two volumes.

The "Daily Chronicle" is the daily of the literary set in London. Its proprietor, Mr. Lloyd, who is also the owner of "Lloyd's Newspaper," has just purchased one hundred square miles of forest in Norway to convert into paper for his various publications.

The Mira Valle Vineyard is situated on high altitude. It lies between the ocean on one side, about eighteen miles distant, and the bay waters on the other. Its soil is silica, gravelous, partly calcarious. Both location and soil compare favorably with that which produces the famous wines from the Medoc district of France. Depot, 604½ Geary street.

Mr. Gustav Hinrichs, whose name has long been connected with the operatic history of the United States, has opened a studio in the Emporium Building, for the cultivation of voices, and for the finish of advanced vocalists. Mr. Hinrichs' career has been most successful, he having been for many years the leading vocal teacher in Philadelphia. In New York he was principal of the opera class at the National Conservatory of Music, of which Mrs. Jeanette M. Thurber was president and Anton Dvorak was director. The efficiency and thoroughness of his method is shown by the number of the most celebrated operatic singers on the American stage who were his pupils. The voice-trial will be three dollars, which will be refunded when lessons are engaged. Mr. Hinrichs can always be seen at room 441, Emporium Building, on Mondays and Thursdays, between ten and twelve.

DR. H. G. YOUNG—Bridges and teeth without plates a specialty. 1841 Polk street.

Good tea is tea that you like; best tea is the tea you will like best.

It is probably Schilling's Best. If you don't like it your grocer returns your money.

BOURGET'S NEW BOOK

Love versus Friendship in "A Tragic Idyll."

There are several stories interwoven in the latest novel which Paul Bourget has given us. "A Tragic Idyll" (Chas. Scribner's Sons, publishers) is a thick volume devoted to the exposition of love in several of its phases, friendship in an original aspect, and intrigue by which the divers issues are joined and blended into situations or coerced into climaxes. The scene is the Riviera Cannes, Monte Carlo. The main plot concerns Baroness Ely de Carlsberg, the morganatic wife of an Austrian Arch-duke, and Pierre Hautefenille, whom she has fascinated to revenge herself on a former lover, Olivier du Prat. This du Prat, a strange character, whose mistress she had been, deserts her and marries, but she knows he can be wounded through the deep affection he bears Hautefenille. This scheme miscarries because she herself falls in love with Pierre, yet the revenge is accomplished, for at the inevitable encounter between the Baroness and du Prat, the latter discovers that love had changed her into the ideal of all his desires, and against his will the old infatuation is renewed.

That is the first complication. The Arch-duke, who, though separated from his wife, is insanely jealous and subjects her to a system of espionage, affords a second. Du Prat's bride reveals to Pierre the unsuspected secret of the old affair; the Arch-duke's desire for revenge over the loss of his wife is stimulated by Baroness Ely, who deprives him of the cherished services of his friend and assistant, Marcel Verdier, by arranging his marriage with Miss Florence Marsh, an American heiress. This introduces Richard Marsh, the American millionaire, a composite of Pullman, Phil Armour and other Yankee plutocrats, who performs the functions of a deus ex machina in assisting the sub-plots to conclusions, his steam yacht furnishing background for several of the situations. In addition to these we have also Corancez, whose secret marriage to the Marquise de Andryana Bonnacorsi, and the anger thereat of her brother, Count Navagero, gives the touch of comedy. Together with these are much of observation, description and scenery. The key of the central situation is the contrast between the love of a friend for his friend and that of man for woman. The triumph is divided, for though Pierre violates a vow to renounce the Baroness, which he has sworn to du Prat, the latter loses his life to save that of his friend. Between the lovers then this tragic incident is interposed and they are separated for ever.

The appearance of Olivier du Prat on the scene is the signal for the action of the story to begin. To her dearest friend, Madame de Brion, the Baroness thus describes the strange character of this former lover and also gives the key to the story.

"His name is Olivier du Prat. I met him at Rome two years ago when I was spending the winter there. This man was the secretary of one of the two French embassies. He was much lionized because of the passion he had inspired in two Roman ladies, who almost openly disputed his favors. It is very ignoble, what am I am going to tell you, but such was the truth. It amused me to win him from them both. I know now," and her voice became graver, "that I never loved Olivier, but that I so persisted in this liaison that he would have the right to say that I wished him to love me, that I wished to be his mistress, and that I did all I could to retain him. He was a singular character, very different from those professional lovers, who are for the most part frightfully vulgar. He was so changeable, so protean, so full of contrasts, so intangible, that to this day I cannot tell whether he loved me or not. I have never met a being so disconcerting, so irritating, from the endless uncertainty he kept you in, no matter what you did. One day he would be emotional, tremulous, passionate even to frenzy, and on the morrow, sometimes the same day, he would recoil within himself from confidence to suspicion, from tenderness to persiflage, from abandonment to irony, from love to cruelty, without it being possible either to doubt his sincerity or to discover the cause of this incredible alteration.

"But he had touched me in an irritable spot; I wished to control him, to master him, and I used a terrible weapon. I made him jealous. All that is a bitter story, and I spare you the details. It would be painful to recall it, and it does not matter. You will know enough when I say that after a day of intimacy, when he had been more tender than ever before, Olivier left Rome suddenly without an explanation, without a word of adieu, without even writing a letter. I have never seen him again. I have never heard of him, except in a chance conversation this winter, when I learned that he was married. This man who despised his family, who never spoke of his country without bitterness, who attributed the worst motive to every action, even his own, who denied the existence of God, of virtue, of love, this moral nihilist, in short, in so many ways like the Archduke, had one faith, one cult, one religion. He believed in friendship, that of man for man, denying that one woman could be the friend of another. He told me that this sentiment was the only one he respected, the only one that time and change could not prevail against. He acknowledged that this friendship was rare; yet he declared that he had met with it several times, and that he himself had experienced one in his life. It was then that he evoked the image of Pierre Hautefeuille. His accent, his look, his whole being changed while he lingered over the memory of his absent friend.

"No sooner," Madame de Carlsberg continued, "had Chesy pronounced the name of Pierre Hautefeuille than I was possessed by an idea which you will think abominable. I shall pay for it, perhaps, dearly enough. Olivier's departure and then his marriage had stirred in me that hate of which I spoke. I could not bear to think that this man had left me as he did, and was now happy, contented, indifferent that he had gained his serenity without my being revenged. One acquires these base passions by living as I have so long, unhappy and desperate, surrounded by pleasure and luxury. Too much moral distress is depraving. When I knew that I was to meet the intimate friend of Olivier, a possible vengeance offered itself to me, a refined, atrocious, and certain vengeance. My life was forever separated from that of Du Prat. He had probably forgotten me. I was sure that if I won the affections of his friend, and he knew it, it would strike the deepest and most sensitive place in his heart; and that is why I permitted Chesy to present Hautefeuille, and why I indulged in these coquetries for which you blamed me.

The most striking and important scene in the tale is that which describes the meeting of Du Prat and Baroness Ely, he angry and aggressive, determined to call her to account for captivating his friend de Hautefenille, and she defending herself, her actions, and confessing both the guile of her motives and the love that had followed.

"Do you remember about two years ago in Rome, at the Palazzo Savorelli—you see I am being exact—a young man being presented to you, a young man who did not even think about you, and with whom you were—How can I describe it without wounding you?"

"Say at once that I coquetted with him," Ely again interrupted, "and that I tried to make him love me. It is the truth."

"Since you have such a good memory," went on Olivier, "you surely recollect that these coquetries went so far that the young man became your lover. You remember also that this love was a very miserable one. The man was sensitive, suspicious, jealous. He had suffered very much in his life. A woman who loved him truly would have had but one thought—to lull to slumber the horrible malady of distrust that raged in him.

"You admit it," went on Du Prat, "and you will also admit that the young man with whom you played so cruelly had the right to judge you as he did, because when near you he felt all his worst impulses rise to the surface, because you made him evil, cruel, through his suffering. Is that also the truth? And is it not also true that your pride was wounded by his desertion, and that you determined to be revenged? Will you deny that, having encountered later the most intimate, the dearest friend of that man, the deepest and most complete affection that had ever entered his life, you conceived a horrible idea? Will you deny that you determined to make his friend love you with the hope, the certainty, that he would learn, sooner or later, and would suffer horribly from the knowledge that his former mistress had become the mistress of his best, his only friend! Do you deny it?"

"No; it is true," she replied.

"And you admit it!" he cried; "calmly, frankly, you admit it? You do not see how infamous, how abominable, monstrous, your vengeance is? Think of it; you take a being such as he is, pure, youthful, delicate, one incapable of distrust, one all simplicity, all innocence, and you make him love you at the risk of destroying him, of ruining his soul forever. Knowing as you did the friendship that bound him to me, if there had been a spark of—I will not say nobility—a spark of humanity in your heart, you must have recoiled from this crime, from the loathsome infamy of soiling, of ravishing him from his noble, beautiful affection, to give him in exchange a frivolous liaison of a few days, just long enough for you to find amusement in the vileness of your caprice!"

Ely sprang to her feet as her implacable enemy flung the insulting words in her face. And she began to reply to him in a tone of voice that he did not recognize. The soul that he saw shining through her tender, sad eyes, the passionate, shy, ardent soul, capable of the greatest, the most complete, sacrifice to love, was what he had divined to exist in her, what he had pursued without ever capturing, what he had longed for and had never possessed in spite of all their caresses, of all the violence and brutality of his jealousy! Her real nature had been awakened by another! And that other was his dearest friend!

"You are unjust, Olivier," she said, "very unjust. But you do not know all—you cannot know. When I told you that I at first thought only of making him love me to avenge myself upon you, I told you the truth. You ought to believe me when I tell you that the mere idea now fills me with the same horror that you feel. When I got to know him, when I realized the beauty, the nobility, the purity of his nature, all the virtues that you have just been speaking of, I awoke to the sense of the infamy I was going to commit. I loved him, and he was your friend, your brother. I had been your mistress, and I knew that a time must come when you would meet again, when he would speak to you of me — a time when he would perhaps know all. Do you think I did not dread that a time would come when I should see you again and you would speak to me as you have just been speaking? Oh, it is horrible, agonizing! Pierre loves me as I love him, with an absolute, unique, passionate love. And now, if you choose, go and tell him that I was once your mistress. I will not defend myself any more than I did a few minutes ago. I have not strength enough to lie to him. The day he asks me, 'Is it true that Olivier has been your lover?' I shall reply, 'It is true!' But it is not I alone whom you will have killed?"

"You love him?" he said at last. "You love him? But why do I ask? I know you love him. I feel it, I see it. It is only love that could have prompted such words—could have imprinted such an accent, such truth upon them. Oh!" he went on, bitterly, "if you had only been, when we were in Rome, what you are now; if only once I had felt that you vibrated with genuine emotion! But you did not love me, and you love him." He repeated, "You love him! I thought we had inflicted upon each other all the pain that is in a human being's power, and that I could never suffer any more than I did in Rome, than I have done during these past days when I felt that you were his mistress.

Then, with a moan as of some sticken animal, he cried:

"No! I cannot support it. I suffer too much, I suffer too much!"

And words of grief, mingled with words of rage, poured forth in a wild stream.

"Since you hate me enough to have thought of such a vengeance," he cried cruelly, savagely, "since you longed to make me jealous of him through you, enjoy your work. Look at it! You have succeeded."

"Spare me, spare me!" cried Ely. "Oh, God! do not talk like that!"

His sudden outburst, the strange betrayal of his feelings, even in her suffering, made her shudder. She saw it now. And she also saw that a deep, true passion had always lived, palpitated, germinated under his sensuality, under his hate. His passion had never developed, grown, put forth his blossom, because she had never been the woman he sought, the woman he yearned for, the woman he felt was in her.

"And now, as I bid you farewell forever, I still ask you that. You love Pierre, he loves you; promise me that you will never use his love against our friendship, to respect that feeling in his heart."

There was a supplicating humility in Olivier's voice. All the religious sentiment of his friendship, which Ely knew filled him, betrayed itself in his tone, sadly, almost solemnly. And with a solemn emotion she replied:

"I promise you."

"Thank you again," he said, "and farewell."

"Farewell," she replied.

He took a few steps towards the door. Then he turned and approached her. This time she read in his eyes all the maddening vertigo of love and desire. She was seized with such a terror that she could not move. When he arrived at her chair, he took her head between his hands and frantically, passionately pressed it to his heart. He covered her brow, her hair, her eyes, with kisses, and strove to kiss her lips with a mad frenzy that restored the woman all her strength. Thrusting him from her with all the vigor that her indignation gave her, she rose and took refuge in the corner of the salon, crying, as though appealing for help to the being who had the right to defend her:

"Pierre! Pierre! Pierre!"

(For sale by A. M. Robertson.)

Occidental Restaurant, 337 Bush street. Headquarters for tourists. Separate rooms for families. Meals a la carte. Lunch 50c. Best French Dinner in the city, 75c. Joseph Munier, proprietor.

When you are selecting a wedding or a birthday present, go to S. & G. Gump's, 113 Geary street. They have a magnificent variety, just arrived from Europe, from which to select.

"THE MARTIAN"

A NEW SERIAL

WRITTEN AND ILLUSTRATED BY

GEORGE DU MAURIER

THE AUTHOR OF

"TRILBY" and "PETER IBBETSON"

Copyright, 1896, by Harper and Brothers

BEGINS IN

HARPER'S MAGAZINE

FOR OCTOBER NOW READY

HARPER & BROTHERS, Publishers, New York

Its Purity A Surety Of Its Excellence

Accept No Substitute None So Good None So Pure

Vina Brandy

Vina Distillery Co.
819 Market St., S. F.

MENNEN'S BORATED TALCUM TOILET POWDER

Approved by Highest Medical Authorities as a Perfect Sanitary Toilet Preparation
For infants and adults
Delightful after shaving
Positively relieves Prickley Heat, Nettle Rash, Chafed Skin, Sunburn, etc. Removes Blotches, Pimples; makes the skin smooth and healthy.
Take No Sub-titutes. Sold by druggists or mailed for 25 cts.
SAMPLE MAILED (Name this paper) FREE
GERHARD MENNEN CO., Newark, N. J.

We Have Appointed
Coburn, Tevis & Co.
OUR AGENTS FOR
CHOCOLATE MENIER
MENIER & CO

Send your name for a Souvenir of the Works of Eugene Field,
FIELD FLOWERS
The Eugene Field Monument Souvenir
The most beautiful Art Production of the century. "A small bunch of the most fragrant of blossoms gathered from the broad acres of Eugene Field's Farm of Love." Contains a selection of the most beautiful of the poems of Eugene Field. Handsomely illustrated by thirty-five of the world's greatest artists as their contribution to the Monument Fund. But for the noble contributions of the great artists this book could not have been manufactured for $7.00. For sale at book stores, or sent prepaid on receipt of $1.10. The love offering to the Child's Poet Laureate, published by the Committee to create a fund to build the Monument and to care for the family of the beloved poet.
Eugene Field Monument Souvenir Fund,
180 Monroe Street, Chicago, Ill.

ITO, SOTOMI & CO.
Successors to
JAPAN CURIO TRADING CO.
Japanese Art Goods
116 SUTTER STREET
SAN FRANCISCO

Wedding Invitations are properly engraved and in correct form, at ROBERTSON'S

HEALTHFUL! INVIGORATING!
CRECIENTE
Imported Sea Salt for Bathing
SOLD BY DRUGGISTS AND GROCERS

Ziska Institute : 1606 Van Ness Ave.
School for Girls. English, French, German.
Thirtieth year begins August 3d.
MME. B. ZISKA, A.M Principal.

AS THE WORLD WAGS

A Home for Divorced Women — Miss Atherton on the English Female.

Here is a little story for divorcees to ponder over. Once upon a time, in the City of Boston, there lived a certain Mr. and Mrs. A., who found marriage "a field of battle and not a bed of roses," so they agreed to separate, and called in the law to assist them, but Providence, in the shape of a trolley, interfered, and translated Mr. A. (doubtless delighted), to a sphere where there is neither marriage nor giving in marriage. Two or three years after Mrs. A. took to herself another husband, another name—that of Blake—and did her duty to her country to the extent of three little Blakes, all of whom bore a striking resemblance to Mr. A., long since (fortunately) dead. Suppose he had been alive! Suppose Mr. Blake believed not in man—no, nor in woman either! What do you think would have happened to Mrs. Blake, nee A.?

* * *

It is possible that some such thought suggested the idea of a home for divorced women, which, it is said, can be found in Paris. This home, though technically known as a convent, is something quite different. The project was started by a woman who had just secured a divorce from a man she loved, but could not live with. The idea of marriage was repugnant to her (I wonder if she had heard of Mrs. Blake?); she did not fancy convents, but she wanted solitude, and above all, to be eccentric, so she founded a convent for divorcees. So now, in a handsome house near the Parc Monceau there live in more or less (generally less) harmony, twenty divorced women. Some of them are handsome, but more are not, and two or three are young. They have "vows"—lots of them. They vow to have all luxuries except men, to never return to their former life, and to love one another. They may receive and return visits. They may even go to the theatre, but they must be as carefully chaperoned as a fashionable girl, and as escortless as a new woman, for the managers of this institution are learned in human nature, and know the tendency of womankind to relapse into the arms of man, particularly when propinquity has done its deadly work for two or three hours.

* * *

"I think it is so vulgar to come out!" said a coming debutante to her mother, half crying as she spoke. "Why, my dear!" exclaimed the latter, astonished. "What reason have you to say such an absurd thing as that?" "But I do," persisted the girl. "Boys never come out! What is the reason of it all, I should like to know! It is really to announce to the world that we are of a marriageable age, and that we are upon the market. And then the way people have of discussing us and our chances, and whether we are 'a success' or not. It is perfectly intolerable. I think we are like victims decked for sacrifice. Do you for one instant suppose that papa would pay the enormous bills from the dressmaker and milliner, and allow you to give a series of expensive dinners, if it were not for that? He does not say so, and you do not say so, but you both know it is true. Of course, if I am not a success—that is, if I do not have attention and marry off—you will both be kind to me, and resign yourself to circumstances, but I know you will consider me a failure all the same. Then the criticism a girl is exposed to is almost as bad—her looks, her dress, her manners, her powers of conversation, are all discussed and decided upon. Altogether, it's a horrid ordeal, and I wish you would give me the money it will cost and let me start in business," concluded this new young woman, to the undissembled horror of mamma.

* * *

In this country, perhaps more than any other, accent and voice may be taken as criterions of refinement, for although many Americans of good social position have loud and perhaps inharmonius voices, people of breeding rarely have an uncultured accent, and there is a subtle something that classifies them at once when traveling. Just what that something consists in it is almost impossible to say, for nowadays there is no English imitation, Anglomania having disappeared and fashionable women being frankly and entirely American. Moreover, it is now considered vulgar to be affected, and any mannerisms are tabooed at once. But that there is an intangible distinction in voice and accent no one who has traveled among all sorts and conditions of men and women will deny.

* * *

Mrs. Atherton has taken another tack. Having failed to create a sensation by exalting the fascination of Englishmen, she has turned now to discovering the inferiority of English women to the American female product. The latter are prettier, cleverer, more vivacious, more natural than their British sisters, have a born and acute understanding of men, less religion and above all more money. Even the much despised American voice has its virtues, for all English women talk as though they had studied elocution, whereas the United States accent has spontaneity, even if trained.

These bold and patriotic assertions—for Mrs. Atherton can be patriotic if it is the proper pose—have aroused a storm, according to the New York "Sun." An avalanche of correspondence has been inaugurated, and we find the American maiden thus uncompromisingly and ungraciously portrayed:

"We will admit that the fair American is charming, but this need not blind us to her shortcomings and faults. Now these defects, in the eyes of a great number of unprejudiced persons, detract from her qualities. She may have spontaneousness, but her spontaneousness is apt to run into artificiality; and herein seems to lie her danger, for then will come the return of favor and hour of triumph for the at present neglected English sister. Granted that the English woman is more inclined to mannerisms and affectations, which spoil her native charm, than the American. Admitted that she is less flexible, less adaptable, more embued with ingrained traditional prejudices, yet on the other hand she has a strong fund of native good sense and good feeling underlying the crust of conventionalism. This, in the long run, will probably be found to wear better than the showy tricks and quaint conceits of Miss Columbia. As for her intellect, has America ever produced such women as Elizabeth Barrett Browning, Mrs. Somerville, the Bronte sisters, 'George Eliot'? It is not for the American woman's intellect that the Englishman marries her, but for her money."

* * *

Another envious sister thus disparages our damsels:

"When I meet one, with her golden hair, her fresh expressions, and perfect self-possession, I always look at her and say to myself, 'You are an interesting creature.' But she does not marry a duke; she does not, in fact, marry an Englishman at all remarkable—unless she has the irresistible gold-dollar mounting. That is droll. For she is immensely attractive. She will talk to any man who is decent looking, whether she knows him or not. That in itself makes a woman adorable—to talk with. But she certainly does not 'own' London yet, neither does she set the fashions, however many admirers she may have, and Mrs. Atherton is pretty correct in saying she—I mean the American—has about five to an Englishwoman's one. For the English woman does not go so very many miles out of her way to get a husband; she does not hunt for admirers, nor flatter them, nor set herself to study their wonderful and complicated natures, tastes and vanities—and that is the finish of every American woman's education.

* * *

Miss Burke, the female Jim Corbett, is not a woman of unusual height—she measures five feet and one inch from the tip of her shapely head to the sole of her foot—nor is her weight—one hundred and sixty pounds—a remarkable one. Her forearm is ten inches, her biceps twelve and one-half inches, and her thigh twenty-two and one-half inches in circumference. She measures forty inches around the chest, and has an expansion of two and three-quarter inches. Her neck is fourteen and one-half inches around, and the calf of her leg half an inch larger. Her waist measures twenty-six inches and her wrist six and a quarter. She has a No. 4 foot and No. 8 ankle. Her age is just twenty-four, and she has outraged all the traditions of her native State, Kentucky—by challenging Rolla White to meet her in the ring with gloves of ordinary size.

* * *

For once science and fashion agree. It is on the subject of early marriages. The books on criminology state that the children of very young parents (persons under twenty-two or three) generally make as undesirable citizens as the children of old parents; that our prisons are filled by the progeny of the ancient and the immature. The fashionable girl seldom marries before she is well on in her early twenties, so she touches hands with dull wisdom in spite of her late hours and other small iniquities. Everybody has noticed the fancy that old fogies and elderly men in general have for very young girls and wondered at their foolishness, but, know, oh ye scoffers, that it is an effort of nature's, and is to be respected as such. All unknown to himself, that old fellow you have been laughing at is bending to a wise law; he is following the thread of instinct which draws him towards a maid whose years added to his and divided by two would make one of the golden matrimonial numbers which lie between twenty-five and thirty. If he married a woman of his own age the result might be a subject for San Quentin. A scientist would say, however, that it would have been better for themselves and posterity if these old chappies had mated in their late twenties with a woman in "the green middle May time of her life."

Poodle Dog Restaurant, S. E. corner Grant Avenue and Bush street. Private dining and banquet rooms. Telephone 429. Blanco & Bruno, proprietors.

Since I Took Up the Verse of Crane.

The sky is green, the grass is pink,
Nature stands on her head awry,
The sun is made of purple zinc,
The earth looks like a pumpkin pie;
The silly pines scream at the sky,
And wheels run riot in the brain,
All things of beauty make me sigh,
Since I took up the verse of Crane!

I write my odes in yellow ink,
My themes are empty nuts, and dry!
Rank heresy it is to think,
All thoughts are scattered low and high;
And though I cannot tell just why,
All common sense gives me a pain,
And friends give me the glassy eye,
Since I took up the verse of Crane!

Of sleep I cannot get a wink,
It doesn't matter how I try,
And so I drink, and drink, and drink,
To drown my woes in pink-blue lye!
Insanity I'll not deny,
Since all the world seems gone insane;
And craziest of all am I,
Since I took up the verse of Crane!

L'ENVOY.

Prince, take 'em away, or else I die
A large drab death in a whisky rain;
I weep, and rage, and rave, and cry
Since I took up the verse of Crane!
—New York World.

Don't Worry Yourself
and don't worry the baby; avoid both unpleasant conditions by giving the child pure, digestible food. Don't used solid preparations. "Infant Health" is a valuable pamphlet for mothers. Send your address to the New York Condensed Milk Company, New York.

Gladness Comes

With a better understanding of the transient nature of the many physical ills which vanish before proper efforts—gentle efforts—pleasant efforts—rightly directed. There is comfort in the knowledge that so many forms of sickness are not due to any actual disease, but simply to a constipated condition of the system, which the pleasant family laxative, Syrup of Figs, promptly removes. That is why it is the only remedy with millions of families, and is everywhere esteemed so highly by all who value good health. Its beneficial effects are due to the fact, that it is the one remedy which promotes internal cleanliness, without debilitating the organs on which it acts. It is therefore all important, in order to get its beneficial effects, to note when you purchase, that you have the genuine article, which is manufactured by the California Fig Syrup Co. only, and sold by all reputable druggists.

If in the enjoyment of good health, and the system is regular, then laxatives or other remedies are not needed. If afflicted with any actual disease, one may be commended to the most skillful physicians, but if in need of a laxative, then one should have the best, and with the well-informed everywhere, Syrup of Figs stands highest and is most largely used and gives most general satisfaction.

FRANK K. LANE G. WHITFIELD LANE
LANE & LANE
Attorneys and Counselors
Room 202
Crocker Building, San Francisco

SCOTT & McCORD
HAY AND GRAIN MERCHANTS
OFFICE 615 SIXTH ST.

TERRA COTTA PRESSED BRICK FIRE PROOFING
GLADDING, McBEAN & CO.
1358-1360 MARKET ST.
WORKS, LINCOLN CAL.

—No—
Tariff

No freight on

"STANDARD"
SHIRTS

They're made here
and they'll stand comparison with any other shirt
under the sun.

TRADE N.B. MARK
Standard

NEUSTADTER BROS., Mfrs.
SAN FRANCISCO

STEIN the Painter

HOUSE : AND : SIGN : PAINTING
PAPERING, TINTING, ETC.
Successor to SWAN & STEIN
759 Market St.

CHARLES S. WHEELER ERNST H. LUDWIG
Ernst H. Ludwig & Co.
THE MODEL AMERICAN CATERERS

Supply Wedding Breakfasts, Luncheons, Dinners, Matinee Teas and Receptions on shortest notice. Also Terrapin Entrees Luncheons and Dinners. Ice Cream, Cake, &c.

Telephone 2388 1206 SUTTER STREET

AMERICAN OIL AND PAINT CO.
19 Spear St., San Francisco
MANUFACTURERS OF
High-Grade Lubricating Oils
Compounds and Grease
DEALERS IN PAINTS AND PAINT OILS
Estimates Given on Lubricating or Painting Work

Union Iron Works
BUILDERS ELECTRICAL MACHINERY
AGENTS FOR STORAGE BATTERY

BAY STATE OYSTER HOUSE AND GRILL ROOM
15 Stockton Street
Oysters served in all styles. Orders for Theatre Parties given special attention
M. M. ADLER, Prop.

NEWEST MILLINERY

The Characteristics and Components of Three Beautiful Hats.

Picturesque and dazzling effects will be the proper thing in autumn and winter millinery. Feathers and birds will be in greater demand than ever before for the adornment of the feminine head, and the newest models indicate that the prevailing styles will be large and prominent, glittering in colors and replete with buckels, sweeping plumes and rosettes. Here are three of the prettiest hats of the season. [illegible] Weir

THE GAINSBOROUGH

The above is taken at random from the endless variety of styles and shapes on display in the millinery department of The Emporium. It is of large black velvet, with a straight wide brim and a bell crown effect. Three velvet bands around the crown are fastened with handsome cut steel and pearl centered ornaments. It is trimmed on the side with nine large real ostrich plumes, and a band underneath which is also finished with beautiful steel and pearl ornaments.

THE CZARINA

This beautiful creation is from the millinery department of Mme. A. M. Nelson, located in the Phelan Building, rooms 107 and 109. The trimming, of navy blue, is broad in effect, with navy blue ribbon, accordeon pleated around the crown, changeable blue wings turned directly up at the back ,and pink roses banked underneath the rim. It is a very admirable hat this, and the model promises to find much favor throughout the winter.

THE MADAME SANS GENE

This is the "Madame Sans-Gene." It is from the stock of Miss Addie Kreiger, 1010 Market street, just opposite Fifth. It is of black felt with a rolling brim and a band of black velvet around the crown; trimmed at the left side with a beautiful weeping willow plume and large bunches of aigrettes and crushed rosettes. Five beautiful tips fall gracefully over the right side. There is a twist of green velvet under the left side, and it is finished with a rich rhinestone buckle. Any number of equally beautiful hats may be seen in Miss Kreiger's well-stocked store.

His One Accomplishment.

Tom, my heart's consumed with anguish,
And my spirit writhes with pain;
Flora Stanley just has asked me
To a canter in the lane.
She is worth a hundred thousand,
She would make a charming bride;
I could have her for the asking,
But I don't know how to ride.

Gussie Wabash, t'other evening,
Smiled upon me like a witch;
She's got lots of golden dollars,
She's as pretty as she's rich.
But to all my heartfelt longings
Fate compelled me to be false;
'Twas a chance in twenty thousand,
But, alas! I didn't waltz.

Fate beheld me yester morning
As the honored cavalier
Of that fairest flower of fashion—
And I'm dead in love with her—
For her pocketbook's as bulky
As her waist and ankle slim;
And I'd captured charming Katie,
But, alas! I didn't swim.

They'd take me out to tennis
If I but knew how to play;
With polo, golf and wheeling
They would while the hours away.
I fear me much each pretty flower
Must wither on the stalk,
Unless some girl will stroll with me,
For I do know how to walk.
—Chicago Dispatch.

Maison Tortoni French Rotisserie, 111 O'Farrell street. Private dining rooms, banquet hall. S. Constantini, proprietor.

Hotel St. Nicholas, corner Market, Hayes, Larkin and Ninth. American or European plan. Ira R. and James H. Doolittle.

If you wish to look neat have your suits cleaned and pressed for $1.00. Bay City Clothing Renovatory, 221½ Geary, rooms 19, 20, 21. 'Phone Main 5859.

The Banquet Hall at the Maison Riche is the largest and best equipped in San Francisco.

THE OVERLAND LIMITED

"The Overland Limited," via Union Pacific, takes only three and a half days to Chicago, and only four and a half days to New York.

The Union Pacific is the only line running Pullman double drawing-room sleepers and dining cars, San Francisco to Chicago, daily, without change, and composite buffet smoking and library cars between Salt Lake City, Ogden and Chicago. Only one change of sleepers to New York; dining car service the entire distance.

Upholstered Pullman tourist sleepers San Francisco to Chicago daily without change. Personally conducted tourist excursions to St. Paul and Chicago every Friday.

Tickets and sleeping car reservations at general office, No. 1 Montgomery street, San Francisco. Reservations secured in advance by all Trans-Atlantic steamship lines. Tickets on sale to and from all points in Europe. D. W. HITCHCOCK, General Agent, San Francisco.

Hartwell, Mitchell & Willis
Successors to DODGE BROS.
FINEST ENGRAVING
FINE STATIONERY
225 Post Street, near Stockton

BOOKS AND MAGAZINES OF ALL KINDS
AT OUR BOOK STORE
Formerly Beach's. 107 Montgomery Street
Special attention to country orders and orders for rare and out-of-date books

United States Laundry
Office 1004 Market St.
TELEPHONE SOUTH 420

WINDOW SHADES, PAPER HANGING
Tinting or Frescoing
JAMES DUFFY & CO.
Estimates cheerfully given
Telephone Grant 39
20 Geary Street

COMET OOLONG
The oldest and most reliable brand of Tea on the market. Sold only in ¼ lb papers at 20 cts. per paper.
ALL GROCERS KEEP IT

FINEST ON THE MARKET
BEWARE OF IMITATIONS
EEL RIVER CREAMERY
SEE THAT THIS STAMP IS ON END OF SQUARE
A FINE GRAIN DELICIOUS FLAVORED BUTTER
If you appreciate a DELICACY Ask your Dealer for the BRAND

Columbia Theatre.
PRICE, LANDER, GOTTLOB & Co. LESSEES AND MANAGERS
AU REVOIR!
Farewell Week of the FRAWLEY CO.
Commencing Monday, September 28th
In deference to many requests
De Mille & Belasco's Most Powerful Play
THE : LOST : PARADISE!
Superb Acting! Strong Cast!
Magnificent Stage Accessories!
Oct 5th, "TRILBY"

Tivoli Opera House
MRS. ERNESTINE KRELING : : Proprietor and Manager
The Grand Opera Season
Return of the Favorites! Every Evening, Verdi's Divine Inspiration
"AIDA"
Casts include Mme. Natali, Ida Valerga, Bernice Holmes Irene Mull, Fernando Michelena, Rhys Thomas, Maurice DeVries, J. J. Raffael, Sig. Abramoff, Sig. Napoleoni.
Beautiful Scenery! Correct Costumes! Appropriate Accessories!
Next, Balfe's Romantic Opera, SATANELLA
Look out for THE BABES IN THE WOOD
Popular Prices : : : 25 and 50 Cents

Orpheum
O'FARRELL STREET, BETWEEN STOCKTON AND POWELL
Week Commencing Monday, Sept. 28
ENGAGEMENT EXTRAORDINARY
THE ROYAL HAWAIIAN BAND
AND GLEE CLUB
Under the leadership of PROF. J. S. LIBORNIO, the Greatest Saxophone Soloist in the World
Will appear at Special Matinees Monday, Tuesday, Thursday and Friday and in connection with regular Vaudeville show every evening and at regular Matinees Wednesday, Saturday and Sunday.
TWENTY-SIX GREAT VAUDEVILLE STARS!

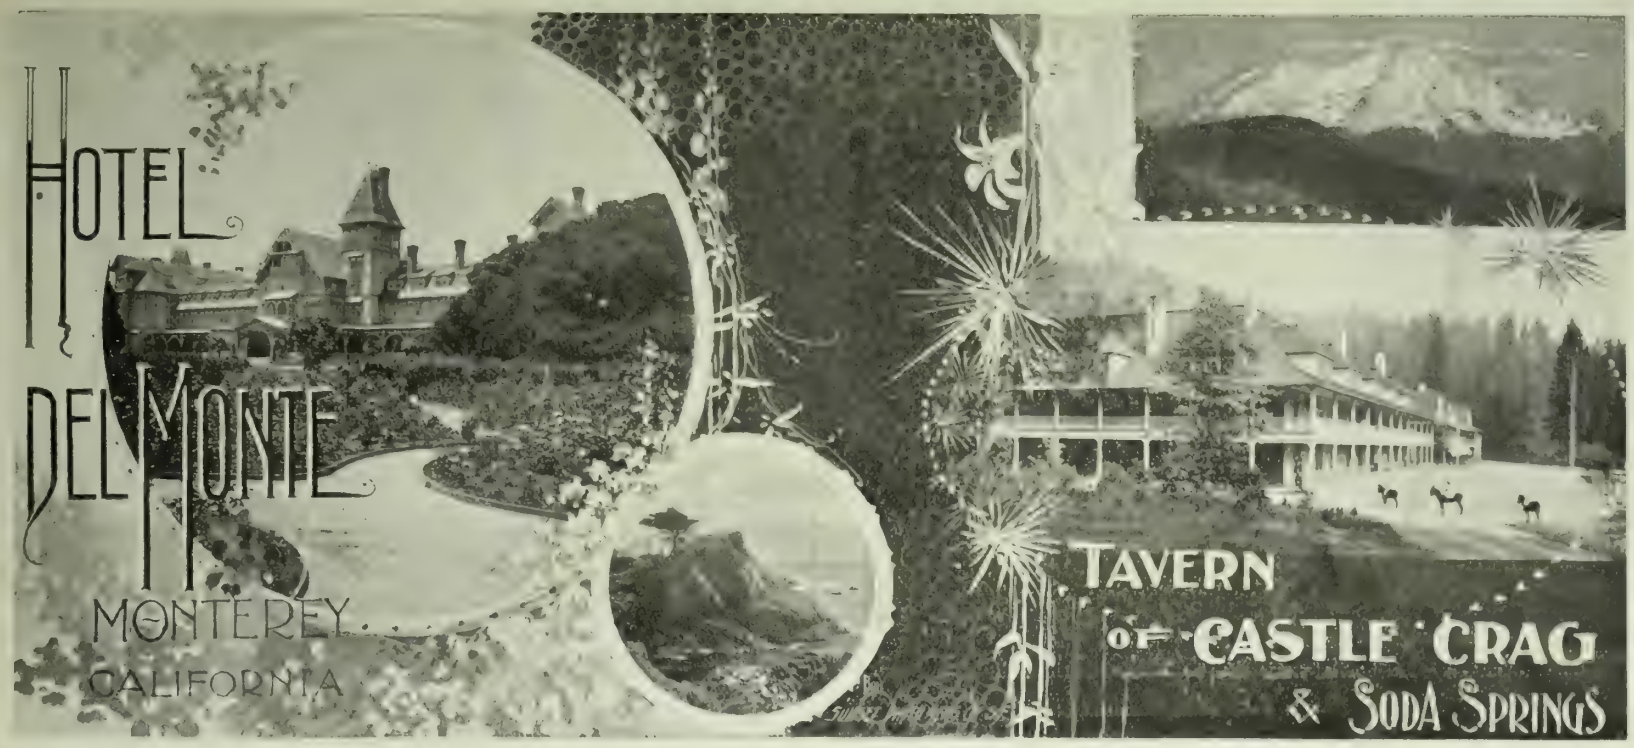
Alcazar Theatre
O'FARRELL STREET, BETWEEN STOCKTON AND POWELL
BELASCO, DOANE & JORDAN, Lessees and Mgrs.
LAST PERFORMANCES OF "DIVORCE"
Rose Matinee To-day at 2 p.m.
Monday Evening, September 28th, an Elaborate Production of the Sterling Comedy
"SCHOOL"
With an Increased Cast! A Bevy of Pretty Girls!
Prices: 15c, 25c, 35c and 50c. Matinees Saturday and Sunday: 15c, 25c and 35c.
Telephone Black 991. Secure seats in advance

THE : CHUTES, : CASINO
And Greatest Scenic Railway on Earth
Open Daily from 1 to 11 p.m.
To-night, a Grand Exhibition by the Plumed Knights Drill Corps!
This and To-morrow Afternoon at 4:30 and Evening at 10
ANTONIO PIRRI
Will COAST THE CHUTES and Land in the Lake on a Safety Bicycle
Special! Sunday Afternoon: Baloon Ascension and Parachute Drop by C. A. Vosmer
ADMISSION 10 CTS.
Children, including Merry-Go-Round Ride, Five Cents

HIRSCH-KAHN & Co.
MANUFACTURING OPTICIANS
IMPORTERS OF OPTICAL GOODS
PHOTOGRAPHIC APPARATUS & SUPPLIES ETC
333 KEARNY STREET
SAN FRANCISCO CAL.

COTTON SAIL DUCKS
22-inch, in all numbers. Medium, Soft and Hard
ALSO
Heavy Naught, Wagon and Draper Ducks
From 30 to 120 inches wide
Monumental and Imperial Ounce Ducks
Manufactured by Murphy, Grant & Co.
Mount Vernon Company Baltimore
Pacific Coast Sole Agents

Removal Sale
The whole of my stock at 1212-18 Market Street is now for sale at an immense reduction from the usual prices, before removal to
New Store, 721 Market Street
In the Bancroft Building
Suits to Order from $10 Trousers to Order from $3
CHAS. LYONS, London Tailor



CHAUNCEY M. DEPEW, the famous orator, statesman, railroad president and millionaire, in an interview said of his recent visit to Del Monte: "I visited Monterey, and I call it the most beautiful place in the world. Monte Carlo cannot compare with it. Its seventeen-mile drive is unparalleled for fineness."

When Mr. Depew says it is the most beautiful place in the world he knows what he is saying, and means it, for he has seen pretty much all the beautiful and interesting places in the world many times over . . . . .

The Tavern of Castle Crag, the most beautiful, attractive and accessible of all mountain resorts, will open for the reception of guests June 1, and will close October 1, 1896.

GEORGE SCHONEWALD, MANAGER

CAMPING

Season 1896

Reduced Rates for Campers' Excursion Tickets

To the following Resorts, situated on the lines of the Southern Pacific Co.

Santa Cruz Mountains

ALMA, LAUREL, FELTON
BEN LOMOND, WRIGHTS, GLENWOOD
BOULDER CREEK

Shasta Region

SWEET BRIAR CAMP
SHASTA SPRINGS SHASTA RETREAT
MT. SHASTA CAMP

For information as to Ticket Rates, Routes of Travel, etc., address or call at any Ticket Office of Southern Pacific Company, or at

General Passenger Office
No. 4 Montgomery Street, Second Floor

Or at City Ticket Office
613 Market Street, Grand Hotel, San Francisco

ILLUSTRATED FOLDER MAILED FREE ON APPLICATION

WM. H. MENTON
Excursion Passenger Agent

RICHARD GRAY
General Traffic Manager

T. H. GOODMAN
General Passenger Agent

Pacific Coast Steamship Co.

Dispatch steamers from San Francisco for ports in Alaska 9 a.m. July 3, 13, 18, 28, August 2, 12, 27.

For British Columbia and Puget Sound Ports, July 3, 8, 13, 18, 23, 28 and every fifth day thereafter.

For Eureka, Humboldt Bay, S. S. Pomona, 2 p.m. July 5, 8, 12, 16, 20, 24, 28 and every fourth day thereafter.

For Newport, Los Angeles and Way Ports, 9 a.m. July 2, 6, 10, 14, 18, 22, 26, 30 and every fourth day thereafter.

For San Diego, stopping at Port Hartford, Santa Barbara, Port Los Angeles, Redondo -- Los Angeles -- and Newport, 11 a.m. July 5, 8, 12, 16, 20, 24, 28 and every fourth day thereafter.

For Ensenada, San Jose del Cabo, Mazatlan, La Paz Altata and Guaymas, Mex., S.S. Orizaba, July 3 and 25th of each month thereafter.

Ticket Office: Palace Hotel, 4 New Montgomery St.

GOODALL, PERKINS & CO.
General Agents
No. 10 Market Street, San Francisco, Cal.

A. K. DAGGETT

Drawing of Deeds and all Legal Papers a specialty

NOTARY PUBLIC
14 Montgomery St., S. F.
Telephone 305

OCEANIC S.S. CO.

HAWAII, SAMOA, NEW ZEALAND, AUSTRALIA.

6 DAYS TO HONOLULU BY S.S. AUSTRALIA

S. S. "Australia," Honolulu only, Tuesday, Oct. 20 1896, at 10 a.m.
S. S. "Mariposa," via Honolulu and Auckland, Thursday, October 15, 1896 at 2 p.m.

Ticket Office 114 Montgomery St.
Freight Office 327 Market St.

J. D. SPRECKELS & BROS. CO., General Agents

The German Savings and Loan Society

526 California St., S. F.

Capital actually paid up in cash - -	$1,000,000 00
Deposits December 31, 1895 - -	30,727,586 59
Reserve Fund - - - - - -	750,000 00
Guaranteed Capital - - - - -	1,200,000 00

OFFICERS

President, B. A. BECKER
First Vice-President, EDWARD KRUSE
Second Vice-President, DANIEL MEYER
Cashier, A. H. R. SCHMIDT
Assistant Cashier, WM. HERRMANN
Secretary, GEORGE TOURNY
Assistant Secretary, A. H. MULLER

DIRECTORS

B. A. Becker, Edward Kruse, Daniel Meyer, H. B. Russ, H. Horstmann, Ign. Steinhart, D. N. Walter, Nic. Van Bergen, Emil Rohte

Attorney, W. S. Goodfellow

San Francisco Savings Union

532 CALIFORNIA ST

Deposits June 30, 1896 -	$23,657,219
Paid Up Capital and Surplus -	1,594,085

ALBERT MILLER, Pres. E. B. POND, Vice-Pres.
LOVELL WHITE, Cashier

DIRECTORS

GEORGE W. BEAVER ROBERT WATT
THOMAS MAGEE GEO. C. BOARDMAN
W. C. B. DE FREMERY DANIEL E. MARTIN
ALBERT MILLER PHILIP BARTH
E. B. POND

Loans upon San Francisco and Oakland Real Estate, and Farms and Farming Lands in the country.
No charge is made for pass book or entrance fee.

Mutual Savings Bank of San Francisco

33 Post Street, below Kearny, Mechanics' Institute Building

Guaranteed Capital, $1,000,000

JAS. D. PHELAN, Pres. GEO. A. STORY, Cashier
S. G. MURPHY, JOHN A. HOOPER, Vice-Pres.

DIRECTORS—Jas. D. Phelan, S. G. Murphy, John A. Hooper, James Moffitt, C. G. Hooker, Frank J. Sullivan, L. F. Drexler, Robt. McElroy, Jos. D. Grant.

Interest paid on term and ordinary deposits.
Loans on approved securities. Deposits may be sent by Postal Order, Wells, Fargo & Co., or Exchange on City Banks.
When opening accounts, send signature.

ROYAL EXCHANGE ASSURANCE

OF LONDON

Incorporated by Royal Charter A. D. 1726

Capital Paid Up, $3,416,100 Assets, $21,554,413
Surplus to Policy Holders, $8,980,251

ROBERT DICKSON, Manager
B. J. SMITH, Assistant Manager
THAN & KINGSTON, San Francisco Agents
501 Montgomery Street

Aachen and Munich Fire Insurance Co.

of Aix La Chapelle, Germany
Capital, $2,250,000.00
Total Assets, $6,854,683.65

United States Department
204 Sansome Street

VOSS, CONRAD & CO., General Managers

BIDS

FOR

Concessions and Privileges in Yosemite Valley

OFFICE OF THE YOSEMITE COMMISSIONERS,
San Francisco, August 11, 1896.

In accordance with Rule XXXIV of the Rules and Regulations governing Yosemite Valley and Mariposa Big Tree Grove, adopted July 13, 1896, sealed bids are hereby invited for the for the following concessions and privileges in the Yosemite Grant for the year beginning November 1, 1896, and ending October 1, 1897, viz.:

First—For keeping a livery stable and conducting a general livery business in the Valley, and also for the rental of the Royal Arch Farm and Stables.

Second—For rental of stable and coach house on Georgia Avenue for stage headquarters.

Third—For rental of hotel, outbuildings and grounds at Glacier Point and privilege of conducting a hotel business at that point.

Fourth—For rental of store building and privilege of conducting a general merchandise business in the Valley.

Bids must be presented to the Secretary on or before

Monday, October 12, 1896

at 12 o'clock M., at office of Commissioners, San Francisco.

Bids must be accompanied by sufficient guarantee that contract shall be carried out by bidders to the satisfaction of the Commissioners. The Commissioners reserve the right to reject any and all bids.

JOHN F. SHEEHAN,
Secretary and Treasurer,
Room 25, Tenth Floor, Mills Building, S. F.

NOTICE TO CREDITORS

ESTATE OF OSCAR J. PETERSON, DECEASED

Notice is hereby given by the undersigned, A. C. Freese, Administrator of the Estate of Oscar J. Peterson, deceased, to the creditors of and all persons having claims against the said deceased, to exhibit them with the necessary vouchers, within four months after the first publication of this notice, to the said Administrator, at room 35, Chronicle Building, the same being his place for the transaction of the business of the said estate in the City and County of San Francisco, State of California.

A. C. FREESE,
Adm'r of the Estate of Oscar Peterson, deceased.

J. D. SULLIVAN, Attorney for the Administrator.
Dated at San Francisco, August 12, 1896.

THE PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU

510 MONTGOMERY ST., S. F.,

Reads all papers on the Pacific Coast, and supplies clippings on all topics, business and personal.

ASSESSMENT NOTICE

Alta Silver Mining Company

Assessment No. 53
Amount per share, 10 cents
Levied September 7, 1896
Delinquent in office, October 12, 1896
Day of sale of delinquent stock Nov. 2, 1896

J. E. JACOBUS, Secretary
Office, room 33, Nevada Block, San Francisco

ASSESSMENT NOTICE

Gould & Curry Silver Mining Company

Assessment No. 79
Amount per share, 15 cents
Levied September 1, 1896
Delinquent in office, October 5, 1896
Day of sale of delinquent stock, Oct. 27, 1896

A. K. DURBROW, Secretary
Office, room 69, Nevada Block, San Francisco

ASSESSMENT NOTICE

Occidental Consolidated Mining Co.

Assessment No. 24
Amount per share, 10 cents
Levied September 2, 1896
Delinquent in office, October 8, 1896
Day of sale of delinquent stock, Oct. 29, 1895

A. K. DURBROW, Secretary
Office, room 69, Nevada Block, San Francisco

BAJA CALIFORNIA

DAMIANA BITTERS

"Damiana" is a powerful aphrodisiac and special tonic for the sexual and urinary organs of both sexes and a great remedy for diseases of the kidneys and bladder. For weak nerves these bitters are invaluable, and leading physicians recommend them as the greatest invigorator known. Long-winded testimonials are not necessary. "Damiana" Bitters are known on their merits. (Send for Circular)

NABER, ALFS & BRUNE, Agents
323-325 Market St., S. F.

REMOVAL

Rountrees English Chocolate, Kohlers Swiss Chocolates, and all brands of Foreign and Eastern Confectionery, imported by . . . .

W. L. GREENBAUM,

of 205 SUTTER ST., will, after December 1st, be found in large and commodious quarters at

128 POST ST., Bohemian Club Bldg.

Brushes For barbers, bakers, bootblacks, bathhouses, billiard tables, brewers, bookbinders, candymakers, canners, dyers, flour mills, foundries, laundries, paperhangers, printers, painters, shoe factories, stablemen, tar roofers, tanners, tailors, etc.

BUCHANAN BROS.

TEL. 5610 609 SACRAMENTO ST.
BRUSH MANUFACTURERS

ORDER YOUR CARRIAGES AND COUPES OF THE

PACIFIC CARRIAGE CO.

At Baldwin Hotel
200 Sutter Street, corner Kearny
48 Eighth Street, or
St. Nicholas Hotel, Market and Ninth Streets

Steamer and Train Service a specialty 'Phone 1950

Good Appetite

Is restored and the disordered Stomach and Liver invigorated by taking a small wineglassful, before meals, of the celebrated . . . . . .

Peruvian Bitters

THE WAVE CLUBBING LIST

FOR 1896

By special arrangement with the Publishers, THE WAVE is prepared to offer the following list

SUBSCRIPTIONS MUST BE PAID IN ADVANCE

THE WAVE and CENTURY	$6 00
" " ARENA	5 00
" " LITTELL'S LIVING AGE	7 75
" " ART AMATEUR	5 75
" " LIPPINCOTT'S MAGAZINE	4 50
" " MUNSEY'S	3 50
" " ATLANTIC MONTHLY	5 75
" " YOUTH'S COMPANION	3 75
" " NEW ENGLAND MAGAZINE	5 00
" " HARPER'S MAGAZINE	5 50
" " HARPER'S WEEKLY	5 70
" " HARPER'S BAZAAR	5 70
" " HARPER'S ROUND TABLE	4 00
" " SCRIBNER'S MAGAZINE	5 00
" " REVIEW OF REVIEWS	4 50
" " ST. NICHOLAS	5 00
" " OVERLAND	4 75
" " COSMOPOLITAN	3 50
" " FRANK LESLIE'S MAGAZINE	4 90
" " PUCK	6 50
" " JUDGE	6 50
" " LIFE	7 00
" " LIFE'S COMEDY	3 50
" " LESLIE'S WEEKLY	5 70
" " DEMOREST MAGAZINE	4 00
" " SCIENTIFIC AMERICAN	5 00
" " SCIENTIFIC AMERICAN SUPPLEMT	6 50
" " N. Y. DAILY SUN	8 00
" " " SUNDAY "	4 50
" " CASSELL MAGAZINE	3 75
" " ARGOSY	3 50
" " PUBLIC OPINION	4 50
" " SUNDAY WORLD	4 75
" " CRITIC	5 50
" " FORUM	5 00
" " NORTH AMERICAN REVIEW	6 50
" " TABLE TALK	3 25
" " NINETEENTH CENTURY	6 25
" " CONTEMPORARY REVIEW	6 25
" " FORTNIGHTLY REVIEW	6 25
" " BLACKWOODS MAGAZINE	6 25
" " TRUTH	6 25
" " DELINEATOR	3 50
" " VOGUE	5 50
" " TOWN TOPICS	7 50
" " DAILY JOURNAL	5 00
" " SUNDAY JOURNAL	3 75
" " ILLUS. AMERICAN	5 75

NEW STORIES RE-TOLD

Even the idlest of us often find it necessary to speed the parting bore. Bishop Harvey Goodwin of Carlisle tells how an extremely eminent man in the Angelican hierarchy used to do. Getting upon his feet and affectionately taking the visitor's hand in both of his, he said, in a tremulous voice: "And must you go away?" Then the Bishop of Carlisle (it was at Bishop Wordsworth's table) arose, warmly grasped my right hand, and went through the entire proceeding with a saddened face. I could not but say that had the great man so addressed my lowly self I should have hastened to reply: "I was just going; but as you seem so anxious I should stay with you; I can wait a little longer." The sentimental expression passed from Bishop Goodwin's strong face, and he rejoined with firmness: "You couldn't say that if you saw the way in which the ex-Arch did it all."

* * *

The late Sir Michael Costa, the great English musical conductor, on one occasion was compelled to wait half an hour for the second oboe, and finally to begin without him. A quarter of an hour later, when the orchestra was at work, the absentee appeared, breathless, panting, and sheepish. His explanation was that "a domestic event had just occurred in his family, and that he did not like to leave until he was assured that everything had passed off satisfactorily." Sir Michael, hearing the explanation, relaxed his indignation, and, turning to the late oboe player, said: "That is a different thing. You may take your place; but, mind, don't let it occur again."

* * *

Long ago, in the days of big families, a widow and a widower with ten children apiece were married. In the course of time they had ten more. Their little army was as a rule orderly and harmonious, but one day the spirit of war descended upon them, and the head of the family was disturbed in his study by a wild-eyed wife, who shrieked "John! John! for heaven's sake come quickly. The children have got to fightin' an' your children an' my children are killin' our children."

* * *

A certain man, says the "Spectator," arrived at Johannesburg in the early days of the mining boom, with no assets save a tin of condensed milk and a needle. He spread a report that small-pox was on its way through the country, gave out that he was a surgeon, and vaccinated the whole community, with his needle and condensed milk, at five shillings per operation. When last heard of he was a wealthy capitalist, enjoying the monopoly of selling liquors within the precincts of the Johannesburg Stock Exchange.

* * *

A rural Georgia preacher, finding the weather too warm, pulled off his coat and preached in his shirt sleeves. After the sermon a good brother, thinking an editor who was present would make a sensation of the incident, said to the parson: "I don't suppose you knew, when you pulled off your coat to-day, that one of them newspaper fellers was in meetin'?" "Yes, I did," replied the preacher. "But I had my eye on it all the time!"

* * *

Monckton Milnes, in his "Here and There Memories," tells a story of Alboni, the portly contralto, who, while singing in Dublin, won the hearts of the Irish: "At that time the chief carpenter was Maguire. She sang as Amina in 'La Somnambula,' the score being arranged to suit her voice. In the bed scene a fellow in the gallery cried out, 'If they haven't strengthened that bed for you, honey, I'll murther Maguire!'"

* * *

A lawyer defending a man accused of stealing a pig did not combat the fact, as the evidence of the theft was conclusive, but wasted much time proving the prisoner's good character. "Gentlemen of the jury," said the Judge, in summing up, "I think that the only conclusion you can arrive at is that the pig was stolen by the prisoner, and that he is the most amiable man in the country."

* * *

Sir Michael Costa, when at Naples, wishing to pay Rossini some little attention, sent him a box of macaroni and the score of an oratorio by himself. A month passed, and then he received this note: "My Dear Costa, —Thanks for the oratorio and the mararoni. The latter was excellent. G. Rossini."

* * *

Senator Elkins of West Virginia, who has recently made some strong gold speeches, is being confronted by a silver oration made two years ago in which he alleged the country suffered from a lack of money.

For health and strength: Damiana Bitters.

A SAVING OF ONE-HALF

Baggage transferred to trains or steamers and return. Trunks, 50c each for the round trip. Morton Special Delivery, 650 Market street and 408 Taylor street.

Among the many great Financial Corporations on the Pacific Coast, none rank higher than the

FIREMAN'S FUND INSURANCE CO.

Its Agents are found throughout America, and its Record for Prompt and Equitable Settlement of All Honest Losses is Firmly Established

D. J. STAPLES, President — WM. J. DUTTON, Vice-President — B. FAYMONVILLE, 2d V.-Pres., Sec'y
J. B. LEVISON, Marine Sec'y — LOUIS WEINMANN, Asst. Sec'y — STEPHEN D. IVES, General Agent

THE GRILL ROOM SERVICE
—OF THE—
PALACE HOTEL

Has been extended to what was formerly the City Restaurant. This immense room, which has a direct entrance from Market Street is known as - - - -

"THE LADIES' GRILL ROOM"

NEW DEPARTURE—CHARACTERIZED BY PROMPT SERVICE—MODERATE CHARGES

Health Seekers are Byron Seekers

Byron Hot Springs

Contra Costa Co., Cal.

Seven springs — seven different kinds of mineral water — cure seven times seven different diseases. Ho! ye rheumatics and dyspeptics!

The California Hotel

SAN FRANCISCO

ABSOLUTELY FIREPROOF

HOTEL RAFAEL

SAN RAFAEL

Open All the Year Round

Fifty Minutes from San Francisco

Average winter temperature 64 degrees. Both hotels strictly first-class. Modern, Exquisite and Home-like. Both under the personal supervision of General Warfield.

R. H. WARFIELD & CO.
Proprietors.

For those who appreciate Comfort and Attention

A QUIET HOME CENTRALLY LOCATED

OCCIDENTAL HOTEL

SAN FRANCISCO

WM. B. HOOPER, MANAGER

Golden Eagle Hotel

GRAY & TITUS, Proprietors

A MODERN FIRST-CLASS HOTEL

SACRAMENTO, CAL.

Marshall F. Jones

Merchant Tailor

Room 113 and 115, Phelan Building

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.

THE LICK HOUSE

Occupies the block bounded by Montgomery, Post and Sutter Streets

IT IS——

——scrupulously clean;
——accessible to all street car lines and places of amusement;
——conveniently situated for business men;
——a quiet, model place for a family to spend the winter;
——moderate in price, yet first-class in every particular.

AMERICAN OR EUROPEAN PLAN

K. B. SOULÉ, Manager

CRESTA BLANCA WINES

AWARDED THREE HIGHEST AWARDS AT

THE ATLANTA EXPOSITION

OF SIX MEDALS AWARDED TO CALIFORNIA

Cresta Blanca Wines

OBTAINED THREE

WETMORE-BOWEN CO.

140 Montgomery Street

Under Occidental Hotel

BONESTELL & CO.

Dealers in PAPER

Fine Coated Papers a Specialty

401-403 SANSOME ST., San Francisco, Cal.

Ask your Blacksmith to shoe your horse with

PHŒNIX HORSE SHOES

GIVE THEM A TRIAL

H. S. BRIDGE & CO.

Merchant Tailors

Many Novelties in Imported Wear. Shirts to Order a Specialty.

622 Market Street, San Francisco

(Upstairs, opposite Palace Hotel)

S. F. CARPET BEATING AND RENOVATING WORKS

D. MACKINTOSH & CO.
Successors to S. S. Ferguson & Co.

Renovating, Laying and Refitting Carpets a Specialty

Telephone South 36 — 23 and 25 10th St., S. F.

Pacific Towel Co.

Telephone 1780 — No. 9 Lick Place, San Francisco

GEO. E. MOORE, Proprietor

THE WAVE

CALIFORNIA STATE LIBRARY.
This B... ...ken from ... Library.

VOL XV. No. 40 SAN FRANCISCO, OCTOBER 3, 1896 PRICE 10 CTS.

GENERAL NELSON A. MILES

FROM A PHOTOGRAPH BY MARCEAU

THE WAVE

Is published every Saturday, at THE WAVE Building, No. 24 Montgomery Street, San Francisco.

Subscription, $3.00 per year, $1.50 six months, 75 cts. three months. Foreign subscriptions—countries in postal union—$5 per year. Sample copies free on application. The trade is supplied by the San Francisco News Co., 210 Post Street; east of the Rocky Mountains by the American News Co., New York.

THE WAVE is kept on file and is for sale at Brentano's, 17 Avenue de l'Opera, Paris, France; 31 Union Square, New York City; 1015 Pennsylvania Avenue, Washington, D. C.; and 206 Wabash Avenue, Chicago.

Advertising rates and all other matters pertaining to the business of the paper, address THE WAVE, 24 Montgomery Street. Eastern Agent, E. Katz, 230-235 Temple Court, New York.

HARRISON M. PARKER, Business Manager

Entered at the San Francisco Post Office as second-class matter

THE WAVE PUBLISHING COMPANY

SAN FRANCISCO, OCTOBER 3, 1896

CONTENTS

Editorials	3-4	The Passing of Chinatown	9
Views of Morgan Oyster Beds	4	In Society	10
The Bivalv- at Home; by F. Norris	5	A Child Prodigy; by Peg Woffington	11
"The Man is Nothing, the Work is All"; a Double Ballade by L. R. Robertson	5	"Artie"; a Review	12
Things and People	6	"The Martians"	12
Convicts vs. Children; by P. W.	7	As the World Wags	13
A Conference of Bishops	7	A Negro Poet	14
Some Chinatown Rookeries	8	Matrimonial Tales	14
Chaperones and Betrothals	9	New Stories Re-Told	15

PERKINS OR CATOR, WHICH?

The press of the interior of the State that is not tied down in the expression of its opinions to "special interests" is not slow in discovering that the legislative fight in this campaign is of great importance. The contest for United States Senator has narrowed down to George C. Perkins and a noisy follower of Populism named Cator. Only by the jugglery of politics could Mr. Cator ever hope to misrepresent this State in Washington. He would not be the selection of the people nor would he represent their interests. If our United States Senators were elected by popular vote, and it is the possibility of Cator's slipping into office that argues strongly against the present system, he would be ingloriously defeated. Mr. Cator could never walk into a Senatorial seat; he might sneak in on all fours, but not otherwise. The very danger of a Senator Cator lies in the direction of trickery and secrecy. Once let it be understood by the people of this State that Cator is really a Senatorial possibility through the fusion of Populism and Democracy, and the respectable element of this commonwealth will rise in protest upon election day. The issue is squarely presented to the people of Cator or Perkins, and it is to be hoped that the honest press of the interior both Democratic and Republican will not fail in giving the people notice as to what is the real issue.

THE REAL MONEY OF BUSINESS.

A gentleman who has followed our financial articles suggests that we exploit the subject of credits, bills of exchange and the like, and demonstrate the broad influence exercised by that form of paper credit money in the expansion of the currency, and the creation of purchasing power in excess of the actual amount of coin money in the world. He believes that such an article would tend to correct the impression that we need "lots of money" to transact business.

One must start close down to the foundation in this discussion, and ascertain first what is the meaning of money, and what are its uses, so as to demonstrate as we proceed the imperative necessity of maintaing its standard and showing due observance to the financial policies of the greatest civilized nations of the world.

You would experience no difficulty in explaining the uses or, if you please, the "basic functions" of the yardstick. It is the standard of measurement of lineal quantity, just as ounces and pounds are the standard measures of quantity by weight. Every schoolboy knows, and, with easy fluency could accurately state the number of feet and inches necessary to constitute the standard yard. If you by legislation should attempt to reduce its length, every young American would understand that you were tampering with the standard of measurement. Money occupies a somewhat, though not by any means precisely, similar position with regard to values. It performs the functions of a standard. It is a standard in itself, and it is the thing by which we measure values.

The value of a pound of pork cannot be measured by the value of a yard of silk. The only means of determining how near the one is the equivalent of the other is to measure each by some given, fixed and common denominator of values. Money is that denominator, and money is the measure employed among the civilized peoples of the world to determine and fix values. If a yard of silk is worth 100 cents and a pound of pork is worth 8 cents, we may, by the use of money, measure their relative values, and based upon that measurement we may barter silk for pork.

Money is also a medium of exchange; but this is by no means its principal function. Indeed, its use as a medium of exchange is the lesser use to which money is put. Not two per cent of the commercial transactions of the world are accomplished through the medium of money. We are conscious that this statement, so simply put without the reinforcement of tables of statistics and columns of figures, must fail to carry to the mind a proper conception of the enormous power of credit paper money. It means that ninety-eight per cent of the commercial transactions of the world are accomplished through bills of exchange, bank checks, and other forms of credit paper money. The standard by which all values in these transactions are measured, is money; but in such transactions money is employed only in the liquidation of balances between individuals and nations. If Green takes from Jones 4 dozen of eggs at 25 cents per dozen, and gives in exchange a sack of flour worth $1.25, the value of the goods in this transaction is measured by money. Money does not constitute the medium of exchange, but it does constitute the measure of values in this transaction. Jones' eggs represent $1.00 and Green's flour represents $1.25. There is a manifest balance of 25 cents in favor of Green, and to that extent, and to that extent alone, if the transaction be immediately closed, does money constitute the medium of exchange.

Transactions running into untold millions between nations are consummated upon the same principle that governed Jones and Green in this homely illustration. Balances between the nations and peoples of the world are adjusted in the same manner.

The primary function of money is to establish a standard of values, a standard that will give birth to confidence and credit. Its secondary and lesser function is to operate as a medium of exchange.

The old circus story that is told in this campaign will bear repetition. Congressman McCleary of Minnesota has related it so well that we reproduce it here in his own words:

"When I was a small boy I saw something that I shall never forget. It was at a circus. The clowns and some other employes arranged themselves in a circle. Let us say that there were twenty of them in all. Number 1 said to number 2, 'I owe you two dollars: I'll pay up as soon as I can.' Number 2 made this statement to number 3, number 3 to number 4, and so on around the circle, number 20 saying it to number 1. Number 1 shoved his hands into his pockets, and with a look of pleased surprise pulled out a dollar. Turning to number 2, he said: 'I didn't know that I had that dollar; here's so much on account.' Number 2 took the dollar, and with similar language passed it on to number 3, and so it went around the ring. Number 20 passed it to number 1, who received it with a smile and started to put it into his pocket, but instead he turned to number 2 and said: 'I didn't expect to be able to pay you the balance so soon, but here it is.' And so it went around the ring, finally came back to number 1, who with a satisfied smile put it into his pocket. To the little boy who looked as I did thirty-odd years ago, this was simply the funny work of clowns, to be laughed at and forgotten. It was not forgotten, however; and to the man older grown and charged with the serious consideration of the affairs of a great nation, it illustrates the profoundest truth in finance. What is that truth? It is this: Under proper conditions, the working power of each dollar is beyond all human computation."

"The dollar in the circus did the work of forty dollars in five minutes, and was just as capable of accomplishing as much more in the succeeding five minutes," said the relator of this story. "It accomplished this much because it moved promptly, and it moved promptly because each had confidence in the other." Each knew the dollar was a good dollar; each knew that it was not to be tampered with; and each knew that it was standard money. There was no distrust, no suspicion, no fear of a Bryan, in this transaction. Confidence lived with that little group of clowns and circus men. Had suspicion or distrust entered there, the dollar would have ceased circulating. It never would have started on its round. "In other words," says Mr. McCleary, "with good money and mutual trust, one dollar did the work of forty; while with questionable money and distrust, twenty dollars could have accomplished nothing. In other words, the quality of money is immensely more important than its quantity."

Unless we have confidence, we have no credit; and unless we have credit, Fear and Suspicion stalk abroad in the land, and the purse-strings of Capital are drawn tight and industry is paralyzed.

John Stuart Mill, the political economist, says that, "In a state of commerce in which credit is habitually given, general prices at any moment depend much more upon the state of credit than upon the quantity of money."

The class of credit, however, which serves to create purchasing power and increase the volume of the circulating medium is something distinct and stands apart from ordinary credit. Its foundation must rest, however, upon a common confidence and a common standard. By the power of this credit, in which money need not, and more than often does not, change hands at all, ninety-eight per cent of the commercial transactions of the world take place.

It is claimed by the silver man that a larger quantity of money is absolutely necessary to beget prosperity, and he will quote to you statistics to illustrate the enormous proportions of our commercial transactions, and setting them beside the volume of money in circulation, argue from that that we need more money as a medium of exchange to fill the commercial wants of the markets of the world. This, like most of the claims made by the advocates of silver, is shallow pretense. The exports from America since January 1st, 1896, have amounted to $580,982,000, and imports of merchandise have amounted to $471,222,000. These transactions in money aggregate $1,052,204,000. The silver man would make us believe that money constituted the medium of exchange in these transactions, and created a demand for something over one and a half billion dollars. The truth probably is that only the balance, something less than one-tenth of the whole amount, was represented in money itself.

Laughlin, in his edition of Mill, from which we have before quoted, explains the operation of a Clearing House, and makes the astounding statement that the total amount of the exchanges made through the New York Clearing House in 1883 was $40,293,165,258, about 25 times the total of our national debt in that year, and the balances paid in money amounted to only three and nine-tenths per cent of this amount.

A San Francisco banker a few days ago informed the writer that the transactions in his bank for the day previous had been as follows:

There had been deposited with his institution $110,000 in checks drawn in favor of his customers. In the afternoon, when these checks were taken to the Clearing House, it was ascertained that other banks and bankers had checks drawn upon his depositors amounting to $109,000. The aggregate of these transactions was $219,000, and yet the only money that changed hands was the balance of $1,000. The silver man answers this, perhaps, by declaring "that after all the basis of all this credit paper money was coined money." The standard and measure of values in the transaction was coined money, we admit; but it does not necessarily follow, indeed, it does not follow at all, that there must have been $219,000 of actual coin back of the checks to sustain them. There need to have been but $5,000, we will say, in actual coined money, to have justified this volume of business and formed a basis for transactions of this magnitude. As in the case of the circus dollar, if money moves rapidly enough, if there is a confidence that will give it rapid circulation, it needs but a small fraction of actual money to consummate transactions within a working-day that will run up into the millions.

If A buys of B and gives his check for $1,000; and B buys of C and D, and gives his check for $500 to each; and C and D buy of E and F and G and H, and give their checks for $250 to each, it is easily discoverable that $3,000 worth of business has been done in a short while upon the basis of $1,000 in coined money; and it is not difficult to imagine that this amount of credit paper money might circulate the entire globe, purchasing commodities to the extent of millions of dollars, and finally find its way back to the original A, who may have dug it from the face of nature.

It may be repeated, and it cannot be repeated too often, that America needs confidence more than it needs an enormous volume of money, and that we need quality rather than quantity.

OUR PARK COMMISSIONERS.

A gentleman from the East not enamored of our city recently stated to the writer that San Francisco was a woefully mismanaged and misgoverned municipality. He declared that our Park was the only really well conducted municipal institution that had come under his observation. Speaking of our public buildings and commencing with the ancient postoffice, he denounces the frightful appraiser's building, the rambling City Hall, hedged in with miserable structures, and finally declared the new Park lodge to be the only public building within our boundaries worthy of the name or worthy of the city. The San Franciscan who will be honest to himself must confess there is much of truth in the criticism of our eastern friend. He must admit as well that if any set of public officers should be exempt from hasty and unjust criticism, it is our Park Commissioners. Recently, however, the friends of the new charter considered it necessary to attack the Park management, so that an argument might be manufactured in favor of that measure.

"The Wave" favors the adoption of the New Charter, but it does not consider the cause of that instrument so weak as to necessitate an attack upon the integrity of our public officers. Our Board of Park Commissioners consists of Joseph Austin, Irving M. Scott and John M. Rosenfeld, all three of whom are gentlemen of the highest integrity. The first named, Mr. Austin, is the eldest member of the Board. He has been appointed and reappointed to office by both Democratic and Republican Governors simply because his devotion to the Park has been a matter of common public knowledge. He has never stinted his time or his personal attention in the administration of his trust. His work has been a labor of love, performed gratuitously and cheerfully without hope or reward. He became a member of the Commission at a time when the people's pleasure ground was nothing but an expansive waste of drifting and uninviting sand dunes. Experts then declared that plant life could not be made to exist within our park. During his administration Mr. Austin has seen acre after acre reclaimed and transformed into broad sweeps of lawn and fragrant garden spots. This work has to a great extent been accomplished under his eye. It has made demands upon his time that few men would care to yield up to gratuitous public service. Hardly a day passes that he is not at his post in the park. He speaks of it affectionately as a father does of his child, and the youngsters about the children's playground have come to know him as their friend and one who has a deep interest in contributing to their welfare. Newspaper attacks upon the Commission do not solve the question of waste or improvidence, but they do wound and perhaps injure the gentlemen who are freely giving their time to the public service, and who are entitled to our gratitude. Our park will bear comparison with any in America. It is a standing marvel to foreign visitors that so much has been accomplished in a field that was so unpromising.

Superintendent McLaren is not merely a machine gardener who pushes a lawn mower and prunes trees. He is a thoroughly practical man and is at once a surveyor, a botanist and a landscape gardener of the highest ability. His knowledge of plant life and its adaptability to our park is invaluable and could hardly be duplicated. His methods are for permanency; he demands that a thing shall be well done at first. There is no saving in making a temporary showing at the expense of true economical management. The work accomplished by Mr. McLaren has been done "on honor" and needs no going over at additional cost after it leaves his hands. That such a man is appreciated and well paid in the public service speaks hopefully for us. It is seldom that genuine worth finds due appreciation in public life, and it should not cause us pain to learn that there has been an exception to this rule.

THE BOSSES AND THE VOTERS.

The time has come when respectable Republicans of San Francisco should take a hand in the local fight, and settle it in the interest of the party. Perhaps this State can be carried for McKinley under present conditions, but victory would be made more certain if the present warring factions were put under and a new organization established. We say this not in the interest of any Republican municipal ticket and without expressing any choice as to municipal officers; for municipal government after all is not dependent upon State or national issues. It is a disgrace to the city of San Francisco, the metropolis of the Pacific Coast, and one of the three leading cities of the American continent, that our daily papers should be filled with humiliating revelations as to the character of men who are at the head of opposing Republican factions. Who are Mahoney, Kelly, Spreckels and Shortridge, that they should imperil the national success of their party? Why should the personal ambitions, the vanity, the greed for power, and the desire for pull, of these men, be made to disgrace this city? Are there no other men here capable of conducting a municipal campaign? Is the Republican party so lacking in material that it must surrender to either one side or the other, or to this quartette, the control of its organization? Are these men indispensible to the management of Republican affairs? Is there any assurance that with these men in control, better city government will be obtained than under many other of our citizens? Will some one come forward who will show us good reason why the Republicans of this city should submit to the leadership of any one or two of these masters of political enterprise, these self-constituted, self-supported directors of the Republican machine? If there is any reason why there should be a Republican municipal ticket, there is equally good reason why that ticket should be representative of the best element in the Republican party. Crimmins, the saloon keeper, and Curry, a county official, have been recognized by the registrar as the Republican party of this city. Mahoney and Kelly, Kowalsky and Reuf, will now go before the Supreme Court and try to convince that body that they are the party's real owners and proprietors, and should be allowed to say who shall have the title "Republican" placed after his name on the electoral ballot.

Ordinary business men take no interest in factional political fights. They have no time for politics, and they are willing that men who make it their business should mix up in the dirty mess, should handle stuffers, fix primaries, fake returns, and do all the rest of the nasty business by which success in politics is achieved. Clean, home-abiding, respectable men avoid politics as they would a plague, and leave the business of politics to those who have no other business. But there come times when it is the patriotic duty of the citizen, no matter what his indifference, his disinclination or his private affairs, to tell the bosses that they do not own his party. Such a time as that has arrived in this city now. The two disreputable gangs should be drowned in a great uprising of the Republican voters; they should be squelched, cast down, overcome, trodden under foot. These men have shown their lack of patriotism, their total lack of regard for the welfare of their party; they have proved themselves altogether selfish, and utterly unworthy of public confidence. The people are losing faith in the Republican party, because there seems to be no Republicanism in this city, but that which is represented by these disreputables.

Major McLaughlin has been trying single-handed to affect a reconciliation between these opposing forces, but has found that both sides are equally hungry, and equally indisposed to be bought for any smaller price than the entire control of the party organization. He should give over such attempts at purchase, and address the Republican voters of San Francisco, calling upon them to represent their party without regard to any other consideration than the party's good. He should negotiate no further. He has proved already the inability and the inadequacy of diplomacy. He should now appeal to the people. Let him do this by calling a convention of Republicans who are unidentified with factions, or whose character is so well known as to place them above all suspicion of having any connection with such degraded politics. A convention of two hundred and fifty of the strongest and cleanest Republicans in this city, named by Major McLaughlin himself as Chairman of the State Committee, or chosen by the leading Republican organizations, would settle this question as to who owns the Republican party of San Francisco. They should act entirely without consideration for what has been done by the two Republican factions, and should proceed as if there were no bosses to be considered. They should be men so well known as to put their Republicanism beyond all question; for instance, such as Irving M. Scott, W. W. Montague, Horace Davis, H. J. Crocker, A. G. Booth, W. H. L. Barnes, W. E. Dean, Louis Sloss, Wakefield Baker, Van R. Paterson, Reuben Lloyd and S. C. Houghton. A convention made up of men of this quality, recognizing no other convention as representative of the Republican party, claiming alone to speak for the great body of Republican voters, and presenting a ticket of superior character, would be recognized and welcomed by the people—except those who take profit out of the muck and slush of precinct politics. This is the only way by which the Republican situation in this city can be met. The bosses should be ignored and the people should assert themselves.

When the history of this campaign shall have been written the Bulletin, among the great dailies of the city, must be credited with having made the most consistent and intelligent fight on behalf of the Republican party. Its editorials have been the most readable, intelligent and convincing that have appeared in the daily press. The leaders and thoughtful minds of the Republican party are coming to regard that journal as the most thorough-going Republican spokesman of the State, and it is the one great daily whose advocacy and defense of Republican principles is not circumscribed by small personal interests. The Bulletin under its new management has made itself felt in this campaign, and has given itself a high place that will be envied by its contemporaries.

A GARBLED QUOTATION.

The press that stands for Bryanism has been guilty repeatedly of quoting from a certain speech made in Congress by James G. Blaine in 1878. They suppress all of the speech but a short paragraph which they quote to sustain the cause of Bryanism. If this method of procedure indicates anything, it demonstrates that the silver man is hard pushed for arguments to sustain his cause and must needs garble the statements made by Republican leaders to sustain his position. It may be interesting to these journals to know that the Republican National Committee has ordered printed one million copies of this speech for circulation during the coming campaign, and if any Democratic journal hereafter quotes a portion of Mr. Blaine's speech of 1878 it may also advise its readers that a copy of the entire document may be obtained by writing to the Republican State Central Committee. Mr. Blaine vigorously opposed, in 1878, a dollar which would have been worth intrinsically 92 cents. His expressions of scorn and indignation of a party that would endorse a dollar worth 53 cents would only have been limited by the vocabulary at his command.

That the issues of this campaign are so serious as to break down party lines and force men of patriotic impulse to sever life-long political relations for the sake of their country, is locally evidenced by the position which we see taken by such men as T. B. Bishop, an eminent attorney; E. B. Pond, merchant and banker, and other men of equal character.

PERKINS OR CATOR, WHICH?

The Alameda Argus says:

"Now that Waymire is nominated he must be elected. There is not much danger that he will not be, but eternal vigilance is the price of success. This is the year of fallacies and fusion. Let no man under-estimate the enemy. Let us fully understand the necessity of electing a Republican United States Senator, and the awfulness of electing the fusion aspirant, who is setting stakes. We can imagine no greater punishment for the good citizen of California who is anxious to be proud of his State than to read at frequent intervals in the newspaper dispatches about 'Senator Cator,' what Senator Cator thinks, says, does and how he votes. Caesar's ghost!"

The Redding Free Press is another independent journal that does not hesitate to speak. It has this to say:

"Cator, by every means in his power and by promises of reward, is working hard for the election of a sufficient number of Populists to the Legislature to insure his own election to the United States Senate as a successor to George C. Perkins. In all the fusion schemes Cator has had his eye on the Senatorial office, and his satellites have traded everything for legislative candidates. The Populist newspaper man of this county is doing what he can to assist Cator, doubtless with a promise of reward. We do not believe, however, that Cator will accomplish his object. Populists, as a rule, do not want him, and for a legislative candidate to admit that he is a Cator man will be of itself sufficient to ensure defeat."

The Watsonville Pajaronian understands the situation and graphically sets it forth:

"The people do not yet vote directly for United States Senators, but in this county they will practically do so. The Populist convention nominated Frank Aldridge for Assemblyman, and he pledged himself to the convention that he would vote for Hon. Thomas V. Cator for United States Senator. The Republicans renominated Hon. B. A. Osborn, and he was pledged to vote for Hon. George C. Perkins for United States Senator. In voting for Assemblyman from this county the voter will show a preference for either Cator or Perkins for United States Senator. They are the candidates in this county, and each voter can make his selection by his vote for Assemblyman.

There are scores of men in the Populist party of California better equipped than Cator to serve in the United States Senate and who would be more representative of California. He has been a persistent office seeker since he arrived in this State. By profession he is a lawyer, but his practice is almost exclusively confined to politics. As a lawyer he is without prominence, as a citizen he is best known as a perpetual candidate, and his interests in California are inventoried by his ambition. He is a Populist because he saw no room at the head of either of the old parties.

On one side is Senator Perkins, a man whose home and interests are in California, and who has done his State honorable service; on the other side is Thomas V. Cator and his ambition, and whose interest in California is confined to the possibility of a Senatorship. Voters who have their own and the State's good at heart will vote for legislators who are favorable to Senator Perkins."

The Bakersfield Echo does not hesitate to show Mr. Cator up in his true light, and demand that Democrats do their duty. It says:

"The Democrats of Kern find themselves in an anomalous position this year. Ordinarily in voting for a member of the Legislature they express some preference for a United States Senator. Thus years ago they swallowed J. Marion Brooks in this Assembly district because he was to help elect Hearst to the Senate. At a later date they took the Pueschel pill because that was to help elect White. But this year they are left out entirely, and must vote indirectly for either Perkins or Cator.

It is no longer a secret that the Populists are about done with Cator. Their State convention indorsed him for the Senatorship and pledged the party nominees to support him. But his subsequent conduct has proven so distasteful, he has been so "bossy," that a large per cent. of the party would be glad to be released from its obligation. But they are now bound to him, and in several districts where fusion has been effected, as in Kern county, the Democratic organization has tacitly indorsed him also. If we may believe Democratic assertions, Mr. Cator is not a high-minded gentleman, such as ought to be selected to represent a great State in the United States Senate.

It may now be asked if the Democrats of Ventura as well as of Kern and other counties will lend a hand toward lifting such a man into such a seat by the side of Steve White. Their choice, of course, must be between Cator and some Republican, for their party machinery has decreed that they can have no Democrat to vote for."

The Ventura Democrat is above party trickery, and speaks of Cator in no uncertain tone:

"It is a pity that the geneltmen representing what they allege to be a great reform party will permit the records of this great State to be blackened by the name of such a character as T. V. Cator. If it is designed to pay the party's compliments to some one in the Senatorial contest, why not select a representative man of the commonwealth; one who would bring strength and credit to the new movement—not to a renegade Republican, a traitor Democrat, a hypocritical Prohibitionist and an anything else wherein there is a possibility of personal gain. It is generally known that Cator came to California from New Jersey as a Prohibitionist missionary; that he subsequently became a Democrat (in name only), and assisted in defeating the Democratic Congressional nominee two years ago. It is also generally known that he deserted his wife and children in New Jersey, and with the vile unction of the hypocrite that he is, sought a separation from the mother of his children by virtue of our facile divorce courts; and within a very short time afterwards took a gushing bride to his new home. This is the character of the man representative of the People's Party, whom you propose to honor, and disgrace the State by giving him the complimentary nomination for United States Senator. Can you afford to do it? Will your State pride and party principles permit you to do it?"

Sorting oysters

Loading the schooners

Cleaning oysters

The Belmont camp

Assorting shoalwaters

Gum-boot rack

A barge-load

Ready for the market

Floats containing stock for market

Tonging oysters

THE MORGAN OYSTER BEDS

THE BIVALVE AT HOME

A Visit to the Oyster Beds of San Francisco Bay.

Did you ever visit an oyster bed? I never did until the other day. How many people have ever seen an oyster camp in full operation—probably not one in a hundred. You see your oysters on your plate or on the shell in the windows of restaurants, where they are weighted down by a cube of ice with a bouquet inside of it, and that's about as far as your acquaintance goes. Just where they come from, how they are cultured, raised and brought to market and all that sort of thing you know nothing about.

And amongst other things of which you will know nothing until the day you pay your first visit to an oyster camp is the experience of eating an oyster alive just as he comes from the bottom of the sea with the fresh, clean savor of the salt sea in him and the weeds and barnacles sticking to his shell.

An oyster eaten in this fashion, sitting on the string piece of the wharf, you understand, with the wind in your face, and prying the wet shell open with your knife, is quite a different oyster from the one you eat, let us say, in a restaurant after the theater in a hot, gas-heated room (let us not say a private room), with all the delicate flavor blunted by highly seasoned sauces. And then how do you know what kind of oyster you are getting? If the restaurateur chooses, you may be getting a Texas oyster a week or so out of its native water and that looks like the transplanted article, but that is shipped across the scorching Arizona desert.

It's worth the trip to an oyster camp—one of the Morgan oyster camps, off Belmont, for instance—just to eat an absolutely fresh oyster.

An oyster camp is a thing unique. It has its own particular local features, distinct and individual, just as a sardine village has, or a mining camp.

You go down a sandy road across the flats (fine, breezy flats they are, where all distant objects look half-buried in the ground), to where a very self-important little gasoline launch is snubbed up to the bank of a salt water creek, an inlet from the bay. You might be in Holland or in a New England "dyke." Everything is green and flat. The ground—some two feet above the water's level—is covered with reeds that go bellowing and rippling seaward under the wind, wave-like, as if in anticipation of the ocean. There is a big desolateness about the whole thing that is almost inspiring. Somehow you walk with a larger stride and take deeper breaths and swing your arms, feeling very free and as restive of all control as the wind about you. No wonder the Hollanders fought for their liberty, if they lived in this sort of a land.

The gasoline launch takes possession of you, and you begin winding in and out in the most bewildering fashion. You are told that your objective point is a group of white buildings miles away beyond the flats, buildings that somehow look like a stranded excursion steamer. You spend most of the time in apparently going away from this stranded steamer. Sometimes it is on your right, sometimes on your left, oftenest it is dead astern. Then it disappears entirely, only to come in sight again, all of a sudden, ahead this time and close at hand.

The "camp" is some half dozen white buildings, built, so it would seem, on piles and surrounded by a broad wharf. The moment you arrive you recognize a familiar smell. Where have you met with that smell before? It suggests sanded floors and damp, thick table cloths and gorham ware and other things. Then you remember it all at once. It's the smell of raw oysters. But hereafter whenever I meet with that smell I shall see those white buildings that look like a stranded excursion steamer and the blue-white sky and the pale green water and the distant rim of the low flats.

Seaward (of course it's the bay, not the sea, but then it looks like the sea), seaward the view is cut in two by an infinite line of bare, straight twigs growing out of the water, and marching along in single file away and away till they resolve themselves into a fine dark line. It makes one think of the pine swamps of Louisiana. These twigs are the stakes that bound the oyster beds; miles and miles and miles of them, and they are driven there to keep out the "stingerees" that will break you an oyster shell and grind it to fragments as handily as any vice. The "stingeree" is the sworn and natural enemy of the transplanted oyster, and to keep him off, the Morgan company must go to the expense of—well, four miles of stakes at 10 cents a stake—you may figure it out for yourself. And that's only in one camp.

Oyster culture in California is a far different affair from what it is in the East. Off New York the oysters lie in from two to ten fathoms of water, and must be dredged up, whereas the Belmont beds are nowhere more than fourteen feet below the surface, and may be gathered by the hand "tongs." The Eastern beds are naturally conducive to the growth and breeding of oysters. With us the beds must be prepared; and carefully, for your oyster is a delicate, sensitive little mollucsa, and will none of mud and slime. Then again, as you remember, no one eats oysters in the East during the summer season, whereas for the more favored Californian every month of the year contains an R.

But the spawn of the Eastern oyster, the transplanted kind, will not thrive in California waters, will not live at all, for the matter of that. So twice a year, once in the spring and once in the fall, carloads of tiny oysters must be shipped from the Atlantic beds, brought across the continent in refrigerator cars and planted up at the company's camp at Dunbarton. Here they remain for a year or so, when they are once more "tonged up" and brought down to the lower camps. For another year they are allowed to grow, are again "tonged," "broken up" and replanted. A year later, when the oyster is three years old—it's at its prime then—it is marketed.

The "breaking apart" would appear to be quite a feature in oyster culture. Oysters are gregarious; they want the companionship of their fellows; they grow, oftentimes, in bunches and clusters, and have a way of attaching themselves to any object on the bottom, a boat, a bit of iron, an old shovel or tin can. Every now and then they are "tonged" up on to the barges, broken apart with sharp-pointed hammers, and thrown back.

One thing that surprises you at the oyster camp is the huge size that the oysters attain. Some shells I saw were nearly a foot in length (though these longer ones were, to be sure, rather thin, "pinched," is the technical word.) Others, when left to themselves, grow in thickness rather than in length, taking on layer after layer of shell, just as a tree takes on bark. An oyster will live for eighteen or twenty years, and the shell grow to tremendous size, though the oyster itself will be but little larger. He gets tough, however, and loses his flavor. Half the oysters that taste bad and seem to be spoiled are merely old.

The principal cause of the impossibility of raising the spawn of the transplanted oyster is a little shell insect called a "drill." The "drill" is the worst kind of pest. He thrives in precisely the same conditions as do the oysters, only in countless numbers. There is absolutely no means of getting rid of him. He's a tiny little beast, and can work between the most closely planted stakes. He fastens to the young oyster, whose shell is not hard enough to resist, and in a few minutes has drilled a pin hole into his very vitals, and of course the oyster dies at once.

SCENE ON THE OCEAN BEACH IMMEDIATELY AFTER CHARLES CAVILL STARTED TO SWIM AROUND THE SEAL ROCKS LAST SUNDAY

In the morning I saw the men at work replanting and "tonging." A barge load of oysters that had been broken apart was poled out to a certain spot in the beds, where their particular variety was sown, and shoveled back into the water, so many shovelfuls to so many square feet of bed. It's surprising to see what rough handling the shells can stand, when you consider how delicate after all is the "bill" of the oyster (that part of the shell at which it is opened). But the barge was laden down with oysters as though with so much coal, and the men with the shovels attacked the pile with as little compunction as coal heavers. Throwing them back into the bed, however, is quite a knack, for one oyster must not lay above another. The men swing the shovels in a most peculiar fashion, turning them flat down just at the end of the throw; the oysters scatter like so much shot, one shovelful dropping over nearly ten feet of the surface of the water.

"Tonging" is the act of bringing up the oysters from the beds. Some half dozen scows go out every morning, two men to each scow. The "tongs" are for all the world like two garden rakes joined scissor-fashion very near the "tong" end. You plunge these to the bottom wide open, and gather anywhere from twenty to fifty oysters at a single scoop.

Oysters are best just after a rain — why it is not exactly known — a little fresh water fattening them and improving their taste.

Whenever you see a transplanted oyster of very unusual size you are at liberty to entertain suspicions. Either he is old and therefore tasteless or has been doctored and again therefore tasteless. You may fatten a turkey by blowing him up with a quill, and you may fatten an oyster by chopping off the end of his shell and forcing him to drink fresh water for an hour or so.

Popular prejudice to the contrary notwithstanding, an oyster must not be large, the larger he is the older he is, and the older he is the tougher he becomes and the more he loses his flavor. At three years old he is in his prime, he's fat then, and about as large as a silver dollar, and if he is a point—an oyster fit for the table of a gourmet—he is tipped with black about the edges.

These are the kind that grow rather close to the shore, where they obtain a richer and more generous nourishment. Be assured that more labor has been expended upon that oyster to bring him to this condition than you can have any idea of. Think of his long westward journey in refrigerator cars, think of the three years of constant planting and replanting and the army of abominable little drills that have been kept away from him, and the miles and miles of stakes—at 10 cents a stake—and the "breaking up" and the "tonging" and all that. Once I read about a Roman emperor warring in Palestine, who had oysters brought him fresh from Ostia, near Rome, by relays of runners. Surely an equal amount of labor has been spent over that oyster you will eat to-night after the theater (not in a private room), an equal amount of labor, surely, only, to really enjoy him, you should eat him sitting on the string piece of the wharf at the Belmont camp, prying open the wet shell with your penknife, the wind in your face and the smell of salt in your nostrils.

FRANK NORRIS.

THE MAN IS NOTHING, THE WORK IS ALL

A DOUBLE BALLADE, BY L. R. ROBERTSON

This world is but a noisy show,
  A mighty, motley masquerade,
Where countless actors come and go,
  A tragedy and gasconade,
  Where many puzzling parts are played;
Till curtained with Death's dusty pall,
  And in Time's testing balance weighed,
The man is nothing, the work is all.

Forward they press, both high and low,
  And rich and poor, and gay and staid;
Some climb where Fame's fair mountains glow,
  While others grovel in the glade;
  But when, at last, the sexton's spade
Hath built the bed to which they crawl,
  When requiems roll, and prayers are prayed,
The man is nothing, the work is all.

Though rivers red as crimson flow
  Beneath the shot-torn barricade;
Though on the clay of fallen foe,
  Thrones have been reared with reeking blade;
  Still war is but a sorry trade,
And often but a murderous brawl,
  And even Glory's gleam will fade;
The man is nothing, the work is all.

Fate's shuttle flashes to and fro,
  And many curious webs are made;
For Fortune may her smile bestow,
  And light some dullard through the shade,
  To where Fame's glittering prize is paid;
While Genius labors like a thrall,
  And lifts the world without her aid;
The man is nothing, the work is all.

In vilest soil the seed may grow,
  And many a living germ hath strayed
To where the sower meant not to sow;
  The heart of wretched renegade,
  Ere this, hath been a shrine, where swayed
Truth's sacred censers, letting fall
  The spark, unknown, and yet obeyed;
The man is nothing, the work is all.

To some misleading guides we owe
  Lights that have made us retrograde;
While others from Time's ramparts throw
  To us a shining escalade,
  By which we shall, at last, invade
Truth's glorious and eternal hall;
  Or fair, or foul, in Life's crusade,
The man is nothing, the work is all.

ENVOY.

Whene'er we glory or upbraid
  The good or bad, the great or small,
Time laughs at our rodomontade;
  The man is nothing; the work is all.

There is plenty of evidence that the British government has been expecting the gravest events in Europe ever since the beginning of the year. Nothing less would explain the fact that the dockyards and arsenals have been working at the highest pressure for eight months past, with the result that already the whole amount authorized by Parliament to be spent for the year ending on March 31st next has been expended. The Treasury is now advancing money illegally, but Lord Salisbury knows there will be little difficulty in getting an indemnity when Parliament meets in February or earlier. The result of this feverish activity is seen in the advanced state of many ironclads which otherwise would not be much more than on the stocks by now, and in the completion and rearming of the horse and field artillery. The former, which is said to be the finest artillery force in the world, is now at its war strength of ten batteries of six guns each, with a reserve of eight guns, while three army corps have been provided with forty-five batteries of six guns each, with large reserves. It is said also that the Woolwich arsenal at present is turning out a certain new and powerful shell at the rate of 3,000 or 4,000 a week.

THINGS AND PEOPLE

The unfortunate habit of the best laid plans to gang aglee was recently exhibited at the Pacific-Union Club in an amusing if particularly aggravating way. For many months the institution has procrastinated over the problem of a new building. Separate boards have brought in cherished plans, and have witnessed their defeat. Innumerable projects for the rehousing of the club have been hung out on the bulletin board with a wealth of detail and seeming to add to their effect. But the stolid and old-fashioned members have calmly gone their way, ruthlessly demolishing all these conceptions, until confronted with the alternative of erection or a new lease. According to precedent Mr. E. W. Hopkins, who was last elected to guide the destinies of the Pacific-Union, contrived a building project and selected for a site the property on the southwest corner of Geary and Powell streets, now sacred to wooden shanties, doctors, dentists and the shadow of Calvary Church. Boldly they plunged into the project, obtained estimates, made calculations at a great rate, were quite uncommunicative and insensible to suggestion, and took for granted that the club itself was willing to be guided by their judgment and good taste. Unfortunately this proved an assumption rather than fact. Several of the goats, as the outsiders call themselves, determined to have fun. They waited until the Board was ready to spring its plans, and when the call for the general meeting went out they, too, circulated a call, vehemently discussed the situation over lunches and in the bay window, canvassed carefully the general opinion, and then abided results.

PARK COMMISSIONER JOSEPH AUSTIN

Photo by Taber

***

On the eventful night, determined to leave nothing to chance, these unrepentant goats sent round a second call. Hacks were sent to the homes of the unpunctual, dinner parties were arranged to keep the domestic husbands from their firesides, and when President Ed Hopkins arose to make known his will the gathering he faced was the largest in the history of the institution. Quite unconscious of any opposition he announced the scheme, detailed the steps already taken, proclaimed the arduous labors of his colleagues and himself, and sat down, expecting a vote of thanks. A roll call was demanded and taken at once. Imagine the consternation of the committee when the vote was declared—against, one hundred and sixty-four; in favor, twenty four. That settled Powell street. Thereupon Charles Page presented the project which the goats had developed in many mysterious conclaves.

***

It was nothing less than a proposition to purchase Colonel Crocker's lot on the corner of Van Ness avenue and Sutter street, and erect there a palatial structure on modern lines—a building fit to be the home of the premier club of the city. Then followed tumultous applause. The property would cost $135,000; his idea was that bonds be issued for $450,000 to meet the cost of construction and furnishing; that the structure be a double one, the sleeping rooms being in a building by themselves, connected with the club house proper by means of covered passageways, similar to that which links the Palace and the Grand Hotels; that there be bowling alleys, a cyclery, a ladies' cafe and every other convenience and luxury. He wound up with the pleasing intelligence that the money could be obtained without difficulty, as soon as the institution was ready to authorize the issuance of bonds. A new committee was then selected to put the opposition plan in shape for formal adoption, and last night the subject was settled. I am inclined to think Claus Spreckels will take the bonds himself. He has more coin than he can find investment for, and a Pacific-Union security, backed, as it would be, should be worth several degrees above par at the date of issuance.

***

It is interesting to note this sudden manifestation of activity in an institution which was declared decrepit. Now that the P.-U. has begun to move I venture the prophecy that it will cast all its rivals into the shade. It certainly has prestige and capital, and all the other advantages to aid it.

***

The important event in the military world is the transfer of the Fifth Artillery to New York. We have had General Graham and Major Darling, together with their array of captains and lieutenants, so many years that it is hard to realize they are to leave us to the tender mercies of another array of soldiers. Change is always a source of interest, and doubtless the community will soon reconcile itself to their successors. In the meantime the identity of the next commandant of the Presidio is an interesting topic to think of, while passing in review the characteristics of the men we are losing. During his residence here, General Graham has been much in the public eye. He is a stern and self-centered man, with a Spartan sense of duty, a determined and unbending will and a strong consciousness of his own dignity and station. As a disciplinarian he is severe, but he is scrupulously just and impartial in the administration of the responsibilities of his command. There are no favorites, nor elastic rules, at the Presidio. Orders must be obeyed by officers as well as privates, and there are no exceptions to penalties. A man of such caliber as this wins honors in war, but in times of peace forces the distant admiration rather than the affection of his subordinates. It cannot be truly said that General Graham is popular, but he is respected, and, as he showed by the handling of the railroad riots at Sacramento, is the man for an emergency. Considering these characteristics, the complications that have brought his name into the papers are comprehensible. The current of opinion among the thoughtless has generally set contrary to General Graham on these occasions, for the oi polloi is ever ready to hurrah a defiance of authority. The War Department, however, has invariably supported his positions, which, to a man of his caliber, is a justification to be preferred to the applause of press and public.

***

The Fifth regiment goes on to New York, and is divided between Fort Hamilton, Fort Wordsworth and David's Island. To the first go General Graham, Major Kinsey and Captains Hill, Roberts, Crabbe and Thorpe. At Fort Wordsworth Lieut.-Colonel St. Clair will be in command, with Major Darling and Captains McLellan, Morris and Vogdies. At David's Island Colonel Tully McCrae will have Captains Danes and Lomeo. Just now the Presidio resounds with the din of preparation. Early in October the regiment must start, and it is no easy matter transporting a great armed force from one end of America to the other. Doubtless there will be some appropriate parting celebration, but then the army generally moves itself with as little display as possible.

***

From all appearances the gold Democrats will be able to make an appearance on the national ticket. Thus far six thousand names have been signed to their petition, and I am inclined to think they will gather the remaining seven thousand necessary to recognition before it is too late. This is a crushing answer to the assertion of the "Examiner," which scouted the pretensions of the ticket, and a proclamation to the party that a saving remnant is left to rally round when the rank and file tires of its Populist alliance and anarchistic tendencies. It is amusing to learn that Collector Wise and his son have carefully straddled the situation, and are well established on both sides of the fence, ready for the success of either candidate.

***

It is a fact that should be borne in mind by the gentlemen of the Mint who are doing politics in the Democratic and other conventions, that though they be under the Civil Service, there is such a crime as offensive partisanship. The penalty thereof is dismissal, and quite a number of Mr. Daggett's officials have laid themselves open to charges that a Commission of Inquiry intent on discovering offices for Republicans could easily prove. This is not only the case at the Mint, but in the domain of Collector Wise also. It is not proper for civil servants to mix up in the business of politics, and someone in authority aware of the regulations of the service should call their attention to the specific dictates of the law.

***

What will the Park do in the absence of Joseph Austin? The veteran Commissioner is preparing for a trip to Scotland, to be absent six months at least, and must say farewell for the time being to the beloved lawns and parterres to whose creation he has devoted so much of his leisure for twenty years past. He has watched and assisted at the conversion of the bare and bleak sand dues of the peninsula into the beautiful garden which ranks to-day as the finest park in America. If ever a desert was made to bloom as the rose, it is this of ours, and much of the credit it all is due to Mr. Austin, whose time and thought have so long been liberally expended in the cause. Mr. Aus in intends, during his absence, to visit all the parks of Great Britain, and especially Edinburgh and Glasgow.

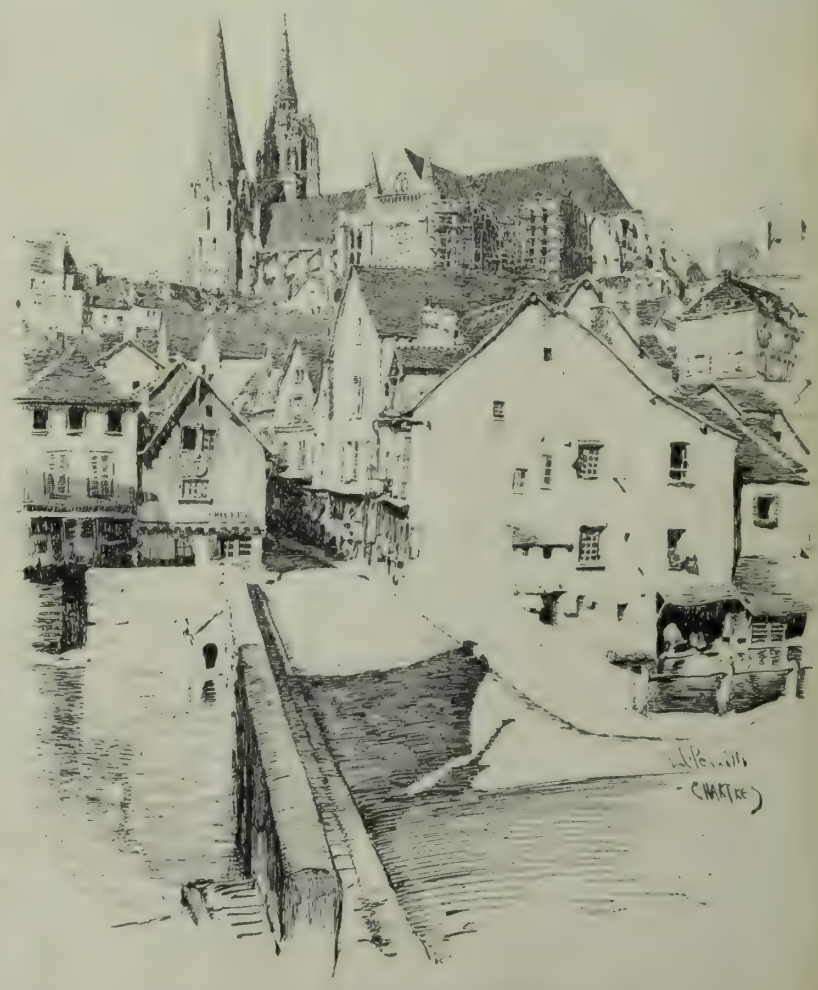
***

To describe the condition of politics as mixed does scant justice to the situation. During the week events have moved forward with irresistable force, and consequences matured which were long ago foresnadowed. That Mr. Spreckels has suffered the penalty of his associations is the culmination of the expected. What could we hope of loyalty from his coterie of Currys, Crimminses and Chretiens? He allied himself with a set of parasites and sycophants, and is surprised and disgusted that they have been true to themselves and have denied his authority. He supplied them with funds, created an organization for his own purposes, which they have appropriated to their own base uses. He was entitled to their loyalty, truly, but it was preposterous of him to expect the redemption of their obligations. It has been a costly and mortifying experience, but it should teach Mr. Spreckels that an honorable man can only do politics with men of his own caliber. If he permits himself to consort with the base, he must expect turpitude and ingratitude, of which he has now his fill. It was in the power of Mr. Spreckels to do great things for us in San Francisco. He is, and will always be, a power, but only so as long as he remains in his own caste and uses his money for the advancement not of his authority, but of right and justice. Let him start again, make allies among men whose interest in good government is as great as his own. Let him let the Chretiens and the Crimminses alone, and he can rule San Francisco as long as he pleases.

***

The Blythe estate is still undivided, for a branch of it is in the hands of the Federal judiciary pending the expected final knockout. The hungry and thirsty who have so long awaited the conclusion of this arduous and tiresome litigation are still hungry and poor, but heaven is at hand. As soon as the litigation is over money will at once be gathered to pay the claims against the estate; lawyers will get the thousands that are coming to them, and many an old account will undergo the settling process. I have it on good authority that Mrs. Hinckley has no desire to do violence to her contracts, but will carry them out to the letter.

The most important personage in Europe to-day is the young Czar of Russia. The nihilists believe they have frightened him already out of his mind, and are rejoicing thereat, claiming that he suffers from loss of memory. It is said Professor Mandel, the famous Berlin alienist, was sent for some time ago to see him, and that great secrecy attended his movements. However, he is now at the royal house party at Balmoral, having come there from Denmark. An observer at Copenhagen thus describes his habits and manners: "The Emperor has not been here long, but it is already easy for us to see that his habits are totally different from those of his father. Alexander III. loved hunting, riding and walking. His successor scarcely ever walks or hunts or rides. In fact, he eschews almost entirely everything demanding physical exertion. Of medium height and delicate constitution, Nicholas II. will never be chief of an army or master of any sport. He delights to shut himself up in his study to read, to write, to think over state affairs, and to attend promptly to matters brought him by the daily couriers from St. Petersburg. After dinner he smokes a few cigarettes, and then generally plays billiards for an hour. At 11 o'clock he retires for the night, and sleeps as peacefully as a child until 8 or 8:30 A. M."



A STREET IN CHARTRES

FROM THE EXHIBITION OF ERNEST PEIXOTTO'S DRAWINGS AT VICKERY'S

CONVICTS VS. CHILDREN

With Remarks About Women and Work and Mrs. Ballington Booth.

Which are the more deserving of attention, men who have committed one or all of the crimes in the catalouge, or children who have only been born? The spectacle of a pretty young woman—with a face like a madonna and a voice as sweet as honey—who believes that her mission in life is to practically desert her children and her hearthstone and devote her days to addressing criminals, suggested this question. It answered it also, for me, but not, perhaps, for others.

MRS. BALLINGTON BOOTH AND HER CHILDREN

There may be, in fact, there must be people who think this estimable woman is entirely right, since she receives so much encouragement, pecuniary and otherwise, in her career. Doubtless there is much to be said on her side. Doubtless she does much good, and her Hope Hall will be an infinite comfort to the poor wretches who come out of jail friendless and forlorn. But, query, is it not unwise to mitigate in any way the punishment of crime? Does not the fact that to be imprisoned means to be ostracized keep many men in the straight and narrow path of duty? If "the public were to be educated"—to use Mrs. Booth's words—"into receiving criminals with open arms, would not half the salutary effect of imprisonment be undone? The terrors of a penitentiary are not only the garb, the restraint and the life, but the disgrace, and any step towards lessening that is not altogether wise. Of course, there are some worthy men in jail, who deserve assistance, but the major part should reap as they have sown for the good of the community. If it is admitted that a real good to the world is done by succoring its moral cripples (assisting them to live uprightly by the aid of props), it may be said that two or three children had better lack a mother's care if thereby many men are benefited. But the wisdom of preserving moral and mental weaklings is doubtful, and the wisdom of taking care of ones own children is very plain. Moreover, if such missionary work is done it should be done among the males by men and among the females by women. It is impossible to eliminate the feeling of sex, it forces itself into every relation between normal men and women, and it should do so. It is not, however, a good thing upon which to build reformations.

Mrs. Booth is a very able, charming woman of unmistakable purity, and an equally unmistakable faith in God and man. It is impossible for any decent human being to look into her beautiful, candid brown eyes and not sympathize with her and believe more or less in her schemes—even in her chief one of the reconstruction of hardened criminals. At the same time I regret that so much loveliness should be wasted upon a class of men three-fourths of whom are not fit to touch even the hem of her gown, and I believe that she had much better be in her little home in Montclair, N. J., with her two pretty children. The life she leads is an exhausting one, utterly unfit for a woman.

"Women," says Sir James Brown, "owe their comparative imunity from organic nervous diseases to their anabolic habit and to the comparative tranquil and sheltered lives which they have led. But, if all this is to be altered, if women are to be made as katabolic as possible and are to take part in the struggle for life on equal terms with men, then it follows that they will have to sacrifice to a great extent the immunity from organic nervous disaese, which they have enjoyed."

"Women were made," he adds, "for sheltered, quiet lives, and mental tension is infinitely worse for them than for men," and he deplores the new woman movement, the over-education and over-exertion of women. "There is a growing tendency around us to ignore intellectual distinctions between the sexes. The bodily differences between men and women are universal and intimate, and involve every organ and tissue." And he goes on to state that as the blood supply to a woman's brain is larger than that of a man but of a poorer quality, she is less able to bear a continuous mental strain, though her mind is apt to be quicker than his. He believes that when women force their minds into an unnatural activity other organs suffer. There can be little doubt that he is right. Look at the women who use their minds (this includes only a small number of those who write), and compare them with those who don't. The brain worker will invariably have lines and shadows in her face which indicate a very undesirable physical condition. These same lines and shadows will also be found in the face of a woman who has been overworked physically.

The normal woman's aversion to entering into the arena with men supplements these evidences that either great mental or physical activity is bad for females. Woman is nature's store-house. She perpetuates qualities which lie dormant and undeveloped in herself. Of course there are many, many women who are forced into the struggle, but their evident sufferings and difficulties make it still more marvelous that any female should follow in their footsteps unless compelled—which brings us once more around to the picture I began with—that of a pretty wife and mother spending her life on the public platform and in the very promiscuous prison, when she might, but for a perverted sense of duty, pass it in her happy home, the center of a circle which would be quite as much benefited by her spirituality and intelligence as the people she now exhorts. The situation is explained somewhat by the fact that she is an optimist.

I am half inclined to think she is a believer in miracles, too, but of that I'm not quite sure. I only know she intends to receive into her "Hope Hall" a man who has a criminal record of thirty years (if I remember correctly), and help him to keep straight for three, so he may regain his citizenship.

I called upon Mrs. Booth with very hazy notions of her work, without a single conviction on the subject, and behold—I come away with a distinct one. Yet her influence was so great that I feel like one of her criminals myself for expressing my views. As I entered her room a small, plump figure, clothed in blue, rose before me. I felt the grasp of a firm, supple hand and a pair of dark eyes met mine kindly, earnestly, inquiringly. My first thought was of their placid beauty; my next, that a man in trouble would find them very nice eyes, indeed, to look into. Then I became conscious of a low, full voice chanting softly about the Volunteers of America, their infancy, their growth, the coldness of capital cities, the enthusiasm of New York, Philadelphia, San Francisco and San Jose. Then we talked of her prison work, and she told me of the great desire she had to help the inmates and give them some place of refuge when they are released.

"That is the idea of Hope Hall, you know," said Mrs. Booth. "It is not an institute but a home for men who want to regain their place in the world. No, it is not really in New York, but between the Hudson and Harlem. It can accommodate at present only forty men, but we will do better in time."

"Where do the funds come from, Mrs. Booth?" I asked.

"Oh, there will be no difficulty about that. People have been very generous, and on my return to New York I expect to have a meeting and raise at least a thousand dollars. I furnished the kitchen just before I left by celebrating my tin wedding."

"You have been married ten years, then?"

"Yes, and almost all of my married life has been spent in America. You are sorry I am not an American? Oh, but I am. I never felt a particle of patriotism for England, though I was born there—in Lempsfield. I was educated partly in Switzerland, but I have been nearly ten years here, and the stars and stripes are mine because I love them—and because I have taken out papers. I am now throwing all my energies," she continued, presently, "into my prison work. If you only knew (with a steady look at me) how full of hope and aspirations some of the poor fellows are when they come out, and how hard the world is to them, you would understand my interest."

"It is a very noble work"—I thought so while she was looking at me—"but do you think many of these men can be reclaimed? Durrant, for instance?"

"I had rather not express my opinion of Durrant," she replied with an air of gentle refroof. "You are wrong to suppose they are hopeless cases. Any man who repents and confesses may be saved, and many of them are very worthy men. One of the most spiritual men in Sing Sing is a murderer, and the warden says that those who give the least trouble are generally murderers."

Mrs. Booth then showed me several letters from "her boys," as she calls them, all breathing devotion, admiration, respect. She also showed me one from her little girl, written after she left for San Francisco. "Dear Mamma," it began, "I am loving you very much. I want to come to you on the engine. Willie says I did not cry, but I did. I cried inside. I am cleaning my nails and teeth—" and so on in dear childish fashion.

"This does not sound as if you were often separated from them, Mrs. Booth."

"I used not to be, but now it is a little different. I used to see them almost every night (they sleep one in my room and the other in the next), and on Wednesdays, Saturdays and Sundays." People who think that busy women can't bring up children should see mine," she said in effect as I rose to go. "They are docile, though regular tomboys."

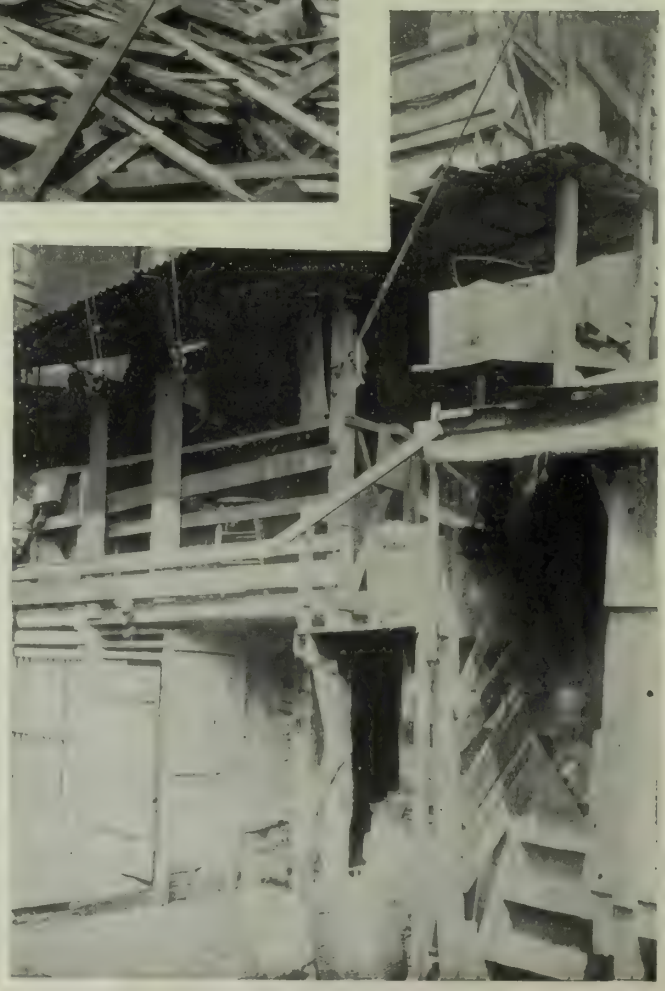
P. W.

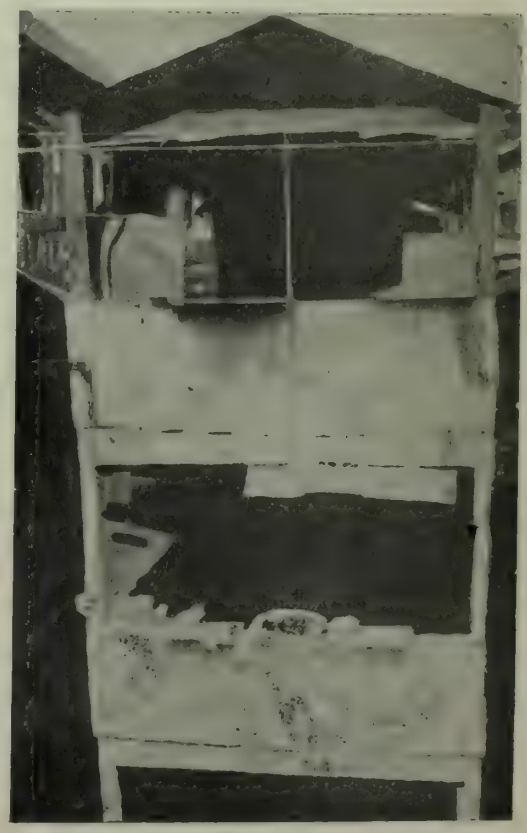
BISHOP BARKER OF WASHINGTON — BISHOP JOHNSON OF LOS ANGELES
BISHOP KENDRICK OF NEVADA — BISHOP NICHOLS OF CALIFORNIA — BISHOP LEONARD OF NEVADA

A CONFERENCE OF BISHOPS

Dignitaries of the Western Episcopal Church now visiting San Francisco to discuss with Bishop Nichols the affairs of the Divinity School at San Mateo

Taken by flashlight in the Vestry Room of the Church of the Advent, by B. C. Towne





SOME CHINATOWN ROOKERIES

ANCIENT AND DILAPIDATED BUILDINGS DEMOLISHED BY THE BOARD OF HEALTH

SEE PAGE 9

PHOTOS BY R. J. WATERS

CHAPERONES AND BETROTHALS

The Ethics of Courtship in a "Silly Season" Debate.

The "silly season" in London has been enlivened by a discussion of love-making evoked by the question of a "Daily Telegraph" correspondent, whether a young woman is justified in breaking an engagement of marriage because of a change of feelings towards her fiancé. This phrased so interesting a complication that it has elicited all sorts and conditions of opinion — from distinguished writers as well as from innumerable Pro-bono-publicos and paterfamilases. From a consideration of the ethics of betrothal the controversy has passed into a discussion of courtship in all classes and countries, and is illustrated and enriched by innumerable bits of experience naively related. French women and American girls are defining and defending the attitudes of their respective countries in the matter of marrying and giving in marriage; English women justify the system of "paying attention" which obtains in the realm of Queen Victoria, and a German lady has elaborately set forth the impressive and solemn ceremonial of entering into an engagement in the Teutonic Empire — the land where breach of promise and freedom of speech are unknown.

The treatment of the theme has not developed any remarkable or startling theories. But one daring innovation has been put forth — by George R. Sims, the well-known writer, whose solution is rather more objectionable than the malady. He says:

If the subject of "Engagements" were to be discussed not only during the autumn but during the whole year, from now until the close of the century, the arguments advanced would not, I am afraid, do very much to make marriage any less of a lottery than it is at present. "A Period of Probation" sounds well, but unfortunately the real period of probation comes after marriage and not before it. You might as well set two partially blind people to study each other's physical defects as two lovers to study each other's moral shortcomings. Love is blind until it has crossed the Rubicon. It is only when it stands on the other side and the boats have been burned that it opens its eyes. Many a couple who are admirably suited to each other as lovers find themselves utterly unable to get on comfortably as husband and wife.

It is not probationary courtship that is needed to remedy the evils of which the Daily Telegraph's correspondents complain, but probationary marriage. This great sexual problem will never be satisfactorily settled for the victims of Western civilization until we have a form of marriage which can be dissolved by mutual consent, with every legal safeguard for the welfare and status of the children born of the union. At present there is possible freedom for the guilty victims of ill-assorted marriages, but only life-long slavery for those who, though utterly wretched together, still keep the vows they made upon their wedding day.

The assumption among English women that the chaperone is unknown in America is so general that some particularly vigorous form of contradiction should be devised for it. It is true her sway is not so absolute as in Spain or France or England, but her shadow is dark over society and her absence a reflection on any gathering of young people. In the free-and-easy days of the good old early times, the instinctive power of every woman to look out for and after herself was taken for granted. Great incomes were rare then: the race of millionaires undreampt of, luxurious living a suspicious condition, and chaperonage a form of unnecessary interference. It is a far cry from London to San Francisco, but if it were possible for Miss Marryatt, whose impressions I quote below, to attend the opening performance of "The Prisoner of Zenda" at the Baldwin Theatre next Monday night, she would find in the audience but few Jacks and Jills unaccompanied by matronly escorts. He would indeed be a daring and presumptuous youth, no matter how eligible, who should ask or expect Miss Belleman of Pacific Avenue to accompany him alone to the play. In the select circles which they ornament, it would be considered tantamount to an announcement of their engagement. This rule is not without exceptions, however. For instance, it is not improper in San Francisco and other western cities for two girls to accompany a man to the theatre, though they would seriously infringe the conventionalities should they accompany him afterwards to supper. On the contrary, in New York, in Boston, and in Philadelphia, where etiquette is a more serious matter, this is not considered good form. In certain of the Southern cities, the customs of the better class are French rather than English in character. Here, however, is Miss Florence Marryatt, who is a well-known novelist, on her own behalf:

Why do they manage these things so much better in America than in England? Simply because the boys and girls are brought up and educated together, and learn to regard each other as good companions and chums, and not as inevitable husbands or wives. The idea that a girl cannot be trusted anywhere with a male companion without being guarded by a dragon of a chaperon is a degrading one, and an insult to the girls themselves. They have no chaperons in America; there the unmarried girls go to the theaters or dances or concerts with their bachelor friends, and the result is that there are fewer cases of seduction and fewer unhappy marriages there than in our country. Simply because the young women have learned to look after themselves, they have learned the consequences of unguarded actions, and the young men have been put on their mettle to protect and defend their charges. How much more and better opportunities this custom gives a young woman of judging a man's character and capability of proving a good companion through life. I hope the time is coming (if it has not already come) for our English girls also, when they will prove themselves as discreet and fit to be trusted alone as their American sisters have done.

It would be difficult to imagine a sharper contrast than that between the policy just described and the French custom defended in the following narration from the pen of Mme. de Liguerolles:

On leaving the convent, irreverently called "Les Oiseaux," where I had spent a year, I was sent to England in order to complete my education and to perfect my knowledge of your tongue, which I had already known fairly well. My father insisted on this, as he is a philologist, and he wanted me to aid him in his literary work. On returning to Paris, I spent a year in our chateau near town, and met there several elderly men whom my father and mother regarded as eligible partis. I also met a young officer, with whom I fell madly, desperately in love. He was from the cavalry barracks at Versailles, and I knew his sister. They were poor, however, compared to us, and my mother, noticing that I was in love with the dragoon, said:

"Malheureuse, he has no money, and you must not compromise yourself by speaking to him any more."

This was the maternal order, and I had to obey. My father then took me into Paris, and I was informed that I was to be married within six weeks' time. I thought it horrible, and was more horrified still when I was told that my suitor was M. ———, an elderly manufacturer who used to pay special attention to me, but whom I persistently avoided. He was rough, unlettered, and seemed almost repulsive. He could not waltz like the dragoon, nor even like my cousin, a young hobereau, or country squire, who often came to see us. He was as awkward as a bear—in fact, I often called him sub rosa, "un ours mal leche." He knew nothing about music, and was never able to turn over my Wagner books while I was at the piano—a movement in which the adorably-mustachioed dragoon excelled.

Well, sir, I had to marry that man, my parents arranging the engagement and the wedding in the usual legal and social manner. What is the consequence: I am a perfectly happy matron with three lovely children to-day. My husband is rich and powerful, and surrounds me with every luxury. My children, on whom I dote, will be well provided for. Had I married the officer it would be otherwise, and I feel and see clearly that this would have been the case, for his pay and my dowry would not have been sufficient for thorough family comfort. I see him sometimes, and without a pang.

This assumption of Miss Marryatt is doubtless responsible for such effusions as that of the American girl who, in a gushy epistle, tells of her attempt at introducing the free and easy manners of second-rate provincial society into an English tennis club. This gay and confident young creature (from Lincoln, Nebraska, doubtless) is established in London at the home of her aunt—a proper personage with regulation instincts as to the proprieties. These are overborne by this quixotic maid, who thus details her experiences:

Well, I joined a tennis club, and my first endeavor was to make friends with all the young men worth knowing. I left the girls alone, for the time being; in fact, I was awfully scared at first by English girls; they are so fearfully artificial. I like Scotch girls much better; they are not so affected. As time went on I became fast friends with my former acquaintances, even going walks with one or another after tennis. At first the girls were madly jealous, then they began to regard me as a harmless individual, and, finally, one day two girls came and spoke to me. We had a long conversation, in the course of which they asked me how all the men seemed to prefer my company. I said:

"I thought it was because I treated them more as brothers than possible lovers."

Since then we three have been firm friends. My conduct reached a climax when I accompanied one of my male friends to the theater. In the end those girls who shunned us became as bad (or as good) as we were. We enjoy unaffected intercourse with all men of our acquaintance. We go to theaters and dances with them, we ride our cycles with them, we exchange books with them, to say nothing of our impressions and experiences. In short, we are friends with them.

ET CETERA.

Zangwill says that the poet is often more licentious in his verse than in his life.

We hear the truth with the utmost complaisance, when it is told about the man across the way.

If the egotist could forget himself, he might recognize his Maker, and wonder at his own insignificance.

If a man is jealous of you, it adds to your market value; if he decries you, it advertises his own inferiority.

Noblesse oblige is a simple creed, but men and women have trusted it, when there was neither law nor sanctuary.

It is well perhaps for the perpetuity of society that a gentleman is judged by his manners, and not by his morals.

A secret is an unfortunate inheritance; if you keep it, you are an object of fear; if you tell it, you are an object of hate.

The man who makes a business of treading on dogs' tails and men's toes should have the seat of his trousers half-soled.

A cynic remarks that the friendships between men and women result either in love or hate, and both are to be deprecated.

Some mortals sin and suffer, others suffer and do not sin, others sin and do not suffer; is it education, or is it conscience?

You cannot prove a man's character by his epitaph. It often happens that a man's body lies below, and his tombstone lies above.

I know a vulgar critic who always condemns; because, as he says, it would stultify his vocation and detract from his importance to praise.

Even sorrow has its compensations. Many a woman wonders how she would look in weeds; and after the sackcloth and ashes of lent, the Easter bonnet bursts into bloom.

If you observe the proprieties, society does not care for your principles. Lift your hat to the world, and stare at the demi-world; frown on the nude, and smile at the semi-nude, and you will be in good form. PHUT.

THE PASSING OF CHINATOWN

Picturesque Old Shanties Destroyed in the Interests of Cleanliness.

Chinatown as a picturesque quarter of San Francisco is doomed. Yet a few more years and the lanes, the alleys and cul de sacs lined with rookeries and tan-shops and opium joints will vanish before the inroads of the Board of Health officers. The destruction of the older rows and blocks has been begun, is even now being carried on, and will probably be prosecuted in the future until San Francisco's Chinatown, the delight of Eastern tourists, the inspiration of the local painter and the inexhaustible material of the sensational story writer, will have become prosaic, uninteresting, commonplace—but clean.

The campaign against the rookeries was opened on the 15th of July of this year by Health Officer A. S. Lovelace, who called upon the Chief of Police, the Chief of the Fire Department and the Chinese Consul to meet and confer with him upon the advisability of cleaning and renovating the Chinese quarter.

A few days later the Chinese Consul replied to Mr. Lovelace's letter, stating that he would heartily co-operate in any effort to better the sanitary conditions of the quarter in question, being assured in the committee's letter that that body in no way intended to discriminate against the Chinese residents. On the 4th of August the conference was held, the Chinese Consul being absent. Dr. Morse at once stated that his force of inspectors (six in number) was totally inadequate for a house to house inspection, and that in fact many of the nuisances in Chinatown were so great that nothing less than the pulling down of the houses would abate them. This statement, however, was met by Chief Crowley's objection, who doubted the authority of the Board of Health to abate the nuisances complained of by a destruction of property, and declined to take the responsibility of any action in the matter. Chief Sullivan of the Fire Department upheld Chief Crowley in his objection.

In the meanwhile the inspectors had been investigating certain of the smaller alleys and lanes of the quarter, and had submitted a list of the places condemned. This first list included 8½ Brooklyn place, 719 Jackson street, 1104½ Stockton street, 10 Brooklyn place, 710 Pacific street, 708 Pacific street, 832 Jackson, 741 Pacific, 743 Pacific.

The action of the board involved an immense amount of labor. The sewerage commission had to be consulted, and its advice noted. The Spring Valley Water Company had to be induced to allow a free supply of water for the cleansing of the streets (on one occasion water was flowing throughout the entire day from 240 hydrants). It was necessary to notify owners to forwarn tenants, to organize a wrecking and finally to convince Chiefs Sullivan and Crowley of the legality of the undertaking.

As the work of inspection progressed it was found necessary to condemn an incredible number of buildings, from the crazy shanties and dens around the theater, to the huge Globe Hotel, once a landmark of the city and a famous hostelry in the mining days. Whole rows on Dupont street, Vallejo street and Pacific street were condemned, to say nothing of isolated buildings on Clay and Sacramento streets and in Card alley.

The directions to the wrecking party were most minute, and give evidence of a scrupulous regard for the rights and personal property of those individuals who might still be found in the rookeries. In many cases the wreckers helped the Chinese to move out, in others, furniture—such as it was—had been left in the rooms. These articles of furniture were preserved with the utmost precaution, no matter how valueless they appeared to American eyes. The wrecking party worked under the direct personal supervision of a health officer and of the plumbing inspector. Little order was observed in the method of attack upon the smaller buildings. First the owner was notified of the intended action on the part of the health board, and the tenant given notice to vacate the premises. A few mornings later the wreckers appeared upon the scene and assailed the condemned house, ax in hand; supports were cut away, foundations—if any existed—were undermined, and at length (if the building were not too large), a line was made fast to the eaves of one of the walls. The wreckers, assisted by the crowd, grasped the free end, there was "Yo-heave-ho," a straining of rotten timbers and the whole side of the house came away with a clatter of disintegrating joists and beams. Each wall was pulled down in this simple and direct fashion, and so frail, so rotten for the most part were the condemned places that the interiors collapsed with the exterior walls. The whole building flattened itself in the street.

Only in two cases did the owners of the doomed property tear down the buildings themselves. Some have gone so far as to enjoin the Board from further action, which is not surprising when you consider that not only do the owners of condemned property receive no compensation for their loss, but are even obliged to pay for the time and labor of the wreckers.

Besides this the care of the debris of his wrecked building belongs to the owner. It is for him to see that the rotten, empested heap is carted away. However, this labor is generally spared him. I was told by the secretary of the health office that this debris disappeared as if by magic under the raids of the wood-gathering gamins of the street, melting away in a single night, vanishing, Heaven knows where. The wrecking party no longer concern themselves with the ruin they leave behind them. The collapsed shanty is left exactly where it is. Two days later the ground is picked clean.

This year, as far as it has gone, has been exceptionally prosperous for the English brewers. The number of barrels on which duty was paid was 14,456,501, an increase of over 1,000,000 as compared with the same period last year. The United States has not been taking as much as formerly, but Egypt is rapidly developing a taste for English beers. In South Africa the same growth is noticeable, and the export of ales to Australia is augmenting.

IN SOCIETY

Entertainments and Happenings In Town and Out.

It is difficult to imagine anything more monotonous than the condition of society these final days of September. It is true calling has begun, but there is not even a tea to furnish an incident to the past week. Of gossip there is more or less, especially of engagements, dancing classes, etc. One learns of disagreements among the lady patronesses, divergences of opinion among the maidens. A topic of considerable interest is an engagement which is being strenuously denied by those most interested, and yet which some time ago was considered a fait accompli by their relatives.

Invitations to the Saturday Evening Dancing Class are out. Miss Gertrude Bates, Miss Edna Dickins, Miss Mollie Hind and Miss Belle Van Vlack are the organizers, and as they are exceedingly popular among the young set the success of the club is assured. Last season this dancing class was attended more assiduously than any other, and the demand for invitations far in excess of the supply. The members belong to the jolliest set, and all dance exceedingly well.

There is much regret in the older set over the departure of the Fifth Artillery, and several minor festivities are being held in their honor. A very successful hop was given as a farewell by the younger officers on Tuesday evening. About twenty couples participated. Owing to the departure of Major and Mrs. Darling on the 10th of October, the marriage of Miss Catherwood and Dr. Grinnell is to take place in the Assembly Hall at the Presidio next Monday morning at 10:30 o'clock. At 2 that afternoon the happy pair start off on their honeymoon, which is to be spent at Madrone Villa, where the wedding was to have been celebrated.

The younger set looks forward with the keenest interest to the arrival of the Third Artillery, as there are a large number of young officers in the troop, and several West Point graduates awaiting commissions will be temporarily stationed here. Much to the regret of the army people, Captain Long and his bride will not live at the Presidio, as the Captain's duties lie primarily in the city. He has not as yet definitely decided whether to make his home in Oakland or in San Francisco. There is much curiosity at the Presidio to know where the happy pair intend to spend the weeks immediately following their marriage. One inquisitive dowager approached the Captain.

"Where are you going, Captain dear, for your honeymoon?"

"To Paradise, madame," he gallantly replied.

A jolly little dinner was given last week by Mrs. Alexander Center to some of the younger set in honor of her daughter. Miss Center is a very bright, sprightly girl, and will come out next season, I believe.

The Barbers have had an especially jolly season at San Rafael in spite of the fact that their house was burned down. Since then they have been camping, and propose remaining in their tents until the cold weather sets in. They have had any number of house, or rather tent, parties, and enjoy the freeness and unconventionality of camp life. They will occupy the Thomas cottage during the winter and anticipate building next spring. Mr. Goad, Misses Aileen and Genevieve Goad and Mr. and Mrs. Osgood Hooker have deserted Sausalito and are back in town again. Miss Goad is briskly preparing for her wedding, which is to take place early next year.

At Burlingame the polo game was well attended on Sunday last. Messrs. Hobart, Dick Tobin and John Lawson carried off the honors against Mr. Francis Francis, Mr. Harry Howard and Captain Wainwright. There was also a stringed orchestra, and all Burlingame turned out in their drags. Mrs. Oelrichs, Miss Fair, Mr. Greenway, Mr. Greenwood and several others had a jolly luncheon at the club house, and afterwards watched the game. Mrs. Oelrichs and Miss Fair have been so busily employed with their legal affairs that they have been unable to accept any invitations, I am told. However, they will probably remain here during the most of October.

The society of the Colonial Dames is to meet next Tuesday at Mrs. Moody's. This is to be the first meeting of the season of '96, and I hear there are to be a few additions to the list of members. The invitations are very quaint affairs, being inscribed in old English on old-fashioned paper.

The sad news of the death of Miss Ruth Clark, niece of Mrs. H. L. Dodge, has reached us from Carlsbad. Miss Clark was to have made her debut this season, and was an unusually handsome girl, with bright black eyes and hair and brilliant coloring. She had a tall, well-rounded figure, and was a perfect picture of health. She graduated last year from Miss West's school and was traveling with Mr. and Mrs. Dodge when she was seized with typhoid fever at Carlsbad, and in spite of all that medical skill could do, succumbed. A great favorite among the younger set, she will be deeply mourned.

Poor little Henry Sharon, too, is much regretted, he was such a bright little chap, plucky, jolly and full of life. During the summer at Dieppe one day on the sands, his father and mother noticed him thrashing a small French boy, and rebuked him for so doing. "I don't care," said the little fellow, "and I shall do it again. He called me a 'cochon,' and I shan't allow and French beggar to call me an American pig."

Considerable interest is being evinced in Oakland over the new cotillion club started by the younger married set. The club is called "The Wednesday Nights," and the first of a series of three cotillions will be given on December 2d. The organization is somewhat similar to the San Francisco Monday Night Club, and is to be exceedingly smart and quite exclusive. The list of invitations has been limited, and, I understand, there will be no additions. The dances will be given in Ebell Hall; the first cotillion is to be a Leap Year affair. Mrs. Orestes Pierce, Mrs. Tom Magee, Mrs. Will Magee, Mrs. Edson Adams, Miss Mhoon and Mrs. Watkinson are among the patronesses. There is to be no regular supper, but refreshments served at a buffet during the evening.

The list of debutantes in Oakland is smaller than it has been for many years. Thus far, only four names have been announced—Miss Jean Hush, Miss Florence Hush, Miss Sanborn and Miss Viva Nicholson. Miss Florence Hush is the prettiest of the four sisters. She resembles Mrs. Tom Magee, but has more regular features. Miss Jean Hush is fair, fresh and plump. They are both great athletes and sprightly, jolly girls and bound to be successful. Miss Nicholson is a sister of Mrs. Metcalf, and is a bright, pretty girl.

The marriage of Dr. Murray L. Johnson and Miss Grace Plater is to take place early next month. It is to be a home wedding and rather a quiet one. Miss Plater is well known in Oakland. She is tall, slight, a decided brunette and quite an heiress, I understand.

A jolly dance is to be given by Miss Violet Albright in Fruitvale in honor of the Curtis boys, who leave shortly for Japan, where they are to join their father.

Miss Bessie Wall's song and piano recital, which is to take place next Thursday, should be a most enjoyable affair. The programme is quite interesting. Miss Wall will play selections from Grieg and Schumann. Mr. Beel is to play several of his best morceaux, and altogether the concert should prove a success. It is to be given in Hamilton Hall.

Mrs. Morgan's German garden fete was a great success and realized every anticipation. The weather was perfection and the grounds were a charming spectacle, with the multitudes of pretty girls in their gay attire wandering amid the trees or grouped picturesquely on the lawns. The stage was erected in the shade of a grove of trees, and the programme was excellent. Miss Head's girls won encomiums by the manner in which they performed their German play. The University Glee Club, the Huss Trio and the Withrow Quartette were especially enjoyable. The girls in their quaint German peasant costume looked charming, especially Miss Florence Greentree, the Misses Rosenstern, Mrs. Robert Bray and Mrs. Frank Wilson. Financially the affair was a tremendous success. Mrs. Wilson literally coined money at her wheel of fortune. Of the girls who were not in costume I noticed some who were exquisitely gowned—Miss Florrie Brown, Miss Marie Rose Deane and Miss Robinson, who wore light organdies much beruffled.

Of the pleasures to come Mrs. Alfred Cohen is to give a reception this afternoon to Mrs. Augustus Bray in Fruitvale. The Ebell Society announces a big reception and housewarming in their new rooms and the Deux Temps gives its first dance on October 27th at Ebell Hall.

In aid of the Children's Hospital, a performance of the operetta "The Rival Queen" will be given by a number of clever Alameda children at the California Theatre on the afternoon of October 10th. It was originally produced in Alameda, and proved so great a success that the managers of the hospital prevailed on the parents of the youngsters that they repeat the performance for the benefit of the institution.

A concert for the benefit of the campaign fund is to be given by the young ladies of the Suffrage Association on Tuesday evening, October 6th, at 8 o'clock, at Metropolitan Temple. The native sons and daughters are to furnish the music, and a good programme is promised.

Miss Kathryn Burdette handsomely entertained a party of young people at her home on Van Ness Avenue one day during the week.

A FRAULEIN FOR THE MOMENT
A VIEW AT MRS. MORGAN'S GERMAN FETE AT BERKELEY

Delilah.

What have I done? What care I for their gold?
He who was king of all men now is dead—
By what mad dream of kinship was I led,
Which, to my people, my sweet Lord I sold?
Nerveless his arms, no more shall they enfold
This supple body on its perfumed bed;
Across my sleepless eyes the mist floats red—
The mist that rises where the dead lie cold.
Cursed be those that took thee, O my lover!
And doubly cursed be her that gave thee o'er.
Stoop, Horned Queen, from where thine orb doth hover—
I, who have served thee, this last boon implore;
That thou some strange, fierce anguish will discover,
To be with these and me for evermore.
—Duffield Osborne, in the "Chap Book."

The Right Place.

"The place for kisses," the poet said,
"Is under the twinkling stars,
When the day with its worry and noise is dead,
And nothing the stillness mars."

"The place for kisses," the maiden said,
"Is under the summer moon,
When the sun is set and the night is fed
With the odors of roses in June."

The poet, perhaps, was not far amiss,
And the maiden was right, I suppose;
But, after all, the best place for a kiss
Is under my sweetheart's nose.
—Up-to-Date.

The Fog.

The fog went down to the sea,
And what did the fog behold?
A purple mystery
And a dawn of dazzling gold;
And over against the dawn
A shallop rode the crest,
And the soft slow fog stole on
And gathered it to his breast.

The fog went up to the land,
And what did the fog behold?
One weeping on the strand
In the twilight drear and cold.
A broken shallop lay
Against the dull sands pressed—
And the slow fog stole away
With his secret in his breast.
—Ida Whipple Benham, in "Youth's Companion."

DR. H. G. YOUNG—Bridges and teeth without plates a specialty. 1341 Polk street.

The Maison Riche serves the best lunch in the city for 75 cents.

Mr. Gustav Hinrichs, whose name has long been connected with the operatic history of the United States, has opened a studio in the Emporium Building, for the cultivation of voices, and for the finish of advanced vocalists. Mr. Hinrichs' career has been most successful, he having been for many years the leading vocal teacher in Philadelphia. In New York he was principal of the opera class at the National Conservatory of Music, of which Mrs. Jeanette M. Thurber was president and Anton Dvorak was director. The efficiency and thoroughness of his method is shown by the number of the most celebrated operatic singers on the American stage who were his pupils. The voice-trial will be three dollars, which will be refunded when lessons are engaged. Mr. Hinrichs can always be seen at room 441, Emporium Building, on Mondays and Thursdays, between ten and twelve.

Dr. C. W. Decker, Dentist, 806 Market Street

The Maison Riche serves an elegant dinner at popular prices.

The Original Swain's Bakery, 213 Sutter St., stands without a rival and has stood the test for years. The most delicious meals are served by gentlemanly attendants, and the management takes pride in having everything orderly. It is just the place for business men and ladies out shopping to lunch.

Reduce your obesity by taking Brooks's Phytolacca. Pleasant to take. Makes walking a pleasure. No diet necessary. Trial size 50 cts. Try it. Get it at 119 Powell street. Mailed free on receipt of price.

Dainty and Refreshing
PAR EXCELLENCE
"THE UNIVERSAL PERFUME"
For the Handkerchief, the Dressing-table and the Bath.
Murray & Lanman's
FLORIDA WATER
Its fragrant, lasting sweetness exerts a subtile charm and never tires or cloys.
Ask your Druggist for the genuine Murray & Lanman's.

A CHILD PRODIGY

Master Walter Leon From Three Points of View.

The Interviewer's View.

The sex of Master Walter Leon (the little chap who does "a turn" at the Orpheum this week) is a problem to the uninitiated. He looks like a girl, particularly when he has on trousers, but he says he is a boy, and it must be admitted that he ought to know.

Girl or boy, however, he is certainly not a "sissy," but a lusty, unaffected child, who refuses to take either himself or his talents seriously and gives one the impression of extreme youth and simplicity.

This is rather remarkable in a child who has passed most of his life on the stage and is endowed with unusual mimetic ability and musical talent. He is a healthy, handsome little fellow, docile and well bred, too, for when I asked him to recite he assented quietly, and rising trudged off immediately to the other end of the room—on his dear little fat, patient looking legs—and gave me, without any fuss or nonsense, a sample of his best. And very good it was, too, from his burlesque of Bernhardt and a Vassar "precieuse ridicule" to his Italian tenor, who sang:

"Li Hung Chang he acta vera queer zust now;
You see, he go ahoma by way of ze Vancouva.
He keepa way from San Francisco,
For he afraid that ze highbinder
Will steal his yellow jacket and his peacock fezza."

What Papa Leon Said.

When Walter was only three he recited the address of Sparticus to the gladiators, the thing Forrest and McCullough made hits in. At four and a half he took part in a benefit given by star children at Palmer's Theatre, New York, and made a great hit as Agesamot, the slave of Chrysos. Little Tommy Russell was Pygmalion. He has played in London, the provinces and New York. He is only ten years old, and went on the stage before he knew enough to be frightened. His mother is not with us on this trip. She generally goes with him to the theatres and brings him away as soon as his turn is over. Both my wife and I are Americans, but my father was Holland Dutch and my mother English. I was on the stage at one time, but I do not attribute Walter's abilities to that. He has an excellent memory and is very quick to catch an idea and develop it. We take him off the stage next year so he can have time to study. After his education is attended to, his health established and his musical talent somewhat developed, we will decide about his profession. I don't want him to be a musician unless he can be a first-class one, but we are full of hope for him.

Master Walter Speaks.

I have been interviewed once before. It was by a woman, too. I did not like it, but she was thin, you aren't. She kissed me. I don't like being kissed— except by Buster. She's my littlest sister. I've three and a brother. Sometimes I have to protect them an' I get licked—if the boy is bigger than me. I have lots of fights cause I have long hair, and the boys they say, "See the girl," or "Look at de kid." I had a fight once with a tough who hit me with a whip. I hit him back. Anywhere I could. On the nose some. Then Emerson (he's my brother) got me a strap and I thumped him.

Sometimes I have fights with boys who are too little to lick. They are the worst kind.

They hit you in the stomach.

We were going out to the baths to-day, but my father got cold feet when your paper telephoned. He said we had better come here and not bathe to-day, so we didn't. I did not like London, it's too dark. I like San Francisco pretty well, but it isn't as nice as New York. There isn't any place as nice as New York.

Sometimes I go to the play. I don't remember how I felt the first time I did a turn on the stage except that I wished I was out of it.

No, I don't love Buster any better than the rest. You see Puffie—that's Phyllis, we call her Puffie 'cause she is so fat—Puffie would do anything for me, and Emerson—well, he brought me that strap. I love Edith, too. I want to go on board the Oregon. I like ships and dogs and a tabble dote dinner—whatever you call it—with lots of courses. Did you ever have a dog? What kind was he? Bulldogs are great. Was yours brindle or spotted? How old was he when you got him? Only a minute! How was that? Oh—his mother brought him to you. Well, I guess my father is tired of waiting. Good-bye." PEG WOFFINGTON.

Fall Styles Neckwear and Hosiery at John W. Carmany's, 25 Kearny Street

THE PRISONER OF ZENDA.

The quality and characteristics of "The Prisoner of Zenda" are thus summed up by the critic of the Chicago "Times-Herald": "Zenda" is purely a fad play, precisely as "Trilby" was, but, unlike Du Maurier's creation, it makes no effort whatever to keep within the bounds of reason, either in character or general treatment. In "Trilby" the Svengali motive and its incidents constitute the one element that we cannot square by the rule of probability. The remainder of the play is entirely within bounds. The characters are possible and most of the incidents might easily occur in modern Paris.

Turning to "Zenda" we find an entirely different condition. The story is a fantastic romance with no element of probability in any part of it. The characters are unreal and impossible by turns, and in the entire composition no note of sincerity is struck. Such romance as this might almost be classified in the school of extravaganza. It bears the same relation to genuine emotional romance that extravaganza sustains to what might be called legitimate burlesque. In other words, it is not at all the legitimate romantic play that it pretends to be, and therefore must rapidly cross the dramatic horizon only to disappear forever.

There is no permanent value in any fad characters, plays or novels. Rider Haggard's "She," a most powerful grotesque romance, barely survived two seasons. "Trilby" rushed into obscurity so speedily that its lamenting proprietors had scarcely time to climb out of the way. "Zenda" will meet with the same fate.

The romance that is not realistic and sincere is hopeless.

MUSIC.

The first of a series of chamber concerts given by Miss Alice Bacon and Mr. Guilio Minetti opened with the Bazzini E flat string quartet. The performance of this, a novelty to San Francisco, was in all respects the best of the afternoon. Especially well played were the minuet and andante quasi allegretto. The executants, Messrs. Minetti, Josephs, Verona and Von der Mehden, deserve praise for their conscientious work. Mr. Stark and his selections were out of place. While the cantor of Emanu-El Tabernacle has a good voice, he knows little or nothing about singing.

Selections from Meyerbeer's operas and the like for concert purposes show a want of good taste. Miss Alice Bacon, pianist, has good fingers but no temperament. The performance of the little Schumann-Kirchner song was heavy and uninteresting. Nor, indeed, can much be said in praise of Miss Bacon's interpretation of the Chopin C minor Polonaise. Without a doubt Miss Bacon would play infinitely better were she to do some good hard thinking—in other words, forget herself and give the composer full benefit of her mental capabilities.

The Dvorak quintet for piano and strings was not particularly well played. In the scherzo and finale was not a little clashing, despite the efforts of Mr. Minetti, ably seconded by the reliable Mr. Josephs, to keep things together. Decidedly, the pleasant recollections of this concert will be the artistic performance of the by no means great Bazzini string quartet. P. C. ALLEN.

MASTER WALTER LEON

SNAPSHOTS AT THE GIFTED BOY WHOSE PERFORMANCE AT THE ORPHEUM HAS ATTRACTED SO MUCH ATTENTION

Photos by Marceau

Chew Adams' Pepsin Tutti-Frutti. It is sovereign for indigestion and agreeable to the taste

DRAMATIC NOTES

Delmar, the "Man-Frog," is the latest novelty out at the Chutes, and his act of hopping down the long slide and into a floating island must be seen to be appreciated. An open air performance, also given every evening and Saturday and Sunday afternoons, is proving very popular. To-morrow afternoon C. M. Vosmer, who made such a clever sky trip last Sunday, will make another balloon ascension and parachute drop at half past four.

"Trilby" at the Columbia Monday night. We are sorry to lose the Frawleys, of course, but they have been with us many moons and change is near and dear to the hearts of Californians. It is an excellent company that will present the play, with Edith Crane as the Latin Quarter heroine and Charles Kent as Svengali. The latter is said to have better conception of the great hypnot. role than Wilton Lackaye, whose place he took in the company. Through Australia Reuben Fax was Svengali.

In the paragraph in the "Herald" making mention of the arrangements for the funeral of Mr. Lewis, Mr. Lewis was spoken of thrice and Mr. Augustin Daly six times. Mr. Lewis was, under the circumstances, the more important person, although there is a proverb as to the comparative value of live stock and departed worth, and the "Herald" reporter may have been mindful of its homely truth. It is of Rossini that the story is told that, being asked for an opinion on a dead march written by a mediocre composer in memory of Meyerbeer, the wit of Pesaro observed that he was sorry the composer had not died, and that Meyerbeer had not set down the memorial music.

The Orpheum has had crowded houses this week. The Hawaiian Band has proved a great attraction. There have been crowded houses at both the matinees and at the evening performances, and Manager Walter is being generally congratulated on his latest coup. The band and glee club perform for one more week, and then go south. In addition, we are to hear the child wonder, Gertie Cochran, who is veritably a mental prodigy. C. H. Unthan, the armless wonder, the Carpos Brothers, and Anna Suits, will also appear in new specialties.

"School" is being more prettily staged at the Alcazar this week than ever before in the city, and the business is correspondingly good. On Monday it will make way for Buckstone's farcically funny comedy, "Married Life." It has not been seen here for many a day, and there is a good honest laugh in every line. All the favorite comedians will be in the cast, and that the stage setting will be above the ordinary goes without saying.

So "The Prisoner of Zenda" has arrived at last. Not before it was time, indeed, for we are all impatient for a new theatrical performance. The show comes to us in the hands of an interesting company. James K. Hackett, who has the dual role of the Rossendyls, is supported by Miss Isabel Irving, Maude Odell, Charles Walcot, Howard Gould, Walter S. Hale, Arthur Elliot, John Findlay, Marvyn Dallas, R. J. Dustan, Albert Grau and others.

On account of the length of the performance of "The Prisoner of Zenda," the management announces that the curtain will rise promptly at 8:10. So much of the interest of the play lies in the prologue that it would be advisable for patrons of the Baldwin to be in their seats at the rise of the curtain.

Ellen Terry has purchased of Mrs. Gerberding, the wife of the well-known Bohemian, a curtain raiser entitled, "A Champagne Cork," which was submitted during her recent visit to the coast. The play is said to be original in conception, and offers excellent opportunity for the English actress.

The Mapleson Opera Company opens at the Academy of Music, New York, on the 26th inst. An engagement of four weeks will be played, after which the organization is to make a limited tour of this country, appearing in San Francisco just after the New Year.

The next public entertainment to be given by the Columbia Theater School of Dramatic Art wil take place at the Columbia Theatre on Thursday afternoon, October 29th.

For the engagement of "Trilby" at the Columbia theater, popular prices, 25c, 50c, 75c and $1, wil prevail for the choice of reserved seats.

Adams' Tutti-Frutti Chewing Gum for Indigestion

The most exquisite tea that we know how to produce is Schilling's Best Blend — several teas from different parts of the world, blended by us with only one purpose in view: to provide you with the most delicate and charming tea-flavor obtainable for any reasonable sum.

Some of you have paid $4 and $5 a pound for tea no better than Schilling's Best Blend at $1.25 a pound.

At grocers' in packages.

QUEEN LILY SOAP

BEST ON EARTH
FOR LAUNDRY USE

Patronize Home Industry

"ARTIE"

He is Funnier than "Chimmie Fadden" and Hails from Chicago.

A successor to "Chimmie Fadden" has entered the field. He is not a gamin nor does he hail from the Bowery or Tar Flat. This time he is a Chicago product—clerk in a big mercantile concern—young, smart and tough, who affects an argot full of strange terms and turns, drawn from latest popular songs, vaudeville repartee, poker allusions, baseball and racing slang—a mysterious vernacular, incomprehensible to those who are not versed in the idiom of the moment. "Artie" (Herbert S. Stone & Co., publishers) is an amusing manly and strongly individualized youngster, who has prototypes in innumerable families not in Chicago alone, but in San Francisco, New Orleans and Boston. He does the town, has his love affairs, his sprees, his adventures, and tells them next morning to his friend Miller, who acts through the book as confidant and interlocutor. To Artie a pretty girl is a "queen," another fellow is a "guy," an introduction is a "knock-down," "nit" is not, a "skin" means a thief, a "farmer" is a simple-minded fellow, "lull con" is smooth talk. We are told of some one "four-flushin'"; a "push of ringers" is a phrase that explains itself to the initiated.

Artie describes the relations of his sweetheart and himself, called into question by a companion, thus;

"I come purt' near knowin' how strong I am with her. There ain't nobody else one-two-seven. They ain't even in the 'also rans.'"

One of the most amusing passages in the book is that in which Artie describes the occasion of his first meeting with Mamie, whose relationship to himself he significantly expresses: "If I ever rent a flat she's the party that picks out the furniture." It is too long to quote in full, but it abounds in deliciously abstruse terms of admiration and abuse. It seems the two had gone to a second-rate dance over on the North Side and there saw Mamie sitting in a corner. He continues:

"I could see a Johnny-on-the-shot, with a big badge marked 'committee,' was tryin' to keep cases on her. He waltzed with her once or twice, but most o' the time he had to be out on the floor yellin' 'Two more couple wanted,' and all that business. He was makin' himself the whole thing. Well I got friendly with a guy that was standin' around, the same as myself, tryin' to break in, an' I says to him: 'I want you to do me a favor. Take me over and gi' me a knock-down to the queen over in the corner.' He said he didn't know her. 'What's the diff?' I says. 'Ain't you got your nerve with you?' Well, he was all right. He took me over and says: 'Miss Lum-Yum and So-and-So,' fakin' it as he went, 'I want you to shake hands with my friend, Mr. Ta-ra-m-m-m,' and then he ducked. I asked her if the boy with the badge owned her, and she laughed. I see that he didn't have no cinch on it, so I just started in. I put up the tall talk, jollied her along, danced with her three times—well, of course, you couldn't blame me. I sprung them West Side manners o' mine on her and I had her won. Finally his rabs with the banner on his coat comes around and begins to roast her. Sore? You never see a man so sore."

"Why didn't you stop him?"

"Oh, I didn't stop him, did I? Mebbe I let him go right ahead and have his own way. You ought o' seen me. I put on a bluff that'd curl your hair. I went up to him and I breathed it right in his ear. I leaned against him. 'Look here,' I says, 'you screw right away from here,' We don't like your style. If you open your face to this lady again to-night I'll separate you from your breath!' Did he go? Well, I should say yes. He didn't want none o' my game."

"Didn't she get mad?"

"What, after he weakened that way? His name was pants, then and there. I says to her, 'That fellow's got a horrible rind to think he can set on the same side o' the room with you."

I should like to quote also the dialogue between Artie and the messenger boy, but space forbids. Here, however, is the initial chapter of the volume which describes the hero's experiences at a church social. It affords an excellent idea of the character of a volume of which we are certain to hear much between now and Christmas. The book is clever and amusing, and is certain of a popular success.

One day Mrs. Morton, wife of the city manager, came to the offices and in polite brigandage compelled each man in the room to pay fifty cents for a ticket to the charity entertainment. This entertainment was to be given at a South Side church on the following Wednesday evening. Artie bought a ticket with apparent willingness.

"I don't want you young men to think that I'm robbing you of this money," said Mrs. Morton. "I want you to come to the entertainment. You'll enjoy it, really."

"Blanchard can go all right," suggested Miller, with a wink at young Mr. Hall. "He lives within a few blocks of your church."

"Then he must come," said Mrs. Morton, decisively. "Won't you, Mr. Blanchard?"

"Sure," replied Artie, blushing deeply.

"Why, Mrs. Morton, he hasn't been in a church for three years," said Miller.

"I don't believe it," and she turned to Artie, who was shaking his fist at Miller. "Now, Mr. Blanchard, I want you to promise me faithfully that you'll come."

"I'll be there all right," said he, smiling feebly.

"Remember, you've promised," and as she went out she shook her finger at him as a final reminder.

"Well, are you going?" asked Miller.

Artie put on his lofty manner and gazed at his office companions with seeming coldness.

"What's it to you whether I do or not? Didn't you hear what I said to her? Sure I'm goin'. I've got as much right to go out and do the heavy as any o' you pin-heads. If I like their show I'll help 'em out next time; get a couple o' handy boys and put on a six-round go for a finish. Them people never saw anything good."

"I'll bet you don't go," spoke up young Mr. Hall.

Artie laughed dryly. "You guys must think I'm a quitter, to be scared out by any little old church show," said he.

That was the last said of the charity entertainment until Thursday morning, when Artie, after dusting off his desk, strolled up to Miller and gave him a friendly blow, known to ringside patrons as a "kidney-punch."

"Ouch!" exclaimed Miller.

"Well, I goes," said Artie.

"Where?" asked Miller, who had forgotten.

"Where? Well, that's a good thing. To the church show—the charity graft. I didn't do a thing but push my face in there about eight o'clock last night, and I was 'it' from the start. Say, I like that church, and if they'll put in a punchin'-bag and a plunge they can have my game, I'll tell you those."

"Did you see Mrs. Morton?"

"How's that, boy? Did I see her? Say, she treated me out o' sight. She meets me at the door, puts out the glad hand and says: 'Hang up your lid and come into the game.'"

"I never heard her talk like that," suggested Miller.

"Well, that's what she meant. She's all right, too, and the only wonder to me is how she ever happened to tie herself up to that slob. It's like hitchin' up a four-time winner 'longside of a pelter. He ain't in her class, not for a minute, or a part of a minute. What kills me off is how all these dubs make their star winnin's. W'y, out there last night I see the measliest lot o' jays—regular Charley-boys — floatin' around with queens. I wish somebody'd tell me how they cop 'em out. Don't it kill you dead to see a swell girl — you know, a regular peach — holdin' on to some freak with side whiskers and thinking she's got a good thing? That's right. She thinks he's all right. Anyway, she acts the part. And say, you know Percival, that works over in the bank — little Percy, the perfect lady. There's a guy I've known for five years, and so help me, if he gets on a streetcar where I am, I get off and walk. That ain't no lie. I pass him up. I say, 'You're all right, Percy, and you can take the car to yourself,' and then I duck."

"Was he there?"

"The whole thing! That ain't no kid. He was the real papa — the hit o' the piece. One on each arm, see? — and puttin' up the large, juicy con talk. They was beauts, too; you couldn't beat 'em, not in a thousand years. There they was, holdin' to this wart. Up goes my hands in the air, and I says to myself, 'Percy, you're all right. I wouldn't live on the same street with you, but you're all right at that.' But he couldn't see me."

"Couldn't see you?"

"No, he lost his eyesight. He looked at me, but he was too busy to see me. No, he had on his saucy coat and that touch-me-not necktie, and oh, he was busy! He wasn't doin' a thing. I think I'll give the bank a line on Percy. Any man that wears that kind of a necktie hadn't ought to handle money. But you ought to seen the two he had. I'd like to know how he does it. I had a notion to go up to one o' the girls and say: 'What's the matter? Ain't you ever seen any others?'"

"Did you like the show?" asked Miller.

"It's this way. They liked it, and so"—with a wave of the hand —"let 'em have it. If they put the same turns on at any variety house the people'd tear down the buildin', tryin' to get their coin back. Mrs. Morton got me a good seat and then backcapped the show a little before it started up, so I didn't expect to be pulled out o' my chair — and I wasn't. If I'd been near the door I'd 'a' sneaked early in the game, but, like a farmer, I let her put me way up in front. I saw I was up against it, so I lasted the best way I could. Two or three o' the songs was purty fair, but the woman that trifled with the piano for about a half an hour was very much on the bummy bum. Then there was a guy called an entertainer, that told some o' the gags that I used to hear when my brother took me to the old Academy and held me on his lap. But he got 'em goin', just the same. 'Well, I says to myself,' 'what'd a couple o' hot knockabouts do to this push?' On the dead, I don't believe any o' them people out there ever saw a good show. It just goes to prove that there's lots of people with stuff that think they know what's goin' on in town, but they don't. I ain't got no kick coming, only it was a yellow show, and I'm waitin' for forty-five cents change."

"I should think you would have got the worth of your money simply by seeing so many good-looking gorls," said Miller.

"The girls are all right, only I think they're a little slow on picking the right kind. If I had time I'd go over to that church and make a lot o' them Rubes look like thirty-cent pieces. Not that I'm strong on the con talk, but I know I'd be in it with them fellows. I think it must be a case of nerve. That's all there is to 'em—is nerve. But the girls — wow!"

"Beauties, eh?"

"Lollypaloozers!"

THE MARTIANS

Initial Chapters of Du Maurier's New Novel.

The literary topic of the moment is "The Martians," Du Maurier's new novel. In the October "Harper's" the first installment is given, and the very first lines betray the author of "Trilby." The same power, charm and exaggeration are there. The reader has that sense of sincerity and sweetness, of wholehearted tenderness which pervaded that idyll of the Quartier Latin. The delicate flavor, so incommunicable, so mysterious, is caught again in the description of Barty Josselin, who is evidently the hero. The writer begins at the beginning. We are told of Barty's immediate ancestry, of how his father, Lord Runswick, married his mother, "the famous Antoinette Josselin," of the "Bouffes," of how the lad was left an orphan, and of how he was brought to Monsieur Brossard's school. There he throws his spell upon the other pupils instantaneously, and there the reader watches him wooing the masters, dancing jigs and singing songs for the women in the "lingerie," or, in less happy moments, "defending himself with his two British fists against Dugit, a big boy with whiskers, who had him by the collar and was kicking him to rights." Josselin was perpetually being kicked to rights, but apparently it was most often in an encounter of his own seeking. Whether this was the case or not, meant little to Barty and less to the boys. They adored him either way; when Jolivet blacked his eye he seemed sorry for it with more genuineness in his sorrow than is customary with schoolboys. Everybody at the Institution F. Brossard adored Josselin, and they had the same reason that must be given after a perusal of the first chapters of his history. It is impossible to help it. To be sure, he wrote "Sardonyx" and "Motes in a Moonbeam," and other masterpieces over which, Mr. Du Maurier assures us, the world has gone quite mad. Besides, he was beautiful as Apollo, strong, clever, amusing—a thousand things. What do they all amount to in comparison with the mere fact that he was adorable?

In the course of the succeeding chapters Barty develops into a great writer and a great man. But here he is from the pen of the creator:

"In the first place, his beauty was absolutely angelic, as will be readily believed by all who have known him since. The mere sight of him as a boy made people pity his father and mother for being dead!

"Then he had a charming gift of singing little French and English ditties, comic or touching, with his delightful fresh young pipe, and accompanying himself quite nicely on either piano or guitar without really knowing a note of music. Then he could draw caricatures that we boys thought inimitable, much funnier than Cham's or Bertall's or Gavarni's, and collected and treasured up. I have dozens of them now. They make me laugh still, and bring back memories of which the charm is indescribable; and their pathos, to me!"

The engraving of Du Maurier which prefaces the October "Harper's" is an admirable piece of work, as fine a woodcut as the magazine has ever had. The execution of the author's drawings are reproduced with a care and fineness of effect which are the perfection of mechanical execution.

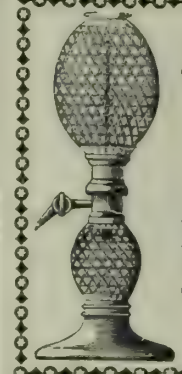
An Ounce of Prevention is cheaper than any quantity of cure. Don't give children narcotics or sedatives. They are unnecessary when the infant is properly nourished, as it will be if brought up on the Gail Borden Eagle Brand Condensed Milk.

Occidental Restaurant, 337 Bush street. Headquarters for tourists. Separate rooms for families. Meals a la carte. Lunch 50c. Best French Dinner in the city, 75c. Joseph Munier, proprietor.

When you are selecting a wedding or a birthday present, go to S. & G. Gump's, 113 Geary street. They have a magnificent variety, just arrived from Europe, from which to select.

Hotel St. Nicholas, corner Market, Hayes, Larkin and Ninth. American or European plan. Ira R. and James H. Doolittle.

GERMEA



A Home

MAY BE COMPLETE WITHOUT A

GAZOGENE

BUT NOT

If you care for Aerated Water, or use Wine on your table. A simple method of making your own Soda Water. See

Justinian Caire

521-523 Market St., San Fran.

Agent for G. Rossi & Fils
San Marc Square and 2054 San Stae, Venice, Italy
398-400 Rue Saint Honore, Paris

The P. Rossi Co.

DECORATORS

Artistic, Carved and Antique Furniture
French and Italian Tapestry
Wood Carving and Bric-a-Brac

117 Sutter Street San Francisco

Webster's International Dictionary

The One Great Standard Authority,
So writes Hon. D. J. Brewer, Justice U. S. Supreme Court.

Send a Postal for Specimen Pages, etc.

Successor of the "Unabridged."

Standard

of the U. S. Gov't Printing Office, the U. S. Supreme Court, all the State Supreme Courts, and of nearly all the Schoolbooks.

Warmly Commended

by State Superintendents of Schools, and other Educators almost without number.

THE BEST FOR EVERYBODY
BECAUSE
It is easy to find the word wanted.
It is easy to ascertain the pronunciation.
It is easy to trace the growth of a word.
It is easy to learn what a word means.

The San Francisco Chronicle says:—There is no doubt that the favorite dictionary in the United States is Webster's International. It has many competitors but it is generally accepted as the best dictionary for Americans to use. It seems to be equally esteemed in other English-speaking countries.—Dec. 11, 1895.

G. & C. MERRIAM CO., Publishers, Springfield, Mass., U.S.A.

Send your name for a Souvenir of the Works of Eugene Field,

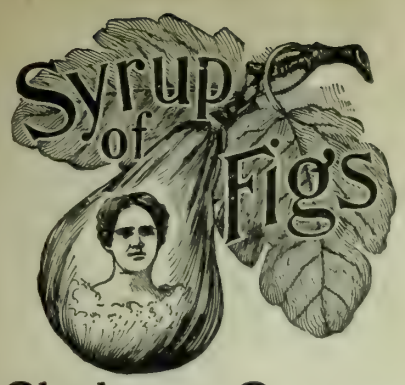
FIELD FLOWERS

The Eugene Field Monument Souvenir

The most beautiful Art Production of the century. "A small bunch of the most fragrant of blossoms gathered from the broad acres of Eugene Field's Farm of Love." Contains a selection of the most beautiful of the poems of Eugene Field. Handsomely illustrated by thirty-five of the world's greatest artists as their contribution to the Monument Fund. But for the noble contributions of the great artists this book could not have been manufactured for $7.00. For sale at book stores, or sent prepaid on receipt of $1.10. The love offering to the Child's Poet Laureate, published by the Committee to create a fund to build the Monument and to care for the family of the beloved poet.

Eugene Field Monument Souvenir Fund,
180 Monroe Street, Chicago, Ill.

Wedding Invitations are properly engraved and in correct form, at ROBERTSON'S



Gladness Comes

With a better understanding of the transient nature of the many physical ills which vanish before proper efforts—gentle efforts—pleasant efforts—rightly directed. There is comfort in the knowledge that so many forms of sickness are not due to any actual disease, but simply to a constipated condition of the system, which the pleasant family laxative, Syrup of Figs, promptly removes. That is why it is the only remedy with millions of families, and is everywhere esteemed so highly by all who value good health. Its beneficial effects are due to the fact, that it is the one remedy which promotes internal cleanliness, without debilitating the organs on which it acts. It is therefore all important, in order to get its beneficial effects, to note when you purchase, that you have the genuine article, which is manufactured by the California Fig Syrup Co. only, and sold by all reputable druggists.

If in the enjoyment of good health, and the system is regular, then laxatives or other remedies are not needed. If afflicted with any actual disease, one may be commended to the most skillful physicians, but if in need of a laxative, then one should have the best, and with the well-informed everywhere, Syrup of Figs stands highest and is most largely used and gives most general satisfaction.

Its Purity A Surety Of Its Excellence

Accept No Substitute None So Good None So Pure

Vina Brandy

Vina Distillery Co.

819 Market St., S. F.

ITO, SOTOMI & CO.

Successors to
JAPAN CURIO TRADING CO

Japanese .·. Art .·. Goods

116 SUTTER STREET
SAN FRANCISCO

HEALTHFUL! INVIGORATING!

CRECIENTE

Imported Sea Salt for Bathing

SOLD BY DRUGGISTS AND GROCERS

FRANK K. LANE G. WHITFIELD LANE

LANE & LANE

Attorneys and Counselors

Room 202
Crocker Building, San Francisco

Ziska Institute : 1606 Van Ness Ave.

School for Girls. English, French, German.
Thirtieth year begins August 3d.
MME. B. ZISKA, A.M Principal.

AS THE WORLD WAGS

Johnstone Bennett's Man "Maid"—The Influence of Colors.

Women who try to be proud of their own sex have always resented the fact that the best cooks, dressmakers and milliners, are male ones, and now—oh, agony! there comes a clever creature of their own sex (Johnstone Bennett by name) with the paradoxical assertion that the best maids are men also. "Female maids," she asserts, "are more trouble than they are worth; they are just so much extra baggage. I do not see anything eccentric in a woman having a valet. She has bags, umbrellas and wraps to be carried. A maid has her hands full to transport her precious self. A maid is no good in a crowd. You have to spend most of your time finding her. She can't make a way for you in a crush. She can't attend to getting seats, checking baggage, and a thousand of the things that have to be done in travel. She does not know how. The extra help a woman has actually to hire costs more than the maid's salary. A maid is, in most cases, dressy, pompous, and has affairs. My valet has none of these faults. He is alert, clever, well-trained, and not afraid of work." He certainly is discreet, this valet, for the only statement the newspapers can get out of him is that he "thinks it is not usual" for a lady to have a valet, "even in France." "The only parallel to this case," says the New York Journal, and, of course, the Examiner, "is that of a once well-known actor, who for several years kept a maid — a tall, angular, harsh-visaged person, with a jaw like Sullivan, and shoulders like those of a hotel porter."

* * *

English five-o'clock teas are growing more substantial. Light wines and a delicate vegetable salad, with mayonnaise, are now frequently served at them. This is possibly because bicyclists often drop in, and it is hungry work pedaling, as everybody knows. Some new sandwiches evolved for the function, when it really becomes a bicycle tea, are mushrooms, daintily cooked and pressed between thin slices of white or brown bread and butter. Sometimes a salad of tomatoes, cucumbers and bananas, sliced and dressed with cream and lemon juice, is also seen on the "tea" buffet.

* * *

Who will persuade the short, stout woman that the bolero and Eton jackets, with the clasping ceintures or girdles which accompany them, and are now so much worn, are not for her? It is pathetic the way women make themselves unattractive by studying other women's clothes instead of their own. Every woman who has reached the age of twenty-five has achieved by accident or intention some time in her life a becoming toilet. It may have been piecemeal — a hat that specially suited her, a gown that her friends spoke of, a jacket or mantle that she knew she looked well in — let her remember the combination and forever dress on that model. It must be modified and adapted to the prevailing style, but a little care will do this, and in these days of infinite variety of fabric and garniture it is easy to avoid monotony.

* * *

It is claimed that color exercises a potent influence over the human race. The mystics believe that every person is surrounded by an aureole of a color pertaining to his or her nature. We are told that blue, the color of heaven, indicates the purest soul; purple also ranks high in the scale; and pink and red indicate grossness, immorality, materiality. Balzac seems to have held certain ideas as to the influence of color upon human beings, and averred that he could tell the disposition of a woman by the colors she affected. Thus, he declared that a fondness for white marked the coquette; that romantic and amiable women affected pink, and that the woman with a predilection for green and orange was sure to have a quarrelsome disposition; that beauties who had passed their first youth were inclined to lilac and purple; that those of a melancholy disposition were disposed to wear gray, and that the persons who always wore black, unless they were in mourning, were sure to be of a suspicious and quarrelsome nature. According to this theory, red and yellow are excitants; green and blue, bilious; orange, fiery; gray, melancholy; and lilac, quiet and unostentatious.

* * *

Time was when the few women who attended a Doncaster race meeting attempted to make their garments and appearance as thoroughly masculine as possible. The long, tight "Newmarket" coat, with a glimpse of shirt collar and "sporting" necktie beneath, the hard hat, the broad-striped gloves and a big field glass slung across the shoulders were considered the correct style for the September race meeting. This year all this is changed, and the feminine contingent has broken out in all the glorious gew-gaws, the fluffy furbelows and the bewildering beauties of up-to-date womankind.

* * *

The Marchioness of Waterford recently gave out invitations for a garden party, and put a notice in a local paper to the effect that gentlemen need not wear high hats unless they so desired. Now this is being grand dame and considerate hostess all at the same time. Only a grand dame would have dared to fly in the face of Mrs. Grundy, and only a considerate hostess would have noticed the needless misery inflicted on the male animal when he has to take care of a high hat and essay to be interesting to the sex at one and the same time.

* * *

Sir Guy Campbell's sister has started a new profession for ladies — that of present-choosing. She has set up a dainty house, where she is at home three afternoons a week, and keeps a selection of dainty treasures. She also purchases for country clients, and is an expert in antiques. She prides herself on taking as much trouble over choosing a small gift as a costly one.

* * *

Several of our leading manufacturers are planning to push their wheels in England next season. Most of the American bicycles sold in England this season were bought by the class of people who in a measure set the fashion. While good wheels are made in England, one becomes prejudiced against them if he rents one for use in a little town. Most of the rented wheels are of Elizabethan vintage, and a rider is likely to feel as if he were mounted on a threshing machine, and to remember with regret his light-running American roadster far, far away. I once rode into Oxford on the wheel which William the Conqueror rode. I found his initials on the handle-bar. The honor and distinction were not appreciated.

* * *

Subjects for gossip in London are rather scarce just now, which is perhaps the reason why the matrimonial prospects of Mr. Astor and Sir Robert Peel are being so vigorously discussed. Several people have tried to "draw" the Prince of Wales, whose free-and-easy life at Homburg made him more accessible than when here; but he only twinkles his eye, jokes now and then, but commits himself in no way. However, it is pretty freely said that the reason why the German Emperor did not come to Cowes after all — though a meeting with his uncle in August had been arranged many months ago — was on account of his autocratic majesty's wrath at the proposed marriage of Princess Victoria. Whether the alliance actually comes off or not, it is certain that the Prince favors it. The young lady, as I have before told you, had a romance years ago, and may not consent to part with it, hopeless though it be. Of the "affaire Peel" you have probably heard the latest. Despite Lord Ashton's indignant denial, the fair Geraldine was on the eve of consenting to an engagement, when a letter — supposed to be written by Mrs. Langtry — upset her equanimity very considerably. It was probably a hoax, but she showed it to papa, hence the tears. Sir Robert's fate is almost enough to be a warning to gilded youths with a penchant for actresses, since to be made utterly ridiculous is a nemesis which they are capable of appreciating.

"And do you love me as well as ever, John?" the wife asked of her somewhat testy husband, after they had made up, subsequent to what is usually termed "a little tiff."

"Why, of course I do, and better."

"Are you sure, darling?"

"Sure? Of course I am. Hang it, don't I tell you so?"

"Yes, but you are not deceiving me?"

"Certainly not. What do you want to aggravate a man for?"

"I am not aggravating you."

"Yes you are, and I tell you plainly that I love you madly, and if you ask me that question again, I'm blessed if I don't go out and stay out altogether. I love you dearly, and now shut up, or it will be worse for you. Asking me if I love you, when I do to distraction! Get out, you idiot!"

Wife subsides, highly delighted.

Poodle Dog Restaurant, S. E. corner Grant Avenue and Bush street. Private dining and banquet rooms. Telephone 429. Blanco & Bruno, proprietors.

Hotel Pleasanton

Corner Sutter and Jones Streets

Is a large and magnificently appointed Family and Tourist Hotel, situated in the most pleasant and convenient part of the city.

Two cable car lines pass the Hotel. Sutter Street line direct from the Ferry.

Sanitary Plumbing. Cuisine Perfect.

RATES REASONABLE

O. M. BRENNAN, Proprietor

MENNEN'S BORATED TALCUM

TOILET POWDER

Approved by Highest Medical Authorities as a Perfect Sanitary Toilet Preparation

For infants and adults

Delightful after shaving

Positively relieves Prickley Heat, Nettle Rash, Chafed Skin, Sunburn etc. Removes Blotches, Pimples; makes the skin smooth and healthy

Take No Substitutes. Sold by druggists or mailed for 25 cts. SAMPLE MAILED (Name this paper) FREE

GERHARD MENNEN CO., Newark, N. J.

We Have Appointed

Coburn, Tevis & Co.

OUR AGENTS FOR

CHOCOLATE MENIER

MENIER & CO

AMERICAN OIL AND PAINT CO.

19 Spear St., San Francisco

MANUFACTURERS OF

High-Grade Lubricating Oils Compounds and Grease

DEALERS IN PAINTS AND PAINT OILS

Estimates Given on Lubricating or Painting Work

Union Iron Works

BUILDERS ELECTRICAL MACHINERY

AGENTS FOR STORAGE BATTERY

United States Laundry

Office 1004 Market St.

TELEPHONE SOUTH 420

WINDOW SHADES, PAPER HANGING

Tinting or Frescoing

JAMES DUFFY & CO.

Estimates cheerfully given
Telephone Grant 39

20 Geary Street

COMET OOLONG

The oldest and most reliable brand of Tea on the market. Sold only in ½ lb. papers at 20 cts. per paper.

ALL GROCERS KEEP IT

—No—
Tariff

No freight on

"STANDARD"
SHIRTS

They're made here
and they'll stand
comparison with any other shirt
under the sun.

TRADE N.B. MARK
Standard

NEUSTADTER BROS., Mfrs.
SAN FRANCISCO

STEIN the Painter

HOUSE : AND : SIGN : PAINTING
PAPERING, TINTING, ETC.
Successor to SWAN & STEIN
759 Market St.

HIRSCH-KAHN & Co.
MANUFACTURING OPTICIANS
IMPORTERS OF OPTICAL GOODS
PHOTOGRAPHIC APPARATUS & SUPPLIES ETC.
333 KEARNY STREET
SAN FRANCISCO CAL.

COTTON SAIL DUCKS
22-inch, in all numbers. Medium, Soft and Hard
ALSO
Heavy Naught, Wagon and Draper Ducks
From 30 to 120 inches wide
Monumental and Imperial Ounce Ducks
Manufactured by Murphy, Grant & Co.
Mount Vernon Company . . Pacific Coast
Baltimore Sole Agents

Removal Sale
The whole of my stock at 1212-18 Market Street is now for sale at an immense reduction from the usual prices, before removal to
New Store, 721 Market Street
in the Bancroft Building
Suits to Order from $10 Trousers to Order from $3
CHAS. LYONS, London Tailor

YOU KNOW OUR BUSINESS
SO DO WE!
Stationery, Printing, Bookbinding
STEEL DIE ENGRAVING IN EVERY LINE
THE MYSELL-ROLLINS CO.
22 CLAY STREET, S. F.

SCOTT & McCORD
HAY AND GRAIN MERCHANTS
OFFICE, 615 SIXTH ST.

TERRA COTTA PRESSED BRICK FIRE PROOFING
GLADDING, McBEAN & CO.
1358-1360 MARKET ST.
WORKS, LINCOLN CAL.

A NEGRO POET

The latest of W. D. Howells' literary discoveries is a negro poet. It is Paul Lawrence Dunbar, and Dodd, Mead & Co. are publishing a volume of his verse. In the introduction Mr. Howells says that Dunbar is the only "man of pure African blood and American civilization to feel the negro life aesthetically and express it lyrically." He adds: "It seemed to me that this had come to its most modern consciousness in him, and that his brilliant and unique achievement was to have studied the American negro objectively, and to have represented him as he found him to be, with humor, with sympathy, and yet with what the reader must instinctively feel to be entire truthfulness."

Ere Sleep Comes Down to Soothe the Weary Eyes.

Ere sleep comes down to soothe the weary eyes,
Which all the day with ceaseless care have sought
The magic gold which from the seeker flies;
Ere dreams put on the gown and cap of thought,
And make the waking world a world of lies—
Of lies most palpable, uncouth, forlorn,
That say life full of aches and tears and sighs.
Oh, how with more than dreams the soul is torn
Ere sleep comes down to soothe the weary eyes.

Ere sleep comes down to soothe the weary eyes,
How all the griefs and heartaches we have known
Come up like pois'nous vapors that arise
From some base witch's cauldron, when the crone
To work some potent spell, her magic plies.
The past which held its share of bitter pain,
Whose ghost we prayed that Time might exorcise,
Comes up, is lived and suffered o'er again,
Ere sleep comes down to soothe the weary eyes.

Ere sleep comes down to soothe the weary eyes,
What phantoms fill the dimly lighted room;
What ghostly shades in awe-creating guise
Are bodied forth within the teeming gloom.
What echoes faint of sad and soul-sick cries,
And pangs of vague indefinable pain
That pay the spirit's ceaseless enterprise,
Come thronging thro' the chambers of the brain,
Ere sleep comes down to soothe the weary eyes.

Accountability.

Folks ain't got no right to censuah uthar folks about dey habits;
Him dat giv' de squir'ls de bushtails made de bobtails fu' de rabbits.
Him dat built de grea' big mountains hollered out de little valleys,
Him dat made de streets an' driveways wasn't 'shamed to make de alleys.

We is all constructed diff'rent, d'aint no two of us de same;
We can't he'p ouah likes an' dislikes, ef we'se bad we didn't to blame.
Ef we'se good, we needn't show off, case you bet it ain't ouah doin',
We gets into su'ttain channels dat we jes' caint he'p pu'suin'.

But we all fits into places dat no othar ones end fill,
An' we does the things we has to, big er little, good or ill.
John cain't tek de place o' Henry, Su an' Sally ain't alike;
Bass ain't nuthin' like a suckah, chub ain't nuthin' like a pike.

When you come to think about it, how it's all planned out it's splendid.
Nuthin's done er evah happens, 'dout hit's somefin' dat's intended;
Don't keer whut you does, you has to, an' hit sholy beats de dickens—
Viney, go put on de kittle, I got one o' mastah's chickens.

A Creed and Not a Creed.

I am no priest of crooks nor creeds,
For human wants and human needs
Are more to me than prophets' deeds;
And human tears and human cares
Affect me more than human prayers.

Go, cease your wail, lugubrious saint!
You fret high Heaven with your plaint.
Is this the "Christian's joy" you paint?
Is this the Christian's boasted bliss?
Avails your faith no more than this?

Take up your arms, come out with me,
Let Heav'n alone; humanity
Needs more and Heaven less from thee.
With pity for mankind look 'round;
Help them to rise—and Heaven is found.

A Colorado belle, who was taking the waters at Kissingen when Bismarck was there, one day walked straight up to him, as American girls will when they have made up their mind to do a thing, and said: "I am going home to-day; may I shake hands with you?" She took his offered hand, and attempted to kiss it, but he promptly withdrew it, saying, "In Kissingen we do not kiss hands," and the scarcely displeased damsel received a chaste salute upon her lips.

If one drinks beer it is important to select the very best that can be had, and this can be found only in the brews of the famous Bartholomay Brewery Company of Rochester. The Knickerbocker Brand possesses exquisite properties and is the favorite among connoisseurs. Purity and healthfulness have ever been the aim of these manufacturers, and they have succeeded in making this brew the favorite among first-class consumers, and have supplanted the popular brews of a few years ago. Messrs. William Wolff & Co. are selling it as fast as it can be supplied from the great establishment in the East, and its fine properties are a revelation to the people of California.

MATRIMONIAL TALES

The Usual Result.

"I found myself dead broke at home one evening and I needed a little change," explained the lawyer. "I asked my wife for $5 and she immediately wanted to know what she got out of it."

"Good business instinct," commented the banker. "She realized that she had the money market temporarily cornered. Very clever indeed—for a woman."

"I told her I'd bring her home $25 the following night if she'd let me have $5 that evening," continued the lawyer, "and she was delighted."

"Naturally," returned the banker. "The rate was usurious."

"'I need $25 so much,' she exclaimed, 'and I've been wondering how I was going to get it. Be sure you don't forget to bring it home.'

"'I won't,' I said. 'Where's the V?'

"'The V!' she exclaimed. 'Oh, I'll give that to you out of the $25, if you're mean enough to take it. I haven't a cent now.'"

"Well?" said the banker inquiringly.

"Oh, you're married and don't need to have the story finished," returned the lawyer. "You know very well that she got the $25 and I got eternally and everlastingly left in the transaction, as a man almost invariably does when he enters into financial negotiations with his wife."—Chicago Times-Herald.

It Worked.

The young man was bringing to bear all his limited attainments as a contortionist in his efforts to see around the tall, wide hat worn by the sweet girl in front of him.

The young woman whom he was accompanying saw him and pitied him.

Then a knowing smile passed over her face and she leaned over and whispered loudly enough for the girl with the big hat to hear:

"What a lovely hat that girl in front of us has on!"

He looked fierce, but said nothing, and the owner of the hat stared straight ahead with a pleased expression.

"What a pity it is," the young woman resumed, with a knowing look, "that she doesn't know it isn't on straight."

The girl in front made a convulsive grab and shifted the hat on one side. Then it didn't feel right and she shoved it away over the other side, only to hear in a commiserating stage whisper behind her:

"Poor thing! She'll never get it straight now."

It was too much. The girl in front reached up with a resolute hand, took off the hat and laid it in her lap, while the young man cast a glance at his companion which was eloquent with undying admiration and eternal gratitude.—N. Y. Times.

Received His Blessing.

Good Minister (a married man)—Do you wish to marry this woman?
Man—I do.
Minister—Do you wish to marry this man?
Woman—I do.
Minister—Do you like the city as a place of residence?
Man—No, I prefer the suburbs.
Minister—Do you like the suburbs?
Woman—No, indeed; I prefer the city.
Minister—Are you a vegetarian in diet?
Man—No; I hate vegetables. I live on beef.
Woman—I can't bear meat. I am a vegetarian.
Minister—Do you like a sleeping room well ventilated?
Man—Yes; I want the window down summer and winter.
Minister—Do you like so much fresh air?
Woman—No; it would kill me. I want all windows closed.
Minister—Do you like a light in the room?
Man—No; can't sleep with a light; want the room dark.
Minister—Are you afraid in the dark?
Woman—Indeed, I am. I have always had a bright light in my room.
Minister—Do you like many bed clothes?
Man—All I can pile on.
Minister—Do you?
Woman—No; they suffocate me.
Minister—I hereby pronounce you man and wife, and may every blessing and happiness in life be yours.

No Wonder.

"You look thin and careworn, Tadley," said the man in the russet shoes.

"Insomnia!" replied Tadley, with a groan.

"Insomnia?" repeated the man in the russest shoes. Oh! come now, a man with no more than you have to worry him doesn't get insomnia."

"It's the baby that's got it," explained Tadley, as he stepped off the ferryboat and resumed his struggle with life.—World.

Maison Tortoni French Rotisserie, 111 O'Farrell street. Private dining rooms, banquet hall. S. Constantini, proprietor.

The Banquet Hall at the Maison Riche is the largest and best equipped in San Francisco.

THE OVERLAND LIMITED

"The Overland Limited," via Union Pacific, takes only three and a half days to Chicago, and only four and a half days to New York.

The Union Pacific is the only line running Pullman double drawing-room sleepers and dining cars, San Francisco to Chicago, daily, without change, and composite buffet smoking and library cars between Salt Lake City, Ogden and Chicago. Only one change of sleepers to New York; dining car service the entire distance.

Upholstered Pullman tourist sleepers San Francisco to Chicago daily without change. Personally conducted tourist excursions to St. Paul and Chicago every Friday.

Tickets and sleeping car reservations at general office, No. 1 Montgomery street, San Francisco. Reservations secured in advance by all Trans-Atlantic steamship lines. Tickets on sale to and from all points in Europe. D. W. HITCHCOCK, General Agent, San Francisco.

FINEST ON THE MARKET

BEWARE OF IMITATIONS
EEL RIVER CREAMERY
SEE THAT THIS STAMP IS ON END OF SQUARE

A FINE GRAIN DELICIOUS FLAVORED BUTTER
If you appreciate a DELICACY
Ask your Dealer for the BRAND

BALDWIN THEATRE
AL HAYMAN AND CO. INCORP'D PROPS.
Monday, October 5th, Mr. Daniel Frohman Presents His Latest Novelty
The Prisoner of Zenda
Direct from the Lyceum Theatre, New York, with the Lyceum cast, scenery, accessories, etc.
The company includes Jas. K. Hackett, Isabel Irving and others
The most brilliant romantic play that has been seen in years!

Columbia Theatre.
CRIDDLE AND GOTTLOB & Co. LESSEES AND MANAGERS
For a Limited Engagement of Two Weeks, commencing Monday Evening, October 5th
Wm. A. Brady and A. M. Palmer's Company
In the Greatest Dramatic Triumph of the Age, the Magnificent, Deeply-absorbing and World-famous TRILBY
Play in four acts, by Paul M. Potter
Based on George DuMaurier's Novel
By arrangement with Harper & Bros.
As produced at Mr. Palmer's Garden Theatre, New York
Reserved Seats, 25, 50, 75c. and $1.
October 19th, TOWN TOPICS

Orpheum
O'FARRELL STREET, BETWEEN STOCKTON AND POWELL
Week Commencing Monday, Oct. 5
A Great Musical and Vaudeville Treat. Re-engagement for One Week Only of the Famous Royal Hawaiian Band and Glee Club
under the Leadership of PROF. J. S. LIBORNIO, the Greatest Saxophone Soloist in the World
Gertie Cochran, the Child Memory Wonder
C. H. Unthan, the Armless Celebrity
Richard Pitrot, in New Local Impersonations
Reserved seats 25c, balcony 10c; box seats and opera chairs 50c. Matinees Wednesday, Saturday, Sunday
Special Matinee Labor Day, Monday Oct. 5: The regular Vaudeville Show and the Hawaiian Band.

Alcazar Theatre
O'FARRELL STREET, BETWEEN STOCKTON AND POWELL
BELASCO, DOANE & JORDAN, Lessees and Mgrs.
LAST PERFORMANCES OF "SCHOOL"
Rose Matinee To-day at 2 p.m.
Monday Evening, October 5th, the Funniest of Farcical Comedies
MARRIED LIFE
Cast includes all our Best Comedians
Preceded by Sydney Grundy's One-Act Comeditta
IN HONOR BOUND
Prices: 15c, 25c, 35c and 50c. Matinees Saturday and Sunday: 15c, 25c and 35c.
Telephone Black 991. Secure seats in advance

THE : CHUTES, : CASINO
And Greatest Scenic Railway on Earth
Open Daily from 1 to 11 p.m.
The funniest sight ever seen is Delmar, the Man Frog Hopping Down the Chutes. Evenings at 10 o'clock
In the open air, MULLEN SISTERS, Cornetists; the AMMATOSCOPE, and a THREE MILE BICYCLE RACE
Special! Sunday Afternoon: Baloon Ascension and Parachute Drop by C. A. Vosmer
ADMISSION 10 CTS.
Children, including Merry-Go-Round Ride, Five Cents

ELECTRIC..
Supplies
Construction
Repairs
CALIFORNIA
ELECTRICAL WORKS
409 MARKET STREET

GRAY HAIR RESTORED
to its natural color by LEE'S HAIR MEDICANT, no dye, harmless, pleasant odor, $1.00 a bottle
LEE'S HAIR TONIC removes dandruff, stops hair from falling out and promotes growth $1.00 a bottle
LEE MEDICANT CO 108 Fulton st., N.Y.
Illustrated Treatise on Hair on application FREE

BAY STATE OYSTER HOUSE AND GRILL ROOM
15 Stockton Street
Oysters served in all styles. Orders for Theatre Parties given special attention
M. M. ADLER, Prop.

CHAUNCEY M. DEPEW, the famous orator, statesman, railroad president and millionaire, in an interview said of his recent visit to Del Monte: "I visited Monterey, and I call it the most beautiful place in the world. Monte Carlo cannot compare with it. Its seventeen-mile drive is unparalleled for fineness."

When Mr. Depew says it is the most beautiful place in the world he knows what he is saying, and means it, for he has seen pretty much all the beautiful and interesting places in the world many times over . . . . .

The Tavern of Castle Crag, the most beautiful, attractive and accessible of all mountain resorts, will open for the reception of guests June 1, and will close October 1, 1896.

GEORGE SCHONEWALD, MANAGER

Sunset Limited

will be

Resumed in November

Tuesdays and Saturdays
From San Francisco
Initial Trip Nov. 7

Mondays and Thursdays
From New Orleans
Initial Trip Nov. 9

Residents of California and elsewhere in the West, who have planned for Eastern tours previous to the date named, should keep in mind the important fact that the return trip can be arranged for the SUNSET LIMITED without additional cost. A trip across the continent via the popular Sunset Route, in a Pullman vestibuled train of palatial elegance, provided with every comfort and luxury that can be suggested for the inner as well as the outer man, is a good fortune that falls but rarely to the average lot. Don't forget this when purchasing your ticket.

Pacific Coast Steamship Co.

Dispatch steamers from San Francisco for ports in Alaska 9 a.m. July 3, 13, 18, 28, August 2, 12, 27.
For British Columbia and Puget Sound Ports, July 3, 8, 13, 18, 23, 28 and every fifth day thereafter.
For Eureka, Humboldt Bay, S. S. Pomona, 2 p.m. July 5, 8, 12, 16, 20, 24, 28 and every fourth day thereafter.
For Newport, Los Angeles and Way Ports, 9 a.m. July 2, 6, 10, 14, 18, 22, 26, 30 and every fourth day thereafter.
For San Diego, stopping at Port Hartford, Santa Barbara, Port Los Angeles, Redondo--Los Angeles--and Newport, 11 a.m. July 5, 8, 12, 16, 20, 24, 28 and every fourth day thereafter.
For Ensenada, San Jose del Cabo, Mazatlan, La Paz Altata and Guaymas, Mex., S.S. Orizaba, July 3 and 25th of each month thereafter.
Ticket Office: Palace Hotel, 4 New Montgomery St.

GOODALL, PERKINS & CO.
General Agents
No. 10 Market Street, San Francisco, Cal.

A. K. DAGGETT

Drawing of Deeds and all Legal Papers a specialty

NOTARY PUBLIC
14 Montgomery St., S. F.
Telephone 305

OCEANIC S.S. CO.

HAWAII, SAMOA, NEW ZEALAND, AUSTRALIA.

6 DAYS TO HONOLULU BY S.S. AUSTRALIA

S. S. "Australia," Honolulu only, Tuesday, Oct. 20 1896, at 10 a.m.
S. S. "Mariposa," via Honolulu and Auckland, Thursday, October 15, 1896 at 2 p.m.

Ticket Office 114 Montgomery St.
Freight Office 327 Market St.

J. D. SPRECKELS & BROS. CO., General Agents

The German Savings and Loan Society

526 California St., S. F.

Capital actually paid up in cash - -	$1,000,000 00
Deposits December 31, 1895 - -	30,727,586 59
Reserve Fund - - - - - -	750,000 00
Guaranteed Capital - - - - -	1,200,000 00

OFFICERS

President, B. A. BECKER
First Vice-President, EDWARD KRUSE
Second Vice-President, DANIEL MEYER
Cashier, A. H. R. SCHMIDT
Assistant Cashier, WM. HERRMANN
Secretary, GEORGE TOURNY
Assistant Secretary, A. H. MULLER

DIRECTORS

B. A. Becker, Edward Kruse, Daniel Meyer,
H. B. Russ, H. Horstmann, Ign. Steinhart, D. N. Walter,
Nic. Van Bergen, Emil Rohte

Attorney, W. S. Goodfellow

San Francisco Savings Union

532 CALIFORNIA ST

Deposits June 30, 1896 -	$23,657,219
Paid Up Capital and Surplus -	1,594,085

ALBERT MILLER, Pres. E. B. POND, Vice-Pres.
LOVELL WHITE, Cashier

DIRECTORS

GEORGE W. BEAVER — ROBERT WATT
THOMAS MAGEE — GEO. C. BOARDMAN
W. C. B. DE FREMERY — DANIEL E. MARTIN
ALBERT MILLER — PHILIP BARTH
E. B. POND

Loans upon San Francisco and Oakland Real Estate, and Farms and Farming Lands in the country.
No charge is made for pass book or entrance fee.

Mutual Savings Bank of San Francisco

33 Post Street, below Kearny, Mechanics' Institute Building

Guaranteed Capital, $1,000,000

JAS. D. PHELAN, Pres. GEO. A. STORY, Cashier
S. G. MURPHY, JOHN A. HOOPER, Vice-Pres.

DIRECTORS—Jas. D. Phelan, S. G. Murphy, John A. Hooper, James Moffitt, C. G. Hooker, Frank J. Sullivan, L. P. Drexler, Robt. McElroy, Jos. D. Grant.

Interest paid on term and ordinary deposits.
Loans on approved securities. Deposits may be sent by Postal Order, Wells, Fargo & Co., or Exchange on City Banks.
When opening accounts, send signature.

ROYAL EXCHANGE ASSURANCE

OF LONDON
Incorporated by Royal Charter A. D. 1726

Capital Paid Up, $3,446,100 — Assets, $21,584,413
Surplus to Policy Holders, $8,980,251

ROBERT DICKSON, Manager
B. J. SMITH, Assistant Manager
ATHAN & KINGSTON, San Francisco Agents
501 Montgomery Street

Aachen and Munich

Fire Insurance Co.
of Aix La Chapelle, Germany
Capital, $2,250,000.00
Total Assets, $6,854,683.65
United States Department
204 Sansome Street

VOSS, CONRAD & CO., General Managers

BIDS

FOR

Concessions and Privileges in Yosemite Valley

OFFICE OF THE YOSEMITE COMMISSIONERS,
San Francisco, August 11, 1896.

In accordance with Rule XXXIV of the Rules and Regulations governing Yosemite Valley and Mariposa Big Tree Grove, adopted July 13, 1896, sealed bids are hereby invited for the for the following concessions and privileges in the Yosemite Grant for the year beginning November 1, 1896, and ending October 1, 1897, viz.:

First—For keeping a livery stable and conducting a general livery business in the Valley, and also for the rental of the Royal Arch Farm and Stables.

Second—For rental of stable and coach house on Georgia Avenue for stage headquarters.

Third—For rental of hotel, outbuildings and grounds at Glacier Point and privilege of conducting a hotel business at that point.

Fourth—For rental of store building and privilege of conducting a general merchandise business in the Valley.

Bids must be presented to the Secretary on or before

Monday, October 12, 1896

at 12 o'clock M., at office of Commissioners, San Francisco.

Bids must be accompanied by sufficient guarantee that contract shall be carried out by bidders to the satisfaction of the Commissioners. The Commissioners reserve the right to reject any and all bids.

JOHN F. SHEEHAN,
Secretary and Treasurer,
Room 25, Tenth Floor, Mills Building, S. F.

NOTICE TO CREDITORS

ESTATE OF FRED LARSEN, DECEASED

Notice is hereby given by the undersigned, A. C. Freese, Administrator of the Estate of FRED LARSEN, deceased, to the creditors of and all persons having claims against the said deceased, to exhibit them with the necessary vouchers, within four months after the first publication of this notice, to the said Administrator, at room 35, Chronicle Building, the same being his place for the transaction of the business of the said estate in the City and County of San Francisco, State of Califofnia.

A. C. FREESE,
Administrator of the Estate of Fred Larsen, deceased.
J. D. SULLIVAN, Attorney for the Administrator.
Dated at San Francisco, August 21, 1896.

THE PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU

510 MONTGOMERY ST., S. F.,

Reads all papers on the Pacific Coast, and supplies clippings on all topics, business and personal.

ASSESSMENT NOTICE

Alta Silver Mining Company

Assessment No. 53
Amount per share, 10 cents
Levied September 7, 1896
Delinquent in office, October 12, 1896
Day of sale of delinquent stock Nov. 2, 1896

J. E. JACOBUS, Secretary
Office, room 33, Nevada Block, San Francisco

ASSESSMENT NOTICE

Gould & Curry Silver Mining Company

Assessment No. 79
Amount per share, 15 cents
Levied September 1, 1896
Delinquent in office, October 5, 1896
Day of sale of delinquent stock, Oct. 27, 1896

A. K. DURBROW, Secretary
Office, room 69, Nevada Block, San Francisco

ASSESSMENT NOTICE

Occidental Consolidated Mining Co.

Assessment No. 24
Amount per share, 10 cents
Levied September 2, 1896
Delinquent in office, October 8, 1896
Day of sale of delinquent stock, Oct. 29, 1895

A. K. DURBROW, Secretary
Office, room 69, Nevada Block, San Francisco

BAJA CALIFORNIA

DAMIANA BITTERS

"Damiana" is a powerful aphrodisiac and special tonic for the sexual and urinary organs of both sexes and a great remedy for diseases of the kidneys and bladder. For weak nerves these bitters are invaluable, and leading physicians recommend them as the greatest invigorator known. Long-winded testimonials are not necessary. "Damiana" Bitters are known on their merits. (Send for Circular.)

NABER, ALFS & BRUNE, Agents
323-325 Market St., S. F.

REMOVAL

Rountrees English Chocolate, Kohlers Swiss Chocolates, and all brands of Foreign and Eastern Confectionery, imported by . . . .

W. L. GREENBAUM,

of 205 SUTTER ST., will, after December 1st, be found in large and commodious quarters at 128 POST ST., Bohemian Club Bldg.

Brushes

For barbers, bakers, bootblacks, bathhouses, billiard tables, brewers, bookbinders, candymakers, canners, dyers, flour mills, foundries, laundries, paperhangers, printers, painters, shoe factories, stablemen, tar roofers, tanners, tailors, etc.

BUCHANAN BROS.

TEL. 5610 — 609 SACRAMENTO ST.
BRUSH MANUFACTURERS

ORDER YOUR CARRIAGES AND COUPES OF THE

PACIFIC CARRIAGE CO.

At Baldwin Hotel
200 Sutter Street, corner Kearny
48 Eighth Street, or
St. Nicholas Hotel, Market and Ninth Streets
Steamer and Train Service a specialty 'Phone 1950

Good Appetite

Is restored and the disordered Stomach and Liver invigorated by taking a small wineglassful, before meals, of the celebrated . . . . . .

Peruvian Bitters

THE WAVE CLUBBING LIST

FOR 1896

By special arrangement with the Publishers, THE WAVE is prepared to offer the following list

SUBSCRIPTIONS MUST BE PAID IN ADVANCE

THE WAVE and	CENTURY	$6 00
" "	ARENA	5 00
" "	LITTELL'S LIVING AGE	7 75
" "	ART AMATEUR	5 75
" "	LIPPINCOTT'S MAGAZINE	4 50
" "	MUNSEY'S	3 50
" "	ATLANTIC MONTHLY	5 75
" "	YOUTH'S COMPANION	3 75
" "	NEW ENGLAND MAGAZINE	5 00
" "	HARPER'S MAGAZINE	5 50
" "	HARPER'S WEEKLY	5 70
" "	HARPER'S BAZAAR	5 70
" "	HARPER'S ROUND TABLE	4 00
" "	SCRIBNER'S MAGAZINE	5 00
" "	REVIEW OF REVIEWS	4 50
" "	ST. NICHOLAS	5 00
" "	OVERLAND	4 75
" "	COSMOPOLITAN	3 50
" "	FRANK LESLIE'S MAGAZINE	4 90
" "	PUCK	6 50
" "	JUDGE	6 50
" "	LIFE	7 00
" "	LIFE'S COMEDY	3 50
" "	LESLIE'S WEEKLY	5 70
" "	DEMOREST MAGAZINE	4 00
" "	SCIENTIFIC AMERICAN	5 00
" "	SCIENTIFIC AMERICAN SUPPLEM'T	6 50
" "	N. Y. DAILY SUN	8 00
" "	" SUNDAY "	4 50
" "	CASSELL MAGAZINE	3 75
" "	ARGOSY	3 50
" "	PUBLIC OPINION	4 50
" "	SUNDAY WORLD	4 75
" "	CRITIC	5 50
" "	FORUM	5 00
"	NORTH AMERICAN REVIEW	6 50
" "	TABLE TALK	3 25
" "	NINETEENTH CENTURY	6 25
" "	CONTEMPORARY REVIEW	6 25
" "	FORTNIGHTLY REVIEW	6 25
" "	BLACKWOODS MAGAZINE	6 25
" "	TRUTH	6 25
" "	DELINEATOR	3 50
" "	VOGUE	5 50
" "	TOWN TOPICS	7 50
" "	DAILY JOURNAL	5 00
" "	SUNDAY JOURNAL	3 75
" "	ILLUS. AMERICAN	5 75

NEW STORIES RE-TOLD

O'Neill Danut in his journal of "Irish Life" tells this tale of a contested election in the Green Isle: When Mr. Hemphill was canvassing Cashel he found that a party of electors, known as "commoners," numbering some thirteen or fourteen, were notoriously corrupt and always sold their vote to the highest bidder. Their usual price was $100 per vote. Hemphill requested the priest to preach on the sin of trafficking on the franchise, and the priest complied and denounced corrupt trafficking in votes as a mortal sin. The next day Hemphill met one of the commoners, and, anxious to learn what effect the sermon had produced on these venal gentlemen, he asked the man whether he had been at mass on the previous day. "I was, your Honor." "Was not that sermon on bribery excellent?" "It was an elegant sermon, your Honor." "Will it do good, do you think?" "I think it will make the election run very close, your Honor." "How so?" "Why, we always got $100 for a vote before we knew it was a sin; but, as his reverence says we'll be damned for selling our votes, we can't for the future take less than $200."

A strange recontre was that which occurred recently at the meeting of the Bimetallic League at McMinnville, eastern Oregon. It is the custom there for the delegates to mingle freely with one another, whether previously acquainted or not, just to promote cordiality. Among the guests of honor was a handsome man of forty, whom the chairman was introducing as Mr. Booth of McMinnville, who was made known as "Mr. Booth, the son of the Sheriff who hanged John Brown, of Ossawatomie, at Harper's Ferry." All of which caused people to take more than a common interest in Mr. Booth. Finally Mr. Booth was introduced to a man of excellent appearance, whose name was Solomon Brown. After the introduction, Mr. Booth and Mr. Brown chatted very pleasantly for a minute or two. "Mr. Booth," said Mr. Brown, "was it your father who hanged John Brown at Harper's Ferry?" "Yes," said Mr. Booth. "He was Sheriff at that time, and it was his duty to officiate at the execution. No relative of yours, I hope?" "Only my father," was the quiet reply.

General Thiebault in his memoirs tells this story of Junot, afterwards Marshall, then a gunner at Toulouse. He was supping with some comrades near the batteries, in a tent which I think they shared, when a shell from the fort fell in the middle of the tent and was about to burst in the hole which it had made in the ground. By the gun's red glare and Was running away. When Junot, seizing a glass, exclaimed, "To the memory of those of us who are going to perish!" How far the wine had any influence on the effect his words produced I know not; but all stopped, took up their glasses and remained motionless till the shell exploded. One fell dead, and the others tossing off their bumpers cried: "To the memory of a hero!"

A Nonconformist minister, who had given evidence in a case before the court, and had from time to time kept interjecting casual observations, to which the judge would pay no attention, happened to come across one of the judges at the hotel where he was staying. Stalking up to him he said, "Now, sir, as you have left the bench, you can talk to me." "I beg your pardon," replied the judge courteously, "but now that I have left the bench I absolutely decline to talk to you." Which was nasty for the minister.

It is a good, if oft-told tale, that of Montalembert, the devout Catholic, and of Sainte-Beuve, the uncompromising unbeliever, who met at a Paris garden party, both doubled up, literally, with the acute pain resulting from a chronic malady. "Pray, what is your complaint?" asked Montalembert of Sainte-Beuve. "The same as yours," was Sainte-Beuve's answer. And the writer added: "It was inflicted upon me as a punishment for my sins, and bestowed upon you in reward of your virtues."

One of Lincoln's stories, says the "Youth's Companion," quoted by Noah Brooks, tells of a soldier who, at the close of a severe engagement, being badly wounded, was being carried to the rear, when he espied a sutler woman hawking some very tough-looking pies. "I say, old lady," called the soldier, who may have come from a Massachusetts "shoe town," "are those pies sewed or pegged?"

Sergeant Arabin, renowned in the London Criminal Courts for his "bulls," once told a prisoner before him at the Central Criminal Court that "if there was a clearer case of a man robbing his master, that case was this case." After passing sentence on this man the Sergeant said to him, "I therefore give you the opportunity of redeeming a character irredeemably lost!"

For health and strength: Damiana Bitters.

A SAVING OF ONE-HALF

Baggage transferred to trains or steamers and return. Trunks, 50c each for the round trip. Morton Special Delivery, 650 Market street and 408 Taylor street.

Among the many great Financial Corporations on the Pacific Coast, none rank higher than the

FIREMAN'S FUND INSURANCE CO.

Its Agents are found throughout America, and its Record for Prompt and Equitable Settlement of All Honest Losses is Firmly Established

D. J. STAPLES, President — WM. J. DUTTON, Vice-President — B. FAYMONVILLE, 2d V.-Pres., Sec'y
J. B. LEVISON, Marine Sec'y — LOUIS WEINMANN, Asst. Sec'y — STEPHEN D. IVES, General Agent

THE GRILL ROOM SERVICE
—OF THE—
PALACE HOTEL

Has been extended to what was formerly the City Restaurant. This immense room, which has a direct entrance from Market Street is known as - - - -

"THE LADIES' GRILL ROOM"

NEW DEPARTURE—CHARACTERIZED BY PROMPT SERVICE—MODERATE CHARGES

Troubled with Rheumatism
Neuralgia
Malaria
Dyspepsia
Gout ?

. . GO TO . .

Byron Hot Springs

Contra Costa Co., Cal.

The California Hotel

SAN FRANCISCO

ABSOLUTELY FIREPROOF

HOTEL RAFAEL

SAN RAFAEL

Open All the Year Round
Fifty Minutes from San Francisco

Average winter temperature 64 degrees. Both hotels strictly first-class. Modern, Exquisite and Home-like. Both under the personal supervision of General Warfield.

R. H. WARFIELD & CO.
Proprietors.

For those who appreciate Comfort and Attention

A QUIET HOME
CENTRALLY LOCATED

OCCIDENTAL HOTEL
SAN FRANCISCO

WM. B. HOOPER, MANAGER

Golden Eagle Hotel

GRAY & TITUS, Proprietors

A MODERN FIRST-CLASS HOTEL

SACRAMENTO, CAL.

Marshall F. Jones
Merchant Tailor
Room 113 and 115, Phelan Building
SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.

THE LICK HOUSE

Occupies the block bounded by Montgomery, Post and Sutter Streets

IT IS—
——scrupulously clean;
——accessible to all street car lines and places of amusement;
——conveniently situated for business men;
——a quiet, model place for a family to spend the winter;
——moderate in price, yet first-class in every particular.

AMERICAN OR EUROPEAN PLAN

K. B. SOULÉ, Manager

CRESTA BLANCA WINES

AWARDED
THREE HIGHEST AWARDS
AT

THE ATLANTA EXPOSITION

OF SIX MEDALS
AWARDED TO CALIFORNIA

Cresta Blanca Wines
OBTAINED THREE

WETMORE-BOWEN CO.
140 Montgomery Street
Under Occidental Hotel

BONESTELL & CO.

Dealers in PAPER

Fine Coated Papers a Specialty

401-403 SANSOME ST.,
San Francisco, Cal.

Ask your Blacksmith to shoe your horse with

PHŒNIX HORSE SHOES

GIVE THEM A TRIAL

H. S. BRIDGE & CO.

Merchant Tailors

Many Novelties in Imported Wear. Shirts to Order a Specialty.

622 Market Street, San Francisco
(Upstairs, opposite Palace Hotel)

San Francisco Carpet Beating and Renovating Works

D. MACKINTOSH & CO., suc. to S. S. Ferguson & Co.
Renovating, Laying and Refitting Carpets a Specialty
Telephone South 36 — 23 and 25 10th St., S. F.

Pacific Towel Co.

Telephone 1780 — No. 9 Lick Place, San Francisco

GEO. E. MOORE, Proprietor

This paper not taken from the Library.

THE WAVE

VOL XV. No. 41 SAN FRANCISCO, OCTOBER 10, 1896 PRICE 10 CTS.

A DIVINE HEALER

BROTHER SCHRADER BLESSING THE MULTITUDE See page 7

From a Flashlight Photograph by B. C. Towne

THE WAVE

Is published every Saturday, at THE WAVE Building, No. 24 Montgomery Street, San Francisco.

Subscription, $3.00 per year, $1.50 six months, 75 cts. three months. Foreign subscriptions—countries in postal union—$5 per year. Sample copies free on application. The trade is supplied by the San Francisco News Co., 210 Post Street; east of the Rocky Mountains by the American News Co., New York.

THE WAVE is kept on file and is for sale at Brentano's, 17 Avenue de l'Opera, Paris, France; 31 Union Square, New York City; 1015 Pennsylvania Avenue, Washington, D. C.; and 206 Wabash Avenue, Chicago.

Advertising rates and all other matters pertaining to the business of the paper, address THE WAVE, 24 Montgomery Street. Eastern Agent, E. Katz, 230-235 Temple Court, New York.

HARRISON M. PARKER, Business Manager

Entered at the San Francisco Post Office as second-class matter

THE WAVE PUBLISHING COMPANY

SAN FRANCISCO, OCTOBER 10, 1896

CONTENTS

Editorials	2-3	The Football Game
Chief Among Brain Surgeons	4	In Society	1
The Making of a Campaign	5	The Theatres; by Peg Woffington	11
Things and People	6	"Sir George Tressady": a Review	12
Du Maurier's Art	7	As the World Wags	13
About Personages	7	A Model Sanitarium	14
Trilby and Princess Flavia: an Interview	8	Improvements at toe Almshouse	14
An Imitation Messiah	8	New Stories Re-Told	16

LABOR AND FREE SILVER.

"Did you ever hear of an employer who objected to a reduction of wages?" shouts the demagogic noise-maker, who insults the cause of silver. "Do you suppose the owners of railroads and large factories would be against free silver if they thought it was true that wages would go down? Not much. They know wages will go up, and that is what worries them." This is about the style of "give him the devil" argument that the advocates of free silver are employing with labor, and doubtless it carries great weight with small and disgruntled minds; but any man who reads and understands the English language must also understand that this kind of argument is the cheapest character of claptrap. The fellow who gives voice to utterances such as these must hold the intelligence of labor in very light esteem. He must know, and labor must understand, there can be no financial policy adopted by this Government that can benefit him, and not at the same time benefit his employer and all the rest of America. He must know that no disastrous and ruinous policy can be adopted by the Government to the injury and perhaps ruin of his employer that will not also similarly injure and ruin labor.

Let us admit that the great employers of men would welcome a reduction of wages. Then you must also admit these same employers would not welcome a reduction of earnings. They may be willing enough to obtain cheaper labor, but they would not be anxious to secure it at the expense of their own incomes, profits and dividends. This free silver movement affects the rich employer and the manager whose mind directs quite as disastrously as it affects the man with brawny arm and skilled hand who executes. They are in the same boat. The manufacturer and employer—and we do no violence to imagination to presume that he is a man of education and some understanding—has studied this question for himself and decided against it. He has concluded—and, strange to say, men of brains who have concluded otherwise are rare—that silver will not rise to a parity with gold under free coinage. He understands that if it does not rise to a parity with gold, gold will go out of circulation, and our money will be silver money and silver money only. He knows that no man but a congenital idiot would dream of paying him in gold, and to the extent that silver fails to increase in value so will his income diminish.

As he will receive depreciated dollars for his goods, his wares and his merchandise, he must pay labor in the same depreciated money for its services. In this way labor must suffer with him. He does not gain anything by a reduction of wages if his diminished income comes concurrently with it. Although he will receive from his patrons the same number of dollars and the same weight of money, and will pay to his employees just as much per day or per week as he does to-day, the dollar that he will receive and the dollar that he will then pay will not be as good a dollar as the dollar of to-day. He is alarmed at the outlook, and well he may be.

In figuring out results, he finds this condition of affairs: His monthly labor account amounts to $25,000. His personal monthly profit is $2,000. If we have free coinage he still pays out $25,000 monthly, and he still receives $2,000 profit. But the dollar he then receives and the dollar he then pays for labor has shrunk in value in the markets of the world. If bullion values remain as they are to-day, his income will be shrunk one-half, and the wages of his laborers will have shrunk in like proportion and to the same extent.

The chairman of the Free Silver party of California recognizes this condition. He says that the American manufacturer cannot compete with cheap Japanese labor because Japanese labor is paid in a dollar that has depreciated 50 per cent. in the markets of the world. Heretofore in the history of American affairs, to meet the cheap labor competition of foreign countries, it has been the custom to place a high tariff upon the handiwork of the cheap and underpaid foreign craftsman. But the chairman of the Silver Convention of California does not believe in protective tariffs. He says: "The remedy will not be found in tariff schedules," and suggests that we scale down the purchasing power of our dollar to the level of the Japanese dollar. Manifestly, this is a cunningly devised means of reducing American wages and increasing Japanese wages to a point where competition will be possible. Labor, however jealous of his rights, is to be affected in this transaction quite as much as the manufacturer. The manufacturer, recognizing this, turns to labor and attempts to explain the situation. The opening lines of this article fairly sets forth the manner in which his arguments in this behalf are met.

The silver man, however, has a remedy for this condition of affairs. He declares that prices "will go up" under free coinage. Then let us regard for the moment the situation from that point of view. If prices do "go up" it will be because the merchant and the manufacturer will be unwilling to take the dollar of free coinage for a thing he is now willing to part with for a standard dollar of to-day. So, in lowering the standard of our money, in scaling down its value, we will obtain for a given commodity more of the things we will then call dollars than we do now of the things we now call dollars. The dollar of that day will not be worth as much as the dollar of to-day. The silver men admit that. They say the present dollar is an inflated, a gold, a 200-cent dollar. So, manifestly, we will not have increased the value of our commodities or added anything to wages, but will simply have readjusted the values of wages and commodities to the new standard of measurement. We might, by a somewhat similar process, increase the value of textile fabrics. Should we by legislation say that hereafter a yard should contain four and one-half feet, we might say that silk and cotton goods had gone up in value, because no man would sell a yard of goods containing four and one-half feet for as low a price as he will now sell us a yard containing only three feet. So prices would go up.

Conceding, for the purpose of this argument, that the laborer should secure more of these free coinage dollars for his services, and the manufacturer would charge more of these dollars for his goods;—how would labor be benefited? The history of silver shows that it is a fluctuating metal. How are you to adjust wages to its varying values? The manufacturer and merchant may mark up their goods at a moment's notice; but how about labor? Labor will declare, in fact it has already declared, that we may not base our prophecies as to the future condition of American labor under free coinage on conditions known to exist in other silver countries; because American labor is thoroughly organized for self-protection, which is not the case in Mexico, Japan or elsewhere. Conceding this to be true, labor unions must have a financial knowledge vouchsafed to a few men if they would fully protect their followers under free coinage. The value of the silver dollar will fluctuate from day to day, and from week to week. There can be no measure by which one may set the value upon wages except gold, and you come back finally to the gold basis without (mark you, without) any assurance that the dollar will remain at the value at which it is received. Labor might regulate the schedule of its wages on a sliding scale to correspond with the rise and fall of silver, but even if it could accomplish this it would not be insured against the shrinkage in value after the wages came into its possessoin. The rise and fall of silver under our present scheme of coinage does not affect our coined silver dollar, but it does affect the value of money in every free silver country in the world. The owner of bullion is to-day the only man in America who is affected by the fluctuations of silver values. Free coinage will shift the burden of these fluctuations to money itself and the losses will fall upon the man who has the coin. How, then, will labor gain by this transaction? He will lose by it just as his employer loses, more so, in fact, and will besides be confronted with a long list of vexatious and irritating problems looking to the adjustment of wages to the new and varying conditions. Certainly, no reasonable man can regard such a prospect with favor. None but a contentious man would seek such an era of unrest. If there is any one thing labor wants it is a fixed and permanent standard by which it may measure the value of its services, and the laborer should be as determined to secure this standard as is his employer, indeed, even more so.

But there is still another shot in the silver locker to delude labor.

Mary Lease and Mr. Bryan and some other good people who are deeply versed in the science of money insist that silver under free coinage will go to a parity with gold. They do not, and they cannot, point to a historical fact or illustration to justify this very serious and happy conclusion; but they can and they do repeat it very loudly and very often. But this alone, even the silver noise-maker must admit cannot make it so.

But suppose this condition does come about—and a greater absurdity never received consideration at the hands of an intelligent people—how is it going to benefit labor? To attain this parity these people propose to take one metal, silver, and lift it up in value to an extent greater than our entire national debt; and they propose to take another metal, gold, and pull it down, diminishing its value all over the world until a present convenient ratio of 32 to 1 shall become a world-wide ratio of 16 to 1. All this is to be accomplished by permitting the bullion owner to take to the mints 53 cents' worth of silver and have it coined into a dollar and stamped one hundred cents. Added to this the bullion owner is to have the further privilege of compelling us to accept as 100 cents the dollar which has cost him but 53 cents. Will some laboring man tell us where in all this unhappy transaction, he is to receive a particle of benefit, or where in all this performance there is created a demand for the silver dollar sufficient to cause it to practically double in intrinsic value?

BRYAN AND THE FACTS.

There is one phase of Orator Bryan's character coming well to the front in this campaign. It is a trick, characteristic of a cheap intellect attempting to bolster up a weak cause. He is given very largely to interspersing his speeches with quotations from the utterances of prominent Americans now dead, in the hope that he may create the impression that these men, who are held in high esteem, agreed, when living, with the wild doctrines of free silver which he is now advocating. Nothing is further from the truth. Of course there is, and can be, no objection to Mr. Bryan's citing speeches of America's great statesmen to support his contentions if the facts justified him in doing so; but the trouble with quotations which he cites is that they are all in favor of points which no one disputes and which really have no bearing upon the present financial issue. Of course to a man not fully informed in such matters this trick must carry some weight, but it cannot fail to disgust a thinking man, who has some knowledge of the facts to discover that a candidate for the Presidency of the United States should resort to such a cheap subterfuge to secure votes. We are indebted to the "Pittsburg Dispatch" for the careful collating of these little peculiarities of Mr. Bryan. It says:

"Mr. Bryan is especially fond of quoting Jefferson, and Jefferson declared that the ratio between gold and silver was a mercantile problem only to be determined by the commercial value of the two metals throughout the world, with a preference for gold; and finally Jefferson suspended the coinage of the silver dollar.

He frequently refers to Jackson, and Jackson, besides favoring the coinage act that put the country on a gold basis, set forth in his annual message, as quoted the other day in "The Dispatch," that a depreciation of the currency always inflicts the greatest loss on the laboring masses.

He has quoted from Lincoln several times, and Lincoln's administration set the example of sustaining the credit of the United States by paying the interest on their bonds in gold while the people, by stress of war, were forced to use a depreciated paper currency. Moreover, as these particular quotations are made with especial reference to the use of Federal power to maintain the authority of the United States and suppress interference with interstate commerce and the transmission of the mails, it is pertinent that Lincoln sent over a million United States troops into certain States, without the consent of those States, to re-establish the authority of the United States Government over them.

He has quoted from Blaine and Sherman on the silver question, and has suppressed the fact that the very speeches from which he quoted contained convincing proof that free coinage would put the country on the single silver basis. The attempt is to create the impression that these statesmen once favored free coinage, which is the exact opposite of the truth.

But the climax of this shallow assertion was reached in Mr Bryan's Brooklyn speech, when he made the assertion with language that permitted him to dodge, if confronted with proof to the contrary, that if Henry Ward Beecher were alive he would have championed the silver cause. The fact is, that Beecher was alive when the silver movement was only one-sixth as flagrant an effort for partial repudiation as at present, and all his sympathies and efforts were on the side of sound money."

BRYAN AND BEECHER.

The particular crime of which Mr. Bryan stands guilty in Brooklyn is typical of the man and is an index to his character and his methods. He said in his Brooklyn speech delivered September 23d, in speaking of Henry Ward Beecher:

"I only wish that this distinguished divine whose name has added to the great fame of your great city were with us to-night that he might again champion the cause of the people in their great fight of to-day."

Doubtless many admirers of Mr. Beecher who are ignorant as to what that gentleman's financial views might have been, were impressed with these apparently sincere utterances. Unfortunately for Mr. Bryan two days later there appeared another speaker in Brooklyn who had some knowledge of Mr. Beecher's financial views, and quoted from a famous sermon delivered by that gentleman on Thanksgiving Day, 1877, which pointed out the perils of fiat money and unlimited paper currency. What Mr Beecher then had to say is worth reading if anyone is curious to know what his attitude would be to-day were he alive:

"Whenever in any nation there is such an attempt to tamper with standards that the moral sense of man is bewildered and liberty is given to unprincipled men at large to cheat, to be unfaithful to obligations, to refuse the payment of honest debts—whenever that takes place it is all the worse if done with the permission of the law! I hate the devil riding on a law worse than I do the devil riding without a law under him. Whoever tampers with established standards tampers with the very marrow and vitality of public faith. * * * The danger into which we are running is hidden under the mystery of finance and the currency. All money is but a representative of property. As now, by facility of intercourse, all the world is one open market, the need of one and the same standard of money, uniform, universal and unalterable becomes imperious! Gold is the world's standard. Gold is the universal measure of value. Other kinds of money there are—silver, copper, paper—but they all must conform to gold and be measured by it, and be interchangeable with it, in fixed and definite proportions. Gold is king in commerce. All other money must represent gold. No vote of Legislature can change the nature of commerce, the nature of property, the nature of its representative in money, or the relative superiority or inferiority of different currencies. Gold came to its supremacy as a representative of property by the long-established consent of mankind. Congress cannot change it for the world, nor even for this nation, except upon past transactions. It may give impunity to men to cheat confiding creditors, but it cannot rule the value of currency in all future transactions. The crime of paying a debt in a currency inferior in value to that in which it was contracted, base at all times and anywhere, has a deeper guilt and a baser infamy in our case. When in our mortal struggle capitalists were solicited to lend their money, to us on the faith of the nation, we were too glad, most grateful for their aid. Then they were not grasping and swollen usurers. Oh, no; they were benefactors! We rejoiced in their bounty and gave thanks for their confiding faith in our national honesty. Now, our dangers past, we revile them, finding no epithets too violent, and strive to pay them, not gold for the gold they lent our misery, but in a dishonest measure of an inferior metal. In the court of the comercial world's conscience we shall be convicted of endeavoring to cheat the men who came to our rescue in the dark day. This Congress would not have existed, nor any Government of the United States, but for the strength given to our armies by foreign capitalists; and now to return their aid by a base treachery is to deserve an infamy as deep as the lowest depths of hell. But woe to those men, bull-headed, without eyes, who are attempting to undermine the integrity and simplicity of the nation."

PROPOSED LABOR LAWS.

Labor Commissioner Fitzgerald has proved one of the few official successes of the Budd administration. He has put life, purpose and energy into the position, and made it what it never has been before—of real value to the laboring men of this State. His organization of a free employment bureau perceptibly decreased the pressure of the unemployed in this city, and his policy has been such as to make his bureau a more popular institution than it has been since its establishment. But Mr. Fitzgerald, we regret to say, is a Socialist. He has a notion that it is the Government's business to regulate all sorts and conditions of things and of men. If the State has a police regulation and has the means of overcoming the evils now existing and sees fit to establish an employment bureau, Mr. Fitzgerald would have it extend its activities in many different directions, interfering with the rights of individuals and setting at naught the value of the contract between employer and employe. He has presented to Governor Budd a budget of bills which he proposes to have introduced at the next legislature. "For the purpose," he says, "of regulating and abolishing many of the evils to which labor has been subjected in the past." There are eighteen of these bills, and all of them are based upon the theory that the State should stand over the employer like some giant with a club, dictating, directing and terrorizing him into obeying the regulations of the State placed upon his business. The individual is the naughty child; the State is the all-wise parent—this is the theory of paternal Government, upon which such labor agitations as Mr. Fitzgerald advocates are based. He would, in this country of freedom, establish a system of State control, a regulation which obtains in Germany, where the Emperor is determined that men shall hold themselves not as independent individuals, but as dependents, dependent upon the great organism the state, at the head of which is the Emperor. From this idea follow State insurance companies, pensions for aged or injured workingmen—an intricate system, from which State ownership must ultimately follow.

We have too many laws upon our statute books now. Our trouble is not lack of legislation, but a superabundance of it. It would be better for this State if the Legislature met but once in four years instead of every two years. It was never intended or expected by the founders of this Government that the State could become the power it is to-day, that our Federal Government, for instance, would be expending over half a billion dollars every year.

The first of Mr. Fitzgerald's bills takes from any municipal corporation in the State the right to command the labor of its employes for more than eight hours in a day. The second bill provides that whenever a labor commissioner may deem it necessary he shall have constructed an impermeable floor of cement in every room used for the manufacture of bread, and that the walls and ceilings shall be whitewashed every three months. The third bill makes it unlawful for any board or commission of the State, or Board of Supervisors, or City Council to award a contract for the performance of public work to any person or corporation who shall have standing against him any unsatisfied judgment for wages due for labor performed. Then Mr. Fitzgerald has a bill providing for the extension of his labor bureau system throughout the various cities of the State.

Number seven is entitled "An Act Fixing the Minimum Rate of Compensation for Labor on Public Work," and that rate is two dollars per day. Another act provides that ten hours' labor shall constitute a day for any person working in a bakery. "An Act to Enforce the Prompt Payment of the Wages of Laborers in Lawful Money of the United States of America," is one which should receive the serious consideration of laboring men touched with the fiat money heresy. It shall be unlawful under this act "for any person, corporation or firm engaged in manufacturing, mining, operating or constructing railroads, or in any other business or enterprise of whatsoever kind in this State, to issue, pay out, or circulate for payment of wages, any order, check, memorandum, token or evidence of indebtedness, unless the same is negotiable and redeemable at its face value, without discount, in cash on demand, at the store or other place of business of such firm, person or corporation where the same was issued; and any such person, corporation or firm which may hereafter issue any such order, check, memorandum, token or other evidence of indebtedness, shall, upon the presentation thereof and demand, redeem the same in lawful money of the United States." This act is intended to strike at what is known as the check system, where employes are paid in labor checks which are good for merchandise at company stores. But if the laboring man who advocates this measure will apply its principles to the money question as it is now agitated, he will find that they are themselves now advocating a currency system which is as dishonest and as full of danger to their interests as the labor check scheme. Another bill provides for the "Remission of Costs in Justices' Courts in Actions to Recover for Personal Services."

Number ten is entitled "An Act to Provide for the Branding of All Articles Manufactured in Prisons," presumably so that laborers on the outside may establish an effectual boycott against the goods made by the State. And the people are asked to make a law providing that every employer shall designate a period of time during each week day for a lunch hour for employes, which shall not be less than forty-five minutes for each meal. And so on through the list. Some of the bills if put into law and enforced might work a benefit to some class or branch of the community. All are based upon the theory that it is the business of the State to regulate the actions of individuals. This is nothing but socialism. We can pass from the bakers to the harnessmakers, and from the harnessmakers to the doctors, and from the doctors to the lawyers; there is no kind of industry which is not susceptible of regulation by the State, possibly with some benefit to the employes or to the community immediately; but it should be clearly understood by those advocating the passage of such measures by the Legislature, that they would commit us to a policy which is anti-American and undemocratic.

SPAIN'S EMBARRASSMENT.

It is with satisfaction that Americans view Spain's present embarrassment, both at home and abroad. The good promise is that Cuba will be free, for both in men and money Spain is poorer to-day than ever in the long centuries of history since she fell away from the Roman Empire. Having sent her young men to die in Cuba from the fever or by the machettes of the Cuban patriots, until the productiveness of the home country has been reduced nearly one-half; having borrowed in large sums from every banker in Europe who would make a loan to them, until now she has been refused further credit; having cut off all revenue from her greatest colony, and estranged the Christian world by her barbarous method of conducting warfare; Spain finds herself, at the close of the nineteenth century, poorer in lands, in resources, in capital and in power, than she has been since the daring Columbus put foot on America four centuries ago. Four centuries of stupidity have reduced her to what she is. Her bourbon masters will not learn, and the prospect is that all her colonies will fall from her, and she will continue to grow smaller and smaller, in territory in wealth and in consequence, until she becomes taken by France, as Napoleon proposed, or is divided among the nations of Europe as one of the prizes of war. Internally she is in a wretched state; a cabinet crisis is threatened at any time, and the feeling of hatred toward the Government, especially among the common people, is intense. In her one great colony, the only one left out of all these two great continents which were hers by right of discovery, the people have been in open revolution for two years; and while no revolutionary seat of government has been established, and no recognition of the revolutionary movement has been given by foreign nations, Spain is no nearer conquering to-day than she was thirty days after the revolution broke out. She has sent her ablest generals, most bloody and ferocious officers, her bravest soldiers, warships of the most improved pattern, money, supplies, ammunition, and has had the moral support of all the monarchies of the earth; and yet she has been unable to starve out or kill off what General Weyler has termed a handful of miscreants. And now there has broken out in her other colony, the Phillipine Islands, an insurrection which threatens the loss of that colony. These islands number something over four hundred, and lie in a northerly direction from Formosa. The natives, chiefly Malays, raise tobacco and sugar, out of which the Government obtains a revenue of eleven million dollars annually. This insurrection was organized, and is being carried on, under the cover of a secret society, and its only purpose is to overthrow the oppressive, selfish and one-sided rule of bourbon Spain.

THE SILVER SIREN.

One of the most remarkable features of the silver movement is the almost irresistible force with which it attracts the neophite in finance into its fold. The hypnotic suggestion as illustrated in the cartoons of the day carry more of truth, possibly, than is intended by their designers. Given twenty intelligent men, not students or experts in finance, who have neither discussed nor read the financial issues of this campaign, and state to them the contentions of the silver advocate, and they will to a man agree that free coinage should be adopted by all means. Furnish them with silver literature exclusively, and they will develop into radical adherents to that cause. But at this point in the process of education give to these same men arguments controverting the position of the silver advocate and pointing out the dangers and fallacies of free coinage, and one by one they will forsake Bryanism and come over to the other side never to return. Mark you! never to return! On every side we hear of converts to the financial policy advocated by Mr. McKinley, but since the discussion of the silver question began you have never heard of an intelligent advocate of sound money being converted to the heresies of free silver. The free silver doctrine is at first almost irresistable, but the wayfarer soon learns that like the songs of the sirens of mythology, it would lure him on to certain destruction.

United States Minister Baker makes a strong point against free silver in a recent message of his to the Secretary of State. He says that some five years ago a citizen of the United States, an invalid soldier who had a short time before secured back pensions amounting to some $4,000 in United States money, came to Mexico for the benefit of his health. At the time of his arrival gold commanded a premium in that country of about 35 per cent. After concluding to remain there, he arranged with a banking institution to deposit a sufficient amount of his gold to net him $4,000 in the currency of that country, the basis of which is silver. His certificate of deposit for $4,000 had cost him a little less than $3,800 and brought him 8 per cent. interest. Presently the premium on gold advanced to a point where it was worth nearly double as much as silver, making his deposit but a trifle over half its face value. The bank notified him that it could no longer pay interest to depositors. The old soldier called upon the American consul for advice, and he suggested that he leave the money for safe keeping, and trust to the operations of commerce to bring more favorable conditions. A year later the old soldier drew his $4,000 in silver with which he was able to purchase $1,731 in gold. The American who has any idea of voting for Mr. Bryan and his free silver heresies should study this little transaction, and decide for himself whether or not he wants to put this country on the same uncertain basis, with a standard changing in value from day to day, and the constant necessity of paying insurance on every transaction to cover the depreciation that may take place even while the money is changing hands.

General Fitzhugh Lee, now Consul General at Havana, is in favor of sound money, and there have been some rumors that he wanted to come home to Virginia during the hot season in Cuba. It is expected he will be a candidate for Governor of his native State next year.

Cigars are given to soldiers in the Italian army as part of their daily rations.

PROFESSOR McEWEN AT THE COOPER MEDICAL COLLEGE

Dr. Hirshfelder Dr. Barkan
Dr. Levi P. Lane Prof. McEwen Dr. Stillman

CHIEF AMONG BRAIN SURGEONS

The Personality of Professor McEwen, who is Lecturing at Cooper Medical College.

An impression prevalent among people who have acquired notions of the medical profession by paying the bills of foreign doctors, is that great surgeons occur only in Paris and Berlin. Some of them have heard of Sir Morrell Mackenzie, who got into the papers by virtue of the ear of the late Emperor of Germany, but that he practiced in London is explained as a happy accident, which, by the laws of the game, should have happened in Germany. It would be hard to persuade the patients of certain of our local great men whose dicta are delivered in Teutonic or Gallic dialect, that out of England, Scotland or Ireland ever came aught of surgical importance. That there are colleges and hospitals in Great Britain is true, they admit, but imply that clever Britishers invariably gather their knowledge on the Continent. Such statements, compounded of ignorance and impudence, are charactersitic of the class which these savants represent. They become worthy of contradiction only because repeated so often and so emphatically.

In San Francisco, at the moment, we are entertaining Professor McEwen of Glasgow. As he practices in Scotland rather than in London or Berlin, he has not been called upon to attend either the Czar of Russia or the King of Italy. In consequence of this neglect the correspondents have failed to herald his name and fame as the greatest brain specialist in Europe. Yet that is his rank. He is really an important and conspicuous man, not a mere fashionable physician, as Sir Morrell Mackenzie was, but an able and brilliant surgeon, who has told the world more of nerve centers than any of his predecessors or contemporaries. Indeed, it is said on good testimony, that his book, "Pyogenic Diseases of the Brain and Spinal Cord," is not only the authority on the subject, but is ten years in advance of the times. Next to Sir Joseph Lister, Professor McEwen figures as the greatest surgeon in the United Kingdom, and he is in San Francisco on the invitation of Dr. Lane of the Cooper Medical College, delivering a course of lectures on his specialty. It is certainly a privilege, this opportunity of hearing so eminent a man, whose career has certainly attracted the attention and admiration of his profession.

Dr. McEwen is a Glasgow man, self-made, the creation of a fine brain and unflagging application. The position he holds in the scientific world he conquered by sheer force of intrinsic ability. He boasts neither aristocratic connection nor a newspaper claque. In his specialty he has only one rival—Victor Horsley of London—but in original research, diagnostic and surgical skill he is facile princeps. Indeed, he has made Glasgow headquarters for brain energy the world over. Though the fame of Dr. McEwen is most conspicuously associated with the surgery of the brain, in which he is virtually the pioneer, he has won triumphs in other branches of practice. McEwen's operations for hernia and for knock-knees, and his recent treatment of aneurism of the aorta would in themselves have sufficed to win him name and fame. His most notable work has been done in localizing the nerve and motive centers of the brain and the cerebral cortex. His atlas of the brain is the best medical science possesses, and he was the first to operate successfully for brain tumor. He is but fifty years old, and in the prime of life, and we may presume he will yet achieve discoveries sufficiently sensational to be noticed by those popular educators, the Sunday newspapers.

The series of lectures which Professor McEwen delivered at Cooper Medical College were notable as being the simplest exposition of an intricate subject the writer has ever heard. It requires profound knowledge to be lucid in describing the brain, but the Professor is a born teacher and made himself thoroughly comprehensible. His manner of address is marked by a perfect assurance, and there are occasional lapses into quiet sarcasm which contribute to keep the attention of his assistants who are aiding in the demonstration on the qui vive. In comparison with his younger days the Professor is mild in his criticism. He was once notable among his students for the merciless reproof he dealt out to blunderers. Then dark and swarthy, he looked like a storm cloud when angry. Now, his hair has grown gray and his disposition milder, though he cannot repress a tendency to ironic comment. This cropped out many times, the most conspicuous instance being at the first lecture, when Dr. Lane, who presided, announced:

"Operations for students are now in order."

Considering the audience was half composed of physicians who desired especially to see the great surgeon operate this was embarrassing, but Professor McEwen stepped forward and remarked in his dry way:

"That means for the doctors who are here, too, for we are all students."

During his stay in San Francisco Dr. McEwen has been called into consultation in several interesting cases, and, besides, has had quite a number of patients. He has also performed several operations, with what degree of success remains to be seen. As an operator he is finicky to a degree, but also bold and supremely skillful. Doubtless it is to this finickiness that he owes his success, for brain surgery demands extreme delicacy; the mere tremor of the lancet may mean death or madness. He discounts chance, however, and each cut is as full of purpose and interest as his phrases. Another experience Dr. McEwen has had here—he has been photographed. It is said there is not a picture of him in Glasgow, as he has an intense antipathy to the camera. In the accompanying picture he is surrounded by certain members of the faculty of Cooper Medical College, of which Dr. Lane is both founder and president. This institution, now firmly established, is one of the leading colleges of America. Its degrees and those of the University of California are now recognized through the States and on the Continent as indexing a real proficiency. Next year Professor Christopher Heath, ex-president of the Royal College of Surgeons, has been retained to deliver a series of lectures on surgry—which promises another important incident in the history of the Cooper College.

It is curious, says the "Saturday Review," how language is apt to fail upon a sudden emergency or at a supreme moment. Jackson comes up with a black and greasy stranger upon an ice floe in the Polar region, whom he takes to be Nansen, and all he can find to say is, "I'm awfully glad to see you," to which the blood-besmeared and smoke-begrimed man replies, "So am I to see you." After looking steadily into the strange face, Jackson continues: "Aren't you Nansen?" "Yes, I am Nansen." "By Jove!" said Jackson. "I'm awfully glad to see you."

"Thank you very much," said Nansen, "very kind of you." The two men might have been meeting at Hyde Park corner instead of on the pack-ice to the southeast of Cape Flora—and yet what else was there to be said?

Heine relates how he managed to get an interview with Goethe. The young poet felt that the supreme hour of his life had arrived, and yet they only talked about the plums that grew around Heidelberg.

Arctic voyages appear to be better organized under the auspices of Mr. Harmsworth than they used to by the Admiralty. Sir John Franklin and his friends fed on rotten deer-bones, shoe leather and moss. When Nansen and his companions arrived at Elmwood they had hot baths, had their hair cut and were shaved by the photographer, and dined on roast lamb, green peas, vegetables, jam tart, cheese and preserved fruits, "all washed down by port, sherry and whisky."

Miss Mona Sheldon of Friendship, N. J., has started a frog farm upon a twenty-acre patch of swamp. Her frogs are, of course, of the edible variety, whose hind legs are beloved of the gourmet, and they find, in cosmopolitan America, a ready sale. Indeed, Miss Sheldon is said to make a clear $2,500 a year out of her reptilian stock-in-trade.

The oldest love letter in the world is in the British Museum. It is a proposal of marriage for the hand of an Egyptian princess, and it was made 3,500 years ago. It is in the form of an inscribed brick, and is, therefore, not only the oldest but the most substantial love letter in existence.

No kissing ever occurs in Japan except between husband and wife, not even between a mother and child; no shaking of hands in salutation. If one were to offer a kiss to a Japanese maiden she would probably think she were going to be bitten.

THE MAKING OF A CAMPAIGN

How State Central Committees are Organized and Voters Educated.

The two principal foci around which revolve all the various interests of a campaign are the two committees known as the State Committee and the Executive Committee.

The very first step in the work of the campaign is the formation of the State Committee, and in California this is done by the State convention, which elects one member from each assembly district in the State. The Executive Committee is not chosen by vote, but is appointed by the chairman of the State convention. In gubernatorial years, however—that is to say, in those years wherein a Governor is elected—the power of appointing this committee is withdrawn from the chairman of the State convention and is vested in the party's candidate for Governor. This committee consists generally of twenty-one members. The two committees at once begin their work. Headquarters are chosen, and fitted up with offices, anterooms and lobbies; clerks, stenographers and typewriters are engaged, sub-committees appointed, street demonstrations are organized and papers subsidized; a world of conflicting interests at once springs into prominence to absorb the committee's attention.

The real labor of organizing and furthering the campaign rests upon the shoulders of the members of the Executive Committee, assisted by the officers of the State Committee. The principal sub-committees appointed are three in number, one on finance, one on campaign and one on campaign literature. The most important of these sub-committees, and perhaps the most important and influential body of the whole campaign, is the Campaign Committee. This is made up from five or six—sometimes seven—of the most active and prominent members of the Executive Committee, and in its number are usually included the chairman and secretary of the Executive Committee. The first and one of the most absorbing duties of the body is the registration of its voters; the party workers all over the State are strictly enjoined to drum up every voter in the district over which they have control, and see that he properly inscribes his name upon the registration rolls.

The writing, publication and distribution of political posters, tracts and essays bearing upon the issues of the campaign is taken charge of by the sub-committee of literature. Much of the matter is furnished by the National Congressional Committee. But by far the largest percentage of this literature is of local origin. The committee engages the services of some clever writer, who becomes the literary editor of the campaign. He acts under the direction and supervision of the officers and party chiefs, taking their ideas and putting them into concise and readable form. Once these documents are prepared they are distributed in various ways. Some are sent through the county committeemen, others through the State Central Committeemen, others again through the precinct distributors, whose duty it is to see that every voter in all the precincts receives the documents; and lastly, others are sent through the mail to every voter throughout the State.

The next most important work is that of campaign speakers. These form a veritable army, and at the opening of the campaign besiege the State Central officers to place themselves at the disposal of the party leaders. It devolves upon the committee to select the most able and persuasive of this multitude, to give them instructions and to lay out for them a route throughout the State over which they are to travel, delivering speeches in all the more important towns—or for the matter of that, in every town that registers more than fifty voters. It is in this matter of laying out the routes and stations of the party speakers that the committee must exercise the greatest possible care and discrimination. It must look to it that every county gets the speaker it wants, that every speaker gets the exact place to which he is sent, and that no two speakers are ever billed to speak in the same town at the same time.

The Finance Committee looks after and provides for the funds necessary to carry on the campaign. These funds are raised from two sources—subscriptions by citizens and contributions of office-holders. Each county is supposed to take care of its own expenses, so that the contributions of the first two classes are spent in the distribution of literature, the payment of speakers, hotel bills and traveling expenses, etc., etc. In this State the contributions on the part of office-holders are purely voluntary, but since the new civil service rules have been enforced the amount raised in this fashion has dwindled considerably. The citizens of the State are generally solicited to contribute funds by a committee of business men acting for the Executive Committee.

Meanwhile similar committees and sub-commitees are striving in the vortex of the campaign in every State in the Union. The great national leaders, who hold the strings and work the springs are no less busy; the country is in a ferment from ocean to ocean. The stir of the moment is felt from the White House to the Consul Hall. The newspaper cartoonist is in clover. The great work goes on. Somehow the candidate is chosen. There is rhetoric and base drums and fireworks, and the voice of the people is the voice of God.

The French government does not grant pensions to its vivandieres, one of them being forced in her extreme old age to make a scanty living by selling flowers. Another, Madame Louise de Beaulieu, sells toys on the boulevard, but has nevertheless the cross of the Legion of Honor, the military medal, and eight medals granted for saving other lives at the risk of her own. Probably the oldest of the vivandieres was Madame Ibrahim, who died recently at Vichy, and was buried with full military honors. She was seventy-two years old, had served as vivandiere in the Crimea, where she lost her husband and son, in the Italian campaign, in the Franco-Prussian war, and in Tonquin. In each of the last three campaigns she was seriously wounded. She stayed with the army until four years ago. She, too, wore the cross of the Legion of Honor.

THE ROSE OF ALL THE WORLD.

Rose of all Roses, Rose of all the World,
The tall thought-woven sails that flap unfurled,
Above the tide of hours, rise on the air,
And God's bell buoyed to be the waters' care,
And pressing on or lingering slow with fear,
The throngs with blown wet hair are gathering near.
"Turn if ye may," I call out to each one,
"From the gray ships and battles never won.
Danger no refuge holds, and war no peace,
For him who hears Love sing and never cease
Beside her clean-swept hearth, her quiet shade;
But gather all for whom no love hath made
A woven silence, or but came to cast
A son into the air, and singing past
To smile upon her stars: and gather you,
Who have sought more than is in rain or dew,
Or in the sun or moon, or on the earth,
Or sighs amid the wandering, starry mirth,
Or comes in laughter from the sea's sad lips,
And wage God's battles in the long gray ships.
The sad, the lonely, the insatiable,
To these Old Night shall all her mystery tell,
God's bell has claimed them by the little cry
Of their sad hearts that may not live or die."

Rose of all Roses, Rose of all the World,
You, too, have come where the dim tides are hurled
Upon the wharves of sorrow, and heard ring
The bell that calls us on—the sweet far thing.
Beauty grown sad with its eternity,
Made you of us and of the dim gray sea.
Our long ships loose thought-woven sails and wait,
For God has bid them share an equal fate;
And when at last defeated in His wars,
They have gone down under the same white stars,
We shall no longer hear the little cry
Of our sad hearts that may not live nor die.

—W. B. Yeats.

Between the mountains of India and Persia is a powerful tribe, among whom an extraordinary custom prevails. Women's rights apparently have received full recognition, for the ladies of the tribe can choose their own husbands. All a single woman has to do when she wishes to change her state is to send a servant to pin a handkerchief to the hat of the man on whom her fancy lights, and he is obliged to marry her, unless he can show he is too poor to purchase her at the price her father requires.

Two masked railroad robbers got into the pay compartment of the Paris and Toulouse express the other day, held the paymaster at bay with revolvers, helped themselves to $8,000 in cash and jumped off the train while it was in motion. One was found badly hurt on the track, and the other was arrested as he was leaving a later train.

REPUBLICAN HEADQUARTERS

Chairman Major McLaughlin in the center, with his chief aids, Secretaries M. R. Higgins and Jake Steppacher

DEMOCRATIC HEADQUARTERS

Chairman Alford surrounded by his advisers, Gavin McNaab, Wm. J. McGee, Secretary McCabe and M. F. Tarpey

From Flashlight Photographs, by B. C. Towne

THINGS AND PEOPLE

Literary talent crops out in unexpected places. The latest candidate for typographical honors is no other than Charles Rollo Peters, the well known artist, who has just finished a book of Latin Quarter sketches which the Harpers have accepted. Several moons ago, when Peters was in London, he was at a Savage Club dinner. Stories were in order with the coffee and the artists' yarns were the success of the evening. They were capital episodes, and were given with much effect. Indeed, the auditors declared them ahead of Chambers' work in the "King in Yellow." Among the listeners was young Mr. Harper, of Harper & Brothers, who obtained an introduction to the raconteur, and assured him if he could write out the tales so they would read half as well as they sounded, his firm would be glad of a chance to publish them. Peters promised to try, but he postponed dabbling in the new medium until he got to Monterey. There are long evenings in that region with little to do, and after painting all day Peters took to the pen at night. He has worked in an impressionist way, and has accomplished some excellent sketches with catchy captions, which were at ance accepted by the Harpers, who will publish the volume next year. This success has emboldened the artist, and he is at work on a second series of yarns. Considering his old-time skill at yarn-spinning in the palmy days of the Roseleaf Club, this departure of Peters' is not so astonishing. He has a repertoire of capital stories, many of them of Bohemian days in San Francisco, and if he gets into circulation there will be no lack of material for several other series.

MISS SADIE HECHT
Who was married to Mr. William Gerstle last Tuesday
Photo by Taber

***

It seems the Press Club is determined the community shall help to pay its expenses. It is now out with an advertising souvenir scheme by which it nopes to net money enough to pay some of its bills. If there are any reasons why the community should pay the Press Club's expenses I fail to recognize them. In the hands of an unscrupulous set of solicitors this scheme presents innumerable opportunities for blackmail, and one can readily foresee the character of arguments which will be advanced to persuade trades people to purchase space in it. As a business proposition the project has no attractions, and those who advertised would do so under the impression of obtaining press favors to which they are not entitled. The institution should have more self-respect than thus to go out collecting. Why, if its debts are pressing, does it not resort to an assessment of its members? That is more legitimate than assessing the public.

***

So the Pacific-Union has definitely decided to go uptown. If the Crocker lot is not chosen a site near by will be selected. It seems there has entered the lists another owner who offers the club a property of equal dimensions situated on a corner of the avenue and Bush street. As his price is considerably below that of the Crocker property, being but $85,000, as against $135,000, it is not impossible the structure may have a different location to that originally selected. To Van Ness it goes, however, and in the meantime there is the necessity of raising the requisite coin. A committee has this task in hand, and if Mr. Spreckels will come to time, as is anticipated, the P.-U. will be out of its present quarters a twelvemonth hence. In the course of time the Bohemian will be the only down-town club, and will not, on that account, I think, lose any of its popularity.

***

There has been a tremendous falling off of late in the consumption of champagne. Certain club men whose rule it was to drink nothing else have quit the wine, and will henceforth confine themselves to the more subtle pleasures of Bordeaux vintages. No longer is the champagne cocktail the current afternoon pick-me-up. Indeed, I witnessed a strange spectacle in a club bay window recently. It was a certain well-known member of the smart set, who was actually imbibing Napa Soda lemonade through a straw. The latest drinks are light and airy and safe. This proscription of champagne will undoubtedly cause a decline in club revenues. At the Pacific-Union the consumption amounted to thousands of cases per annum, and up at the 'Varsity the demand was steady and remunerative. However, economy is much more the rule among the gilded than ever before, and there has been a general taking in of sail even amid the younger set.

***

No one can blame a clever artist for shaking the dust of San Francisco from his feet. It is a poor livelihood the town has for him. There is no market for the canvases of our best men, who, for the most part, are compelled to make a living teaching rather than painting. That section of the community which has money enough to buy pictures prefers the work of foreign celebrities. This is an unfortunate condition, but cannot be gainsaid. It is not an artistic community, and wont be for a generation or more. Nor is it a community with any tendency to local patriotism. That is why so many clever people despairing of success here go elsewhere and win honors. The last to say farewell is Ernest Peixotto, who has finally decided to settle in New York. Such excellent inducements were offered him by the Harpers that he succumbed to their temptation, though preferring San Francisco as a place of residence. Peixotto attracted the attention of the magazines by some capital drawings he did for Scribner's illustrating an article descriptive of the Boston Public Library. The editor was surprised at the quality of the work, which he graciously compared with Pennel's, and wanted Peixotto to accept other engagements. Subsequently he received flattering offers from Harpers, but has declined them until recently. During his stay in San Francisco Mr. Peixotto has painted some portraits, and has recently made a series of charming illustrations for "Tales of Languedoc," a book which Mr. William Doxey is shortly to publish. There are some very delicate and graceful compositions among these, and they will certainly go far towards establishing the reputation of Mr. Peixotto in the East. A series of his drawings are now on exhibition at Vickery's, and have attracted there a good deal of attention.

***

The speech which Colonel H. I. Kowalsky delivered at the Auditorium recently, has had a signal honor done it. It has been converted into a campaign document. The State Central Committee is distributing it and making votes with it. Though I feel called on to question its potency in the latter capacity, there is no denying that it will make laughter. The speech was not great, as Sam Shortridge's are. It was really a series of extremely clever stories, told in inimitable style, bearing each on some weak point of the enemy's platform. There were statistics and arguments between, but the stories won the audience. As a raconteur the Colonel is a master, and on this occasion he ran through a gamut of dialects, from Hebraic to Hibernian, including Dago, Celestial, Dutch and French.

***

It is good to know that the judicial nominations offered by the several conventions are far above the average. Already the election of Judge Hebbard is conceded by those opponents whose foolish and futile tactics to prevent his nomination have surely earned him the vote of the city. The Democrats have on their ticket at least two excellent men — Rhodes Borden and Judge Sanderson — of whose ability and fitness for the ermine there can be no question. The latter has proved his capacity, and in the years of his administration has won the respect and admiration both of his colleagues and of the bar. Mr. Borden has a judicial mind; for four years past he has handled the legal affairs of the City and County Attorney's office, is an excellent lawyer, and is peculiarly fitted for a bench which is so often called on to decide those complications which the infinite interests and relationship of the city inevitably provoke. He is a connection of Judge Garber, and is a man of similar rectitude of character and purpose. The Non-Partisan convention endorsed the candidacies of Hebbard, Hunt, Finn and Borden — the latter after a bitter fight with Mr. Dunne, who has the "Examiner" and innumerable Native Sons behind him. Judge Hunt has so many friends that his defeat seems impossible. His only danger is from his own party, whose unfortunate internecine warfare imperils the success of its nominees. C. K. Bonestell is also a man whom it would be safe to elect, being a competent and highly educated lawyer, and a citizen of probity and character. Mr. Murasky is a clever young man, who recently declared himself a believer in the doctrines of socialism. Mr. Leggett is honest and able; ex-Judge Ferrall is a competent lawyer and a brilliant advocate, who suffers because of his connection with Buckley. Judge Finn's administration was a safe and honorable one. However the degrees of ability and fitness vary, there is nothing to be said against the characters of any of these gentlemen.

MISS JENNIE CATHERWOOD
Who was married to Dr. Grinnell at the Presidio on Monday last
Photo by Marceau

***

Nowadays one talks politics or nothing, so it is unnecessary to apologize for dwelling on the subject. The only stories in circulation are political; the current jokes are the epigrams of campaign notions, the moving topic the progress of the mayoralty fight, and the strained relations between Major McLaughlin and the Sound Money Republicans, and between Colonel Alford of the regular machine and the silver and gold Democrats, who are arrayed in opposition to his eminence. There are bickerings innumerable, fine exchanges of repartee, but in the latter contest the advantage is not with the chairman of the State Central Committee, for his rivals have money and he not a cent. The story goes that Charles R. Lane, who is the financial factor of the silver campaign here, has by pure force of eloquence, prevailed on the laborers in the Utica gold mine, of which he and Alvinza Hayward own two-thirds, to yield up to his committee, two days' pay each. It is possible other mine owners have followed this illustrious example. In consequence the

MISS MABEL WENTWORTH
A PHOTOGRAPHIC STUDY BY MARCEAU

State is being flooded with white metal literature of a lusty character, to which the Republicans are administering anecdotes in the form of gold pamphlets in which the anomalies and the contradictions of the silver situation are relentlessly exposed.

***

Among the amusing episodes of the campaign is the story of J. D. Mitchell's assault on Santa Rosa. He is a Los Angeles spell-binder, noted for laborious periods and unique staying powers, and he would reform the world with free silver. This is one of the men who can show you facts and figures to prove the ills and ailments of humanity, the depression of business, the fall of prices proceed from the demonetization of silver, and he promises with gestures and affirmations prosperity and wealth, joy and happiness, if the country but elects Bryan. Unfortunately, the impression which Mitchell conceives of his own eloquence is not shared by those who have sat under his periods. The story goes that Santa Rosa had demanded campaign oratory, and the State Central Committee billed the town with promises of an eloquent speaker. The placards were lavish of adjective, but mentioned no name, and created so much expectation that the local committee demanded that the identity of this brilliant genius be revealed at once. Imagine the outcry on learning it was the Southern Whitemetalist who was to conjure for them. Though the Sonoma County Democracy is seamed with political hatreds, it united at once in opposition to Mr. Mitchell. The leaders telegraphed they would not have him; they tore down the placards and made other demonstrations which were delicately communicated to the Los Angeles spellbinder. Being a person of strong convictions and slight sensitiveness, he laughed their objections to scorn, saying he'd be blowed if any country politicians could pull him down off a platform he desired to mount. So at his own risk he embarked for Santa Rosa, announcing his advent with a new set of bulletins, promising a real oration on 16 to 1 that same evening. He arrived, but, alas, the enemy had forestalled him. Tom Geary hired the hall and went out of town with the key in his pocket, and Mitchell wandered around disconsolate, with no place to air his voice. It often happens that such an episode, which sets people laughing in common, has an effect entirely out of proportion to its cause. Who knows but that the Santa Rosans, having for once found a subject of harmony, won't try to discover the secret of living together in peace!

***

An open air horse show is decidedly an innovation, yet that is no reason why the exhibition which is being arranged by the Burlingame Club for Saturday, the 17th inst., should not be a great success. Entries are invited in twenty-three classes, comprising all sorts and conditions of roadsters, stallions, hackneys, horses in harness and out of harness, four-in-hands and tandems with pole ponies fetching up the rear. Every one in the environment is invited to participate. It is promised that horses from Oakland and San Rafael will be shipped to the grounds free of charge; a table d'hote luncheon will be served at the club house; no entrance fee to the exhibition will be exacted; the judging has been entrusted to able hands, and altogether a very interesting day is promised. The directors have assurances of a number of entries. Walter Hobart, Jack Parrott, the Donahoes, Joe Grant, George Newhall and the Baldwins, together with the members of the Pony and Steeplechase Association will all participate, and there will be riding and driving enough to attract and entertain a large audience, even if it is not specifically interested in fine points or correct equipment.

COMMUNICATION.

October 5, 1896.

To the Editor of "The Wave":

Dear Sir — As I do not think that you would willingly wish to do me a grave injustice, and my work an injury, I ask that this letter may be inserted in your valuable paper, to ward against a grave misapprehension of my life and work which might very naturally be gained concerning me from the article entitled "Convicts versus Children." It is absolutely erroneous to surmise that I in any sense desert or neglect my children on account of my work. I hold that a public woman who proves unfaithful or careless in the discharge of the precious duties of motherhood is unfit for her work, and a reproach to her sex. I give my children far more time and attention than the children of a society woman can receive from their mother. I have absolutely no social life, giving all the time that would be consumed by such "duties" to my little ones. Afternoon teas, dinner parties, the receiving and making of calls, theatre-going, balls, etc., take mothers constantly from their children, and then it is for their own amusement, and not for the bettering and helping of others.

It is true I spend some of my time in work that of necessity separates me from them occasionally, but I never do so at their cost. Many a mother has taken a trip to California for mere enjoyment of much longer duration than my present visit, without being accused of deserting her children. I could never find pleasure or rest apart from them, and have not come with any selfish aim, but with a desire to help and bless others. Such a separation as this (five weeks) only occurs every year or two, and then my husband remains with them.

I think that intense mother-love is perfectly consistent with interest and effort for the benefit of the unloved and forsaken of humanity, but it can very probably be little understood by those whose affections are so narrow that they can but love where they will benefit personally, and be loved in return.

Longing as my heart does to-day for a sight of my darling ones in the East, I can but feel deeply pained at being thus misrepresented to the people of California.

Believe me, dear sir, yours very truly,

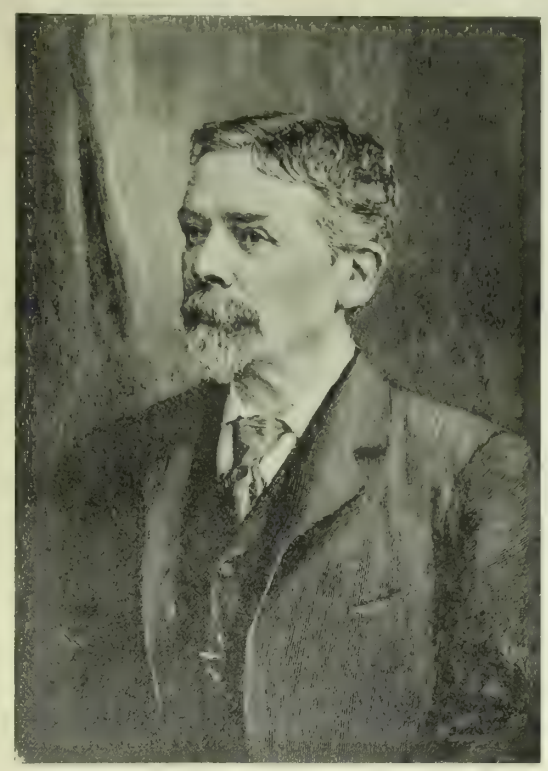
For God and Country,

MAUD B. BOOTH.

Mrs. Rose Hawthorne Lathrop, daughter of Nathaniel Hawthorne, has exiled herself from society, and entered into her chosen work, the care of the poor who are afflicted with cancer.

DU MAURIER'S ART

So Du Maurier is dead. The creator of "Trilby" and "Peter Ibbetson," the most conspicuous of English illustrators, his life has been full of interest and of success. Standing at the top of the ladder in the profession to which he had devoted his life, he achieved greatness, wealth and world-wide prominence in another and most dissimilar line of endeavor. Though it would be daring to claim immortality for his novels, the success of "Trilby" is an interesting incident in literary history. It is safe to believe that if this idyll of the Latin Quarter and its predecessor are ever read by future generations it will be for that indefinable charm of manner and style which are the expression of the personality of their author. It can hardly be claimed that "Trilby" is great literature, however fascinating it has proved for the present generation, but it is full of a sincerity and kindliness and possesses a species of sentimentality rare as it is charming.



GEORGE DU MAURIER
From the engraving by E. Schladitz in Harper's Magazine

As an illustrator Du Maurier has certainly left a mark. He has created a type of woman which passes now the world over as representatively English. She occurs innumerable times in his compositions—a tall, stately creature, whose profile is a modification of Burne Jones' best lines—indeed, a species of aesthetic Philistine with a divine nose, an illumined forehead and a decisive chin. In accordance with her attitude and role, she is stately and fashionable or rouguish and flirtatious, but even when melancholy preys upon her soul she carries her clothes with the air of a goddess.

LORD RUNSWICK AND ANTOINETTE JOSSELIN IN 'THE MARTIANS'

The death of Du Maurier at this time, just as the first chapters of his new novel have been given to the public in "Harpers'" will undoubtedly revive the tremendous interest in him which "Trilby" excited. It is too early in the progress of the tale to announce or discount the characteristics of "The Martians," but the opening pages have all the delightful flavor of his personality. I reproduce from the October "Harpers'" the admirable wood engraving of Du Maurier and the drawing of Antoinette Josselin, the beautiful actress who was the hero, Barty Josselin's, mother. Indeed, one has the impression that into these last drawings the artist put his best work, for they are full of his most characteristic qualities.

ABOUT PERSONAGES

Ada Rehan has left London for New York. It is hinted that she has in mind a volume of reminiscences, but this sort of thing she airily remarks is only for actresses who are old or are about to retire.

The mother of Aubrey Beardsley, the artist, is a gentle, old-fashioned Englishwoman, who lives entirely for her son and his pretty young sister. Mrs. Beardsley regards him with reverential admiration.

The Duke of Cumberland, better known as the Crown Prince of Hanover, and who is de jure sovereign Duke of Brunswick, was born without a nose, and the one he wears now is artificial, the creation of his doctors.

James M. Barrie, the novelist, has arrived in New York from England. He brings with him for Charles Frohman a new play, entitled "Two Kinds of Women"—presumably the nice kind and the naughty—and a dramatization of his best story, "The Little Minister." Mr. Barrie is getting rich. He has orders for more work than he can turn out.

In Buda-Pesth a great sensation has been created by the announcement that the three young daughters of Count Vasquez, all of whom are countesses in their own right, have decided to go on the music hall stage. The young ladies are aged 15, 16 and 17 respectively, and are not yet out of the schoolroom. They have already signed articles for several years' training and performances.

Princess Marie of Greece, second daughter of King George, is engaged to be married to the Grand Duke George Michaelovitch of Russia. An Athens journal announced the other day that the match had been broken off, and the unfortunate editor has been arrested on the charge of insulting the King and his family, an offense for which the penalty is imprisonment with hard labor for a term not exceeding seven years.

King Humbert of Italy had a hunchback brother, Prince Ottto, who died a few years ago, and his father had a brother who was not only imbicile, but was born without legs—a monstrosity, in fact. The present Crown Prince of Italy, who is soon to marry Princess Helene of Montenegro, is not only a dwarf, but also misshapen, the length of his body being altogether out of proportion to his abbreviated legs, while his arms hang down below his knees.

There is no truth whatever in the statement that Sir Everett Millais was offered by a trading company $17,000 for an unfinished work by his father, and hence, of course, he did not refuse it. As a matter of fact, the late president of the Royal Academy left no unfinished work of any description, and his son, Sir Everett Millais, wishes this to be known, as he has been inundated with offers by various magazines to reproduce a picture which is non-existent.

Probably the most fastidious woman in Europe about her stockings is the Princess of Wales. She generally chooses lace ones of cobwebby fineness, which cost a great deal. She often wears black or white-ribbed hand-woven silk stockings, however, which are very soft and comfortable. For the country, the young princesses wear those of soft black spun silk, which are delightful to walk in. For more dressy occasions stockings of embroidered silk of various shades are selected.

Mr. G. A. Henty had once a most amusing, if painful, experience of the occasional untrustworthiness of mechanical aids to composition. For two consecutive months he dictated into a phonograph, and when at the end of that time he demanded of the instrument that it should give forth the treasures of narrative that had been confided to its keeping, it positively declined to do so. It was thoroughly out of order, and the too trustful author had to mourn the waste of the entire two months' time and eloquence.

The Dowager Lady Lovelace, Byron's daughter, is the mother of Lady Anne Blunt, wife of that clever but eccentric person, Mr. Wilfred Blunt, the Arab scholar, great traveler and breeder of Arab steeds. His sale of Arabs at Crabbet Park is one of the events of the year; but he spends much time out of England, and his wife—when the fit takes the odd couple—dons "rationals" and joins him in camping out in the wildest deserts, carrying her life fearlessly in her hand. One can trace the Byron breed in this remarkable woman.

At the November Consistory in Rome Archbishop Walsh of Dublin and the Dominican Father Gasquet will be made Cardinals. The latter prelate is one of the best of the English Catholic writers, and his history of the suppression of the monasteries is a really invaluable work. Some years ago Archbishop Walsh was not in favor at Rome, owing to his persistent interference in politics, but latterly, in fact, even since he committed the fatal blunder of assisting Dillon and O'Brien to seize and wreck the Freeman's Journal, Dr. Walsh has been as silent as a mouse in Irish politics.

Francisque Sarcey says that Coquelin is out of favor in Paris, and that Mounet-Sully is in higher favor than ever. One hundred and sixty men recently gave a dinner to Mounet-Sully, and scarcely ten of them all were of unknown names. Most of them were famous fellows in Paris. Sarcey writes the Cosmopolitan: "I was seated between Benjamin Constant, one of our greatest painters, and Nodier, one of the masters of contemporary sculpture. 'What is admirable about Mounet-Sully,' said Nodier to me, 'is that no matter what his part, the pose he takes is always that of the finished statue.'"

King Otto of Bavaria is incurably mad, being afflicted with that form of insanity called "mathesis," and which, like that ascribed in Biblical history to Nebuchadnezzar, takes the form of the victim imagining himself to be either a bird or an animal. Other royal lunatics are the Archduchess Maximilian of Austria, better known as the ex-Empress Charlotte of Mexico; Emperor William's mother-in-law, the Dowager Duchess of Schleswig-Holstein-Augustenburg, and Archduke Leopold of Austria. The reigning Prince of Lippe is likewise a madman and under restraint, as is also ex-Sultan Murad of Turkey.

TRILBY AND PRINCESS FLAVIA

An Interviewer, Two Actresses, and Several Confidences.

It has been my very good fortune this week to enjoy a half hour's chat with two most delightful women, Edith Crane and Isabel Irving.

For two actresses who are so thoroughly alike in the art of pleasing Miss Crane and Miss Irving are surprisingly dissimilar.

Miss Crane is very tall and fair, Miss Irving rather small and dark; Miss Crane wore a wonderful pink gown, a "creation," of what a female novelist would call "some soft, clinging stuff." Miss Irving was dressed in the most unassuming black. The actress who impersonates Trilby, the poor little grisette of the "Quarter," had encircled her fingers with the most exquisite rings; she who interprets Flavia, the princess of a royal house, wore absolutely no jewelry at all.

While you are talking with Miss Crane you feel that at no instant does she forget herself and the fact that she is a brilliant and successful actress, assured of her position, conscious of her power. Whereas in five minutes Miss Irving has made you forget that she was ever on the stage at all, and you see only a very charming and gracious woman, without the slightest tinge of professionalism about her, straightforward, unaffected, sincere, altogether delightful.

I saw Miss Crane at her rooms in the Baldwin about three o'clock in the afternoon. She is very tall, indeed—that is your very first impression—tall enough to look most men straight in the eyes, her glance on a level with theirs, as tall, in fact, as Mr. Du Maurier intended Trilby should be, as tall as Miss Rehan, he says—just the right height.

I sat down on the sofa opposite Miss Crane, and we began to talk of things theatrical. I believe I commenced by remarking—interrogatively—as to the difficulty of preparing such a role as that of Trilby.

"You can have no idea," said Miss Crane, "how difficult it really was."

"Difficult in just what way?" said I.

MISS EDITH CRANE
OF THE TRILBY COMPANY
Photo by Thors

"Difficult on account of its extreme simplicity."

I confess this had not occurred to me before.

"It's all very well," continued Miss Crane, "when you are preparing a strongly marked emotional part, where you can forget yourself and let yourself go," and she emphasized the last word with such a look and gesture that I know now just exactly how Miss Crane would let herself "go."

"You mean that you must keep yourself in restraint?"

"At every moment, and yet you must be strong and effective. And then the part is difficult in other ways."

"As, for instance?"

"To make Trilby unconstrained and free-mannered yet not hoydenish and vulgar. Trilby is not in the least vulgar, nor is she, on the other hand, in the remotest way conventional. You can have no idea how difficult it was for me to hit upon precisely the right balance between the two extremes."

"And having once hit upon it, to maintain it?" I inquired. Miss Crane did not seem to think this was so hard.

"That all comes with repetition and practice."

"And further. Tell me something else about your preparations and studies for the role—the details, you know."

"Ah, the details, those are the things that count, but as often as not the audience is not apreciative of them—it misses them."

"But if one slurred them over—"

"They would notice the slur at once and condemn you accordingly."

"Can you mention a particular case?"

"Well, Trilby's laugh, for instance. That was the most difficult of all. There is no mirth in that laugh. I found to arrive at that effect the laugh should come from the chest. I practiced that laugh and practiced it until my body was sore, but I finally got it."

We talked of Australia for a few moments after that, and of Honolulu and the enthusiasm of "Trilby's" reception there, and then the conversation came back to the stage again.

I asked Miss Crane about first nights and nervousness and stage frights.

"Oh, I'm always nervous," she answered, "when I'm on the stage. I'm strung so tense at such times that the least little thing, a little noise in the wings or from the front jars inexpressibly. I get angry over trifles, I'm irritable and impatient. Oh," she continued smiling, "I'm quite a different sort of person when I'm on the stage."

"How about the appreciation of an audience," I asked, "and its effect upon your acting?"

"Well, it's not always mere noise that stimulates one to do one's best, not the mere hand clapping and bravos."

"That comes after the effort, of course," I suggested.

"Precisely; I can tell when an audience is sympathetic and appreciative long before they are ready to applaud."

"For instance?"

"In the death scene in "Trilby." It's the silence in the house that counts then. If I feel that the audience is all tense and breathless with interest I can throw myself into the spirit of the lines with ten times the fervor and effect that I can when I hear those little jarring noises I spoke of. The dropping of a fan, the rustling of a program, or the sound of whispering. I know their attention is away then and my own interest wanes. I don't care to please them as soon as they don't care to be pleased."

A little after this, when we were talking of distinctions between tragedy and comedy, Miss Crane observed: "I'm one of those, you know, who believe that comedy is not only a higher form of dramatic art than tragedy, but also more difficult. In tragedy your emotions are strongly marked, sharply defined; you can scarcely go wrong. You require no effort to hold yourself in check; there is little repression. But in comedy, there are the little gradations of emotion, the delicate shades of sentiment, the fine play of light and shadow, all of which must run with the greatest vivacity and rapidity, must appear to be absolutely spontaneous. Oh, yes, comedy is the more difficult of the two."

I have never heard this distinction made before. It strikes me as very true, however.

I saw Isabel Irving in the parlor of her hotel just after she had come in from an afternoon's excursion. As I said before, she is a little woman, who dresses in black and with the least possible ostentation—from her appearance, one of the last women in the world you would take for an actress.

But not only does her appearance and mode of dress contribute to this impression. Miss Irving's conversation is not that of the professional actress. There is not the least pose about Miss Irving in her private life. Her acting ceases the moment she leaves the stage. Once outside the theater she does not seem to care to impress you with the fact that she is a renowned comedienne. In other words, she does not act the role of a celebrity—she prefers, which is far more pleasing, to be herself simply, frankly, without the slightest affectation. At once she evaded the subject of her profession.

"Please don't ask me to talk about that," she said. "One cannot help seeming egotistical when one talks in that strain. It would be I—I—I, to the end of the chapter. I would make myself and my work seem of too great importance."

"And yet I don't doubt," I hazarded, "that you take your chosen profession seriously."

Miss Irving sat up with sudden energy.

"Believe me," she said earnestly, "it is the only way to get on in any profession. The instant you make light of your work you lose your touch. Why, I have been nine years upon the stage, and it seems to me I have but crossed the threshold."

"And after nine more years?" said I.

"There will still be rooms beyond," she answered, smiling. "The further one goes, the further one sees."

For the moment I began to think Miss Irving cared for little beyond her acting—that her whole life and energy were bound up in her profession. Perhaps I hinted at the possibility.

"No," she answered promptly, "I am very fond of my books, and of outdoor exercise. Don't ask me about bicycling—that's one of the stock questions of the interviewers.

I deprecated bicycles upon the instant.

"I prefer a horse myself," said Miss Irving. "I am fond of books and reading, and nothing pleases me better than to spend an afternoon in an old book store, picking

Of the typical note-book reporter Miss Irving has a horror that is almost religious. It is amusing enough to hear her describe her experiences:

"They come to me," she said, "with their pencil and open book, and sit up there and bombard me with questions and—"

"What are some of the questions?" I interrupted, anxious to know what to avoid.

"Well, for instance, they begin this way: 'What are your fads, Miss Irving?' (and I loathe fads), and again: 'Miss Irving, have you got any pets?' 'What do you think of the new woman?' 'Are you for gold or silver?' I just answer them in monosyllables."

"And that discomfits them?"

"Oh, no, indeed; not in the least," she answered.

I found it very hard to interview Miss Irving in the strict sense of the word. In spite of my best resolves our conversation wandered from theatrical matters, and before I knew it we were discussing the Rubaiyat of Omar Khayam, and from that went on—I forget how the transition was made—to Justin McCarthy and the simplicity and unaffectedness of great men. Now this was not as it should be, for it was my bounden duty to escertain Miss Irving's views as to what new plays she had in prospect, and what were her favorite roles, etc. Yet I enjoyed this sort of talk much better than the conversation I had anticipated, and after all it was characteristic, and so not out of place.

I think the most lasting impression that one carries away from a meeting with Isabel Irving is her absolute sincerity and conviction, her seriousness and her fine disregard for the smaller things of life. One especially noteworthy point of difference between Miss Irving and Miss Crane is the different standpoints from which each regards the play in which she is now starring.

"When I first played Trilby," Miss Crane had said, "I was delighted with the part. I have been acting it steadily now for nearly five months, and now I loathe it." Doubtless, however, Miss Crane exaggerated her ennui. Miss Irving, on the other hand, is still enthusiastic over "Zenda."

"It seems to me I could never tire of it," she exclaimed. "The more I see of it, the more I am impressed."

You come away from a talk with Edith Crane with the impression that a brilliant and gracious actress has been good enough to grant you a half hour's interview. Isabel Irving makes you feel that you have paid an afternoon call upon some very charming woman of your acquaintance.

F. N.

MISS ISABEL IRVING
AS PRINCESS FLAVIA IN THE PRISONER OF ZENDA
Photo by Thors

AN IMITATION MESSIAH

Being an Exposition of the Personality of Brother Shrader by Interview.

"We call him Brother Shrader, same as his manager," said the clerk at the International Hotel. He referred to the "Divine Healer." The International is on the "Barbary Coast." "Go right upstairs. "He is in '1' on the first floor."

I obeyed. After some delay there came a response to my knock. "I was just going to bed," said a pleasant voice. "I'll be ready to see you in a minute."

The door opened. I was in the presence of August Shrader, "Divine Healer." A black silk robe made after the fashion of a Benedictine's gown covered his tall, robust figure. Suspended round his neck a crucifix such as monks wear. Hair parted in the center flowed over the shoulders, concealing the ears and outlining a small, symmetrical head. An appearance intensely reminiscent of the Christ—the beard, the curved forehead framed by the long, curving locks, the beaming frankness of expression made familiar in innumerable engravings.

"Come right in," he invited. The voice of this man is soft, rich, full, but quite uncultivated. He put forth his hand, a large, coarse hand, the hand of a laborer, which I took and then sat down.

A dingy old room, sparsely furnished, a low bed, a litter of newspapers on the bureau and on the mantelpiece; a pile of photographs on the little marble table. Truly a somber frame for the curious figure swaying to and fro on an ancient rocking chair.

"I had just taken my shoes off," he commenced. "I'm a bit tired—hard day to-day, and I expect to go to San Jose to-morrow." The tone was business-like, unconstrained, with no assumption of superiority. "Have you heard of any cures?" he continued, bringing the conversation at once to himself.

"No," I replied. "But I saw you at work yesterday. On what theory do you proceed?"

"I claim to exercise the same divine gift of healing that Christ did," he explained, proceeding then to enter into particulars. "I am a tool in the hands of God. The power to heal is in me, it is independent of me. I have nothing to do with it, save to exercise it."

"You attempt no scientific causation for your work. It is not magnetism, nor hypnotism, then?"

"No," he returned, "it is only that God has chosen me for a tool to assist in curing the ills of mankind."

As he went on Shrader grew more confident of himself. He told me where he was born—in Minnesota, of German parentage; that he has brothers and sisters; that he is in his twenty-sixth year and has been a divine healer since his thirteenth birthday. No; he had never been to school in his life, knew nothing of medicine or surgery, devoted himself body and soul to his brethren and preached that the kingdom of God was at hand. These particulars I drew out with direct questions. Evidently the man rather prided himself on being ignorant. I was impressed with the idea that he found his pose hard to maintain. There was a tendency to unbend, to be familiar, which he checked by an obvious effort and apparent bursts of religious fervor. There was something naive about his egotism. He plumed himself on the number of those who came to him for treatment.

"Do you ask that your patients must have faith in your ability to cure them, as the Christian scientists do?" I asked.

CALIFORNIA'S BALL· RANSOME KICKS OFF

RELIANCE BLOCKING

"No, it is not needful. My work is not faith cure. The only belief necessary is the act of coming to me. I don't say to a man, 'You have no pain,' and ask that he make up his mind he has no pain, when he is suffering torture. I bless him, lay my hands on him as Christ did. Mine is the direct influence of God. I know it is. Else how could I, a plain man, make the blind to see by the mere touch of my fingers?"

"You have done that?"

"Yes, sir, I have." Shrader's face lighted up with the memory of this triumph, though he seemed piqued that I compared him, a "Divine Healer," with a mere Christian science operator. The assertion was made with an air of such profound certainty that it would have been awkward to question it. I commented on the rapidity of his work, and asked if he felt no fatigue after his labors.

He brightened visibly. "Yes," he went on, with an air of great self-satisfaction. I don't take long. I have handled as many as seven thousand men, women and children in a day. No one has ever equaled that."

"How about Schlatter, the Denver Messiah?" I interrupted, being struck by the idea of obtaining a side light on divine healing.

"Schlatter was very slow," Brother Shrader commented. "He could only treat forty people a day. That is why he kept his crowds so long around him. Sometimes he would kneel for an hour beside a patient, work over him with his hand, and then, maybe, do him no good.." The superiority of the Shrader method was indubitable.

"Do you know," continued the Healer in a burst of confidence, "lots of people tell me the sight of my face makes them well. They say it reminds them of Christ."

"So did Schlatter's," I suggested.

"No," said Shrader decisively, "not nearly so like the Mesiah as I am. A curious fact about Schlatter, though. In Arkansas, recently, I met an editor who was the first to discover his powers. Schlatter's feet, this man said, were the biggest he had ever seen. He had to have his shoes made. Now my shoes are small." He pointed to an ugly pair of brogans. "Number sevens. I've done a good deal of walking in them," he continued apologetically.

"Maybe there was some strange virtue in his feet," I suggested timidly.

"I think the seat of my power is in my hands," continued Shrader. He held towards me too huge, heavy hands—the coarse, fleshy, strong hands of a laborer, yet soft and rather fine of texture. "You never saw hands like those before," he went on, eyeing them with approval. "They are the only ones of their kind in the world." The sleeves of his robe fell back, disclosing thick, hairy arms, brawny and muscular, which were strangely out of keeping with the air and manner of the man.

"You would have no trouble in taking care of yourself," I commented at the aspect of these very robust members.

"I am very strong," the "Divine Healer" assented. "It was my custom until recently to travel from village to village on foot—barefooted at that. The cowboys would accost and interfere with me, and I was unwillingly compelled to push them aside. Indeed, I have held two men out at arm's length."

We talked politics for a time, it being rather a novel experience to discuss the chances of Bryan and McKinley with so picturesque a character. Then, in spite of my efforts, Shrader drifted back to theology. He began to tell me the formula of his belief.

"I preach the Kingdom of God is at hand—repentance—just as Christ did," he said. "No, I don't speak much, but many people have assured me I could be a great orator if I put myself to it.

I began to intimate how difficult it was for some people to believe and to have the faith he possessed so abundantly, and evoked the statement that he considered all who did not accept Christ bound for destruction, admitting, however, that an exception might be made in favor of those to whom the Gospel had never been preached. It was a simple creed, devoid of formulas, ceremonials and canonicals, and he expounded his notions of it with extended forearm and awkward gestures.

As his great hands sawed towards me I had an impression he was trying hypnotic passes on my unsuspecting nerves, but now I am sure the idea never entered his mind. Indeed, Shrader is obviously simple. A designing villain with so meek, so benign a face is incredible. Possibly the "Divine Healer" is a monomaniac; certainly an egotist; but it is amusing, absurd egotism, so naive, so transparent

As I rose to leave I asked Shrader—our conversation having turned on physical peculiarities—as to the mould of his head.

"It's not large, but there is not in the world another like it," he pronounced seriously, lifting with clumsy fingers the thick locks of hair that hung so straight from the crown to his shoulders. He flung back the strands, exposing the full extent of a narrow forehead, and small ears set close to the skull. It was absolute disillusion. At once the suggestion of sanctity disappeared. The robe was but a disguise. The face became ignoble: its benignity faded into servility. It was the mien of an obedient groom. Then the concealing hair fell into place again, as he stood up to bless me. Yes, as I rose to say good-bye, he invoked a veritable blessing in orthodox fashion. Had I refused, it is certain he would have felt dreadfully disappointed. The appearance of that figure, with uplifted hands and eyes turned heavenward at the dingy ceiling of the room in the International Hotel, against all the squalor of background, made a picture impressive for the memories it evoked. It mattered little, the absurdity of the man's pretension – his pose was poetic. It unfettered a chain of precious and pious recollections—of Gethsemane and Calvary and the Mount of Olives.

C.

FOOTBALL IN TOWN

The First Match of the Season at Central Park.

The California football season of '96 was opened last Saturday by a match game between Reliance and California. The line-up was as follows: Reliance—Burnette, center; Wells, right guard; Oliver, left guard; Sexton, left tackle; Middlemas, right tackle; Langan, left end; Racine, right end; Nahl, quarterback; Walton (captain), right halfback; Carter, left halfback; Arlett, fullback.

BEN BUTTERWORTH

WHO IS COACHING THE UNIVERSITY OF CALIFORNIA FOOTBALL TEAM

Wilcox, photo

California—Birdsall, center; Griesberg, right guard; Ludlow, left guard; Julian, left tackle; Castletun, right tackle; Craig, left end; Hopper, right end; Kennedy, quarterback; Hall, right halfback; Whipple, left halfback; Ransome (captain), full back.

Frankenheimer, umpire. Natt, referee.

It is too early in the season to criticise the work of either team except in the most general terms. Reliance had the heavier eleven, and choose to adopt a system of line bucking and mass plays that in the end netted two touchdowns. By the end of the first half Walton had about sized up the California eleven, and finding the weak points in its line between Ludlow and Julian and between Griesberg and Castletun, sent his halves against them all through the second half. It was the weakness of California rather than the strength of Reliance that was responsible for the gains of the last named eleven. Walton and Carter should easily have been stopped in their attacks upon the California line. The ball was snapped and passed slowly, and as often as not the runner was far ahead of his interference by the time he struck the line. The insistent hammering at guard and tackle by the Reliance halves made the game a dull one. On the side of the Athletic Club but few end plays were attempted. Hopper gave good account of himself in his position on California's right end, and like Ransome or Kennedy stopped the runner when the play was around the left. On the defensive the Reliance was weak. Neither their ends nor backs could stop Ransome short of a ten or fifteen yard gain; nor could their line hold well against the rare wedge plays of the California team. If the collegians had chosen to play a running instead of a kicking game they would undoubtedly have scored during the first half.

Ransome played his team considerably in accordance with the new rules, which tend to bar mass plays. All through the first half California played a kicking game—often kicking upon the first down and played it admirably, though Ransome had the wind directly against him. His center and guards were hardly able to hold the Reliance line long enough for a good punt, but his ends, Hopper and Craig, supported him well, Hopper getting down the field almost as rapidly as the ball. During the game on several occasions Ransome punted from a kick-off in a new and peculiar fashion, sending the ball along the ground instead of over the heads of the opposing team. This is a very clever tactic, as an oblong ball rolling along the surface of the ground is far more difficult to catch than the same ball when falling through the air. Besides this a ball kicked in this fashion is very apt to touch a player on the other side, after which the runners of the kicking side are at liberty to fall on it or even—if possible—to pick it up and run with it.

It would not be surprising to see this method of punting from a kick-off—first introduced by the Harvard team of '94—very largely adopted during the coming season. When successful it offers the advantage of a long gain acquired by little effort, while at the same time allowing the kicking side to retain possession of the ball. Even if it fails—that is, if the ends do not succeed in dropping on the ball—there is no more loss than that sustained by an overhead punt.

Ransome is far from 'varsity form as yet. In fact, the California fullback rarely is at his best until toward the close of the season. In Saturday's game his overhead punting—even making allowance for the weakness of the forwards—was unsatisfactory, and at the end of the first half he missed a very easy try for a field goal, and that at a moment when he was allowed plenty of time. In his running with the ball, especially in the round-the-end plays, it is apparent, even from Saturday's game, that he has improved. He is probably one of the hardest runners in the West, and one of the most difficult men to tackle, using, as he does, the straight-arm guard with more effect than any other runner yet seen on the coast.

Hopper (R. E.) is a promising end, getting into every play and rarely failing to break through the interference when the play is around his end. His best characteristic is the quickness with which he gets away after the ball is snapped. Under Butterworth's coaching he should make the 'varsity team this year.

For Reliance, Walton, Racine and Carter played the best game. Oliver, at left guard, was something of a disappointment. He seems to have gone back from his form of two years ago, and Ludlow of California had little difficulty in holding him. Speaking generally, the game was hardly more than a trying out; neither eleven put their best men into the field. California played but three of her 'varsity men, and in the second the whole eleven were green hands.

California showed to far better advantage in the practice with the Olympic team on Monday. Sherman, Kennedy and Ransome went in at end, quarter and fullback, while Selfridge was moved out to tackle to make room for Birdsall at center. Selfridge can do himself better justice nearer the center of the line. At tackle he is slow.

Another point that California should and doubtless will improve is the slowness of putting the ball into play. The signal should be given to the team before the line-up, as soon as the scrimmage begins to break up. The other side should not be allowed an instant in which to guess at the next play. This improvement, no doubt, will come in time, however. The next Reliance game will doubtless show some sharp and aggressive work on the part of the Blue and Gold eleven.

Frank Butterworth, the California's coach, arrived from the East two days before the Reliance game. Butterworth is a graduate of Yale, class of '95. He made the 'varsity team in his first year at college, an achievement rarely attained by a Freshman. Though not especially athletic in appearance, Butterworth is accounted the greatest fullback who ever played upon a college team. He was one of the members of Caspar Whitney's all-America team. His tackling and running are beyond criticism, though it is to his method of punting that Mr. Butterworth owes most of his success upon the gridiron.

TAKING OUT TIME: GRIESBERG HURT

IN SOCIETY

Entertainments and Happenings In Town and Out.

The temple of Hymen has been literally besieged with worshipers this week and Society is completely absorbed in that most interesting of topics—marrying and giving in marriage. It is not often that we have the opportunity of so closely comparing the quiet dignity of the home wedding and the gorgeous resplendence of the military church ceremonial. In

MISS RUTH CLARK
A handsome California girl who died of pneumonia at Carlsbad recently. She was travelling with her aunt, Mrs. H. L. Dodge fact, it rarely falls to our lot to have two army weddings in one week—and one celebrated at the Presidio has, to some of us at least, the charm of novelty.

The nuptials of Miss Catherwood and Dr. Grinnell proved very brilliant. Although the original invitations had been recalled and the affair reset for an earlier date, the arrangements proved perfect. Major and Mrs. Darling sent out three sets of invitations, one to the wedding, a second to the breakfast, and a third to the reception. The ceremony took place in the Assembly Hall of the Presidio, which was decorated with flags and crysanthemums. Miss Catherwood made a charming bride, and her gown was really magnificent—a very heavy sateen, trimmed with point applique lace. The bridesmaids, Miss Bee Hooper, Miss Emma Spreckels, Miss May Kip, Miss Marjorie Young, Miss Alice Rutherford, and Miss Fanny Loughborough, looked very smart in frocks made of pale blue moire antique, the waists covered with chiffon. Little Miss Azalea Keyes, a cousin of the bride, was maid of honor, in a pretty pale blue frock draped with white organdie. The breakfast, served in the Darling villa, in the Presidio, proved a jolly affair. There were toasts and healths galore, some of the speeches being decidedly witty. The reception followed in the afternoon, after which Mr. and Mrs. Grinnell left for Madrone Villa, where they are to spend their honeymoon. Mrs. Grinnell is a very sweet looking girl and does not in the least resemble the pictures that have appeared in the dailies. She is of medium height, with large blue eyes, a clear, fair complexion, and a nicely rounded figure.

A simple but decidedly pretty home wedding was that of Miss Sadie Hecht and Mr. William Gerstle, which was celebrated on Monday afternoon at the Hecht house on Washington street. Miss Hecht is an unusually pretty girl, small, piquant, with bright brown eyes and hair a tone darker than her eyes. She has been one of the most popular girls in society, and is as accomplished and vivacious as she is pretty. She looked exquisite in her soft satin gown, completely covered with tulle and trimmed with point lace. There were no bridesmaids, and only the immediate relatives were invited. Mr. and Mrs. Gerstle have gone East for their wedding journey.

It would indeed be difficult to find a more agreeable environment for a wedding ceremonial than St. Luke's Church. Not too large, it lends itself readily to decoration. Its stained glass windows give a divine religious light that casts a glamour on the scene. On the occasion of Miss Mary Mercardo's marriage with Mr. Chauncey Boardman, which took place at 12 o'clock on Tuesday, the chancel was decked in white and yellow cosmos, ferns and smilac. The bride looked very pretty in her gown of moire silk, trimmed with tulle and orange blossoms. Miss Margaret Salisbury made a striking and handsome maid of honor, in white taffeta, with a white fichu hat and arms filled with crysanthemums. The bridesmaids wore deep yellow taffeta silk gowns, black hats with yellow plumes and rosettes, and carried great bunches of yellow crysanthemums. Afterwards a breakfast was served by Mrs. Sanchez, a cousin of the bride, and the young people left for Los Angeles by the evening train.

The engagement is announced of Miss Marion Louderback, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. A. Louderback, and Mr. Arthur Power Lord of New York. Miss Louderback is at present in Paris, where she went to pursue her studies after graduating from the Academy of the Sacred Heart. She is a stunning looking girl, tall and rather of the Spanish type. She plays the piano well and has shown decided ability at both drawing and painting. The date of the wedding has not yet been set.

